Q. When you were known as Miller, what was it, Rose, or Blanche Miller?

Mr. Talley: I make the same objection.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Rose.

Q. When you were known by the name of Newman, was it Blanche, or Rose Newman?

Mr. Talley: I make the same objection.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Blanche.
Q. Did you have those aliases to hide and conceal your identity?

10262

Mr. Talley: Object to the form of the question.
The Court: Let the jury figure that out. Objection sustained.
Mr. Turkus: I ask to have this paper marked for identification.

(Received and marked People's Exhibit Z-28 for identification.)

Q. I show you People's Exhibit Z-28 for identification and ask you if that man was not at Grausman's agency when you were negotiating 10263 for the purchase of a car in Missouri.

Mr. Talley: I object to that on the grounds already stated.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know who that man is? A. No, sir.

Mr. Talley: I object to that as not the proper way of identifying a photograph.

10264 Blanche Weiss—For Defts.—Cross

Q. Was that man ever in your society and company? A. I never saw him in my life.

Mr. Turkus: May the record indicate it is being put in the District Attorney's pocket? (referring to last exhibit for identification)

Mr. Talley: I might make a remark on that, but I will not.

10265 Q. Did you knowingly associate with people engaged in criminal activities in Kansas City, Missouri?

Mr. Talley: I object to that on the grounds already stated.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever visit Leavenworth Prison while you were in Kansas City, Missouri?

10266 Mr. Talley: I make the same objection.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know how far away from Leavenworth Prison Kansas City, Missouri, was, when you lived there?

Mr. Talley: I object to that as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant, what difference does it make?

The Court: Same ruling.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Q. On April 6, 1941, you left Kansas City, Missouri? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you left in an automobile? A. Yes, sir.

Q. An automobile you bought at the Grausman Agency? A. That is right.

Q. There was a driver at the wheel? A. Yes, sir.

10268

Q. The driver was Sidney Weiss? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You drove back to New York City? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you go when you came back to New York City?

Mr. Talley: Objected to on the grounds previously urged.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I went to see my family. 10269

Q. After you saw your family, where did you go to live?

Mr. Talley: I make the same objection.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I was not feeling well and I went to Atlantic City.

Q. Now, when you bought that car in Grausman's Agency, what name did you give?

10270 Blanche Weiss—For Defts.—Cross

Mr. Talley: Objected to on the grounds previously stated; already testified to.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Rose Bell.

Q. Did you give the address, 204 South 7th Street, Rocky Ford, Colorado?

Mr. Talley: I make the same objection
10271 on the grounds previously urged.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I did not give any address.

The Court: Pardon me just a minute. I am trying to think of two things at once. I will sustain the objection.

Q. Did you give the address of John Jay as your address when you bought the automobile at Grausman's Agency?

Mr. Talley: I make the same objection.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. All I remember doing is I signed my name.

Q. You don't remember giving any address? A. No, sir.

Q. That was in 1940, when you bought the car? A. I think my husband gave the address.

Q. Don't talk about "think." A. I did not give it. I cannot tell you I gave it.

Q. You don't remember giving it, or didn't you give it? A. I did not give it.

Q. You should have said that and nothing else. Did you buy a 1941 tag at Kansas City, Missouri, for your car?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

10274

A. I did not.

Q. Did you buy insurance from E. R. Dragow in Kansas City, Missouri, for the car?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant, and on the grounds already stated.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I did not.

10275

Q. At any time before April 6, 1941, did you directly or indirectly, by telephone, letter, telegram, or any other way, communicate with a single one of your relatives? A. No, sir.

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. Did you at any time prior to April 6, 1941, communicate directly or indirectly, by telephone, Western Union, letter, or any other means, with any single friend of yours back in New York City? A. No, sir.

Mr. Talley: Objected to on the grounds already stated.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Q. Who is Alice?

10277

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I have a niece named Alice, but she did not go with me.

Q. Who is the Alice you used to pal around with, you and Dotty Isaacson?

Mr. Talley: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I once had a friend by the name of Alice.

Q. What was her last name? A. Eisenthal.

Q. How do you spell that? A. (spelling) E-i-s-e-n-t-h-a-l.

Q. How many years have you known Alice Eisenthal?

Mr. Talley: I make the same objection.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

10279

A. Ever since I have been a child.

Q. Where does she live?

Mr. Talley: I make the same objection.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I don't know; I have not seen her in years.

Q. How many years is that you have not seen her? A. I believe four years.

Q. Where did she live four years ago?

Mr. Talley: I object to it as too far afield. That is what it seems to me to be.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I don't know; I was not even intimate with her at that time.

Q. You went to Atlantic City with Dotty? A. No, I went by myself.

Q. You met Dotty in Atlantic City? A. Dotty met me there.

Q. Was it by coincidence or appointment? A. 10281
Not at all. When I left I told my brother-in-law, Sidney, to tell somebody to come out and stay with me because I did not feel well.

Q. You left a message with Sidney to send someone to join you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the one that joined you was Dotty Isaacson? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard Dotty Isaacson testify in this court? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was the boarding house? A. It was on State Street.

Q. Not Atlantic and Pacific? A. No.

10282 Blanche Weiss—For Defts.—Cross

Q. Atlantic and Pacific are parallel streets? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where on State Street was the boarding house?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

10283 A. Well, it was right off the Boardwalk; it was a little ways off, between, I should say—the next street was Pacific.

Q. Did you at any time during the Atlantic City stay, stay with Dotty Isaacson on State Street between the Boardwalk and Pacific?

The Court: (interrupting) State Street is between the Boardwalk and Pacific?

The Witness: Yes, sir. This boarding house was on State Street off the Boardwalk; the next street, I believe, is Pacific.

10284 By the Court:

Q. Between the Ocean and Pacific? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Pacific is one long block back; is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is at the North End, isn't it? A. I don't know just where it is.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. When you were in Kansas City, Missouri, before you departed with Sidney Weiss for New York State, did you talk with a man known as George Green?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Q. Was Cuppy Migden introduced by you, before your departure for the East with Sidney Weiss, as George Green?

10286

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant, and on the grounds already stated.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I did not see Cuppy Migden.

Q. At Atlantic City, when you were there with Dotty, how many days did you spend with her? A. Ten days.

Q. What period of time was that, in April or May of 1941? A. In April.

Q. You knew where your husband was at that time—yes or no?

Mr. Talley: I object to that on the grounds heretofore stated.

Mr. Turkus: This is not testimony; this is only as to her knowledge, if she knew where she was.

Mr. Talley: If it is not testimony, don't ask it.

10288 Blanche Weiss—For Defts.—Cross

The Court: She may answer that yes or no.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Yes.

Q. During the ten days you were there with Dotty did you speak at all about the occurrence of September 12, 1936?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompe-
10289 tent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Q. Not one word was mentioned by you or by her? A. I spoke about my husband being away and about the case, but nothing in reference—

Q. September 12, 1936? A. No.

Q. You had been to your husband's lawyer's office, hadn't you?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent,
10290 immaterial and irrelevant, and on the grounds already urged.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Not at that time.

Q. When you were in Atlantic City with Dottie and spent ten days with her, did it occur to your mind that you had spent September 12, 1936, with Dottie Isaacson?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

10291

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Not at that time.

Q. When was the first time that occurred to your mind where you were September 12, 1936? A. When Sidney came over to speak to me.

Q. When was that? A. That was about in the month of July.

Q. 1941. A. Yes, sir.

Q. You remembered it immediately as soon as he mentioned it? A. No, sir, I did not remember it immediately. What I did remember was—

10292

Q. (Interrupting) Did you, yes or no? A. I have to explain it.

Q. You can explain that to Mr. Talley. Did you? Answer yes or no.

Mr. Talley: That does not necessarily follow. I think you should let the Court rule on that. I ask that the witness be permitted to finish her answer to the question.

Mr. Turkus: The question is susceptible of a yes or no answer, and I am entitled to it as such.

The Court: Just answer yes or no.

The Witness: I cannot answer it that way; I have to explain.

Q. Where were you September 12, 1935? A. I don't remember.

Q. Where were you September 13, 1935? A. I don't remember.

Q. Wasn't September 13, 1935, Sidney Weiss' birthday as well? A. Yes, sir.

10294 Blanche Weiss—For Defts.—Cross

Q. Do you know what day of the week it was, September 13, 1935? A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you know that was a Saturday?

Mr. Talley: I think we may object to that on the ground it was not a Saturday.

Mr. Turkus: Now the question may just as well be withdrawn; the testimonoy having been given by Mr. Talley.

Mr. Talley: The question should never 10295 have been put.

Q. Did you ever attend any birthday party given to Sidney Weiss except the one you say you attended on September 12, 1936? A. No, sir.

Q. That was Sidney's twenty-sixth birthday? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is how you remember the party? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever attend any birthday party of Sammy Weiss?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompe-
10296 tent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you attend any birthday party of Maxey Weiss? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever attend a birthday party of Solomon Weiss? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever attend a birthday party for Murray Weiss? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever attend a birthday party of Mrs. Lena Weiss? A. No, sir.

Q. So the only birthday party of any of the Weisses you ever attended was Sidney's twenty-sixth birthday? A. That is right.

Q. How long do you know Paul Berger? A. I don't know him.

Q. Never was up to his place of business, the Gold Craft? A. No, sir.

Q. You heard Dottie interrogated about that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you deny you took her to the Gold Craft and bought her a mannish suit? 10298

Mr. Talley: I object to that.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I do.

Q. Do you deny knowing Paul Berger? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Talley: Objected to as already answered.

Q. Do you deny that during the time when Yonkel was in jail you clothed, fed and sheltered Dottie Isaacson? 10299

Mr. Talley: I object to that, to the form of the question as asked.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I never clothed Dottie.

Q. Did you feed her? A. No, sir, never.

Q. Did you shelter her? A. Never.

Q. You never fed her her breakfast? A. Like anybody else that would come in the house, I would offer them something to eat.

Q. I am not talking about anybody who came in the house. I am talking about Dottie, tell us about her, did you feed her at your house when her husband was in jail? A. I cannot answer that question that way. She has had breakfast in my house; she has had lunches, and she has had suppers, but I have not fed her.

Q. Let us go back when Yonkel was in jail,
10301 didn't you shelter her then? A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you feed her then? A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you buy her clothes then? A. No, sir, then or at no other time.

Q. Why, she was your closest female friend, wasn't she? A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the time that Yonkel was in jail, didn't she live with you? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you can remember that birthday party of 1936? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you remember where you were in 1935?

Mr. Talley: I object to that as already 10302 having been gone over.

The Court: She said she cannot.

Q. You told us this morning that you had never been out of town before? A. I did not say I had never been out of town before. I said I had never been in those places before.

Q. You have been out of town many times, haven't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in 1935 were you in Hot Springs?

The Court: Virginia or Arkansas.

A. I know I was in Hot Springs; I do not remember the year.

Q. You do not remember the year? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever have a girl friend named Betty? A. No, sir.

Q. Betty Cooper? A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you ever have a girl friend named Betty who was a shoplifter?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as highly improper; incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant. 10304

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I did not have a friend named Betty Cooper.

Q. Now, weren't you in Hot Springs in 1935, do you recall that? A. I know I was in Hot Springs.

Q. Weren't you there when you were in Hot Springs in the company of Lucky Luciano?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Q. Weren't you there in the company of Frank Costello?

Mr. Talley: Same objection.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

10306 Blanche Weiss—For Defts.—Cross

Q. Weren't you in the company of Dixie Davis?

Mr. Talley: Same objection.
The Court: Same ruling.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: I ask to have this photo-
10307 graph marked for identification.

(Received and marked People's Exhibit Z-29, for identification.)

Q. Were you in the company of any man on that Hot Springs, Arkansas, trip who left the party and went to Florida?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

10308 A. No, sir.

Q Now, do you remember whether you were in Hot Springs in the fall of 1936? A. No, sir.

Q. Can you remember what year you were in Hot Springs? A. I think it was 1935.

Q. Didn't you eat at a place called Studie's?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I may have.

10309

Q. Didn't you eat at a place known as the Bungalow operated by a mother and daughter?

Mr. Talley: Same objection.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I do not remember.

Q. Didn't there dine with you at the Bungalow, Charley (Lucky) Luciano, Frank Costello, Charlie Wooley, Dixie Davis and Cuppy?

10310

Mr. Talley: I object; intended to be prejudicial; objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.
The Court: Overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Q. After dining at the place known as the Bungalow, did you go to a place known as Jacob's Road House?

10311

Mr. Talley: Same objection; assuming something the witness has denied.
Mr. Turkus: It is withdrawn in that form.

Q. Do you deny you ever dined at a place known as the Bungalow, operated by a mother and daughter?

Mr. Talley: I object to the form of the question.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

10312

A. I don't remember the place was there.

Q. Do you remember Jacobs' Road House?

Mr. Talley: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

The Court: Is it your purpose to show that on September 13th he was in Hot Springs?

10313

Mr. Turkus: No, I don't want to announce my purpose because that would be to defeat the purpose.

The Court: All right.

Q. Do you remember Jacobs' Road House? A. No, sir.

Q. Wasn't there a road house in Hot Springs where you used to go for drinks?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

10314

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. There may have been.

Q. Do you remember having your picture taken at a bar in Hot Springs?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I had my picture taken; I don't remember where.

Q. Don't you remember it was in a bar? A. There was a photographer that had one of those bars fixed up.

Q. A simulated bar? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who took the picture with you when you took the picture at Hot Springs?

Mr. Talley: I object to the form of the question on the grounds already stated.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception. 10316

A. Bee Cooper.

Q. I call it "Betty". Is that what the name was? A. I don't remember any such name.

Q. Bee Cooper was a thief, wasn't she? A. I don't know what she was.

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. She was in Hot Springs with you, wasn't she? A. I did not know her to be a thief. 10317

Q. Bee Cooper was your friend? A. I was not very friendly with her. I had just started in to be friends with her at the time.

Q. You met Bee Cooper in the east? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were you doing with her in Hot Springs? A. She came along with us.

Q. In your party? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was a pretty friendly party? A. I did not know she was a thief.

Q. You did not know it then? A. No, sir.

10318 Q. Is this the picture you had taken in Hot Springs, People's Exhibit Z-29, for identification? A. Yes.

Mr. Turkus: I offer it in evidence.

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant. It is meaningless.

The Court: Sustained at this time. It may be offered later if connected up.

10319 Q. Now, who was in this party at Hot Springs?

Mr. Talley: I object to that on the grounds already stated.

The Court: She has seen the picture; she has seen somebody in it.

Q. Yes, who else was in that party.

Mr. Talley: Objected to on the same grounds.

The Court: Objection overruled.

10320 Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Bee Cooper, my husband and Cuppie.

Q. That is Cuppie Midgen? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the trip to Hot Springs was so that Bee Cooper could visit her husband in Leavenworth Prison, Isn't that right?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant, and on the grounds already urged.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

10321

A. She said she wanted to take a rest and at the same time try to go and see her husband.

Q. At Leavenworth Prison? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you knew when you were associating with Bee Cooper that her husband was then presently in jail, didn't you?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

10322

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went all the way to Hot Springs and spent time with her there, knowing that, didn't you?

Mr. Talley: I object to the form of the question; incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I did not go there for her sake.

10323

Q. Never mind that, but you went with her knowing her husband was presently in jail, didn't you?

Mr. Talley: I make the same objection.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Think back—tell me what year it was you went on this Hot Springs trip.

10324 Blanche Weiss—For Defts.—Cross

Mr. Talley: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I think it was in 1935.

Q. Are you sure it was not in 1936? A. It may have run into 1936.

Q. Are you sure it was not the latter—the fall of 1936 you were in Hot Springs? A. I am sure it was not.

10325 Q. Where did you stop in Hot Springs? A. We stopped at a small hotel.

Q. Were you in communication with any friends or relatives when you were in Hot Springs, by mail, telephone, telegraph, or any other means of communication?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant. This is 1935. It cannot be identified with the matter at issue here. I also object on the grounds already urged.

10326 The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Yes.

Q. With whom and by what means?

Mr. Talley: I make the same objection.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I don't know what you mean, "with what means".

Q. With whom were you in communication, and by what means?

Mr. Talley: I make the same objection.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I may have written cards or letters.
Q. Under what name were you living in Hot Springs?

Mr. Talley: Objected to— This is 1935—on the grounds already advanced.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I don't remember.
Q. What happened to the car in which you rode out to Kansas City, Missouri?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant, as having nothing to do with the issue being tried.
The Court: Objection overruled. 10329
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I don't know.
Q. To whom did you give that picture, People's Exhibit Z-29, for identification?

Mr. Talley: Objected to.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I don't remember.
Q. How many pictures did you have taken

10330 Blanche Weiss—For Defts.—Cross

similar to People's Exhibit Z-29, for identification?

Mr. Talley: I object. We have gone far enough on this, I think.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. It might have been three or four.
Q. Now, to whom did you give a copy of the 10331 picture?

Mr. Talley: Objected to.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I don't remember.
Q. Did you give one to Cuppie?

Mr. Talley: Objected to.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

10332 A. I don't remember who I gave them to.
Q. Did you keep one for yourself? A. I don't remember.
Q. You did not give this picture to the District Attorney, People's Exhibit Z-29, for identification, did you?

Mr. Talley: I object.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.
Q. Would you hesitate to lie for Mendy?

10333

Mr. Talley: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir, I would not, but I am telling the truth now.

Q. Now you are telling the truth? A. Yes, sir.

Redirect examination by Mr. Talley:

Q. Mrs. Weiss, you have been asked by the District Attorney about Hot Springs in 1935, were there any of Mendy's family there at that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who? A. My mother-in-law.

Q. The elder Mrs. Weiss? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anybody else? A. I think Mendy's aunt was there, too, at the time.

Recross examination by Mr. Turkus:

Q. You did not go much with the family, did you? A. Certainly, I did.

Q. Mendy's family in Hot Springs? A. With my mother-in-law and my aunt?

Q. I don't mean that. Who did you live with on the trip? A. With my mother-in-law and my aunt out there.

10336 Helen A. Hazley—For Defts.—Direct

HELEN A. HAZLEY, residing at 871 Pavonia Avenue, Jersey City, New Jersey, called as a witness in behalf of the defense, after being duly sworn, testified as follows:

The Court: This witness got up from the audience.

Mr. Talley: Yes, she sat there at my request. She is a stenographer in my office, in no way connected or identified with this matter. I expected to put her on 10337 immediately after we convened.

The Court: That is perfectly all right.

Direct examination by Mr. Talley:

Q. Are you a stenographer in the employ of Alfred J. Talley? A. I am.

Q. On September 17, 1941, did you take a statement from a man who gave his name as Harry Cohen, who said he lived at No. 85 Bristol Street, Brooklyn, New York? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you, after taking the statement, tran-

10338 scribe it from your stenographic notes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I ask you to look at the paper I hand you and ask you if that is a correct transcript of the statement made that day by Harry Cohen. A. Yes, sir, that is my work.

Q. That paper was typed by you and you have compared your stenographic notes? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Talley: I ask the paper be marked for identification.

(Received and marked Defendants' Exhibit Z-10 for identification.)

Mr. Talley: I offer in evidence the exhibit marked for identification Defendants' Exhibit Z-10.

Mr. Turkus: It is an unsigned statement and is objected to as incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: I do not have to read it. Sustained. That is a rule of law.

10340

Mr. Talley: Exception.

(Witness excused.)

LENA WEISS, residing at 10 Monroe Street, New York City, called as a witness in behalf of the defendants, after being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Talley:

Q. You live at 10 Monroe Street? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is in New York, Manhattan? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived at that address? A. Over 7 years.

Q. With whom do you live there? A. I live with Sidney and Sammy.

Q. Your son Sidney and your son Sammy? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are the mother of Mendy Weiss? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those are three sons. How many other sons have you? How many boys all together? A. I have six boys.

Q. Do you remember the night of September 12, 1936? A. Yes.

Q. Was that a Saturday night? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have a party that night? A. Yes.

Q. What was the occasion for the party? Why was there a party that night? A. It was Sidney's birthday, 26th year birthday.

10343 Q. Your son Sidney's 26th birthday? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have anything to do with arranging that party? A. Yes.

Q. What did you have to do with having the party given? A. Sidney and Mendy—

Mr. Turkus: I object to this as improper.

Mr. Talley: Merely fixing the occasion in her mind as to that particular day.

The Court: Objection overruled.

10344 Q. Tell us what you had to do with arranging that party. A. That was the 26th birthday of Sidney. So a couple of days before Mendy came in the house. I said to Mendy, "I hear you and Sidney had some argument. I did not know what it was, but I want you should make up. It is going to be Sidney's 26th birthday; I want you should make up with him." He said, "Yes, Ma."

Q. Then did he say anything about giving a party? A. Yes.

Q. What was said? A. I said, "I want you should make up." He said, "All right, Ma, you be in Sammy's store Saturday night at 10 o'clock."

Q. Were you in Sammy's store at 10 o'clock? A. Yes, sir. He said, "You and Sidney should be at 10 o'clock in Sammy's store."

Q. Did you go to Sammy's store that night? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there at 10 o'clock? A. Yes.

Q. Did you get there before 10 or after 10? A. A little before 10.

Q. Was Sammy there? A. [illegible]

Q. How did you go down to the store? A. I took a bus and then down to the store.

Q. When you got to Sammy's store who was there? A. Only Sammy.

Q. Who came along after that? A. A little while Sidney coming in the store.

Q. Anybody else? A. A couple of minutes later Mendy came in.

Q. Now, did you go any place with Mendy and the others? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you go and how did you go? A. We stood a little in Sammy's store for a couple of minutes. Then Mendy said, "Are you ready? Get in. Get on." So I and Sidney went out in Mendy's—he had a car.

Q. Was anybody in the car when you got into it? A. Yes.

Q. Who else? A. Blanche, my daughter-in-law Blanche, and her friend Dotty.

Q. Then you all got in the car? A. Yes.

Q. Who was driving the car? A. Mendy.

Q. What time was it when you left Sammy's place? Do you know that? A. Exactly I don't know. Maybe—

Q. What is your best recollection? A. Half past 10.

Q. It was after 10 o'clock? A. Yes.

Q. You all got in the car and drove away. Where did you drive? A. He drove to a restaurant.

Q. Where was the restaurant? A. I don't remember where the restaurant was.

Q. Was it uptown or downtown? A. Uptown.

Q. Do you know about what part of uptown 10349 it was? A. I don't know. It was very bright lights.

Q. In the theatrical district? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it around anywhere near 50th Street and Broadway, or 7th Avenue? A. Yes.

Q. What is your best impression of what street it was, how far uptown it was? A. About 50th Street.

Q. Was it in the center of the theatres there, a lot of theatre lights? A. Yes, sir, all lights from the theatre.

Q. After you had gotten there what happened?
A. After we got there near the restaurant, we all 10350 went out from the car, and Mendy said, "You wait here and I am going to park the car."

Q. Did you wait for him then? A. Yes, sir, we all waited for him.

Q. Where did you wait? A. Near the restaurant.

Q. On the sidewalk? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then when Mendy came along did you go into the restaurant? A. Yes, sir, he came along and said, "Let us go in the restaurant."

Q. Did you have something to eat and drink there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did you stay there? A. I cannot remember how long; we had something to drink and eat.

Q. What is your best impression or recollection as to how long you stayed there? A. It could be about one hour.

Q. When you left the restaurant where did you go? A. When we left the restaurant I said—Mendy said, "All right, let us go to the movies."

Q. To the picture show? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what theatre you went to? 10352
A. No, sir.

Q. Was it one of the big theatres on upper Broadway? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or 7th Avenue? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it a very large theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know about what time it was when you got into the theatre? A. I didn't look—it must have been around 12 o'clock.

Q. Did you remain in the theatre during the entire showing of the picture? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you wait for the picture to be finished? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then did you all go out together? A. Yes, 10353 sir.

Q. The same ones who went in the theatre came out with you; is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mendy and Sidney and young Mrs. Weiss and Dotty and yourself? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any idea how long you spent in the theatre or what time it was when you came out? A. I cannot remember. We went through the whole show.

Q. You waited for the whole show? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did the show take? As long as two hours? A. Yes.

Q. What is your best recollection or impression as to the time it was when you came out of the theatre? A. About two hours or more.

Q. About two o'clock would you say? A. Yes.

Q. Did you make any suggestion to them when they came out of the theatre? A. Yes.

Q. What did you say? A. I said, "Mendy, it is nice night, let us go for a little ride."

10355 Q. You said that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go for a drive? A. Yes, sir.

Q. All of you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you go? A. Around the park.

Q. Central Park? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then when you got through the drive where did you go? A. We went downtown to Ratner's Restaurant.

Q. Did you go into the restaurant? A. Yes, sir, we all go in the restaurant.

Q. All that you have named? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Including Mendy? A. Yes, sir.

10356 Q. You all went to the restaurant? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then did you have something to eat and drink there? A. No drink there.

Q. You mean no liquor served? A. No, sir.

Q. They serve tea or coffee or milk? A. Yes, sir. I don't remember. It was too late.

Q. You did have some refreshments? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the others have something to eat and drink? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how long you stayed there? A. We stayed there, I cannot remember.

Q. What is your best recollection, if you have any, as to how long you stayed in the restaurant? A. We stayed there three-quarters of an hour or an hour.

Q. You think about three-quarters of an hour? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you left there where did you go? A. Home.

Q. Who took you home? A. Mendy.

Q. When you left the restaurant did you all get in the car? A. Yes, sir.

10358

Q. Then they took you and Sidney home to your home in Monroe Street? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is in the Lower East Side, New York City? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then did you and Sidney go upstairs and go to bed? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You left the others downstairs? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, can you tell us about the time it was that you got home? A. Yes, sir, when we came in the house I said to Sidney, "Look, it is near four o'clock. I did not know it was so late."

10359

Q. It was four o'clock by your clock in your house? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mrs. Weiss, you know this was Sidney's 26th birthday you are talking about? A. Sure.

Q. There is no doubt in your mind about that? A. Because—

Q. No. There is no doubt in your mind he was 26 years old on the 13th of September? A. Yes, sir, on the 13th.

Q. That was a Saturday and Sunday you were out? A. Yes, sir.

10360 Q. Did you want to say something as to your remembering it was the 26th birthday? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What? A. Because my husband left me five months before; I was left with five children and I had a business.

Q. You had a baby five months after he left you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That baby was Sidney? A. Yes, sir, that is how I always remember.

10361 Q. You always remember Sidney's birth by the fact he was born five months after your husband left you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you remember any other birthday parties of Sidney's which you had? A. No, sir. That's only one birthday party.

Q. You remember that because Sidney and Mendy had a little quarrel before then? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You wanted the boys to make up? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Talley: That is all.

10362 Mr. Turkus: I have no questions to ask of the defendant's mother.

Mr. Talley: At this juncture I want to ask the District Attorney about the D.D.4's and D.D.5's we requested many days ago. Those police reports.

The Court: I take it you want to get the description?

Mr. Talley: Yes, sir.

The Court: As given of the man who went in to buy cigarettes?

Mr. Turkus: I have had Mr. Joseph go through this bundle of D.D.4's which is marked as Defendants' Exhibit Z-19, and only two that could possible refer to any identification by Mrs. Rosen of the defendant Mendy Weiss are contained in these, which Mr. Joseph has put together. I will not only hand those two up, but the entire bundle as well.

The Court: I want you to pick out the one that is wanted. It is not reasonable to ask the Court to wade through a bulky record when counsel can point out what is wanted. 10364

Mr. Turkus: It is elementary what has to be done.

The Court: Who made this, Detective S-u-r-f-t?

Mr. Turkus: Senft.

The Court: Or Detective William J.—

Mr. Turkus: The one that is on the left-hand side is the detective who makes the 5.

The Court: It says "The undersigned". There are two "undersigns".

Mr. Turkus: I think, as a matter of police routine, a commanding officer signs the bundle of these D.D.5's. 10365

The Court: He takes them upon the signature of the detective. I will excuse the jury for a few minutes. Don't discuss the case.

(The jury retired from the court-room.)

The Court: Is Detective Senft here?

Mr. Joseph: He is not here but he is still in the department, I believe.

10366 Colloquy

The Court: He is available?

Mr. Joseph: Yes.

The Court: How about Mrs. Rosen?

Mr. Turkus: Not in the building now but we can get her.

The Court: Is she available? In connection with the resumption of cross-examination of Mrs. Rosen, and as a basis for attacking her identification of Weiss as the man who came into the store, Judge Talley and other defense counsel are entitled to an inspection of this D.D. 4.

Mr. Turkus: I think it is a "5", isn't it?

The Court: 5.

Mr. Turkus: I will find out how quickly we can get her here.

The Court: Have her here at ten in the morning.

Mr. Turkus: Maybe we can finish it today. This is the tenth week or eleventh week—

The Court: Never mind about that. With her here she can be examined, and this is matter not of collateral but of specific impeachment—

Mr. Turkus: I will try to get her here now.

The Court: Pardon me. Therefore, if she denies having said to the detectives any of these things, defense counsel are entitled to put the detective on the stand and prove that she did.

Mr. Talley: May we examine the paper in question?

The Court: You may.

(Paper handed to Judge Talley.)

Mr. Talley: Have the detective here is, I understand, your direction to the District Attorney?

The Court: The direction is that both of them be here at ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. Talley: May I look at this now?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: Thank you.

Mr. Turkus: May we not continue with the balance of the defense? 10370

The Court: We will straighten this out before we go any further. I mean to say now Judge Talley and other counsel are reading a paper and will have every opportunity to study its contents.

I should add as to the rights of the defense that if the detective should deny such statements, then the detective may be confronted and cross-examined on the D.D.5 and, in event that becomes necessary, it may be offered in evidence at that time, not before. 10371

It is obvious to me, from this D.D.5, that the attempted corroboration given by Mrs. Rosen of Weiss having gone into that store that night is rendered worthless as evidence. I cannot even submit it to the jury on the charge as being worthy of consideration on a point of corroboration.

Mr. Talley: Do I understand—Mr. Joseph, will you remain here because the District Attorney quoted Mr. Joseph as stating those are the only two papers in that file of D.D.4's and D.D.5's that have any relation to the identification by Mrs. Rosen of defendant Weiss—is that Mr. Joseph's statement in addition to that of Mr. Turkus?

Mr. Joseph: Yes.

Mr. Talley: Now, in 1936, is there not a statement in which she described Weiss to one of the detectives who interviewed her at her home or place of business, in 10373 1936, immediately after the killing of Rosen, in which she gave a description of the man she says was in the store, and gave a description of him as being 136 pounds and about five foot six in height? That is the paper that I want.

Mr. Joseph: I read these over last week. I don't recall it now.

Mr. Talley: That is the first investigation that was made immediately after the murder, when a description was given, we are given to understand, by Mrs. Rosen of the man who came into the store the 10374 night before.

The Court: Did she say she gave a description that night?

Mr. Talley: Gave a description to one of the detectives.

Mr. Cuff: Not that night.

Mr. Talley: She testified before the Grand Jury, as I understand it.

Mr. Turkus: He is confused with that.

The Court: I don't recall that.

Mr. Talley: What I want is the statement that she made, if she made one, the day of the killing or immediately thereafter, to the detectives, in which she gave a description of the man whom she says came into the candy store the night before, in his shirt sleeves. That is the D.D.4 and D.D.5.

Mr. Turkus: Will you turn to the testimony and show me where there is any testimony in the record—

Mr. Talley: What?

Mr. Turkus: I am trying to help you. Go ahead, do what you want.

Mr. Talley: You are trying to help me?

Mr. Turkus: Wait a minute, Judge, you read the wrong name or we helped you read it. The signature of the detective on the second one of the D.D.5's is Henry G. Swift, not Senft, and the first detective is Vincent G. Giordano.

Mr. Joseph: I understand he is retired, Judge, and he is in Florida.

Mr. Talley: Is there anything in that report that you now have indicating a description given by Mrs. Rosen?

The Court: I find nothing in my notes about her having said that she gave a description of the man at that time. I have that when, some considerable time thereafter, Weiss was in custody and was brought into a Federal room by two detectives, she was not at that time sure because he had fattened up. That apparently has relation to the D.D.5. That was two years ago.

Mr. Turkus: That was in 1939, the date of the report.

The Court: The jury is not here. Frankly, the impression I gather is that in this case the wish is the father to the thought, that the likelihood is that she did not link this trifling incident of the man buying a penny cigarette at that time with the murder. Customers come and go in those little stores on a Saturday night. An incident of that kind would not sensibly attract her attention. I did not swallow 10379 that when she gave the testimony. There was nothing significant about a man buying a penny cigarette and walking out. It is more likely that if Weiss was in there, he had no reason at all for walking into the back of the store. He could look in from the street. I thought the wish was father to the thought; that as time went by and she felt under the necessity of trying to hook up some sort of corroboration of an accomplice's testimony, that she was giving this in order to help out.

Mr. Talley: You remember that she 10380 said she was brought into this court-room to have Weiss pointed out to her after the trial started in?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: Which would indicate that she made no identification.

The Court: I have had enough practical experience and observation of the way things are done to form an impression that a shop-keeper would not attach any importance whatever to a thing of that kind, with the numerous customers that come in on a Saturday night.

Mr. Turkus: Will your Honor look at paragraph 6 of that report, that D.D.5?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: Will you let us, in the presence of your secretary, look over those reports, if your Honor please? I think it would be very helpful and satisfactory.

The Court: You cannot do that. These are secret.

Mr. Talley: This trial is practically completed now. We can gain no information from those reports.

The Court: But there are other trials all through there. These D.D.4's contain lots of matters that are not connected with this trial.

Mr. Talley: My contention is this, that immediately after that crime she was interrogated by some of the officers and that she gave a description, assuming she had any one in mind at all, of the man she says came into the store the night before, and that description could not possibly agree with an adequate description of the defendant Weiss. Those are the things that we are seeking and that we are entitled to, not a report made in 1939 or statement made in 1939; one made in 1936.

The Court: If that D.D.4 is here, it would be the first one in the case.

Mr. Talley: Yes, sir.

The Court: Let the Judge have it.

Mr. Turkus: What file are you referring to?

The Court: The first one. If she gave a description of the man who bought the cigarettes, it would be in the first D.D.5. No. 6 refers to something that has not come out in the evidence in this case.

Mr. Turkus: That may have been the confusion.

Mr. Talley: Confusion on whose part?

Mr. Cuff: There could not have been any confusion about that.

The Court: She has lost her husband and she wants a conviction. That is the story.

Mr. Turkus: That is acting upon the basis that the D.D.5 is accurate. I have information what went on in that room where Major Williams was, what Mrs. Rosen did, from the Federal people. You are proceeding on the theory that that is accurate.

The Court: I am assuming accuracy.

Mr. Turkus: I want the defendants to have any paper or anything that they think can help them in the case but I am telling you I know what the Federal people say went on in that room.

The Court: In other words, you mean if Mrs. Rosen is examined and if the detective is examined to impeach her, if she denies this, and then if the report itself is put in to impeach the detective in case he denies it, that then you will challenge the word of the detective by putting the Federal agents on the stand?

Mr. Turkus: As to what happened in that room while they were present, yes, on that time of identification.

Mr. Cuff: She denied being in Major Williams' office.

Mr. Talley: Does the District Attorney take the position that he attacks the accuracy of the police report in this case?

The Court: See if you have that other D.D.5 or 4.

Mr. Turkus: I had Mr. Joseph look through every D.D.4. I will go over them myself personally, if you want. 10388

The Court: Will you look over them right now and pick out the one that is closest to September 13th?

Mr. Talley: The first statement she made.

Mr. Turkus: That is not the way D.D.5's are run. You cannot have me produce something that does not exist.

The Court: Mr. Turkus, will you please give me the one closest to September 13th?

Mr. Turkus: Here it is. Here is September 13th. Here is another one September 13th. Here is another September 13th, and another one, and another one. Here is another one, and two more. 10389

The Court: Mark this one for identification.

(Paper marked People's Exhibit Z-30 for identification.)

The Court: Let me have the others. The first one shown makes no reference to it at all.

Mr. Turkus: Here is another September 13th.

Mr. Talley: May we look at it?

The Court: You don't have to. Take the Court's word for it. Just mark it for identification. Mark the next one for identification. This likewise makes no reference to Weiss.

Mr. Talley: Neither one? Then no need of marking them.

The Court: If this case should be a conviction and go to the Court of Appeals you might be asking that body to look at it. The good faith of this Court will not be challenged.

(Paper marked People's Exhibit Z-31 for identification.)

Mr. Talley: As to the record—

Mr. Turkus: In order to keep the record straight, that D.D.5 dated 9/8/39 and the D.D.5 dated 9/14/39 may refer to matters which occurred outside the office of the Federal people. I do not know.

The Court: Don't argue about it. Can you see anything else on the 13th?

Mr. Talley: Is your Honor marking the paper that you handed to me to examine? Has that been given a number?

The Court: Mark that now.

Mr. Talley: D.D.5 or D.D.4, containing two sheets, which the Court permitted me to read. I want marked for identification so we will know what we are talking about.

The Court: Mark it for identification.

(Two sheets marked People's Exhibit Z-32 for identification.)

Mr. Turkus: Here is another paper that is a resume of the homicide case under date of September 13, 1936.

The Court: Mark this for identification. It has nothing to do with the subject matter.

(Paper marked People's Exhibit Z-33 for identification.)

10394

Mr. Talley: Have you any report made by Captain McGowan, Mr. Turkus, on this case? I would like to have that shown to the Court, if you have.

The Court: One thing at a time.

Mr. Turkus: Do you want me to continue to look for September 13th first?

Mr. Talley: Finish.

Mr. Turkus: I am doing this for you.

Mr. Talley: I told you what I wanted.

10395

Mr. Turkus: Don't be so sensitive. Tell me what you want.

Mr. Talley: I am going to tell you again—

Mr. Turkus: Don't make a speech. Tell me what you want.

Mr. Talley: I would like to tell you where you can go.

The Court: Come to order, please.

Mr. Turkus: That was very cute.

I have examined the rest of the file of the D.D.5's and I found none under date of September 13, 1936, that is date of report under that date.

The Court: Now the 14th.

Mr. Turkus: Yes, here is one from the 14th.

The Court: That is probably in more detail.

Mr. Turkus: I ask that it be marked for identification.

The Court: These are not the papers.

Mr. Turkus: No, the other papers do not refer to this matter. They refer to the defendant Lepke and others.

The Court: I think, in view of the situation, I had better take the time to look through all.

Mr. Talley: That would be more satisfactory to the defendants.

The Court: The Court has asked counsel to avoid conversation. If this is not obeyed, the Court will be compelled to recess and go into another room. I cannot follow these papers accurately if there is a buzz of conversation among counsel in disregard of the Court's request.

Mr. Turkus, I would like the stenographic report of Mrs. Rosen's interview with Assistant District Attorney McCarthy of September 23, 1936. Was there a transcript?

Mr. Turkus: Papers consisting of 18 pages, taken by Assistant District Attorney William E. McCarthy on September 23, 1936, is herewith handed—

The Court: While I am reading these, will you please look through that and see if she gave a description there? Sit down and take your time.

In these papers it says nothing more on that point, but there is one report dated September 13th in which a description, given by whom is not disclosed, is noted as to one of the four men. I would judge it is a description of either Bernstein or Ferraco. I will read it. It does not say who gave this description. It is signed by Detective King. "25 years, 5-7, 140, dark complexion, clean shaven, sharp profile". 10400
That is what makes me think it is probably Bernstein. And then the way the man was dressed, of course, is nothing that means anything here: "Powder blue suit, soft gray hat, collar of shirt open at neck, no tie, either Italian or Jewish." That looks like either one of those two. It could not apply to either Strauss or Weiss. No description of other three.

Mr. Talley: I don't see that that helps either side.

Mr. Turkus: People's Exhibit 31 for 10401 identification—

The Court: I am not obliged to tell you that. All other papers have been duly examined.

Mr. Turkus: People's Exhibit 31 for identification, on the back has a description of the persons wanted. That is under date of September 13, 1936, and it is substantially what your Honor read just a moment ago.

The Court: Well, it is sensible that the person whose appearance was noted was a sidewalk or wheel man, not a shooter.

Mr. Turkus: Your Honor has asked me to read the McCarthy statement of September 23, 1936. I have read it in its entirety. The only thing that might remotely be suggestive of the subject under inquiry, I put a check mark alongside of it.

The Court: Pass it up.

Mr. Turkus: That is not helpful, and after your Honor gets through with it I would like to have that marked for identification.

10403

The Court: Have you read it carefully?

Mr. Turkus: Yes, your Honor. I sat over in the other jury box and read it.

The Court: Cannot afford any mistakes.

Mr. Turkus: No mistakes. If you have any doubt about it, you can read the 18 pages. I read it.

The Court: I think this is a fair statement then, that Mrs. Rosen did not, on being examined by Mr. McCarthy, state the incident of the man coming in, buying a cigarette, and looking around the place. That was not related.

Mr. Talley: The date of that statement was September 23, 1936, is that correct?

The Court: Right. Taken by John F. Matthews, stenographer.

Mr. Talley: Have I the date correctly stated?

The Court: Yes. Mark this for identification.

(Statement marked People's Exhibit Z-34 for identification).

Mr. Turkus: I ask your Honor to look at Defendants' Exhibit C for identification, which is the Grand Jury testimony of Esther Rosen on October 14, 1936, and specifically page 16 thereof.

The Court: Didn't we take that up before?

Mr. Turkus: I want you to read about that. 10406

The Court: What date is this?

Mr. Turkus: October 14, 1936, a month after the murder.

The Court: Didn't counsel see this?

Mr. Talley: No, sir, we did not see it.

The Court: Suppose we read it. It all tends to confirm.

Mr. Turkus: That is consistent with her testimony in the case.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Turkus: And who it was that bought the cigarettes. 10407

The Court: Where is the little girl now? Is she available as a witness?

Mr. Turkus: She is available as a witness but she does not remember the incident now.

The Court: There is something else here.

Mr. Turkus: She could not identify him. That identification, if you will note, was within a month of the homicide, by picture.

The Court: In reading this to counsel,

10408

I will have to leave out the first part of one answer because that relates to something that is not disclosed.

Mr. Talley: Do you want the record to take this?

The Court: I think it is just as well. "I seen him between eleven and twelve. Q. And he came in to buy one cigarette at a time? A. He was looking behind the counter. I thought nothing of it."

One more thing here. Yes, I remember counsel saw this. I remember. Something else here reminds me of it.

Mr. Cuff: That is about the money, isn't it, Judge?

The Court: Yes, that is what follows. This was shown up at the bench in the other room at the early part of the trial.

Mr. Cuff: We read it.

The Court: This is further up on the page, before what has just been read: "Next Saturday night I seen some fellow, now that he was killed Sunday, some fellow walked in Saturday night but when I saw the fellow's picture I identified that fellow. He walked in and bought a single cigarette each time." Then follows something else which is hearsay.

Now, gentlemen, I think the procedure is the matter to be discussed. Of course, the routine technical procedure is the one outlined. If you want to short-cut and redirect it on the D.D.5 to the record after I bring back the jury, you may avoid that necessity. But there are certain things in the D.D.4 which are prejudicial so that all of it cannot go in.

Mr. Talley: All I would want would be just the paragraph pertaining—

The Court: Then suppose you pass it over and I will see what seems to be admissible?

Mr. Talley: There are two paragraphs, I think, on separate pages.

The Court: I am assuming this. Of course, the District Attorney has a right 10412 to show that the detective was mistaken, but for the District Attorney to challenge a D.D.5 in the trial of a case where the District Attorney and police have to collaborate might tend to confuse the juridical mind. No. 6 is what I thought was prejudicial. "At 2:30 P. M. September 7, 1939, Mrs. Rosen, accompanied by the undersigned, appeared at Room 816, 90 Church Street, in the office of Major Williams, where Weiss was viewed by Mrs. Rosen." Then follows an identification of Weiss, but in a different connection. 10413

Mr. Turkus: In connection with the premises or adjacent to the premises.

The Court: But not something that has come out in the trial of this case. Do you know what I mean?

Mr. Talley: It is not quite plain to me but it is plain that there are two paragraphs in there which pertain to her identification or failure to identify the defendant Weiss. Those are the two that I think should be read.

The Court: Do you want this to go in?

She stated that Weiss resembled the man who was sitting in an automobile parked near her store a week before her husband was killed, in company with Max Rubin, Lepke, and Gurrah, who had ordered her husband to get out of town if he knew what was good for him. You don't want that, do you?

Mr. Talley: No, that does not belong in at all and has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Cuff: It is imagination anyway.

The Court: Maybe it is and maybe it is not.

Mr. Cuff: Because Rubin testified here and he gives the lie to that.

Mr. Barshay: Judge, I don't want that to appear in the record, jury or no jury. I think it should be stricken from the record.

The Court: Strike it out but put in the record that on the first page, paragraph No. 6 of exhibit was read to counsel and counsel do not wish it to be read to the jury.

Mr. Cuff: We don't want that in the record.

The Court: I have stricken it from the record but I don't propose, in case this goes to the Court of Appeals following an appeal from a conviction, to have the Court of Appeals find it in the record and then think that I failed to disclose it.

Mr. Turkus: What number is that?

Mr. Talley: Z-32 for identification.

The Court: I am passing this back. I put a pencil bracket on the upper part of

No. 2 on the second page; ask counsel for defense to examine it and see if that is what they want and if that is all that they want. The rest of that paragraph refers to what was just stricken out.

Mr. Talley: In addition to the paragraph indicated by your Honor, and I would like you to look at it again, which terminates with the word "before his murder", that is as much as we desire to have in.

The Court: Let me see that.

Mr. Talley: Just a moment. In addition to that, that "murder" is in the middle of paragraph 2 that your Honor designated, in addition to that we want to have read paragraph 4 of the first sheet down to the word "kill", paragraph 4. Will you look at that, please, and on the other page we seek to terminate the brackets after the sentence, "the night before his murder."

Mr. Turkus: I think it ought to go down, as far as D.D.5, People Exhibit Z-32 for identification is concerned, that is the second 5 attached to Z-32 for identification, it ought to go down to "her husband's death" if that is submitted to a jury.

The Court: Have you got those photographs referred to in paragraph 4 on page 1? When it comes to identifying by photographs—

Mr. Turkus: I was not there then. I do not know.

The Court: Isn't it in the record?

10420 Colloquy

Mr. Turkus: Judge, there were a lot of photographs.

The Court: People change in appearance.

Mr. Turkus: I know.

The Court: The photograph may not look like a person when shown a long time after.

Mr. Turkus: The only one that could explain that would be the detective Giordano.

Mr. Cuff: King.

Mr. Turkus: No, Giordano.

The Court: I think, Judge Talley, that 4 is admissible, provided the photographs are produced or can be found to be used in connection with it so the jury can look at the photographs and look at Weiss as he appears today.

Mr. Talley: No, sir, I would not care to have that. She said she could not identify him. Then they have some photographs presented and she says yes. That would not do at all.

The Court: I will rule out four.

Mr. Talley: All of four?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: Let me note an exception to your Honor's refusal to allow me to read—

The Court: For that reason. The photographs are not here for the jury to compare with the defendant's appearance.

Mr. Talley: Don't have to say anything to the jury about the photographs.

The Court: And they are not authenticated.

Mr. Talley: I am taking just that statement in that paragraph which is quite separate and distinct from the photographs. I am not interested in the photographs.

Mr. Turkus: As it is, the defendant is getting the benefit of hearsay testimony.

Mr. Talley: It is not hearsay at all.

Mr. Turkus: What, then, is it?

Mr. Talley: It is the statement she made in the course of the investigation of the Rosen killing. 10424

Mr. Turkus: That should be something to cross-examine the witness by, not read in something a detective wrote on a report. You are getting every break in the world. You don't seem to realize it.

Mr. Cuff: Mr. Turkus, we know what we are getting and we know what we want.

The Court: Can't this stop? It is hard to think with all this going on.

It has been requested that the bracketed matter include, "candy store of her husband the night before his murder". That is correct? 10425

Mr. Talley: Yes, sir.

The Court: That was meant to be included.

Mr. Talley: In the brackets there, now I request—

Mr. Turkus: At this point, your Honor—

Mr. Talley: Now I request that that portion—

10426 Colloquy

Mr. Turkus: Somebody else has a right to request.

Mr. Talley: Request that that portion of paragraph four that I have indicated to your Honor, terminating at the word "kill" be likewise read to the jury.

The Court: I have stated my notion concerning four, but really this is a matter for agreement. This is legalized as evidence in this form, which is irregular, only by agreement, but if formalities are 10427 waived, and Mr. Turkus objects, I shall sustain an objection to four and then you can take your exception.

Mr. Talley: Does Mr. Turkus object to having that report read to the jury?

Mr. Turkus: Let me see what is being done here. I am trying to tell him he is getting a break, but he does not want to listen.

The Court: Can't this colloquy stop?

Mr. Turkus: Yes, your Honor, it will.

Mr. Talley: It can be stopped by your 10428 Honor, nobody else.

The Court: Pardon me.

Mr. Talley: I say it can be stopped by your Honor.

The Court: Without a gavel?

Mr. Talley: You don't need a gavel. Just tell him to sit down and not make childish statements. That might stop it. I don't think it will.

The Court: I don't think it is childish. I think it is a sound objection because the failure to identify there is based upon photographs which are not produced.

whereas in paragraph two of the second page, it is based upon the face to face meeting between the defendant Mendy Weiss and the witness. All right, I will put the marks around it. It can be read in evidence.

Mr. Talley: Both paragraphs or only one?

The Court: The one.

Mr. Talley: Just one?

The Court: Yes. Before the jury comes back, take your exception on the other one.

10430

Mr. Talley: I take exception to your Honor's refusal to allow me to read paragraph four—

The Court: I want no discussion on evidence when the jury comes in.

Mr. Talley: —in the Detective Bureau report marked People's Exhibit Z-32, for identification. When the jury comes back I am going to read to it that portion of the report which is marked in the brackets by your Honor.

The Court: It has been marked all around now in the border.

Mr. Talley: All right, let me see it, please, before they come in.

The Court: She had admitted under cross-examination by Mr. Talley that she was not sure at that time because Weiss had fattened up, but, you see, I am letting this in because it goes further than saying she is not sure. She says definitely it was not the man.

Mr. Turkus: That is a statement, your Honor, that was made by Henry G. Swift, a detective, which is hearsay. I have been deprived of the right to cross-examine him.

The Court: Not deprived. This is not going to be read to the jury unless you consent to it. That is made clear. If you don't consent to it, you will have to go through the regular formalities which have been previously outlined and with which you are familiar.

Mr. Turkus: That will delay the trial another two days.

The Court: Not necessarily. You can decide that.

Mr. Turkus: I will reserve the right until tomorrow morning to put on the detectives and bring the Federal men here.

The Court: Let us know, then, tomorrow morning.

Mr. Turkus: Yes.

The Court: Let the matter remain open tonight and in the morning let us know what you decide to do.

10434

Mr. Cuff: If you are going to have the Federal man, get the photographs.

Mr. Turkus: I was trying to tell you something.

Mr. Talley: You can save that by having it read to the jury and you can attack it in your summation.

The Court: I tell you, Judge Talley—of course, the jury is not here—we know how these things are taken down. We know how easy it is for a person to get the wrong impression as to what is said and have that wrong impression right away or have it later. There have been constant wrong impressions as to what the Court said throughout this trial. It is quite possible that at the time of the examination referred to in the D.D.4, and Weiss being brought in for identification, that she did say she was not sure, and the detective afterwards put it in as a negative answer in his D. D. 5. I would not put that past anybody as a mistake that can easily be made.

10436

Mr. Talley: Don't you think the reasonable assumption is that these reports are correct?

The Court: There is no assumption. But let us end this. Bring back the jury. We will recess until the morning.

(The jury returned to the court room.)

The Court: Gentlemen of the jury, it has been necessary to read through a substantial mass of police reports. That is the reason for the delay. That work has now been completed. At ten o'clock tomorrow morning we will proceed with the examination of witnesses.

10437

Please do not discuss the case: let nobody talk to you about it. Keep your minds open and follow all other admonitions heretofore given.

Let the jury go out first.

The defendants are remanded.

(Adjournment was thereupon taken to November 25, 1941, at 10:00 A. M.)

10438 Colloquy

Brooklyn, N. Y., November 25, 1941.

TRIAL RESUMED

The Court: I have just been reviewing the testimony of Mrs. Rosen, beginning around page 50, including page 61. I think that is sufficient to use as a basis, if you wish, for specific impeachment.

Mr. Talley: Yes, sir.

10439 The Court: Do you want to use her or do you want to use the detective?

Mr. Talley: I just want to introduce that in evidence, that is all.

The Court: Have you reviewed this since last night, from pages 50 to 61?

Mr. Talley: Yes.

The Court: It seems to me that lays a basis and you could put the detective right on the stand.

Mr. Talley: I am quite in accord with you.

10440 The Court: There is sufficient here already, because this is not a positive identification.

Mr. Talley: Then I don't require her.

The Court: The only question is the detective's conclusion, whether that is based upon something he can recollect she said in order to establish the conclusion as correct—that it went further than an uncertainty.

Mr. Turkus: With reference to People's Exhibit Z-32 for identification, the first page—the date of the report, 9/8/39

—the detective who made this D.D. 5 is Vincent Giordani. Mr. Giordani is no longer a member of the Police Department, and his whereabouts, from what I can gather, are somewhere in the State of Florida. However, with respect to Paragraph 4 thereof, Detective King, of the 75th Squad was present with Giordani when the occurrence took place and is available as a witness. In addition to that, with respect to D.D. 5, the date of 10442 the report, 9/14/39, also Z-32, the identification of Major Williams, of 90 Church Street office, he is no longer there. He is with the United States Army at Fort Benning, Georgia, having first been in M. I. However, we have produced and have available for court testimony Agent White, who was present when the occurrence in Paragraph 2 of that report took place. In addition, we have available the detective, Harry G. Swift, who made the D.D. 5 dated 9/14/39, Z-32 for identification. 10443
All those witnesses are in court, available for any use that any of the defendants may wish to put them to.

Mr. Talley: We asked at least three or four weeks ago for these reports. Several times we called attention to the fact they had not been received. If we had received them when we asked for them, we could have gotten Giordani or the rest of them here to identify it. I think the right thing to do is to put those reports in evidence.

10444 Colloquy

Not all of them, but so much of them as we now have under discussion.

Mr. Turkus: The right thing to do is to call living witnesses.

The Court: Who signed the exhibit for identification?

Mr. Turkus: Z-32 for identification, the date of the report, 9/8/39—was signed by Giordani,—the first page. But in Paragraph 4 it says that Detective King was 10445 with him when the occurrence took place.

The Court: I just asked a simple question. I am trying to figure out what it is best to do.

Mr. Turkus: The witness, in accordance—

The Court: Wait just a minute. Paragraph 4 states the officer's conclusion; it does not state what Mrs. Rosen said.

Mr. Turkus: That is right.

The Court: The jury is the one to draw conclusions.

10446 Mr. Turkus: I am going to answer—

The Court: Please. I do not want any interruption. Please sit down while I am talking. Now, in reviewing the evidence, as I stated, Mrs. Rosen was unable to make a positive identification. Let me refer to that particular part, at page 59:

"Q. Then did you say, 'That is the man who was in my candy store,' or did you say, 'I cannot identify him as the man'? A. I said to him, 'He looks much heavier. He was not as heavy in the store. I have not seen him in a few years. He was slimmer when he came in my store.'

"Q. Were you in doubt as to whether he was the man?"—now please bear this very clearly in mind as I read—

"Q. Were you in doubt as to whether he was the man? A. If he was slimmer, I would definitely say he was the man."

Mr. Talley: I think that is sufficient to show that she was not definite as to her identification, and, as I stated, an identification that is not definite is no better than no identification. 10448

The Court: Now, of course, the detective put something in the nature of a conclusion—he goes further than that in his conclusion. But Giordani is not here, and I am facing a practical situation. Why not, if you wish, Judge Talley, consider if you wish to call those who are here and cross the bridge when you come to it.

Mr. Talley: The only man whose testimony would be worth anything in connection with this report is Giordani, who made it, and Major Williams, who was there in his presence, in whose office the statement was made. I don't want any— 10449

Mr. Turkus: Detective King is here.

Mr. Talley: It does not make any difference how many are here.

Mr. Turkus: The agent is here. They were both present on both of those occurrences.

The Court: Let me see if I am correct in my impression—I was wrong about that. I was wrong in the impression. If Giordani was here he could be asked directly as to that.

Mr. Turkus: Will your Honor look at Paragraph 4?

The Court: I read it.

Mr. Turkus: Did you see about Detective King?

Mr. Talley: It seems a very simple matter to me, if I read to the jury those two paragraphs.

The Court: It seems simple to me, too, but it cannot be done except by agreement.

Mr. Talley: I ask that an agreement be made. The District Attorney agrees, in view of the fact that these witnesses are not here, that that report be read in evidence to the jury.

Mr. Turkus: There was no agreement made by any District Attorney to read the D.D. 5.

Mr. Talley: I said nothing about you making an agreement—nothing. I am proposing that the District Attorney consent to read to the jury the two paragraphs of those reports he has in his possession.

Mr. Turkus: I counterpropose—

The Court: Please stop quarreling. Only when we agree on an orderly course of procedure can I rule. If that paragraph is offered in evidence, and if objection is made, the Court will be compelled to rule according to law.

Mr. Talley: I offer in evidence from the paper marked Z-32 for identification, which is designated a supplemental complaint—"Report. Police Department, City of New York,"—and is dated September 13, 1936, the date I refer to as indicating the date of the first report, September 13, 1936. This report is dated September 8, 1939. Now, I offer in evidence so much of the first page of the two pages of this exhibit as is indicated by 10454 the numeral "4," being the fourth paragraph, and I offer in evidence so much of said Paragraph 4 as ends with the word "killed." I offer in evidence supplemental report dated September 14, 1939, as is contained in Paragraph No. 2 thereof and as is indicated by pencil markings made by the Court, the last word of that portion offered being, "murder."

Mr. Turkus: Objected to on the ground it is incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant, and on the further ground Detective King and Agent White and other wit- 10455 nesses are available to be called to the stand.

The Court: I sustain the objection.

Mr. Talley: I take exception and I ask for an opportunity to try to locate these two witnesses.

The Court: Of course, you understand the Court's view. I have tried to make it clear by quotations from the record and the comments therein, that even if this had not been objected to and had gone in it would be error.

Mr. Talley: It is not necessary, in your Honor's opinion, that the report be put in?

The Court: I don't think it is.

Mr. Talley: Your Honor will charge the jury at the proper time that there has been no identification at all?

The Court: There has been no ade-10457 quate, no satisfactory, identification by Mrs. Rosen.

Mr. Talley: Your Honor will charge the jury to that effect?

The Court: I will—I told you that yesterday. If you want to find out what Mrs. Rosen said you can bring other witnesses in here, if you wish.

Mr. Talley: I want that report. The witness is the only witness who will validate it. I have nothing further to offer except an offer to get hold of the wit-10458 ness. I could have had him here if these reports had been given to me when demanded and not held until the extreme end of this trial, until yesterday.

Mr. Turkus: That is an outrageous statement.

Mr. Talley: I want the District Attorney stopped.

Mr. Turkus: He made a very improper statement.

Mr. Talley: You held them for two weeks. Two weeks ago I asked for these reports, and you know it.

Mr. Turkus: That is an absolute misstatement of fact. I cannot turn over confidential police files unless directed to do so by the Court.

The Court: These statements to the jury have to be stopped. None of these reports are permitted in evidence under the law. They are confidential police reports and the law is clear on them. That is the law. The rest is all play before the jury.

Mr. Talley: I asked for them so they might be examined.

The Court: I will say the last word, or there will be nothing more said. I will excuse the jury and let you argue it out if you wish.

The Court asked Mr. Turkus to subpoena these PD.4's, which are incompetent as evidence, in your behalf, because they are confidential police records, and it is not the policy of the law to permit them to be seen by the defense, and, at the proper time, for you to see them. It was yesterday you asked for their production. In the meantime they have been handed by the police to the District Attorney, which avoided the necessity of having the policemen here every day with those exhibits. Now, there is nothing disreputable about that on the part of Mr. Turkus. There will be no further exchange of compliments permitted.

Please proceed with the case.

Mr. Talley: I ask for the production of the men of the route.

10462

Mr. Turkus: Having in mind the Court's statement, I hand the same to you.

Mr. Talley: I offer in evidence map designating street layout bounded by Pitkin Avenue, etc.

Mr. Turkus: Consented to. Do you have any objection if it is marked as a People's Exhibit on your offer, since it is our exhibit?

10463

The Court: What is the date on that layout? Does it show traffic directions and signals? Those change from time to time.

Mr. Turkus: It shows the one-way street—obtained from the official records of the Chief Engineer for the Police Department, City of New York, as of September 13, 1936.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Turkus: The map contains matters which are self-explanatory.

10464

The Court: Does it show the traffic lights as they existed on that date?

Mr. Turkus: No, it does not. The policeman's testimony shows that, but it does not show which lights were in use at that time.

The Court: This was before seven o'clock in the morning?

Mr. Turkus: Yes. The only practical effect is it shows the layout of the streets in connection with the Rosen candy store, the Rosen residence, the Long Island Rail Road, the B.M.T., the I.R.T., and the route taken on the getaway, as testified to by the People's witnesses. It is data supplied by the official authorities of the Police Department as of September 13, 1936.

The Court: Do they check up with the matters testified to?

Mr. Turkus: Yes.

(Map received and marked Defendants' Exhibit 11, produced by the People.) 10466

Mr. Talley: I ask for an opportunity to endeavor to get Detective Giordani, who made the report indicated on People's Exhibit Z-32 for identification, and also to produce in court Major Williams, referred to in said report, so they may testify as to important questions.

The Court: Better think that over during the day and give it more mature consideration. Personally, I don't think you will want them, I do not think it is of any value whatever because already you have 10467 everything you need.

Mr. Talley: Does your Honor deny my application, for the purpose of the record?

The Court: No, I am suggesting that you give it more thought. Renew it later if you still think you want them.

Mr. Talley: With the consent of the Court—I will not renew it—I suppose I should renew it later as an application which has been made.

I have no further evidence to offer, then.

The Court: Then do I understand you wish the Court to adjourn for a few days until you can, under due process, bring these witnesses up here?

10468 Colloquy

Mr. Talley: That is right.

The Court: Do you seriously mean that?

Mr. Talley: This is very serious business for me, Judge Taylor—the entire trial—terribly serious.

The Court: Of course it is, for the 10469 Judge, too, and it is for the jury.

Mr. Talley: It could be so easily obviated by the method I suggested; then I would not have to make this suggestion. It is an important application, and I ask your Honor to pass upon it.

The Court: Personally, I don't think their evidence is worth anything in view of what the Court has said it would charge. How long will it take to get them up, after procedure.

Mr. Talley: I have no idea of where 10470 they are, or who they are. The first thing I knew of it was from the District Attorney's disclosure this morning as announced by him.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Joseph informs me that he was told yesterday. We may be able to get rid of this thing if you will listen to me for a few minutes.

The Court: How?

Mr. Turkus: I am not going to have anything put in evidence which I don't think is fair to Mrs. Rosen, because of the facts that I know, but I will ask your Honor to charge the jury that the jury do not consider her identification of Mendy Weiss buying cigarettes in the store the night before the murder at all,—take it out of the case.

The Court: Does that satisfy you? Do you still want to adjourn?

Mr. Talley: I still want the report in evidence.

Mr. Turkus: That is sheer obstinacy. At page 3385 of the record last night—

The Court: No more of that before the jury. The Court cannot speculate as to the underlying methods. The Court can only consider the reasonableness of the request. In view of the fact the Court has stated what it would charge the jury on this point, is such evidence of any further value? I think it is purely a matter of superfluity.

10472

The Court would not be justified in leaving the jury for several days and nights in a condition of inactiveness during the session of this trial. There are a multitude of reasons; and it would work against an accurate decision of the issue. I am going to take the responsibility right now and deny the application.

10473

Mr. Talley: Exception.

No further evidence on behalf of the defendant Weiss.

The Court: I will take the defense of Capone.

Mr. Rosenthal: The defendant Capone, with the exception of one stipulation, which I requested of the District Attorney on the direct case and which was partially agreed to—namely, the questions and answers which were read from other records, were correctly read by me, and all questions and answers of the particular witness in those various records—is that correct?

Mr. Turkus: That is satisfactory.

Mr. Rosenthal: Then I rest on the question of law which I raised to your Honor. We have no proof to offer whatever.

The Court: To be specific in this stipulation, may I add that you try, if possible, to say in respect to what examination of what witness?

Mr. Rosenthal: In so far as the defendant Capone is concerned, the stipulation would be in the form of, if the stenographer were called from the Cohen trial, he would testify that the questions and answers taken from that record, in so far as they are applicable to Sholem Bernstein, are true and correct. If the stenographer were called from the Grand Jury, he or she, whoever it might me, would testify that the questions and answers read from the extracts of those minutes, which your Honor furnished, pertaining to Sholem Bernstein, are true and correct.

The Court: Correct testimony?

Mr. Rosenthal: Yes. And if the stenographer were called in the Strauss and Goldstein trial, which has been referred to particularly in the minutes, the same concession would be in force and effect so far as it affects the testimony of Sholem Bernstein. And in respect to the witness Magoon, if the stenographer were called that presided in the case of the People against Magoon, that he would testify in a similar manner to the previous concession. I think that covers it.

Mr. Turkus: For the sake of expedition, so stipulated.

Mr. Rosenthal: And likewise in the Strauss and Goldstein case.

Mr. Cuff: And that applies to the questions and answers read by Judge Talley from the record in the Cohen case.

Mr. Turkus: So stipulated.

JAMES P. MALONE, Shield No. 1797, Manhattan Grand Jury, Borough of Manhattan, City and State of New York, called as a witness in behalf of The People, in rebuttal, after being duly sworn, testifies as follows:

By Mr. Turkus:

10479

Q. Are you a detective in the employ of the Police Department of the City of New York? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many years have you been so employed by the Police Department? A. Eleven years.

Q. How many years have you been a detective? A. About four years.

Q. On March 5, 1940, what command were you assigned to? A. Manhattan Grand Jury Squad.

Q. Is that the Grand Jury Squad attached to the office of District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was your immediate superior and commanding officer Captain Bernard Dowd? A. Yes.

Q. On March 25, 1940, did you receive a direction or command from your superior officer, Captain Dowd? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you execute the order or command? A. Yes, sir.

10481 Q. On March 28, 1940, was that the date the order was executed, or was it prior thereto? A. March 28, 1940, at one a. m.

Q. Who did you take into custody? A. Mendy Weiss.

Q. When did you bring Mendy Weiss to the District Attorney's office of Kings County? A. About 3 p. m., March 28, 1940.

Q. When you took him to the District Attorney's office, do you recall into whose room you took him, or what Assistant District Attorney, at any rate, was in the room when you brought him in? A. To your room—Mr. Turkus.

10482 Q. When you brought him into my room, did you see anybody in my room at that time? A. Yes, sir, there was a gentleman sitting at your desk, or standing, I am not just sure, but he was present with you, and Johnny Whalen, who was my partner, I asked—

Q. You cannot bring in any talk. What was that man who was in the room doing when Mendy Weiss came in? A. He shook hands with Mendy Weiss and he said, "Hello, Mendy. Your brother Murray retained me for you. If you want me, you know where I will be."

Q. Did that man then depart from the office? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the defendant Mendy Weiss questioned by Assistant District Attorney Turkus in your presence? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make notes of that interrogation? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you make any memorandum in connection with some of the answers that Weiss gave? A. No, sir.

Q. Let me ask you this: Was Mendy Weiss asked his age? A. Yes, sir. 10484

Q. Did you then say something to Mendy Weiss? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you say? A. I said, "Why don't you stop lying and tell the man the truth?"

Mr. Talley: I move to strike that out and I ask your Honor to instruct the jury to disregard it.

The Court: Strike it out. The jury will disregard it. It is on the borderline, Mr. Turkus.

Q. Did you say something on top of that?

Mr. Talley: I object to that as too general, indefinite, and not proper rebuttal. This witness is called in rebuttal.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. I don't remember, Mr. Turkus.

Q. When I asked him his address, and he stated he lived at No. 10 Monroe Street, New York City, you said something which the Court has stricken out. You cannot repeat that. Did you say something afterwards to him?

Mr. Talley: I object to that as not proper rebuttal.

Mr. Turkus: Specifically bringing your attention to the address.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

10487 A. I said, "Why don't you tell him your correct address is 4520 Twelfth Avenue, Brooklyn?"

Mr. Talley: I object to that and move the answer be stricken out as not responsive.

The Court: Objection overruled, motion denied.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

The Witness: (continuing) He turned around to you and he said, "Why don't you ask him all the questions? He knows all the answers."

10488 Q. Did you state at the time you furnished the address, 4520 Twelfth Avenue, under what name this defendant was living?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as not proper rebuttal.

A. I did.

Q. What did you say to him about his name?

Mr. Talley: I take an exception to the last ruling.

The Court: How is this rebuttal?

Mr. Turkus: It is preliminary to what went on—

Mr. Talley: It should not have been asked at all; if it is not rebuttal we cannot have a preliminary of what is going on. The detective is told what he did. I take an exception.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

10490

Q. What did you say to him about his name? A. I said, "Isn't it a fact you and your wife are living there under the name of Joseph Newman, in Apartment 5-C?" and it was then he turned around to you and said, "Why are you asking me questions? Ask him, he knows all the answers."

Q. By "him," he was referring to you, Detective Malone? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he asked where he worked?

Mr. Talley: I object to that as leading and not proper rebuttal— 10491

The Court: How is this rebuttal?

Mr. Turkus: I will come right to the point. That was just a preliminary question.

Q. At the time this defendant Mendy Weiss was being questioned, did he have certain documents and papers in his possession? A. He did.

Q. First, where did you apprehend him?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent,

10492 James P. Malone—Rebuttal for People—Direct immaterial and irrelevant, not proper rebuttal.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. He was driving a 1940 Chevrolet coupe, license 3 L 1108, N. Y. It was registered as Abraham Lorber's, alias Little Yiddle, of 128 Marcy Avenue, Brooklyn—outside of 4520 Twelfth Avenue, Brooklyn.

10493 Q. In the District Attorney's office did you see the registration certificate for 3 L 1108, and did that come from the possession of the defendant Mendy Weiss?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as not proper rebuttal.

The Court: How is this rebuttal?

Mr. Turkus: As your Honor will remember, the testimony in connection with Lorber—

The Court: Come down to that.

10494 Mr. Turkus: The name of Lorber has been linked up, and I am showing that at the time he was brought to the District Attorney's office he was driving this man's car and had Little Yiddle's license with him.

The Court: That is part of your main case.

Mr. Turkus: There was no opportunity to develop that until the defense.

Mr. Talley: There is no foundation for that.

The Court: Point out where in the defense the foundation was laid.

Mr. Turkus: Association by defense witnesses with this Little Yiddle.

The Court: Their admission—I took it by way of collateral impeachment, to show he was known mutually by them and by the defendant Weiss.

Mr. Turkus: That is not collateral impeachment.

The Court: Under what theory is it offered?

Mr. Turkus: That I have the right now, in view of the testimony of Kleinman, to 10496 show the date when Emanuel (Mendy) Weiss was brought into the District Attorney's office, which has now been established as of March 28, 1940; and further facts in connection with the search by this detective for Emanuel Weiss at a certain time when he received a command and order to find him; that a subsequent search was made, which I will bring out from this witness. I want to show what papers he had in his possession and also show what search was made for his whereabouts. 10497
This goes on the theory of flight.

Mr. Talley: I move to strike out the statement of the District Attorney unless you instruct the jury they are not to take that in evidence, that it is simply a statement he makes, which is of no value to them.

The Court: I am trying to figure out what is a rebuttal and what is really an attempt to reopen the case. Frankly, I don't understand how this is rebuttal.

Mr. Turkus: Then I move to reopen the People's case for the purpose of this testimony.

The Court: Why wasn't it offered before?

Mr. Turkus: Because I did not see any legitimate opportunity before this defense to offer it. At any rate, I now move to reopen the People's case for this testimony.

Mr. Talley: That was all available before; he had five weeks to put in all the evidence.

Mr. Turkus: Kleinman's testimony opened my eyes to something they put in the record.

The Court: Kleinman's testimony did not amount to anything.

Mr. Turkus: I know that, but I know what will be done in summation.

The Court: In that respect, the Court ruled that out—in that respect—but Kleinman's testimony stands in relation to the value, if any, of the fact that Police Commissioner Valentine allegedly, sometime in the latter part of April, happened to be several tables away, in Peter Luger's, eating a steak, when Mr. Kleinman and Mr. Weiss went in to eat at another table. There is no evidence there that Police Commissioner Valentine either knew Weiss or was aware of his presence, or if Weiss at that time was even suspected of the Rosen murder, because there is testimony by another witness—which is preliminary to the alleged flight of Weiss—that at a subsequent time Weiss said that Tannenbaum was squawking, or words to that effect, and he would have to lam, or words to that effect. The remarks in the District Attorney's office in March were considered by the Court to be incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant at the time it was offered by the defense, and the same rule applies to you.

Mr. Turkus: I wanted to fix the date. 10502
Mr. Kleinman said he was hazy on the date, and I want to show he was brought in on March 28, 1940.

The Court: You have that.

Mr. Turkus: Then your Honor precludes me from offering any evidence as to what Mendy Weiss had in his possession?

The Court: Yes, I think it had admittedly nothing to do with the Rosen murder. If the inference I draw is correct, Tannenbaum was, according to Weiss's statement, the one who started 10503 this, and that was at a later date.

Mr. Turkus: At any rate, I fix the date of his appearance in the District Attorney's office. As to what documents he had in his possession, I am not permitted to go forward on?

The Court: No, sir. You are not. That ends that.

Mr. Talley: I ask your Honor to strike out the testimony of this witness in its entirety as not proper rebuttal.

The Court: The date may remain, and also the correction of testimony as to residence, although that is really a matter that may be argued as discretionary.

Mr. Talley: I ask your Honor to instruct the jury to disregard the testimony of this witness except the date.

The Court: The date and the correction of residence.

Mr. Turkus: What about traveling in Yiddle's automobile?

10505 Mr. Talley: That is immaterial and not rebuttal.

The Court: Sustained as to that. The jury will disregard it; it makes no difference.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. On April 30, 1940, or thereabouts, did you pursuant to a command and instructions, look for the defendant Mendy Weiss?

10506 Mr. Talley: Objected to as not proper rebuttal; incompetent, immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: This goes to the question of flight; this is different. I will let him testify to that.

Mr. Talley: Exception to your Honor's ruling.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you look for him? A. In the vicinity of the Federal Court on Foley Square, Manhattan.

Q. Did you find him there? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you look other places on the East Side? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had made the acquaintance of Mendy Weiss before March 28, 1940, hadn't you?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as not proper rebuttal.

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Talley: Just a minute. When I object, you know enough to wait. 10508

Mr. Turkus: This is based on the search he made for him.

The Court: Being able to know his man?

Mr. Turkus: Yes.

The Court: Objection overruled

Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. Where did you search for him?

Mr. Talley: Objected to.

The Court: Overruled. 10509

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. In the vicinity of the Federal Court Building at Foley Square, in Manhattan.

Q. And subsequently, where did you look for him?

Mr. Talley: Same objection.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Different parts of the East Side; the lower East Side of Manhattan.

10510

Mr. Turkus: I ask that this card be marked for identification.

(Received and marked People's Exhibit Z-35 for identification.)

Q. When Mendy Weiss was being questioned in the District Attorney's office in Brooklyn on March 28, 1940, was People's Exhibit Z-35 for identification produced by him from his person and taken by the Assistant District Attorney?

10511

Mr. Talley: Objected to as not proper rebuttal.

The Court: Objection overruled. Answer yes or no.

The Witness: If your Honor will permit me to refer to my notes that I have in reference to it—

The Court: Yes.

A. Yes, sir.

10512

Mr. Turkus: It is offered in evidence.

Mr. Talley: I object to it, if your Honor pleases, being incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and I ask that the sheets that have just been referred to be marked for identification. Objection is made on the further ground it is not proper rebuttal.

The Court: Mark the sheets for identification.

Mr. Talley: I would like to see them, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: Let me have them all.

The Witness: That was the sheet I referred to.

Mr. Turkus: There may be some other police information regarding someone else. He said that is the sheet he referred to.

The Court: Do you object?

Mr. Turkus: I do object.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Turkus: The one sheet he referred to, I have no objection to.

10514

Mr. Talley: Exception. He looked at all the sheets.

The Witness: I beg pardon, I had to look through my sheets. I had to look for that particular sheet that was at the end of these. However, what is in here, the records on these sheets, relate to the defendant Weiss.

The Court: Let Judge Talley see the card.

Mr. Talley: I object to the admission of the card in evidence.

The Court: Sustained.

10515

(Paper marked People's Exhibit Z-36 for identification.)

Q. Between March 28, 1940, the time when you brought Mendy Weiss to the Brooklyn District Attorney's office, until you saw him in court on this case, did you see him on any other occasions?

Mr. Talley: That is objected to as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, not proper rebuttal. This witness might have been anywhere during that period. The fact that he did not see him means exactly nothing.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Turkus: That is all.

Cross-examination by Mr. Talley:

Q. Malone, you are connected with the Grand 10517 Jury in New York County, aren't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are working under the directions of District Attorney Dewey? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were in 1940? A. I beg pardon?

Q. And you were in April, 1940? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you looked for Mendy Weiss in the vicinity of the Federal Court House over in the Borough of Manhattan, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that at the direction of someone connected with District Attorney Dewey's office? A. That I looked for him in that vicinity? No, sir.

10518 Q. Whose direction was that at? A. Just my own initiative.

Q. Your own initiative? A. Yes, sir.

Q. On your own initiative did you learn that he was due or expected to be at the Federal Court on that day, March 28th? A. March the 30th.

Mr. Turkus: That is the wrong date. I object to it.

Q. April 30th? A. Now between—

Q. Will you answer my question? Did you hear it? A. I am trying to do the best I can.
Q. Did you hear the question? A. Will you read it?

(Pending question read.)

A. Not on that particular day but I am saying around that day.
Q. When you went there on the 30th day of April, didn't you learn that he had been there? Weren't you told that? A. No, sir. 10520
Q. You were not told? A. I beg pardon?
Q. Weren't you told that he was there in that court that day? A. No, sir.
Q. Did you ask the clerk of the court about it? A. Yes, sir.
Q. Didn't he tell you that he had been there? A. No, sir.
Q. Why did you go there in the first place?

Mr. Turkus: That is a "why" question.

10521

A. That is a question that is pretty hard to answer without upsetting things.

Mr. Turkus: It is a "why" question. He invited the answer.

Q. You were told—

Mr. Turkus: Just a minute. There is a "why" question pending.

A. If you want me to answer the question the way it should be answered, Mr. Talley, I will.
Q. Just answer this question—

Mr. Turkus: There is a "why" question pending.

Mr. Talley: I have withdrawn it because you got so excited about it.

Mr. Turkus: It is a good thing I did.

Q. Were you told he was in the Federal Court Building or to be in the Federal Court Building on that day? A. I sat around that particular day, Mr. Talley, and I am pretty sure it was 10523 April 30th.

Q. April 30th is the day you stated. You are not certain about it? A. There was several days he was due.

Q. You only told us one day, the 30th. A. I was not asked that.

Q. That was set out by the District Attorney. A. You specified one day.

Q. Were you there on the 30th? A. I was.

Q. Are you sure you were there on April 30th? A. Yes, sir.

10524 Mr. Talley: No further questions.

Redirect examination by Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you sure it was March 28th, 1940, that you brought him to the Brooklyn D. A.'s office? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Turkus: That is all. Detective Whalen.

John J. Whalen—Rebuttal for People—Direct 10525

JOHN J. WHALEN, shield No. 1746, attached to the Grand Jury Squad, Manhattan, called as a witness on behalf of the People, in rebuttal, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Turkus:

Q. Detective Whalen, are you a police officer employed in the Police Department of the City of New York? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many years have you been attached to 10526 the Police Department? A. I was appointed April 1st, 1932.

Q. And how many years have you been a detective? A. Since August 5th, 1935.

Q. On March 25th, 1940, what was your command or assignment? A. Acting Captain Bernard Dowd of the Main Office ordered Detective James Malone and I to apprehend Mendy Weiss.

Q. In pursuance of that command or direction, on March 25th, 1940, did you execute that command on the 28th day of March, 1940?

10527

Mr. Talley: Objected to upon the ground that it is not proper rebuttal.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Turkus: The date is of great importance.

Mr. Talley: It is not proper rebuttal.

Mr. Turkus: It is rebuttal of Kleinman's testimony who did not know the date he was in District Attorney O'Dwyer's office. That date was very significant in this case. Will your Honor read that testimony of Kleinman if there is any doubt about it?

Mr. Talley: Your Honor said there was nothing in Kleinman's testimony at all that called for rebuttal.

Mr. Turkus: Then why be alarmed about it?

Mr. Talley: I am not alarmed at all but I want to keep this trial with some degree of regularity.

Mr. Turkus: So I noticed, with your request for the adjournment.

Mr. Talley: Is that what you said?

10529 Mr. Turkus: What else do you call it when you want to go down to Florida?

Mr. Talley: I told you it was an attempt to make up your failure to give me the papers that were demanded months ago.

Mr. Turkus: Sit down.

Mr. Talley: Don't tell me to sit down.

Mr. Turkus: If you want to stand up, I will sit down.

The Court: Sustained.

10530 Q. Did you take the defendant Mendy Weiss to the office of District Attorney O'Dwyer on March 28, 1940?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as not proper rebuttal.

The Court: Overruled on that.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you brought Weiss into the office of District Attorney O'Dwyer, did you see Assistant District Attorney Turkus? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you saw him, was there someone with him? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was that person with him? A. William Kleinman.

Q. Did you know William Kleinman from before? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you know him from?

Mr. Talley: Objected to, if your Honor pleases, quite unnecessary.

Mr. Climenko: I object to this, if your Honor pleases, as improper, incompetent, and not proper rebuttal.

10532

Mr. Turkus: This is the identity of Kleinman.

Mr. Talley: He says he knows Kleinman. That is sufficient for his identity.

Mr. Climenko: I have a separate objection to the specific question.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Was it William W. Kleinman? A. It was William Kleinman.

Q. You don't know about the "W"? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see William Kleinman do anything 10533 when the defendant Mendy Weiss was brought into the D. A.'s office and did you hear him say anything?

Mr. Talley: Object to it, not proper rebuttal.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you see him do and what did you hear him say?

Mr. Talley: Same objection, sir.
The Court: Overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. When I entered the office—

Mr. Talley: Just answer the question, will you, please? What did he say or do?

A. (Continued) —he rose. He was seated on the left-hand side. He was seated on a green 10535 sofa and he rose and he greeted Mr. Weiss and he said, "I have been retained by your brother Murray. If you want me you know where to get me."

Mr. Talley: I move to strike it out as not proper rebuttal.

The Court: The only way that I can figure it can come in on rebuttal is, Mr. Kleinman testified that while he did not remember the exact date of the meeting at Luger's that it was several weeks after the meeting in Mr. Turkus' office. Now, 10536 in the absence of any evidence that Commissioner Valentine knew Weiss, noticed that he was there at a nearby table or several tables away, knew that he was wanted for something which does not appear by the record of this case to have been in Commissioner Valentine's mind or that of his associates, I don't see how this is relevant.

Mr. Turkus: Your Honor has missed the point I am trying to make. The vitally important thing is the date that this defendant Mendy Weiss was in the District Attorney's office, as fixing it as March 28, 1940. The purpose of identifying Kleinman and having Kleinman and Weiss together is to show that that was the one incident that Kleinman spoke about concerning which his memory was hazy.

The Court: Why is the date of any importance whatever?

Mr. Turkus: When we get to the jury on that I will explain it. I am going to 10538 meet with a roar of objections if I discuss it now in front of the jury. The date is vitally important.

The Court: I am going to let it stand because it is not prejudicial, even though I don't see the point at this time. Objection is overruled.

Mr. Talley: I take an exception to your Honor's ruling.

Q. Did Kleinman then shake hands with Mendy Weiss and depart from the District Attorney's office? A. Yes, sir. 10539

Q. Between that day, March 28, 1940, and until you saw Mendy Weiss in this court-room, have you seen him?

Mr. Talley: Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: I will take it although I don't see what it means.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you work with Whalen as partners? A. My name is Whalen.

Q. Pardon me, with Malone? A. Well, we did at that time.

Q. On April 30, 1940, did you look for Mendy Weiss? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And subsequent thereto did you look for him? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you look subsequent to April 30, 1940?

Mr. Talley: Objected to, incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, not proper re-10541 buttal. It certainly is not proper rebuttal.

The Court: I am trying to figure out how it can be rebuttal.

Mr. Turkus: If there is any doubt about it, I won't press the question. Your witness.

The Court: You have your evidence in already about the Western trip?

Mr. Turkus: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Covering a period of several months and about the alleged threat—

Mr. Turkus: I won't press it, your 10542 Honor.

The Court: To "lam" on account of Tannenbaum having talked about the Rosen case.

Mr. Turkus: Yes, sir. The witness is offered for cross-examination.

Cross-examination by Mr. Talley:

Q. Whalen, were you alone what police call "the arresting officer"?

Mr. Turkus: I object to that.

The Court: In what case?

Mr. Turkus: I don't know what he is talking about.

Mr. Talley: Of course, in this case, referring to March 27th and March 28th, the case he has just been testifying about under the leading of the District Attorney. What other case could it be?

Mr. Turkus: I don't know. You ask me questions? I don't understand you sometimes.

10544

Mr. Talley: Well, you don't understand English if you can't understand my questions which are pretty plain.

The Court: No, but both sides have discussed collateral matter in connection with Weiss. It is dangerous ground. Sustained.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. You state that you arrested—you and Malone arrested Weiss on March 28th? A. We took him into custody.

Q. You did not arrest him? A. Well, yes, you 10545 can call it an arrest because he was deprived of his liberty.

Q. Where did you take him when you first laid hands on him? Where did you take him? A. 156 Greenwich Street.

Q. What is that, the Greenwich Street police station? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the number of the precinct? A. Second.

Q. You did not book him in that station house that night as a prisoner at all, did you? A. No, sir.

Q. You kept him there overnight? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no warrant for his arrest, did you, officer? A. No, sir.

Q. You just took him, put him in a cell, put him in jail, and there was not any charge pending against him, was there? A. He was not placed in any cell, sir.

Q. There was not any charge pending against him, was there? A. No, sir.

Q. And the next day you say you brought him
10547 over, which would be March 28th according to your testimony, you brought him over to see Mr. Turkus in the District Attorney's office in Brooklyn; is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. Then that day he was released from custody, wasn't he? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long were you in his presence from the time you arrested him, which would be the 27th, wasn't it? A. No, it was on the 28th, at about one o'clock or one-thirty in the morning.

Q. One o'clock in the morning. That is pretty close to the 27th. An hour after midnight on the 10548 28th you took him into custody, as you say? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then he was kept in the Greenwich Street police station until you brought him over to the District Attorney's office? A. That is correct.

Q. And then he was released. My question is what time was he released? A. Well, Jimmy and I left the D. A.'s office at half past three in the afternoon on the 28th day of March and we surrendered the defendant Weiss to a patrolman named Bronstein.

Q. When you say "Jimmy" you mean Jimmy Malone? A. Yes, sir.

John J. Whalen—Rebuttal for People—Redirect 10549

Q. The last witness who was on the stand before you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you know that Weiss was discharged from custody, don't you? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Talley: I have no further questions of this officer.

Redirect examination by Mr. Turkus:

Q. Detective Whalen, when you left the D.A.'s office, Weiss was still there? A. Yes, sir. 10550

Q. In Greenwich Street, what room was he kept in before he was brought over to the D.A.'s office? A. It is on the second floor and our office is known as the Bureau of Criminal Information.

Mr. Turkus: That is all. Any further cross-examination?

Mr. Climenko: No cross.

Mr. Talley: If your Honor pleases, I move to strike out the testimony of Detective Malone and Detective Whalen, the last two witnesses who appeared, upon the ground that it is highly prejudical; it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and not proper rebuttal. 10551

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Talley: It has to do with an arrest, taking into custody, and should be stricken out and the jury should be instructed to disregard it. I take an exception to your Honor's ruling.

The Court: I instruct the jury as to both of these witnesses not to be prejudiced by the fact of Weiss being allegedly in the statica house for the purpose of being questioned. That could happen to anybody and it does not discredit anybody to have it done.

Mr. Turkus: The only purpose of the offer was to fix the date.

The Court: Yes, but Judge Talley called attention to something that I 10553 thought required special instruction to the jury.

Mr. Turkus: That is something he brought out himself on cross-examination.

VANCE NEWMAN, residing at 55 Pierrepont Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., called as a witness on behalf of the People, in rebuttal, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Turkus:

10554

Q. By whom are you employed? A. United States Government, Treasury Department, Bureau of Narcotics.

Q. And how many years have you been in the employ of the United States Government? A. Nearly five years.

Q. And how many years have you been with the Narcotic Division? A. Nearly five years.

Q. I show you People's Exhibit Z-26 for identification, and ask you if you have seen that photograph before (handing photograph to witness)? A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Where did you find it? A. In the Weiss apartment at 10 Monroe Street, New York. New York.

Mr. Talley: I object to it, if your Honor pleases, not proper rebuttal. Move to have the answer stricken.

The Court: I do not know whether it is or not yet. Denied at this time.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

10556

Q. On what date did you find that photograph, People's Exhibit Z-26 for identification? A. August 26, 1940.

Mr. Talley: I object to it, if your Honor pleases, on the same grounds.

By the Court:

Q. Weiss apartment at where? A. 10 Monroe Street, Manhattan.

Q. What date? A. August 26, 1940.

10557

The Court: Denied at this time.

Mr. Talley: This is certainly on a collateral matter, if there is such a thing in this case.

The Court: I cannot tell.

Mr. Turkus: This is corroborative of the cross where the picture came from.

Mr. Climenko: If your Honor pleases, in view of Mr. Turkus' statement, may I have a general exception to this line of testimony now being elicited from this witness?

The Court: Yes, but I don't know what it is all about. I will rule at the proper time.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Where, in the Weiss apartment, did you find People's Exhibit Z-26 for identification? A. In a sort of a writing desk.

10559 Mr. Talley: Same objection.

Q. Was it among other photographs and papers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you take that photograph with you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that photograph in the same condition now as it was the day you found it under the circumstances related? A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom did you turn over possession of that photograph? A. I showed it to the District Supervisor in our office and put it in the files of the office.

10560 Q. Have you seen Agent Greenfeld outside in the corridor? A. Yes, sir, he is out in the hall.

Q. Who was present at the time that you found that photograph? A. Agent Irwin Greenfeld and Agent George Miller.

Q. Were any of the Weisses present? A. Mrs. Weiss was present.

The Court: What Weiss apartment? There are lots of Weisses.

Mr. Talley: This is Sidney Weiss' apartment.

Mr. Turkus: The Sammy Weiss apartment.

The Court: Is this the celebrated photograph?

Mr. Turkus: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: So there won't be any time wasted on that, the Court does not consider the possession or taking of that photograph as impeaching the credibility. The only condition under which it could be received in evidence would be from the sale of it, commercializing. It has nothing to do with truth or falsity as a habit of 10562 the person who may have it.

Mr. Turkus: No further questions.

Mr. Talley: I move to strike out the evidence of this witness.

The Court: Strike it out.

Mr. Talley: And ask the jury to disregard it.

The Court: Disregard it. I know the photograph.

Mr. Turkus: The People rest.

The Court: Too far fetched.

Mr. Turkus: Do you know whose picture that is? 10563

The Court: I do.

Mr. Turkus: The People of the State of New York rest the case.

The Court: Let me see it again, to make sure that it is the photograph I referred to. I said "celebrated". Yes, that is the one I mean. That does not edify the jury.

Gentlemen, supposing you make your motions. I will excuse the jury for motions. (To jury) Do not discuss the case.

10564 Colloquy

Then you can make the motions in the order in which the names appear on the indictment.

Mr. Talley: May I make a suggestion we take a recess now until one-thirty, whatever our time is, and make the motions then? It is merely a suggestion.

The Court: May I suggest this: In so long a trial, the Court is not going to squeeze counsel into rushing into summations. That may result in confusion. You are entitled to sensible pause 10565 to get your thoughts properly assembled on the summations. You are entitled to this afternoon for that. Before excusing the jury, suppose we have an understanding that summations begin tomorrow morning at ten o'clock: first, someone on behalf of the defendant Buchalter; then someone on behalf of the defendant Weiss; then someone on behalf of the defendant Capone, in the event of the motions being denied. So you will understand just where you are at, the Court's disposition is not to limit time for summations but to leave it to the discretion of each 10566 counsel, one counsel summing up for each defendant, but I will appreciate if you can give me a fair estimate as to what each of you think will be the time consumed so that I will know just about when to be prepared to make the charge. Who sums up on behalf of Buchalter?

Mr. Climenko: Your Honor, that will be done by Mr. Barshay. He is not in this room at this moment. He is only a moment away from this room.

The Court: Has he stated how long he will take?

Mr. Climenko: I think that approximately should be made by him. I will have it for you in a moment.

The Court: Judge Talley, how long will you take? You are not bound by this.

Mr. Talley: I know, but before I make my reply to you, the thought occurs to me if counsel are ready to make the motions, why not let—

The Court: I was going to let the jury go out to lunch and then directly back to where they are staying.

Mr. Talley: I will say about two hours at the outside would be sufficient.

The Court: How about the defendant Capone?

10568

Mr. Rosenthal: I imagine about three hours or two and a half hours.

The Court: And how about the District Attorney?

Mr. Turkus: I assume that I will have about six hours to answer of debate. I think I can conclude in an hour or an hour and a half. I will make it as rapid as I can.

The Court: There is going to be no pressure. If you start to press things in your summation, with the evidence in this complicated situation, it will tend to confuse the jury. Clarity must be sought for and plenty of time is essential for that. There will be a decent pause between each summation so that the jury won't get intellectual indigestion.

Mr. Rosenthal: Might I add, your Honor, so that the summation can be intelligent, whether in making our motion in respect to the limitation of testimony in respect to certain people, whether we can have your Honor's ruling on that and then we will know just what is supposed to apply to each particular client.

The Court: You won't have to go into it as finely as that just now.

10570 The jury are excused until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. Gentlemen, please do not discuss the case, let nobody talk to you about it. Keep your minds open and follow all other admonitions heretofore given, including those which are on the typewritten paper with captain of the court officers.

Mr. Turkus: Your Honor, there is one paper that I wanted marked for identification that I neglected, before the motions are made.

10571 The Court: Mark it.

(Two papers (affidavits) marked People's Exhibit Z-37 for identification.)

The Court: The jury may go now.

(The jury retired from the court-room.)

The Court: Now, motions for defendant Buchalter.

Mr. Climenko: Before I begin that, for your Honor's information and merely by way of ap-10572 proximation, the summation of defendant Buchalter will take about three to four hours.

The Court: Counselor, when I was practicing law I formed an impression which still persists, that a lawyer who knows his business should not be crowded in summation; he should be permitted to argue his case fully, whether it is tiresome or not. That is up to him.

Mr. Climenko: I have just been given that approximation.

The Court: Frequently I have resented being curtailed in the time which I thought was necessary for a proper argument of the cause that I represented. As a Judge I have always given that courtesy to the lawyers who tried cases before me.

Mr. Clmenko: We certainly appreciate that in this case, your Honor, and I know that your Honor will realize that we devoted hou.s in an effort to condense it.

If your Honor pleases, at this time the defendant Buchalter, at the close of the entire case, renews the motions made at the end of the People's case to dismiss the indictment upon the ground that the People failed to prove a prima facie case, for a directed verdict of acquittal upon the ground that the People failed to prove the guilt of that defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, and upon the further ground that no testimony was tendered against that defendant except through witnesses who are accomplices as a matter of law. That was the generic motion made by the defendant Buchalter at the end of the People's case and it is renewed at this time. 10574

Does your Honor desire me to make all of these motions seriatim or to await rulings after each has been made? 10575

The Court: That is denied.

Mr. Clmenko: Exception. The defendant Buchalter moves to strike from the record all of the testimony of the witness Harold Rosen—and I may say that that testimony which I now will refer to appears at approximately pages 255 to 265 of the stenographer's minutes—that testimony being to the effect that that witness, Harold Rosen, was employed by the New York and New Jersey Clothing Transportation Company, and all of his testimony as to the condition of that business during the period of his employment and within six months thereafter, upon the ground that it is remote, speculative, and not binding on the defendant Buchalter.

10576 Motion on Behalf of Defendant Buchalter to Strike Out

The Court: You mean that you wish to strike out Harold Rosen's testimony which purports to relate to the financial soundness of the business?

10577 Mr. Climenko: That is right, your Honor.

The Court: Strike it out.

Mr. Climenko: The defendant Buchalter moves to strike from the record the testimony of the witness Harold Rosen appearing approximately at pages 265 to 270 of the stenographer's minutes, dealing with the alleged meeting of the defendant Buchalter with the decedent Joseph Rosen, upon the ground that it is remote and upon the further ground that it is so speculative and uncertain that it should not be submitted for the consideration of the jury.

10578 The Court: This was a pantomime. The subject of discussion is not revealed but occurring on or about the month of April, that in relation to other parts of the record appears to be placed as on or about the time that Kelly withdrew. It may stand but there may be no speculation as to what was said. The Court will instruct the jury on that point. If it is overlooked, you may make a request at the proper time.

Mr. Climenko: At this point, your Honor, I deem it my duty to refer to my own recollection of the condition of the record which is in some contradiction with that of the Court. Your Honor says that this incident occurred about the time of the withdrawal of Kelly from that business. This record shows, in so far as it shows anything on that subject, that Kelly withdrew in April, specifically on April 27, 1932. No precise date is given by the People's witnesses for this alleged meeting but they agree, in so far as they fix it at all, that it occurred in the summer of 1932. I don't pretend that I know what significance your Honor's mind gives to that date but, since you referred to the date, there is that condition of the record.

The Court: I will tell you because it was testified to, if I recall correctly, by Harold Rosen that about six months after this alleged pantomime his father withdrew from the business, and because his daughter testified that he withdrew from the business about September. Take six from nine, it leaves three. That is about April, close to it anyway.

Mr. Climenko: Before I leave that particular motion may I understand does your Honor grant it in substance?

The Court: No, I am not striking it out. For what little it is worth it may remain in, but the jury will be properly instructed, I hope.

Mr. Climenko: Well, I reserve any exception. I don't want to take an exception to such a ruling.

The Court: All right, although in a capital case you do not have to take any exceptions.

Mr. Climenko: I had in mind the fact that your Honor's ruling will probably, as your Honor intimates, cover the matter properly. Therefore I don't want to note an exception at this time.

10582 Motion on Behalf of Defendant Buchalter to Strike Out

The defendant Buchalter moves to s ike from the record the testimony of this same witness, Harold Rosen, as it appears at page 271 of the record, to the effect that the business of that same corporation ended six months after the meeting alleged to have occurred at the Broadway Central Hotel, upon the ground that it is remote, speculative, and confessedly hearsay, and that it deals with an incident, even if it did occur, which is not binding on this defendant.

10583 The Court: I think that is dilatory. It should have been made when he was examined and cross-examined. Denied.

Mr. Climenko: Exception and exception to the Court's ruling that the motion as made now is dilatory.

The defendant Buchalter moves to strike from the record the testimony of this same witness, Harold Rosen, with respect to the efforts of his father to obtain employment after the severance of the decedent's association with that same corporation, and that is testimony which appears 10584 at page 272 of the stenographer's minutes, upon the ground that it is hearsay and that its nondependability is established by other testimony elicited by the People.

The Court: I did not even make note of it, attached no importance to it. Now I will turn to page 272. The Court sustained the objection to that. That is of no evidentiary value whatever. It is stricken, if there is anything to strike out.

Mr. Turkus: There is nothing there.

Mr. Climenko: The motion as made is granted?

The Court: That is just a decoy duck.

10585

Mr. Climenko: The point is, your Honor, he did make those statements.

The Court: It is of no value. It is stricken, if there is anything to strike out.

Mr. Climenko: Thank you.

I have only a few of these motions, your Honor, and I will be quick with them.

The defendant Buchalter moves to strike from the record the testimony of the witness Sylvia Greenspan, as it appears approximately from pages 357 to 379 of the record, dealing with the alleged meeting of the defendant Buchalter with the decedent Joseph Rosen at an unspecified time in the year 1932 and at an unspecified place, upon the ground that the incident, assuming that it did occur, is so remote from the crime alleged that the testimony ought not be submitted for the consideration of the jury.

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

The Court: The Court, in denying this, is not conceding the premises as just related.

10587

Mr. Climenko: Premises as what?

The Court: I am denying it because I know what is on the record, whether your conception of it or interpretation of it is correct or not.

Mr. Climenko: You mean my reference to an unspecified place?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Climenko: I make no point of that and I don't ask the Court to adopt—

The Court: The time was fairly well designated as the summer. I think it was nailed down to July, at one place.

Mr. Climenko: I would not want to dispute

10588 Motion on Behalf of Defendant Buchalter to Strike Out the proposition that the time as specified is within the season.

The Court: The record is here. What is the use of talking about it? Denied.

Mr. Climenko: The defendant Buchalter moves to strike from the record all of the testimony of the witness Max Rubin to the effect that he was shot, upon the ground that by the hypothesis of the People's theory that testimony is not binding on the defendant Buchalter.

10589 The Court: His testimony that he was shot came in on his being subsequently called back, after proper basis had been laid and the chain of circumstances which made it competent being put on the record. Denied.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

The Court: Its application, however, is a matter for the Court's charge.

Mr. Climenko: May I proceed, sir?

The Court: Is that all?

Mr. Climenko: That was all as to that. I just asked your Honor whether I might proceed.

10590 The Court: Yes, proceed.

Mr. Climenko: The defendant Buchalter moves to strike from the record all of the testimony of the witness Max Rubin to the effect that he left his home in or about October or November, 1936, and thereafter concealed himself in various places, upon the ground that it is not shown that he fled in consequence of a fear that he might be implicated in this case.

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

The defendant Buchalter moves to strike from the record, or in the alternative requests the

10591

Court to instruct the jury as an alternative application here, that this testimony about to be referred to is not binding on the defendant Buchalter; that the testimony of the witness Berger with respect to the acts which he did and the statements which he made subsequent to June, 1937, the last date on which he said he saw the defendant Buchalter, is not binding on that defendant.

The Court: Denied.

10592

Mr. Climenko: Exception. As a constituent of that motion, the defendant Buchalter moves to strike from the record that portion of the testimony of the witness Berger in which he related his efforts to shoot or to assist in the shooting of the witness Rubin, as not binding on the defendant Buchalter.

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

The Court: You understand in denying motions to strike out it is because the Court takes the view that it must either strike out for all purposes of the trial or leave in for the particular application that the evidence has. An application of each and every point of evidence as to specific defendants has to be carefully studied out by the Court in preparing its charge. That work is under process now. I am not in a position to state the application of each and every point of evidence at this time without the likelihood of error.

10593

Mr. Climenko: I understand that.

With respect to the testimony of the witness Magoon, if your Honor pleases, the defendant Buchalter moves to strike from the record that portion of the testimony of that witness in which he said, in effect, that on an occasion in 1938 the defendant Capone said to him, "We must hit Rubin because he is hurting Lep," and upon the ground that that statement is as against the defendant Buchalter hearsay and inadmissible since it refers to a proposed act to be committed after the termination of the conspiracy to commit the crime charged in this indictment. The 10595 testimony that I refer to appears at pages 2346 and 2347.

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

As to the witness Maguire, the defendant Buchalter moves to strike his testimony in its entirety from this record upon the ground that it is not binding on the defendant Buchalter for the reason that there is no proof in this record that that witness Rubin was induced to flee this jurisdiction or did flee in consequence of fear that he might become involved in the investiga-10596 tion or prosecution of this case.

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Climenko: Exception. That, if your Honor pleases, completes all the motions to be tendered on behalf of the defendant Buchalter.

Mr. Talley: If your Honor pleases, the following motions are made on behalf of the defendant Weiss. I renew all the motions made at the close of the People's case and ask that they be granted.

The Court: Denied. You might, if there is any special motion that I don't recall at this time, call my attention to it. I take it you refer to the usual motions that are made in these cases.

Motion on Behalf of Defendant Weiss to Strike Out

10597

Mr. Talley: I renew all the motions made to strike out evidence, motions made during the course of the trial. They are now and here renewed. There are too many of them for your Honor to read now.

The Court: I would rather then you repeat them because I don't want to make an error on this ruling.

Mr. Talley: I am not prepared at this time to point out all of the motions to strike out the testimony that were made during the trial. I simply make this blanket motion.

The Court: Do you recall this, whether or not there was any motion in which I temporarily made a ruling, that is, made a tentative ruling?

Mr. Talley: There were some, but I am unable to give them to you now. I expected there would be a little time intervene between the close of the case and making the motions. I have not had an opportunity to examine the record for them.

The Court: You can let me know later.

Mr. Talley: Yes, I will, if I can have that privilege.

The Court: For the present it will be denied, subject to counsel having the right to call attention to specific matters and obtaining a revision of the ruling.

Mr. Talley: The Court will note my exception to the first motion and the denial thereof, made by me. Now you will note my exception to the ruling of the Court made on this second motion.

The third motion is, I move to strike out all the testimony given by Mrs. Rosen with respect to the identification, alleged identification, made by her of the man who came into her shop on the night before the murder.

The Court: Granted.

Mr. Talley: Upon the ground it is too indefinite and too uncertain, and it is not of sufficient credible value to submit to a jury.

The Court: Granted.

Mr. Talley: I move to strike out all the testimony of the witness Rubin upon the ground 10601 that it had no application in any form or manner to the defendant Weiss.

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Talley: Exception. I move to strike out all the testimony of the witness Magoon upon the same ground.

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Talley: Exception. I move to strike out all evidence in this case as to flight as being subject to two interpretations, one an interpretation that would be favorable to the defendant, the other that might be unfavorable. There is no testimony in the case that any flight sought to be 10602 proved by the District Attorney was flight by the defendant Weiss from the Rosen killing, indictment, or fear of apprehension in connection with the Rosen case.

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Talley: And the jury must indulge in the more favorable inference to the defendant upon the presentation of that evidence.

The Court: There is sufficient evidence, in my judgment, to show that it was directly related to the Rosen killing. Denied.

Mr. Talley: Exception. May I just interpolate and say, has your Honor's view changed on that since you expressed it today? I understood you yesterday to indicate very plainly that there was no evidence that the flight was from the Rosen killing or the Rosen indictment.

10603

The Court: Will you refer me to the record on that point?

Mr. Talley: No, but I understood that was the statement you made.

The Court: I think you may be confused on that point.

Mr. Talley: It may be the day before.

10604

The Court: Because last night, in reviewing the record in part, I made mental note of evidence that connected it with the Rosen killing.

Mr. Talley: I take an exception to your Honor's denial of my motion.

The Court: Pardon me. I am still trying to think of the basis for what you just said.

Mr. Talley: You used that expression—

The Court: Wait a minute, I can think better if you don't talk.

Mr. Talley: I don't know when you are finished speaking.

10605

The Court: There was a comment made when Mrs. Weiss was testifying, wasn't there?

Mr. Talley: I cannot recollect who was on the stand.

The Court: No, it was when Sidney was on the stand.

Mr. Talley: But you did make that comment, that it was subject to two interpretations and that you would have to charge the jury, if it went to them, that they would have to indulge the favorable presumption to the defendant.

The Court: That was solely related to the basis of Sidney Weiss' testimony. It did not relate to the rest of the record. The remark had that application only.

10606 Motion on Behalf of Defendant Weiss to Strike Out

Mr. Talley: I take it your Honor denies my motion, and I note an exception to it.

I join in the motions, insofar as they apply to the defendant Weiss, made by counsel for defendant Buchalter, and the motions which are about to be made on behalf of the defendant Capone.

10607 The Court: They are all denied.

Mr. Talley: I move to strike out all evidence that has been introduced as to the—

Mr. Turkus: Capone's motions have not been made yet. He is trying to predicate a motion on motions that have not been made yet.

The Court: The same rulings that are made on the Capone motions will apply to all. The same exception will apply to all. I don't regard an exception in a capital case more than as an expression of disapproval to the Court for his ruling.

10608 Mr. Talley: Judge, it is not always safe to go up to the Court of Appeals and be asked, "Did you take an exception to that ruling?", and say, "No, I relied upon the theory I did not have to." The invariable ruling is, "You should have taken an exception."

The Court: In a capital case?

Mr. Talley: Yes, sir. They frequently take the view that the Court has the right—and I think they are right, too—I think the Court has a right to be advised of dissent of counsel on a ruling so that he may possibly reconsider it and be shown he was in the wrong.

The Court: I was not aware of that attitude, that policy.

Mr. Talley: It is true. I move to resume the business of the day.

I move to strike out all the evidence that has been presented on the so-called spoliation theory insofar as it is attempted to apply to the defendant Weiss.

The Court: I deny it at this time, and will charge the jury as to application of it to specific defendants at the proper time.

Mr. Talley: Exception. That is all my motions at the moment.

Mr. Rosenthal: Before making my general motion, your Honor, I move to limit the testimony of Mrs. Rosen to defendants other than the defendant Capone. My purpose here in making my motions is to see whether the Court agrees with me as to the applicability of certain testimony to defendants other than whom I represent, before I predicate my final motions which I intend to make to your Honor. I now move to limit, knowing that it is testimony in the case, the testimony of Mrs. Rosen to defendants other than the defendant Capone—to defendant or defendants, I will put it that way—other than the defendant Capone.

The Court: That is really a request to charge. That may be made at the proper time. Denied at this time.

Mr. Rosenthal: I then will, in general form, make the same motion as to Harold Rosen, Sylvia Greenspan, Edward Maguire, Albert E. Aman, Joseph Bell, James E. Ryan, Thomas J. Winne, and the three detectives who were called in rebuttal, or two detectives and one government agent called in rebuttal, as well as the witnesses Berger, Tannenbaum and Rubin.

10612 Motion to Dismiss Indictment against Defendant Capone

The Court: Denied at this time. You may make the proper request to charge later, if the main charge of the Court is not satisfactory on those points.

Mr. Rosenthal: Now, then, I respectfully move to dismiss the indictment and for the direction of a verdict of acquittal upon the grounds which I have previously urged at the time of the close of the People's case, and upon the further 10613 ground that it now affirmatively appears from the evidence that outside of the testimony of the accomplice, who is an accomplice as a matter of law, the only thing relied upon by the District Attorney in this case is an isolated statement alleged to have been made three or four years subsequent to the killing, in which the words, "I werked on the Rosen thing right on Sutter Avenue and I was not made. I hung around there, too," contained on page 2360 of the record.

As I started to say before I quoted, the District Attorney relies upon this isolated state-10614 ment to furnish the so-called corroboration insofar as it affects the defendant Capone. It is insufficient as a matter of law, I contend, and I renew the motions which I made at the close of the People's case and ask for a direction of a verdict of acquittal.

The Court: Motion denied.

Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except.

The Court: The jury will be properly instructed, I hope, on that point.

Mr. Rosenthal: I don't assume that your Honor wishes me to argue the insufficiency of a statement of that character before the submission of the fact of the guilt of the defendant whom I represent to this jury. There is no time specified in it—

The Court: Mr. Rosenthal, the conditions under which the statement is made amplified it, show the pattern. What I have in mind is this, that on one occasion where there was nothing whatever in the case to connect a specific defendant with having committed the crime other than an alleged squad room admission that he was the one who committed the crime, and I granted a certificate of reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt after conviction upon the ground that as a matter of law there is reasonable doubt where the evidence is no more than that; the Appellate Division upon appeal unanimously upheld the verdict. That came to my attention a few days ago. That application was made to have me join in and give approval upon an application for clemency by that defendant who is now serving his term.

Mr. Rosenthal: However, the People against Joyce, in the Court of Appeals, which is a capital case, where the rules probably are a little more stringently applied than they might be in a case where the sentence involved is that of only a few years of a man's life, where there was an absolute admission and where it subsequently came out that there was nothing corroborative of the admission, was reversed by the Court of Appeals and the indictment was subsequently dismissed. Here you have the word—

The Court: You and I know that there are many reversals by the learned Court of Appeals which go right to the roots of essential justice in the particular case involved and which are not to be taken as a rigid guide in all other cases where the same point is presented purely as a matter of legal philosophy.

Mr. Rosenthal: Excepting that in this case, sir, you have the arrest of this man Magoon, his failure to disclose, although he says he made a number of statements, until a year after his arrest, this alleged episode or incident; and then the episode or incident which he re.:tes might mean anything, unless your Honor is going to 10619 permit the jury to speculate what the word "thing" means as related to Rosen, where there are episodes in this record which show a connection—an alleged connection, I should put it—insofar as other defendants are concerned, with Rosen as far back as 1932, as being the corroborative testimony which would warrant a jury in speculating the guilt of this defendant.

The Court: I have thought carefully on that point, in fact, I have thought a bit while lying awake nights during this trial. I am going to deny your motion.

10620 Mr. Rosenthal: And I am going to respectfully except.

The Court: All will remain seated while the defendants are remanded until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. Rosenthal: Judge, before the defendants leave, I want to put one other motion on the record.

The Court: I ? the defendants be seated. Let us have order.

Mr. Rosenthal: Throughout the trial I have renewed these motions made on behalf of the defendant Capone in line with the original motion made prior to the commencement of the trial, for a severance, on the ground that the testimony adduced on this trial which does not affect him is of a nature which is prejudicial to his interest, and I now renew the motion and ask for the withdrawal of a juror and the declaration of a mistrial insofar as he is concerned on the ground that the state of the evidence is such it is impossible for him to procure on his own behalf a fair trial.

The Court: Denied.

10622

Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except. Thank you.

The Court: I will try to clarify the evidence so far as Capone is concerned to the utmost of my ability.

Mr. Rosenthal: I don't contend that your Honor is not going to be fair. I contend that the jurymen are men of limited intelligence, the same as all of us are, from various walks of life, and to ask men to be able to take out of their minds things which may prejudice them because of their happening is a herculean task, which I think should not be left to any twelve human beings.

The Court: Judges have to do that. A Judge sits in many a case knowing in advance that a man is guilty, but he does not show it.

Mr. Rosenthal: The Judge is trained in the law, sir.

The Court: This is a blue ribbon jury and it looks like a pretty intelligent one.

Mr. Rosenthal: I agree with you, they look very intelligent, but they are still human beings and we all have prejudices and likes and dislikes.

Mr. Talley: I have another motion, if you will hear me.

10624 Colloquy

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: I move for the declaration of a mistrial and the withdrawal of a juror upon the ground that the defendant Weiss has been so prejudiced that a fair and impartial trial is now impossible to him, by reason of the fact that the Assistant District Attorney, in opening this case, said he was going to prove that Rubin was shot at the direction and the instance of the defendant Weiss. Your Honor surely must recollect 10625 that, and no evidence in the case has been adduced to support that.

The Court: I don't, and if I may measure the jury's intelligence by my own, I assume the jury possibly falls in the same category, if that was in fact said. I don't think it is prejudicial at all.

Mr. Talley: How about the declaration by the District Attorney that the defendant Weiss is guilty of another attempted murder, another crime?

Mr. Turkus: Who said that?

Mr. Talley: There is not any evidence to that 10626 effect in this record.

The Court: I do not even remember it.

Mr. Talley: I remember it very distinctly. He said Rubin was shot at the direction and instance of the defendant Weiss.

The Court: Motion is denied.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

The Court: Is that all?

Mr. Talley: That is all.

The Court: The defendants will be remanded.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to November 26, 1941, at 10:00 A. M.)

Proceedings, November 26, 1941.

(Trial Resumed.)

The Court: Just a word of caution. Gentlemen, you will try to confine yourselves to the record—remember that at all times, and secondly, try to respect one another's rights to proceed without interruption.

Mr. Rosenthal: May we have an understanding that we reserve the right, so we are not considered dilatory, on anybody's summation, to the conclusion of the summation, to object to such portions as we may consider either inflammatory or not borne out by the evidence. 10628

The Court: I have only uttered a word of caution against squandering the right of interruption on matters that really do not need to be interrupted. If anything of sufficient importance arises, that really justifies an interruption of counsel, use discretion, but try to respect one another's rights, because no lawyer likes to be interrupted unless it is absolutely necessary. I think in any summation there are points of view in regard to evidence which we cannot agree on. The jury will have to figure that out. 10629

(Mr. Barshay then made his closing address to the jury in behalf of defendant Buchalter, as follows:)

With your Honor's permission, associate counsel, Mr. Turkus, Mr. Foreman, and gentlemen of the jury:

10630 You can rest assured there is one thing in this case that the prosecution and the defense agree upon. That is, that the case is over and all are glad of it. I know it has been a hard and long and arduous fight, and I am reminded of the king who sent for his philosopher one day and said in one sentence: "You let me know what answer I should give to any problem that arises," and the philosopher said, "This is my sentence--'And this, too, shall pass away.'" I know there

There were a lot of unkind things said in this case. Well, maybe on the spur of the moment, gentlemen, things are said and things are done, but they really do not bear upon the issues in this case.

I want to thank you, each and everyone of you, for surrendering your ordinary pursuits of life and making sacrifices. Your duty was plain to you and your sacrifices were plain to you—just facts which you have heard and believe from the witness stand. We did not oppose your choice as special jurors because it was our position that we needed men of intellect, so we have faith in you as jurors and I think one may be confident that, no matter what verdict you will have rendered, it is because you believe you have done your duty in the light in which each and everyone of you thought.

Now, you know, in choosing you, we asked you to consider the evidence in the case with respect 10634 to each defendant separately. It is difficult to do that in a long and arduous trial, but somehow I am sure you will. I asked you, in choosing you, to be independent—each one to be independent of the other. That was not with the intent of getting a hung jury, don't let that be said. I asked you to reason with your fellow jurors and talk to them, not to be obstinate in any way, to give your viewpoint, to listen to your fellow jurors' viewpoints, and to then come to a reasonable, sensible conclusion based upon the believable evidence in this case. I did not want in advance anybody to give you the idea that all 10635 we sought here was for the jury to disagree. I did not want that at all, and I do not want it now.

I represent in this case only one defendant. I represent no group. I represent no combination. I represent no outside interests. I have no other client. I owe no duty to any single person outside of the defendant Buchalter. I represent him in no other matter but this one —in no other transaction but this one. I laid eyes upon him first when my associates in this case, the firm of Wegman and Climenko, retained me to assist them in the trial of this case. That was in June of 1941. I never tried, gentlemen, to give you the impression throughout the entire case here that I represented any angel. Do not be mistaken about that. I will speak about it as I go along. But it was not very long after I had been in the case and after I had commenced my investigation, together with my associates, for whose work I am very thankful, that I realized I was not only in the case but 10637 I represented a cause. I wanted to feel sure that every man, regardless of his reputation and his past life, could come into this court and feel that the scales of justice were equally poised. Every man is entitled to a fair and impartial trial by a jury of his peers, be he Buchalter or any other person, be he one of bad reputation or good reputation, be he white or colored, be he rich or poor, be he Protestant or Catholic, or Hebrew, be he male or female. In this court room everyone is entitled to equal justice. When I said I did not represent an angel, I meant just by yielding to the racketeers of the industry, that they would gain an economic or financial advantage over their competitors. I condemn every act of the defendant Buchalter's past life. His activities were in the Borough of Manhattan, but the diligent and energetic young Mr. Dewey had put finis for all time to those activities. I do not doubt that the defendant is where he belongs, but are we trying that issue? Are we trying him again? Are we trying his union activities? Are we trying the union? Are we 10640 trying the Weinsteins, or the Katzes, or the Raleighs, or the Fields? We are not. We came here to try but one issue, a simple issue—did he or did he not commit the crime charged against him in this indictment. And yet—and yet—this murder, which occurred in 1936, was presented here with a preface and a prologue that commenced in 1917—ten years before. By all the evidence in this case, the defendant Buchalter even came near the Amalgamated union. Oh, I remember Mr. Turkus picked up the indictment when choosing you and saying, "We are trying 10641 the defendant Buchalter for the killing of Rosen, no more and no less." Yes, he said that. But, gentlemen, the trial was not on very many days before I realized that, in my opinion, he really did not mean, because if we tried the Rosen case, the latest we should have started was in the period of 1932. But, no, we have 1917, the organization of the Amalgamated, its make-up, its officers. I objected strenuously, and on cross-examination, when I tried to show the other side of the picture, there was the objection, "I object, this has nothing to do with the Rosen killing." Do you remember that? Of course, it had nothing to do with the Rosen killing; it had nothing to do with it on direct, and it had nothing to do with it on cross. And if we had adhered to the issue of the Rosen killing here, this case would have been over within a period of two weeks. But we must have atmosphere in the case. Those things were presented to you because the District Attorney, in his mind, thought it would help him to sow a background of pas-

10643 sion, and hatred and prejudice, and it was planted from the very inception. Sure, this union was domineered by racketeers, but that is not the issue. You heard about 1917—how they got into the union—who controlled it—how they ran strikes—how they profited. We had a background, a background that gave you a general insight as to what goes on every single day in your lives. While you may have heard of it, still you paid no attention to it. This is the background from which the District Attorney hopes some juror in this case would draw a prejudice 10644 in the direction of the defendant. You see, he did not create those conditions—they were there long before he came on the scene. There was Abie Slabow, Johnny Spanish, Terry Burns, and a whole lot of guerrillas and gangsters and strong-arm men who were present long before Buchalter came on the scene. He did not create it, but I have no sympathy for him, I do not apologize for him, because from 1927 he came in and profited by it—he was just as bad. But that is not the issue here.

Immediately upon the trial of this case the defendant was referred to as "Lepke". Now,

I don't care, gentlemen, really what name you refer to him by—I don't care at all. My idea of the meaning of "Lepke" is that it is a Jewish name for Louis, but to the unknowing, the name "Lepke" is an evil connotation; and maybe to you gentlemen who do not know the meaning of the word, it has an evil connotation like those started during the last war, when instead of referring to the German they referred to him as a "Hun". Yet, they refer to Buchalter as "Lepke". If the District Attorney thought that 10646 that would not help him, he never would have referred to him as "Lepke". What if he is called "Lepke"? What has that got to do with his guilt or innocence in this case? If you want to call him "Lepke", go ahead and call him "Lepke". But draw no evil inference from the use of that name.

There was brought out in the opening of this case something to start you off with some inflammatory passion against the defendant—the shooting of Rubin. We objected to that. We are not on trial for that. But by the very open- 10647 ing you can see, gentlemen, that it has not even an application to the defendant Buchalter. This Rubin was shot—and I am not unsympathetic of his physical plight—somewhere in the County of New York where he was shot, there are men, honest men, who will do their duty at the proper time and see to it that those who are responsible for that act will be punished. At the head of the District Attorney's office in Bronx County there is a Mr. Foley, whose reputation is great. Let us not try his problem here—let us not do his work in this court—let that not stand in your deliberations of the guilt or innocence of the defendant Buchalter here. He had nothing to do with—it is no part of this case with respect to him. I shall let other counsel make mention of that fact, if it has anything at all to do with the respective interests of their clients.

Oh, how simple this issue would have been had we stuck directly to the charge in the indictment, which was simply this: Buchalter, the Grand Jury accuse you of the shooting and 10649 killing of Rosen on September 13, 1936, by the means set forth in the indictment. The defendant said, "Not guilty", and when he said, "Not guilty," he meant he did not kill him—he had no reason to kill him—he did not participate in the killing—he got nobody else to do the killing—he was absolutely innocent of that charge. That is what the plea of "Not guilty" meant. It meant he denied each and every accusation set forth against him by the District Attorney. It meant that he had no motive to kill him, no reason to kill him. It meant that he denied 10650 every sentence, every accusation of Rubin. It meant he denied each and every allegation of Berger. It meant he denied each and every piece of testimony of Tannenbaum. It meant he denied he ever met Rosen at the Broadway Central Hotel in 1932. It meant he denied that there was any meeting on 19th Street where the "law was laid down" to Rosen. It meant that he denied that in the Raleigh office, in 1936, there was any talk with Rubin, with Tannenbaum present. It meant he denied he sent Mr. Rubin to get Mr. Berger. It meant he denied he went with Berger to get Weiss. It meant he denied he had any conference with Weiss at any time or at any place with respect to the shooting of Rosen. It meant he denied he had any talk in the presence of Tannenbaum three or four days later when he patted Weiss on the back. It meant he denied he induced Rubin to flee from this crime. It meant all those things just as forcefully as if he took the stand and from his own lips uttered each and every one of these denials, and to those denials, I might add, strength. It said to him, as it says to every de- 10652 fendant who comes into this court, "You are presumed innocent of the charge and the burden is on the District Attorney to prove the charge, and it is his beyond a reasonable doubt, by competent and by believable evidence." The law says that, "You, Mr. District Attorney, must prove the charge beyond a reasonable doubt." That presumption of innocence is his now—it is evidence in his favor. It also meant, gentlemen, that there was no requirement for the defendant Buchalter to prove his innocence or to disprove a single one of those accusations, or to explain 10653 away any charge or any accusation offered from the witness stand against him. And his failure, and his neglect, or his refusal, be it in his judgment or that of his counsel, to take the stand and make an explanation, shall not be drawn as an inference or presumption against him. His Honor shall so charge you.

So we go into the case itself with these preliminary explanations. I say to you that this case became a cause with me after investigation when I realized that the entire case was built on a movable foundation—on a layer of quicksand—a foundation that could not be anchored. That it was framed by a revengeful Rubin, aided and abetted by a cornered Berger and a trapped Tannenbaum. Do not let it be said by the assistant in charge here that I make any accusations toward him or his office. I have no such charge to make. I have no quarrel with him about this case at all. I do not want him to say to you in summation that, "If you believe that O'Dwyer, or Klein, or Josephs, and all the rest 10655 of us worked honestly and diligently in this case to frame this man, you acquit him." I make no such charge against them or anyone of them, and I make no such inference or innuendo against them. My quarrel is with the "architect" in this case—a revengeful, spiteful, hateful Rubin. Now, you may say to yourselves, gentlemen, "Would the District Attorney fall for such things?" I don't know. A District Attorney presents such evidence as he has and is given to him. He must do that. If he does not do it, you have complaints to the Governor. It is his belief nor my disbelief, nor my belief, or his disbelief, can invade the province of you gentlemen. It is for you to decide. I propound this theory, and I am hopeful that by giving you an interpretation of the evidence as I see it, you shall believe and give weight to my version of this story. I say to you, if the District Attorney in summation says, "Judge O'Dwyer has presented to you fifty-five witnesses and one hundred exhibits, to convince you beyond all reasonable doubt, and all doubt, that the defendant Buch- 10658 alter is guilty—" I say to you, gentlemen, that you say to yourselves that Judge O'Dwyer's integrity and reputation and honesty has nothing to do with this case. It is not in issue at all. He does not sign the back of this note and guarantee that anything that his assistant presented here is the truth. We must not consider in anywise the integrity of Judge O'Dwyer's office for one single second, lest you be throwing into the scales of justice the great weight of authority, dignity, honesty and energy that stands behind Judge O'Dwyer. That would not be a fair trial 10659 for the defendant. Such weight of testimony no defendant could overcome. And I dare say I do not yield in my admiration for the District Attorney of Brooklyn to anyone, not even to Mr. Turkus, because it has been my pleasure when he was a Judge to try cases before him; and it has also been my pleasure when he was a Judge to try cases before him when Mr. Turkus was my opponent—and he was a tough but fair fighting adversary—I say a foeman worthy of his steel. There is nothing personal here, it is not a battle of wits—not at all. He represents his side and I represent mine. The law demands of him a fair presentation of the evidence, and the law demands of me the same. If at some time I should find reason in my summation to make criticism of something he did, it is perfectly logical, it is perfectly reasonable, and I assure you it is absolutely nothing of a personal nature, because when I want to talk to Mr. Turkus on a personal nature it will be outside of the court room, in plain, simple, under-10661 standable language. That has nothing to do with the case.

I will show you that the District Attorney himself, quite unwillingly, and perhaps by force of the right of the defendant in this case, produced evidence on his case which showed that Buchalter is innocent of this crime. Well, it will take a little while as I analyze the evidence, step by step, to prove that point, but with great confidence do I say that.

Now, gentlemen, we will go directly, directly to the issue, as I see it, plainly and simply. We 10662 have to deal, before we start with the direct case, a little with the family—just a little bit. You see, the family must, of necessity, have a say in this case. There must be the identification of the body. There must be some little background. There must be something given to you which would lead you to understand why Rosen was killed. Now, it is not my job to prove that someone else did kill Rosen. It is not my job to prove to you who else could have done it. It is not my job to prove to you why should someone else do it. It is not my job to prove any of those things. It is not even my job

to prove that Buchalter did not do it. But I have undertaken it, and I have undertaken it from the evidence in this case. The background, as presented here by the family, is that Rosen was a truckman and he was in business. Once he was a truckdriver, then he went into business for himself. He went into business with a man named Kelly, and his business took him to small towns in Pennsylvania where work was being taken out of the City of New York. That was away back in 1931. Apparently, from the pic- 10664 ture painted here, he had no trucks—he had no employees—he had no money—but he had a burning desire to build a route through little towns in Pennsylvania. And so he went out there and visited chambers of commerce, and he hooked up with this Mr. Kelly, who is absent in this case. And presently we get the financial picture of himself and Kelly, himself and Kelly's partnership, long before the name of Lepke is even mentioned. When the partnership joined the New York and New Jersey Company in 1931, according to the agreement we cited then, in evidence before you, there is an acknowledgment 10665 by Rosen already of indebtedness to Kelly in the sum of $4,750. It is acknowledged right in this agreement, drawn before anybody ever dreamed of the fact that Rosen, or Buchalter, or any other such thing that was to take place in 1936. We have Sobler and Bluestein doing business under the New York and New Jersey Corporation in New Jersey, and in New York, Kelly and Rosen beginning to compete. Sobler and Bluestein knew Rosen, according to the evidence here. The competition, sometimes is not heavy and sometimes it is—it was not then—and it was decided, according to the evidence here, that Sobler and Bluestein, of the New York and New Jersey, shall take in Kelly and Rosen, their competitors. This was in 1931. The agreement was reduced to writing. Kelly and Rosen were to contribute the sum of $1,000., to be payable in two instalments, $500. in one instalment and $500. in another. Kelly, apparently, had a garage. Kelly agreed to contribute his trucks 10667 into this new set-up, and he did. Sobler and Bluestein contributed $1,500.—that is the testimony—and so this company starts up—Sobler's trucks, Kelly's trucks, and Rosen's efforts to build up a business in Pennsylvania. Before the stoppage—this is 1931, mind you. These agreements were not drawn with the view that Rosen is going to be killed in 1936. They were not drawn with the view that there shall be a stoppage in 1932. So we can take into consideration the picture that existed before the stoppage, the financial condition of Rosen in 1931 and in the early part of 1932, before the stoppage. You

rent was not paid, he wants to get out. And he does get out. By agreement drawn in 1932—the 27th day of April, 1932—this, more eloquently than any piece of evidence in this case, should prove to you that there is not any proof in the charge here that Buchalter forced Rosen out of a going business. It was not a going business in the sense it was going up, but it was a going business in the sense it was going, going, going down. It was a dead and dying business. It did not give him a livelihood except 10670 for the first month, and that was not earned—it was drawn from the contributed capital. And you may study this document and its contents to prove to yourselves how badly off this organization was when Kelly was through. What did he get out of it when he got out? What did he get out of this going concern in April of 1932? $100. in cash—not a penny more—two notes, $304. being the total of them, sub-divided in two instalments, one to be paid in sixty days and the other in ninety days. That is the kind of a progressive business this was. And in the agreement there is a provision—and this illus- 10671 trates the faith that Kelly had in the financial stability of this concern—that for $304. he was willing to take $250. in cash rather than to wait those sixty or ninety days. Kelly's judgment was good, because those notes were protested. He would rather have the $250. in cash than wait sixty or ninety days. And this agreement further shows that the money that Rosen owed Kelly, the $4,750., apparently an obligation that accrued to Kelly during his own relationship with Rosen, was cancelled. It is right here in this agreement.

A man does not throw away $4,750. if there is any thought or idea—if there is only a chance in a million—to get it. A man sues for the money, a man duns for the money, a man gets a judgment for the money—men are examined in supplementary proceedings when a money judgment is obtained. A judgment is good for ten years, and, if docketed, is good for another ten years. But Mr Kelly, seeing the set-up of Rosen and his partners then, especially Rosen, cancelled 10673 this indebtedness of $4,750. So, gentlemen, Kelly is out of the business. "Good riddance," he probably said to himself. And Rosen, and Sobler, and Bluestein, continue the New York and New Jersey.

Well, let us see the picture. When Kelly goes the partners' drawings are reduced. You might think business would start on the up, but it does not. Garage bills are not paid, finance companies seize the trucks, there is proof here. Bank balances? Bank balances for that concern? Dividends for that concern? Gentlemen, this 10674 was one of the most thoroughly investigated cases on the part of the District Attorney's office I have ever seen. Do you think that anywhere in this State, or in New Jersey, or in Pennsylvania, or in Texas, there was a bank balance which would show a progressive nature and financial stability of the New York and New Jersey, that Mr. Turkus would not have had it here? Oh, he would—he would. He had Dun and Bradstreet's report of the Raleigh—he had the financial set-up of the Raleigh. It is a compliment to the efficiency of the District Attorney's office that they neglect nothing in unearthing evidence, and if they had it in this case it would have been here to contradict the contention that the business of the New York and the New Jersey was financially unstable long before the stoppage. You might say, "Well, why didn't you bring it?" Again, I say to you, that would be shifting the burden of the District Attorney's. I need not bring testimony—I need not explain anything or bring any exhibit in here. But you can draw the rightful inference that, if there was such a bank balance, or bank statement, or any financial statement, to disprove our contention, you would have had it here. The fact you did not means it adds to the strength of our argument. But Sobler's testimony on that point was the Gospel truth. The company was absolutely down and out. 10676

I will illustrate further as I proceed on that point. When Rosen got out of this concern and went to work for the Garfield, at the conclusion of the stoppage, remember, he had in this corporation a fifty per cent interest. Well, I should not say a fifty per cent interest, but fifty shares of stock. And Kelly, having sold out, he had a one-third interest. That is more accurate. He had fifty shares. He goes to work for the Garfield. There is back pay due him from the New York and New Jersey. If that company, as the District Attorney would have you believe, was a going concern and paid a good living for everyone, do you think, gentlemen, that Rosen would not have insisted on the value of the shares of stock in that company by claim or by law suit? Is there any proof here that after Rosen disassociated himself from this concern he made any demand upon the New York and New Jersey 10677 for the value of his shares of stock? Was there a law suit started? If there was, if he deemed it of value, even to the extent of $100., Rosen, who was financially down and out, would have demanded his share, or the value of it, or his back wages. Again, the dockets of this county, or any county, or any State, would have been searched. The family would have told you that Rosen made some claim for the fifty shares of stock. But he did not, and they did not give

this case, and I do not say it unsympathetically —for the purpose of this case it does not seem to matter at all. It is strange, isn't it, that the son and the daughter, who say they worked there, did not know a single thing about the financial set-up of the New York and New Jersey. They did not know about the office, the unpaid bills, the head checks, the employees; they did not know the salaries of the respective people. 10681

Let us go into it in more detail with respect to each witness— Let us analyze this—because from the family's point of view, and how Rubin got them to play a part in this case, we are confronted very, very fortunately with the truth, no matter how you wish to conceal it and disguise it and hide it. Somehow or other it gets out, even from the State, by the District Attorney. Their own inconsistency proves the falsity of some of the statements made by the family. The first one offered—Mrs. Rosen—let us see whether or not she colors the testimony and let us see whether or not she starts off with the thought, "I will say something here, I will say something here," from the very beginning, "which shall leave in the minds of the jurors as the case goes on a little dart of poison against Buchalter." You see, Mrs. Rosen—and again do not misunderstand me—I have the greatest sympathy in the world for one who has lost a dear one—the killing of Rosen was barbaric—it was unwarranted, it was unjust—there is no doubt about that. But you don't punish anybody because of that. Certainly, how easy it is for the District Attorney to say, "Did they give Rosen a fair trial—did he have twelve jurors—did he 10682 10683 have a court—did he have a reasonable doubt—did he have two or three or ten weeks within which to try his case?" Well, such an argument is pleaded because the barbarians who slew Rosen did it in the manner in which they did—but that does not mean that we have to reach the same level. This court is not a court of vengeance—it is not run for anybody's benefit. We have got to proceed according to law. And when I refer to Mrs. Rosen's testimony, I must analyze it 10685 from the point of view of whether or not she has told the truth in this case, irrespective of my sympathy for her as the widow of the man who was the victim in this case.

First, what is Mrs. Rosen's status in this case? Her residence is all of a sudden at the Half Moon Hotel. I shall never forget the Half Moon Hotel. The last three months she says she has been residing at the State's expense at the Half Moon Hotel. I do not criticize the District Attorney for handling his witnesses. He may handle them any way he wishes. For my part and for your part, if the taxpayers want to pay a 10686 Waldorf bill, she could live at the Waldorf. But we must consider the treatment of witnesses in the light of whether or not such treatment induces people to falsify in this court. We must not swallow every word they say. We must consider whether or not that treatment has induced, or is conducive to the witness, first, to associate with others, and, secondly, whether or not it induces her to tell this story. Why is she living at the Half Moon Hotel? It may be said, if it were assumed she were to be intimidated, she would be threatened, she would be injured. But you cannot speculate as to that, gentlemen. If it was true that she was intimidated and threatened, you would have the evidence right here.

Mr. Turkus: I must object; the intimidation of witnesses cannot be in the case unless it can be attributed specifically to the defendants.

Mr. Barshay: We know that.

The Court: Gentlemen of the jury, in your absence the Court struck out, or granted the motion to strike out the testimony of Mrs. Rosen on the alleged identification by her of Weiss as the man who came in and bought cigarettes. That identification was stricken out, so there need be no argument on that. Likewise, there has been stricken out upon motion such part of the testimony of the son and the daughter of the deceased Rosen as had to do with the alleged financial condition of the business, this because, obviously, they had no real knowledge on that point, and you are not permitted to guess, to take their guess on it. So that need not be argued, either. 10688

Mr. Barshay: It is plain to the Court, your Honor, I am not arguing about any identification. 10689

The Court: Gentlemen, it would confuse you, and I don't want to confuse you.

Mr. Barshay: I was not going into that.

Mr. Barshay (Continuing): I am not concerned with any identification, gentlemen, by Mrs. Rosen of anyone in this—

The Court: That is out of it. Her identification was no more than no identification at all.

Mr. Barshay (Continuing): I am not concerned with that at all, gentlemen, and I am sure I have not proven the instability or the financial instability of the New York and New Jersey through any testimony of young Rosen or the daughter. But on the question of whether or not Mrs. Rosen's being confined at this hotel, at the Half Moon Hotel, I have a right to comment. I say Mr. Turkus is right. It cannot be shown unless it was attributed to the defendant or his authorized agent. But even at that, there is not a scintilla of evidence in this case—you see, all the time from 1936 until three months 10691 ago, we have no proof she lived at any hotel under guard, but I am worried about her living at that hotel for the reason of possible association with the Rubens or with the Tannenbaums and with the other witnesses who made the Half Moon Hotel their living quarters. Ah, you may say to this, "But they are under guard, under constant supervision, twenty-four hours a day, no communications, detectives were there." Well, that theory has gone out of this case forever. Another man shall speak of that, but the best proof of it is one that I might mention, that Bernstein was forced by Mr. Rosenthal to 10692 admit that he had an opportunity to write or mail six letters. You will be illuminated by that able gentleman on that situation. That is why I spoke about Mrs. Rosen's presence at the Half Moon Hotel, sojourning in the summer home of the "architect", Mr. Rubin, who was there at the same time.

And what does she say that is material with respect to Buchalter in this case? She says she went to Cooper—she went to Cooper with Rubin and she said to Cooper, "My husband is an honest man, worked hard all his life, you discharged him without any reason whatever." Gentlemen, she had a right to say that. She had a right to uphold the honor and integrity of her husband. She had a right to complain and seek redress from Cooper. She had a right to know why he fired him. I don't find any fault with that. But what I do definitely find fault with, as you must, is the truth of her testimony when she gives an answer in this court which, by the District Attorney's own proof, is a damnable lie. She said that Cooper said to her, "Don't blame me, Mrs. Rosen, it is not my fault, go and see Lepke." That is the fault I find with her testimony. She came here with a deliberate lie on her lips, not realizing, not realizing that the truth would come out through a co-witness of hers, because no matter how hard you try, no matter how perfect everything is of importance in this case, no matter how good Rubin is at manufacturing a story in 1940, he could not fit the characters in absolutely perfect. Rubin told you— Rubin told you that he took Mrs. Rosen to Mr. Cooper. And Rubin told you what Cooper said, "I don't want him back, he bit the hand that fed him." Rubin told you—the District Attorney's witness told you, that it was Buchalter that got him the job—it was Buchalter who went time and again and pleaded with Mr. Cooper—dozens of times —to take Rosen, and after he learned of his discharge to take Rosen back, but Cooper was adamant, he did not want to do it for reasons of his own; he did not want to take Rosen back. The truth is that Buchalter tried with might and main— I don't care what reason is ascribed for his trying, but I do know it cannot be to appease Rosen, because it was 1933, and there was no Dewey on the horizon as special prosecutor in 1933. He did not come into the picture until June of 1935, or July of 1935. So, you see, gentlemen, she comes here to stick a poisonous dart into the defendant Buchalter. She tried with might and main to benefit her husband and she says, "Blame Lepke, it is not my fault." Cooper said no such thing—no such thing. Every chance that Buchalter had to do something for Rosen in getting him employment, Rubin tells you 10697 Buchalter did, and when you catch a person in so vital a lie, it finally gets out and goes to the very credibility of this person's testimony, plus what the Court said, plus what I proved, and you have a right to ask is the rest of her testimony in this case of any value. She said her husband showed her $200. and that he went to Reading for a week-end. Some innocent things are very easy to interpret in a criminal way. Fathers do go to visit their sons out of town for a week-end—it can happen—it has happened —it does happen, and it is going to happen in 10698 every family. So they see an opportunity to make the visit to the son in Reading, Pennsylvania an element of a threat to flee and stay out of town, "until we want you to come back."

Let us see if that is an honest interpretation of that visit by Rosen to his son. If Dewey were looking for Rosen, and there is no proof he was—but let us say if he was—the easiest place in the world to look for a man is, first, find his family, and then through the family trace him. Any intelligent police officer knows when he is looking for "A", he goes to the wife.

or daughter, or son, and through them he tries to find where the missing individual is. What was the use of his going to Reading to hide?

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Barshay is talking about something not in the evidence.

Mr. Barshay: I said, "If he was looking for Rosen." I did not say he was. I will argue from the two points.

The Court: That does not call for interruption. Each side speaks for the side it represents. (Addressing the jury:) You heard the 10700 evidence and you know what to take and what not to take. Unless there is a wide departure from the evidence, the Court will not interrupt.

Mr. Barshay (Continuing): Or, if you take it Mr. Turkus' way—if he wanted Rosen to stay out of town until he is told to come back—and, mind you, this is in 1936, the Dewey situation going great guns, he gets $200. to stay away until he gets told to come back. How long can a man stay away with $200.? Is there any other arrangement made for the subsequent payment of money? Is there any deal made, "You go 10701 here, I will send you money every week," as in the instance of Rubin when he was fleeing, I say, from Mr. Dewey's office. If you are going to have a man run away and stay out of town, you are going to make some arrangements, aren't you? You are going to say, "Now, here, you got there, from Orlofsky you get $50. every week, and from us you will get $25., I will take care of your wife, I will take care of your family." It was useless to have Rosen go away under the conditions, because if Rosen went away forever, it would not make any difference. There had to be one more person taken care of in this picture to give Mr. Buchalter the complete protection which the District Attorney wants you to feel he sought from Dewey. You must not forget that at the so-called conference on 19th Street, when Gurrah said, "Go here, go there, don't go here, don't go there," it was not only Rosen that was present, but his daughter, Miss Rosen. If Rosen never said a word, she could have, she could have explained to the Grand 10703 Jury, or to the police, or to the District Attorney, all that happened in that room. She was just as important and vital a witness as anyone in the room who wanted to testify against the defendant Buchalter.

But, now, let us go back to Mrs. Rosen. She does admit, she does admit after much pressure that her husband did have some heart condition, or a complaint, I should say, about his heart condition. So, gentlemen, she, the first witness in this long drawn out case, starts you jurors off with prejudice, that in 1932 Buchalter was re-10704 sponsible for the firing of her husband. Off the stand she goes, but sitting throughout the trial for fear that the poison, the talk, the thought she expressed was sinking, sinking constantly into the minds of the jury. And you cannot have any love under those conditions for a defendant. It is natural we all have prejudice, and she came here digging that prejudice deeper, deeper and deeper into your hearts. I don't know if such a thing can be disproved, even twenty days later, or four weeks or five weeks later. You have it now, gentlemen, with respect to Buchalter, that Mrs. Rosen told an absolute and complete lie, proven not by me, but by the District Attorney himself.

So we go quickly to young Rosen. To judge whether or not a person tells the truth, how are we going to judge? Well, we must take next into consideration—first, what would be the normal reaction of a family whose father has just been the victim of a brutal shooting? As you know any family, and as I know any family, and I say it fairly and respectfully, they are incensed, they are vengeful, they go to the authori- 10706 ties, the police, the District Attorney, and to the Governor, if necessary, and they want to bring to justice those whom they think are responsible for their plight. That is normal. They don't sit back calmly and coolly and say to the assistant in charge or to the detective in charge, "Ask me questions and I can give you answers." They tell the authorities every single thing that occurred that may give the authorities some light, some light, in order to bring to justice the perpetrators of this crime. Well, the authorities themselves in those days, in 1936, were 10707 stumped. What is my authority for that statement? Mr. Turkus is my authority for the statement. This is what he said in his opening: "The murder was committed; the killers fled from the scene in a stolen car; they abandoned the car at a railroad bridge, and escaped without identification." No clues; the authorities have had no human being who could identify any one of the participants in the commission of that crime. And you cannot manufacture witnesses whether you are a District Attorney under the old administration or under the new administration. Mr. Turkus said, "Without identification," and he went through this case with a fine-tooth comb, and I dare say he questioned every human being connected with this case, but still it remains, "They escaped without identification." And so the authorities, then, have no aid from any human being to point out who the killers were. He goes further. He gets not a single fingerprint clue that was found on the murder car. In other words, there wasn't any thing connected with the father's business or his personal or private life to draw in people who might be involved in this case, in the hope that someone would spill the beans, and then maybe the confession of a person could be had to prove, substantially, that maybe someone was threatening. I gather that was done, because the family was sent for.

10710 so, no matter who the District Attorney was, no matter who the Police Commissioner or his men were, on Mr. Turkus' own statement, the perpetrators of this crime left not only a shred of evidence through which they could be gotten, but you do not abandon the case, gentlemen, because of even that. You cannot say, "That is the end of the case, there are no fingerprints or clues." There are other ways. What are the other ways? There is always a background—the family, the intimates, the business associates. And so I take it, in the normal reaction of the family, they would have told anything and every-

So, young Rosen testified in the Grand Jury, and while I asked for the Grand Jury minutes, the Court looked at them, in accordace with the 10712 law, and said nothing was asked in it, and, consequently, nothing was answered. I am talking about the 1936 Grand Jury when the investigation was going on. Nothing asked and nothing answered in the Grand Jury. Do you think that if a loved one was murdered the way Rosen was that you would have to wait to be asked to volunteer such a vital piece of information as the pantomime that went on in the Broadway Central, on the basis that maybe Lepke was connected with this case? You would give it to a lawyer, you would give it to a cop, to a District Attorney, a policeman, anybody who would 10713 question you and who would say in going about the investigation, "Give me what happened in 1931 and in 1932, and what happened in 1933, 1934 or 1935." Was this done? Were questions asked and answers made? You could not keep a son quiet nohow. But he did not say a word. He did not volunteer, I should say, a single word about this Broadway Central Hotel, this pantomime that he saw through the door from fifteen to twenty feet away.

Now, think of the inconsistencies in his story. He remembers now, in 1941, or in 1940, something which he failed to state in the Grand Jury in 1936 about the pantomime in the Broadway Central Hotel. I don't understand it. Maybe you do. Ask yourselves this question— In one breath they try to paint Buchalter as a man whose word was law in the underworld when connected with unions, and that by one snap of the finger, or the batting of an eye-lash, he could have the Tannenbaums and the Bergers and people of that kind do his bidding. In the 10715 next breath they want you to believe, with Mr. Maguire's talk, the threat of intimidation would be undertaken personally by the so-called king of local racketeers—that he would attend to it personally. Well, if he attended to it personally he would not have done it at one of the many offices he is alleged to have had, but he would do it in the public lobby of a public hotel, when everybody was looking on. They were in there forty minutes—I take it they were in a room, if they were there. But there is no register shown here that there was any such meeting. There was, with Rubin—the All Saints Hotel and 10716 the Shelton Hotel—they can get everything that suits them—that is all right—but Mr. Lepke, Mr. Buchalter could be pointed out standing in the lobby surrounding himself with Rosen, moving forwards and backwards, without anyone knowing what went on. Nobody invited him there, and they have not told you what went on. It has nothing to do with the case, gentlemen. I think the Court put it very well when it said, "The jury cannot be permitted to conjecture about what was said—about the alleged pantomime—it has to depend upon evidence." That is there for an extra arrow to thrust the poison dart into the heart of the defendant Buchalter. That is all it is.

But the thing that interested me more about the Rosen testimony was really something that had no bearing upon the main issue in this case. That gives me a chance to comment on the question of whether or not it is really intended to present this case in its true light. The very last question asked of Rosen by Mr. Turkus was, "Mr. Rosen, tell me, did anybody in this court room visit you in 1941?" Mr. Rosen said, "Yes, those men over there," and he pointed to the venerable James I. Cuff and myself. Well, there are a lot of people who have the idea that a defendant's lawyer has no right whatever—that we have no right whatever to investigate cases—that we have no right to interview witnesses. And if people hear of a lawyer for a defendant wanting to see a witness for the People, for the prosecution, why that lawyer isn't any good—he is there for an illegal purpose—he is there, perhaps, to suborn perjury. But they do not know the ethics of the profession. Do you remember the Judge sustained me when I read to you each and every word of Section 39 of the Code of Ethics of the Bar Association and of the American Bar? Don't you recall that? Why should Mr. Turkus have done that? Do you think that helped him in the case? He did it because he thought it would leave in your mind a thought that the defense was up to something crooked. I would not be half a lawyer if I did not try to see the witnesses in this case—and, if the cops did not bar me at the Half Moon, I would go to Reles, or Bernstein, or Tannenbaum, or Rubin, or Berger, I would go anywhere, even into the association's office, because under the law I have the right to do so. I have not the power to subpoena a man and compel him to come to my office, and the District Attorney has not the power to subpoena a man to come to his office. But the people do not know that, so the District Attorney sends out a detective, who puts his hand on your shoulder, and says, "You come 10721 to the District Attorney's office." The only power he has is to subpoena before the Grand Jury. But the man in the street does not know that. So he brings them there—he brings a man from his business, from his house, from any place. That is because you don't know your rights, but it happened to be that Jim Cuff and I knew about it, and if there was anything surreptitious about our visit, you would have heard it, and then you could attribute to the defendant that, being his lawyer, my acts could be attributed to him. But I did not like it. I was astonished and surprised. It was the first un-

10722 pleasantness I had with my young adversary in all the years he and I fought each other when I was an assistant prosecutor.

(A ten minute recess was taken at this point, at the request of Mr. Barshay, the jury being admonished as to their demeanor during recess.)

(After a short recess the jury returned to the court room and the summation was resumed.)

Mr. Barshay (Continuing): Again, gentlemen, we go back to the Rosen family, and we take the last of the family, Mrs. Greenspan, and we analyze her testimony. Briefly, I must repeat, I take it that she, too, at the time this happened in 1936, was of a vindictive mind. She had a right to be. Her father was killed. She had a right to, and judging from her attitude on the stand she illustrated she was vindictive. She had a right to be, and she was vindictive. She is the type of an individual who would rip up the Police Department, she would rip the District Attorney's office apart, if they 10724 did not do everything possible to bring the perpetrators of this crime to justice. And, sure, she was right, too. And, feeling that way, she, too, would have then told the authorities everything that helped in view of the fact that no identification and no clue of any kind was left. She, too, would have told everything she knew in order to enlighten the authorities to a successful investigation of this case.

Now, we asked the aid of the Court for her prepared statement to Mr. McCarthy. You would think that in that statement to Mr. McCarthy she would have said something about a 10725 meeting in 1932, which in this case is the very basis of a motive to kill Rosen—the threat to Mr. Rosen to put him out of business and the threat of Rosen to tell Dewey—it was so vital, it was so important. She was present—she was the only member of the family present in 1936 to hear everything on that proposition. Again, the Court said, substantially, "I have examined the statement and I find that nothing is in it—nothing was asked and nothing was answered." And, again, I repeat to you, how could McCarthy, or any human being say to her investigating this case, "What happened in 1932?" What would prompt that question? Mind you, this is the same Mr. McCarthy whom Rubin described as the person who was going around, according to Buchalter, "Yelling his head off, and saying, 'I am going to make the biggest collar of my life.'" It would have been— "I am going to catch big fish—I am going to catch Lepke and Gurrah—" It would have been. He was ambitious like every young assistant district 10727 attorney. He wanted his reputation enhanced. He is going to catch Lepke and Gurrah. Rubin would have you believe that statement was made to him by Buchalter—that it scared Buchalter to the point where he said, "You, Rubin, get out of town." That is how much they feared him, according to the record here. We can go by no other testimony than the record here. But she had to wait to be asked about the 1932 meeting. She did not recall exactly when it happened—1931, she said—the spring of 1932—the fall of 1932, and she described it at the place of some coat company or canvas company, 10728 subsequently better identified by Mr. Rubin as the Perfection Coat Company owned by Wiener.

Well, I said to you that Rubin was planning this case and avenging himself on the defendant Buchalter. He was shot in the head. He waited his time. He blamed it, unjustifiably, I say, on the defendant Buchalter, and he was picking his cast. It was a cast hard to choose, and it took him a long time to choose, but one thing is certain—he anticipated very little difficulty with the Rosen family. But prior inconsistent statements made in court might be the "bone" in his throat, and I dare say in this instance, they were. You see, he had no access to the testimony of the Rosen family away back in 1936. He did not know that she never volunteered a single word about this meeting in 1932, so he said, "Who was it, Gurrah?" Do you think I would let Buchalter call Gurrah as a witness for him? He is alive, but Danny Fields, who was there, is dead. But, Rubin, the paragon of virtue, we will talk about him later.

Now, the Rosen family—the jury will be sympathetic—they will believe her, she is the daughter of the victim. The prior inconsistent statement, for it is inconsistent, and I say it is inconsistent because she would have told it if it were true—but let us go further along that line. You have had corroboration on lots of things in this case. If a man finds a gun, they have a picture of the spot where the gun was found. If a man describes a garage, they have a picture of the garage where the car was stolen from. If a man has a car stolen from the street, they have a picture of that—a fine, thoroughly investigated case. But where is there someone from this coat company—this Wiener from the Perfection, or whatever they call it, on 19th Street or 17th Street, whatever the address is—there is no proof that he is dead. There is no one in this court room to prove to you that Lepke had a right to use that office. There is no Wiener. I know, he may say, "You could have called him, he was just as available to you." Well, he was just as available to him. Then, again, you may answer, "If there is a law that the burden is with him," you jurors are forced to enforce that law. I need not call any Wiener, or anybody else. I need not disprove anything in this case,

10734 or immediately thereafter, Rubin says that he, Rosen, went to work for the Garfield. So, it could not be that he was in business three months—he could not be in business two days after that meeting, or at most a week. He could not be in business and work for the Garfield at the same time. He was there, she said, twenty minutes. Again, I say, either they paint Lepke as the damndest fool in the world, or they paint him as one of the smartest racketeers in the world—I don't know. If he is the damndest fool in the world, that is one thing, and it is inconsistent with their theory that he became the kingpin in the so-called crime center of the flour industry and all the rackets of which he is accused. Do you think he would, if he was violating any law, or making threats, or uttering intimidations, or forcing people out of business, he would let an additional witness, a daughter of Mr. Rosen, be present? Nobody on the part of the defendant in the group of men there asked her to leave. Nobody. Rubin said so—He said so— The only one that asked her to leave was her own father, which indicates to 10736 you, gentlemen, that there was no desire on the part of the defendant or his associates there to get rid of her and to obviate a witness being in the room. It indicates he did not care whether she heard all the words, or a single word, or anything he said. He did not look for witnesses, if he is such a thief and racketeer. Assuming he could not delegate this part of the business to Rosen, and she describes that entirely different from Rubin. Rubin was there all the time. She said that Gurrah said, "You cannot go here, you cannot go there." He did not speak with excitement and threats. As a matter of fact, 10737 Rubin said that Buchalter said, "You have a lot of business, Rosen, don't kid me, but if you are in any trouble, you come to us and we will help you." That is what the record says. She says her father got white with excitement—that he paced up and down, and that he defied Mr. Lepke, and Mr. Gurrah, and Mr. Rubin, and Mr. Danny Fields, and he said, "Nobody will take what I have in Pennsylvania." What did he have in Pennsylvania? What did he have that anybody could take? Rubin said, "One customer." My witness, Sobler, said, "Four or five customers." Whether he had four, or five, or ten, or twenty customers, the fact is that financially it was a complete and total loss. But she is in this room—nobody but her father asked her to leave.

Gentlemen, by her own testimony she is not called by the District Attorney's office until 1941. She says when she took the stand that she first communicated with the District Attorney's office a few months ago. What does that
10740 forthwith, for the daughter of the deceased? Oh, yes, they would. Do you think they would allow all these months from 1940 to pass without sending for Sylvia Greenspan to corroborate Rubin on a vital and important part of this case—the basic motive in this case? They would have. But Rubin did not mention it— Rubin, the planner and schemer, the man who resides at the Half Moon Hotel, it takes him a long time to pick his cast. Berger, they did not "case" until June 5, 1941. Berger, whom he says was in it in 1936, was not arrested, charged, or questioned in this case until June 5, 1941. It takes him a long time to pick this cast. Rubin says, "Maybe I would not be believed by a jury." Rubin is in the Half Moon Hotel and Mrs. Rosen is in the Half Moon Hotel, and young Mrs. Greenspan visited her mother—maybe they did not talk to each other, but the mere sight of young Mrs. Greenspan by Rubin would give him a thought. "I got it, I got it, I will have no trouble with his daughter to talk about the meeting in 1932." That is how she comes into this case. She is a witness of the 1941 vintage, 10742 and for no other reason. Her attitude—listen to what she says, when asked, "Did Buchalter get a job for your father with the Garfield?", and her answer, "I don't believe it." She doesn't believe it, but isn't it true, gentlemen? You see how much she knows about this. She did not even know that Sobler was a partner in this business. On direct examination they said there were three partners, Kelly, Bluestein and her dad. On cross-examination she was prodded and prodded, and finally the name of Sobler was suggested to her, and then she says, "I think he was a partner." That is how much she re- 10743 members of these by-gone days. "Did Larry Cooper fire your father in 1936, or did he quit voluntarily?", and the answer was plain, she said, "He did not quit voluntarily, I don't believe that."

So I say she has a right to be vindictive, but you have a right, too, to reject her testimony if you find that her vindictiveness in this case induced her to swear to untruths. And that rule applies to her even if she is the daughter of a man who was brutally murdered, Mr. Rosen.

Now, what happened in this room. I am going to give the District Attorney the best of it. Assuming that an argument took place—and I do not concede it, gentlemen, but I do want to make my point clear, so that for the sake of agrument—I will concede only for the sake of argument that this meeting took place in 1932 in Wiener's—I hope you, gentlemen, will not mistake the fact that I concede it for any other purpose but for the sake of argument. What did Lepke have to fear that Mr. Rosen 10745 could tell to Dewey? The Court said we should be bound by the record in this case. Buchalter is charged with forcing Rosen out of business; that there in the room the fact was accomplished — the basis for it was accomplished—the starting point to force Rosen out of business was there. I searched the Penal Law, and I am not an authority on the law, but I have had some experience—I have instructed law at the Police Academy, the same as Mr. Klein is doing now, for several years. I had some experience as an Asistant District Attorney and as a lawyer. I

to compel another person to do or abstain from doing an act which that other person has a legal right to do, or abstain from doing, wrongfully or unlawfully uses or attempts intimidation on such person, by threat, or force, is guilty—" of what? Of a misdemeanor. In other words, Rosen, according to this section, like any other person, had a right to be in his business if it was the worst business in the world, even if it did not pay five cents in wages to him, he had a right to be in business. I don't deny that. A 10748 man can own a candy store or a big business—he can lose his shirt—but he has a right under the law to maintain himself there the best he can, and no Buchalter, or anybody else, can put him out of that business, without law or right. But the law says that Buchalter, or anyone else who puts a man out of business, is guilty of what—he is guilty of a misdemeanor, mind you. I think the Court shall charge, and I hope it does, that the maximum penalty for a misdemeanor, which is the lowest form of crime, is three years. I think the Court will charge you, and I hope it will, that the Statute of Limitations for a mis- 10749 demeanor is two years. So that, if Buchalter committed a crime, I say, conceding for the sake of argument that he did force him out of business, the only crime he committed punishable by law, because there was no physical assault upon Rosen according to this record—I mean he was not beaten, nobody laid a hand on him, or you would have heard it—I mean that is practically conceded by its not having been proven—so the threats were, according to their testimony, the forcing out of business of Rosen. The Statute of Limitations for a misdemeanor, I must repeat, is two years, so that if it happened in 1932, Buchalter could not be punished beyond two years after 1932—let us say three years. There is no proof here that Buchalter ran out of town prior to his final running out. There is no proof here. Rubin says he was always around. Berger says he was around. Tannenbaum says he was around. But if you are not so satisfied, the limitation is increased by the time you are out of town. The statute does not run, and we will 10751 give him the benefit of the doubt and say to you, let us say, it is three years—Buchalter would have nothing to fear from Dewey by way of Rosen in that regard. I say the Statute of Limitations has run, but before it was amended he would have to fear the three years penalty. So, gentlemen, do you get my point—that Buchalter, who was being looked for by Dewey as king of the flour racket and king of the crime racket—he was looked for by the Government—he had so many charges hurled against him that everybody in this universe was searching for him, that he would worry about a possible mis-

10752 demeanor? I say, "Possible misdemeanor" at the hands of Rosen. What proof is there in this case by anyone that Rosen was roaming the streets of Brownsville threatening to go to Dewey? What could he tell Dewey? Nothing. Because, in telling Dewey that four years ago Buchalter drove him out of business, I take it he would also have to tell Dewey the good traits of Buchalter—that he got him a job—that he tried to get him another job—that he effectuated transfers and that he got him $100. and $125. a week. What was there that Buchalter had to fear at the hands of Rosen with thousands of complaints running to Dewey in extortion totaling a half a million dollars? Would he worry about Rosen, an ordinary poor truck driver?

Well, I know Mr. Turkus is making a very good note about this because he will have to answer to you. It is sound reasoning that I shall anticipate what Mr. Turkus will answer. I may be wrong, but have you any better answer from the facts as he gave them to you? There isn't any evidence other than the speech of the unbelievable Rubin that maybe Buchalter thought 10754 it would be a warning to the rest of the trade. There is no proof of that here. You cannot speculate. If that is his answer, I don't know, but I cannot think of any other argument he can give. But, again, I must remind you that the killing of Rosen, if that was the thought, would not be sufficient to make peace for Buchalter, because there was a daughter, there was a daughter still present and outstanding during the intimidation and threats to force out of business. And you could not keep her down with an army, and I would not blame her for not being 10755 kept down with two armies. So that is not the answer he can furnish from the evidence.

What was it that Roser wanted, according to Rubin? Was it another job? Well, if he feared him so much, the great Buchalter, the great racketeer, he could not find a job, even if it was necessary to use force, he could not have found a job for Rosen? The great Weinstein who dominated 25,000 members of the Amalgamated could not find a job for Rosen some place? But Rosen already had a job at $50 a week—that is a reasonable pay for a truck driver. Nobody fired him out of that. That is the evidence here—nobody fired him out of that. From the conditions, as described here, he certainly did not want to go back to driving a truck. What did he want from Buchalter? $700 to buy a dyeing and cleaning business, if that is true. He gave him, too, Rubin claims, another five to keep the fellow quiet. How weak the story. You may say to yourselves, "Who else could have killed Rosen or have him ordered to be killed?" I 10757 don't know who else could have done it. It is not my job to answer that. I don't know anything about Rosen's private life, or his associations or doings with Rubin, Berger, or anybody else. I can only say to you that the evidence shows that Buchalter had no reason—he had no motive to kill him—he is insignificant in the great tangled web that Dewey was throwing around this man. But Dewey got him, and maybe he was right in getting him. Let us not consider anybody else's job—let us consider this case, as Mr. Turkus said, the Rosen case—no more, no less.

10758 So, I leave the Rosen family, and briefly refer to the man who was on the stand for five days, a complete examination, a complete direct examination, a complete cross-examination, and I would say a very lengthy cross-examination.

The Court: You are now starting on something which will require considerable time, and I take it you desire no interruption. We will now take a recess for lunch.

The Court (Addressing the jury): Gentlemen, we will now take a recess and we will reassemble at 1:30. Please do not discuss the case, keep your minds open. First, the jury may go out. Now, the defendants are remanded.

(Afternoon Session. Trial Resumed.)

(Mr. Barshay continues his summation, as follows:)

Mr. Barshay (Continuing): Before recess here, step by step, I tried, and I hope successfully, at least to some degree, to establish a reason for doubt in your minds. I shall now proceed along the same line, hoping that my reference to the evidence and the logical inferences that flow therefrom, may result in reason for 10760 doubt which under the law you must give to the defendant.

Now, speaking in behalf of Buchalter, and only in his behalf, again I urge in my argument, because other counsel do not even have to be consistent with my thoughts in this case, as though we were receiving a separate and distinct trial. That is our position, sirs. I speak only for Buchalter and nobody else when I urge the argument—I cannot stress that too much, because someone may say, "Well, Mr. Rosenthal said this—Judge Talley said that—Mr. Barshay 10761 said this—it does not coincide, and consequently counsel are in disagreement among themselves and it leads to confusion." I know you are doing your best to keep in mind that each one speaks for himself.

When Bernstein took the stand—and I shall refer very briefly to him—he claimed he was an accomplice in this case, and he goes on and recites the part he played, from A to Z. I take it you shall be told that the physical facts in the case, that is, the finding of the body, the shouting, the yelling, the chasing, the finding of the gun, et cetera, and the pictures in evidence —you shall be told those things do not tend to make the defendant Buchalter in any respect a party in the commission of the crime. I am sure his Honor will tell you that is the law. He said once that he was not an accomplice. I will let other counsel make comment about that. But he did say one thing that is most significant on behalf of Buchalter, and he left out something which I say is very significant 10763 in behalf of Buchalter, because I take it that the District Attorney offered him to tell the entire story, and I take it, too, that he did not offer him to leave out anything disadvantageous to any defendant in the case, which under the law he could properly get from the witness. For instance, one of the important things he said here is the element involving the time when he said he, on Friday, September 11, 1936, was told to steal the automobile subsequently connected with the commission of this crime. Now, you may say to this, "What difference does it make whether he stole the car at four o'clock,

not live exclusively for the five minutes of September 11, 1936, and divest yourself of any thought of anything else. But they all have remarkable memories. I don't know. So the element of time becomes important in this respect, with respect to Buchalter. We contend that throughout this case he was the subject of surveillance by Mr. Dewey's office and the Police Department of the City of New York. We have no right to assume that the Police Department or Mr. Dewey's office did not do a 10766 thoroughly good job, too. You know that Lepke was not just an ordinary racketeer. When Dewey lays his fingers on a man of the size, of the importance, of the magnitude of Lepke, you can rest assured of having an excellent job, check books are sought, and people are watched —especially people like this defendant—so he set a twenty-four hour guard, or surveillance, I should say. What right have we to assume that they lost him when they watched him? What right have we to assume without proof of speculation, that the Dewey men and the New York City detectives would allow him to 10767 sneak away? What proof is there in the record? It is speculation. The presumption in law is that an officer does his duty imposed upon him by law until it is proven to the contrary. We subpoenaed the record of that surveillance. The Court, in its wisdom, excluded that from perusal. It was marked only for identification. I could not see it, you cannot see it, you cannot speculate what is in it, but I have a right to comment, I think, on this part before I even had them in this court; and after I had them in this court I even asked that they be marked for identification. Mr. Turkus, the District Attorney, already had the right to see them, but that is not a privilege which is accorded to a private lawyer. But the P. D. and the D. A. cooperate with one another, they interchange information; they help each other. You saw Mr. Dewey's assistant here, and I take it that you have a right to infer relations between Judge O'Dwyer's office and Mr. Dewey's office, and the various departments, police and otherwise, are very good. I take it 10769 you have a right to draw conclusions by the constant presence of Mr. Horowitz, the law assistant of Mr. Dewey, that there is cooperation between Judge O'Dwyer and Mr. Dewey; by reason of the indictment involved in this case it is reasonable to accept such cooperation to exist. I take it Mr. Turkus, and you have that right to infer, knew what the police reported with respect to the activity of Buchalter that day, if they missed him, if he sneaked from them, if he succeeded in getting away from the watchful eyes of the Dewey and the Police Department men. Mr. Turkus would know that, 10770 I take it, from the watchful eyes of the Dewey and the Police Department men. Mr. Turkus would know it, and I take it in all fairness to the defendant who claims he was watched twenty-four hours a day, and was not able to sneak away, we should have had some proof from the cops assigned that day from the Dewey office, or from the Police Department, to testify to the fact that they watched him, but that the clever Buchalter sneaked away. That is a logical inference.

Mr. Turkus: There is not a scintilla of evidence in the record that Buchalter, or Lepke, was under a twenty-four hour surveillance that day.

The Court: As I called attention before, if an editing process is going to be carried out as to accuracy of all details referred to by counsel during summation, it is going to disturb the trend of thought of counsel and interfere with the proper presentation of argument to the jury. Please do not do it again. This applies to all sides. I know how it is by counsel jumping up and spoiling a speech; there must be both gold and ivory in a summation as well as in the Judge's gavel. 10772

Mr. Turkus: I will not do that again.

Mr. Barshay: I do not think Mr. Turkus had any thought of disturbing my thought and trend, so I will continue with my thought.

Mr. Barshay (Continuing): And so you see, gentlemen, we have a right to have some proof as to whether or not he was under surveillance that day, two hours a day, five hours a day, eight hours a day; all we wanted was to know what the hours were. You might say, "What is the matter, Mr. Lawyer, couldn't you have subpoenaed them?" Well, there are two answers to that. I did not know who to subpoena— I cannot subpoena 18,000 policemen. Those assigned to Mr. Dewey's office were assigned in a confidential manner. Yes, I could have gone to the Police Department, written a list, and I could have asked the Police Commissioner, and by a process of elimination I might have gotten it, but it is not my job to do that. Again, I say to you, the District Attorney has to sustain the 10773 burden of proof imposed upon him by law—not by me but by law—and this is a court of law. Rubin tells you that Buchalter told him that the cops were watching him, and Berger said so, too. They even said that they would have to sneak away, which goes to show that the cops were watching them, even if they did sneak away. But we wanted to know the truth. Where were they watched? And if they were watching him, gentlemen, you have the right to say to yourselves, would he, who had every reason in the 10775 world to sneak away from the clutches of Dewey, because he knew what it meant if Dewey caught him—would he, knowing he was being watched, associate in the public streets with Mendy Weiss, or Tannenbaum, or Berger, or Rubin? Is he a fool altogether? Was he so powerful that he could defy the Dewey men who were around him? Haven't they eyes? Haven't they arrest records, and reports to make every single day? That is why it is important to know whether in the early afternoon Mr. Rubin was at the Raleigh—whether Tannenbaum was at the

it was asked of him, "Did you look at a watch?", and his answer, "I did not look at any watch; I did not look at any watch." Do you remember Berger? Watch or no watch, it was dark—it was dark—absolutely dark when he landed in Brownsville. He gave the time as 9:00 to 9:30, and he described that day as finishing his work at 5:00 o'clock and going to a certain place, and then going to the Raleigh, and then going to the East Side, then eating for an hour and a half, then waiting for Mendy Weiss, then taking a 10778 car, and then traveling to Brownsville. It was dark when he started across the Williamsburg Bridge. Let us say it was 9:00 o'clock—he said it was 9:30. Bernstein's testimony is that since the advent of Judge O'Dwyer he has not lied. Well, I will let other counsel comment on that. But he does not lie when he said it was in the early afternoon. Once he said 1:00 o'clock; once he said he could not tell, but he certainly said, and it is there, 1:00 o'clock or 4:00 o'clock, he could not remember. So, Berger has Mendy Weiss present in Brownsville, giving directions to steal a car on this murder hours before, hours 10779 before that, gentlemen. Berger says he left the East Side for the purpose of going with Mendy Weiss to the candy store. That is why it is important.

And there is one more phase of Bernstein's testimony that to me is mighty important—I should say, rather, his lack of testimony on that point. He was five days on the stand, direct and cross. Isn't it strange that a man like Bernstein, who is trusted by a so-called group, mentioned as being a participant in this crime, trusted to participate in a murder, trusted to steal a car, and talk to the people—to sleep in the house and stay overnight—to ride in the car to the scene, and from the scene, through streets and out of streets—I am not conceding it is true, gentlemen, don't mistake me—I am saying it for the sake of argument, because, if I say it is true, other counsel might find fault with me. I am using his testimony for the sake of argument. Standing in the hallway, waiting 10781 for Rosen to come out, fleeing from the scene, disposing of the weapon, an association that commenced prior to September 11th and finished after the murder of Rosen—almost thirty hours, if not more. Not once, not once, does the name of Buchalter, or Lepke, come forth from the lips of Bernstein. This murder, which they want you to believe was done on behalf of Lepke, on behalf of and for the benefit of Buchalter. Is it conceivable, if that were true, that some time during all this preparation, some time before the execution, before the flight, someone would not 10782 have whispered, "Well, Lep will be satisfied," or, "Buchalter will be happy. We did it for Lep," or some such remark. It is such a natural —it is such an expected thing—to have the remark. To say Bernstein is only a middle layer —he was trusted—he was not a menial, if he is interested from the beginning to the end and he is right there when the murder is taking place. He said he was one of the parcels of that group combination. And how is it the name of Buchalter is not mentioned once? I will tell you. Once again I will tell you that I do not care who did it, or whether they did it, or whether they had a motive, or did not. The name was not mentioned because Buchalter had absolutely nothing to do with the commission of this crime, and the District Attorney produced the evidence better than I could ever hope to do.

And, now, they introduce Magoon—Magoon, who has nothing to do with our case at all—consider that, gentlemen, when you are looking for a reasonable doubt. I don't say I admit the truth of what he said, because the Judge will tell you, I think, that the speech of any participant in any case after the consummation of the act or 10784 conspiracy, after it is all finished, within certain limits, are binding only on the doer. I shall ask the Court to so charge you, and I think he will. Now, let us look at the record. He said that Capone said, "We got to hit Rubin for Lep." He mentioned the name. Bernstein, however, surely, positively, irrevocably, is silent. He does not even say he is an accomplice of Buchalter, but that someone in the group, in the combination, may have been. It was the most natural thing in the world, if he were involved, if it was done for him, that the name Lepke, or Lep, or 10785 Buchalter, or some other name would have been used indicating, "Well, it is our job, we did it for him." Tannenbaum also did not mention it, and I will tell you why. I will leave Bernstein to the discretion and consideration of far abler lawyers than I will ever be. I say to you now—I am coming to Rubin—the Rosen murder was committed in 1936. Rubin was motivated at least by vengeance—there may be some other reason which I do not know—but from the record, at least, by vengeance, hate, and a desire to get even with and punish Buchalter because he wrongly attributed his own shooting to Buchalter, and he began to plot and plan this case in 1940. I must repeat, it took him a long time to pick an act, and to pick the right actors. He had to pick someone from people who associated with Buchalter in his past life. He could not pick you, or me, or someone who did not know him. He knew his cue. When Tannenbaum is in the clutches of the law ready to burn for six 10787 murders he admitted out of his own mouth, Rubin says to him, "Tannenbaum, an associate of Buchalter, that fellow—he is my man—he has something to gain from the State, never mind the District Attorney—Tannenbaum, he is my man." I will speak of that in a few minutes.

But in all the case there is still a flaw, and when he learns somehow, somewhere, some place, that Berger was the man who was responsible for fingering him when the bullet went through his head—you see, before that he had very little on Berger of any consequence—"He is my man—Berger is my man—June 5, 1941—I will com-10788 plete the cast." I wonder what Rubin's face looked like when he learned that Paul Berger was the man who fingered him on two occasions? I wonder what he said to himself about Paul Berger— He who says on the stand, "I will help anybody," when I asked him about the financial transaction he had with Berger in 1938, when he says he had somebody named Ike Brown loan him $200. He did not loan it, but he arranged it, or something like that. He defended Berger—he lunched with Berger—he tried to put him on the payroll of the expressmen's association. I wonder how he felt—he who was dealing with Berger in the presence of a police guard after he was shot, which was furnished him by Dewey. And now he is on the same team with Berger. I will illustrate how false and how rotten this Rubin frame-up is. Mr. Turkus said that the case was broken from the inside. Was it? Well, it was not framed from the inside—the case was broken from the outside by Rubin—it was not only broken, but in your presence, on this witness stand, by evidence they produced 10790 it was smashed and shattered and has fallen to pieces by its own weight. Rubin! I don't know how many people he in his lifetime has been able to fool. Again, I say, and don't misunderstand me, I in nowise justify any harm that came to Rubin. Nobody has a right to be shot or be hurt, or threatened, or intimidated. But that is not the point in this case now. There will come a day for whoever is responsible to answer that charge in the proper court, in the proper tribunal, before a proper Judge and a proper District Attorney, a Man soft-spoken in manner, but only for a while. You see, in the 10791 preparation of this case I read the flour record. This is not his first performance against Buchalter—this is his second performance against Buchalter. And, carefully reading the record, I practically knew what to anticipate from him. I said that here when he took possession of the court momentarily—he thought he was still on a box in Union Square—he forgot he was in the witness box, and the soft-spoken, mild-mannered Rubin rancored, and raved, and cursed, and hurled invectives. I said that I would not roll in the gutter with him. He admitted that he never saw me in his life—I don't care whether he did or did not—but I never saw that man in my life. I said it then. But that is not the point. I take it that he anticipated, if he took the witness stand, and made a remark about being shot, that he would gain the sympathy of the jury. Well, he is entitled to smypathy, but that has nothing to do as to judging his credibility in this case. You see, when Mr. Turkus had 10793 him on direct examination, carefully following his Grand Jury testimony, and actually prepared with questions and answers, he was asked concerning matters which were for my cross-examination. You see, if Mr. Turkus is going to beat me to the punch and show Mr. Rubin in his true light, it will not be effective. So I asked the same questions again, and so Mr. Turkus, when the Judge sustained him and not me, properly, Mr. Turkus said, "Well, I want to present Rubin in a true light." All right— Did he present Mr. Rubin in a true light on direct examination? You search your memories, gentle-10794 men—he did not. There was no real true light on Mr. Rubin on direct examination. I will recall it to your attention from the record furnished—a matter of Rubin's participation in flour extortion—his own participation in extortions totaling $400. to $700. each and every week, and sometimes more. Was that brought out on direct examination? It was not an oversight. My able adversary does not commit those things as oversights. I will tell you what was in the mind of Rubin. He had an idea that perhaps—he is experienced with courts—do you remember when I said to him about flight in the flour case, he said, I spoke of a subject pertaining to the jurisdiction of New York? He was no stranger to these things. He is above the average intelligence. It was Rubin's thought, you see, that maybe in cross-examination I would not ask him about those things for fear that I may open the door and put the defendant Buchalter, by his answers—though I did it on behalf of putting the defendant Buchalter in a worse light than he appeared already. So you did not get Rubin in his true light, did you? I had to bring that out myself. Well, you have never seen Rubin in any 10796 true light, but some days, to quote Rubin himself, as to what he said to McCarthy in 1937, he said to McCarthy, "Hope for a break. It will come." And I say, "I hope for the break. It will come." And we shall see Rubin not in a discolored false light, but in his true light. We only have him partially here, and that is bad enough—this gentleman who said, lifting his hands, "With hands like these you cannot work, so you must use your mouth, and I use my mouth." He did all right—he did. You might think from his testimony, as he presented 10797 himself, that the defendant Buchalter made of him a union man, a racketeer, a gangster, an extortioner; that before he ever met Buchalter in 1927 he was lily-white. Why, gentlemen, from 1917, 1918, or 1919, until 1927, when he said he knew Buchalter from 1932, and he became intimate with Buchalter, according to his own language—let us look at him— Who is he—Is he a paragon of virtue, is he a clean man who was taken from a clean life and dipped in the mud by Buchalter? He did not fool me and I think he did not fool you. He knew Noya and Slobow; he knew who was interested in the unions—he was on all kinds of committees, finance, control, joint executive, and otherwise; he knew who was controlling and dominating the Amalgamated labor union. He knew who was betraying it up to 1927. He was willing to profit by it and live by it, and attend their meetings and associate with them, attend to their strikes. Nobody compelled him at the point of a gun to

they—did he know what they were doing? He could have, if he was a decent man, left that field and gone into other fields. He did not have to be a racketeer with them—not Rubin. He said in 1932, when Buchalter made mention of the fact that Luciano, or somebody, whoever it may have been, said, "This one has to go, this one has to stay." "All the business agents were to stay and were going to get a year's pay," what do you think the lily-white Rubin said? "What about me?" You see, who does 10802 he care about— "What about me, me me?" All his life. He did not retire—he did not go the way of decent people, and say, "Well, my hands are deep in filth." He wanted to stay—he loves it—he loves glamour—he loves the underworld—he loves the glamour of stuffing in his pocket $400. to $700.—he loves the tips, and they are pretty good. But men in the shops, men who drive trucks, men who don't get anywhere in the bosom, they are the victims of the street corner orator, the "American" Rubin, who says when he was a young man he was speaking on soap boxes in Union Square, espous- 10803
ing Marxian theories of economics— Rubin, who when called to the colors of his country, did not go. I say this most respectfully to his Honor when he referred to William Penn as a Quaker— William Penn was a Quaker— Max Rubin was a faker. It goes to his credibility whether or not when he registered, like all human beings had to then on behalf of their country —it goes to his credibility when he says that he was living with Mrs. Ada Coglin—married to her, and therefore was entitled to deferred classification in 4-A. He hid behind the skirts of a woman in order to avoid service to his country. It goes to his credibility, I say, because he was not living with her, he was not supporting her. And she complained to the Government because no Coglin would stand for that Union Square loafer hiding behind her skirts and refusing to answer the call of his country. I can understand her make-up. She complains, and they reclassify him. But Union Square—still anchored himself to Union Square—he would not go even when 10805 called, the cowardly Marxian theory— I have another name for it. He betrayed labor, he betrayed his wife, he betrayed the country that harbored and kept him and gave him a chance to earn a livelihood. It was not a mere accident —it was not just foolishness on his part.

I do not bring this out to prejudice you, gentlemen, against him, but I dare say when a man betrays the flag under which he lives you have a right to believe him or disbelieve him, and to consider that in accepting or rejecting his testimony. If it was a plain scheme on his part 10806 to avoid service to his country, it is indicated, not as an accident, but as a plain scheme. I don't know the reason why he went to Germany, and I don't care, but he forged, knowingly, his brother's name; he swore, knowingly, that his name was Benjamin Rubin, and he lived there under that name—and he did it for one purpose, that is clear—to avoid detection and arrest and possible prosecution by the Federal Government. There, in Germany, he still engages in the transmission of money to the Soviet Government—that Soviet blood which flows within Rubin so conspicuously that even when he is hiding in 1936 or 1937, whenever it was, in Brooklyn, he had to assume a name—he adopted an unpronounceable Russian name. He cannot get away from his early ideals and from his early ideas. He calls it Marxian economics, but I have another name for it. The Rubins don't fool me, gentlemen. His history itself is a reason for doubt. Let the workmen work, he lives while he talks; let American soldiers die—he still hides— That is Rubin.

In 1927 he disassociates himself from the Cutters' Union. He will have you believe that Sneaky Levine—Red Levine—who was brought here and put on the stand, in the custody of the Sheriff, or somebody, and who was put on the stand, voluntarily gave up being a business agent and went back to driving a truck with his hands and feet and body, and dirty himself, so that Rubin should become business agent. But he was not satisfied yet with being a business agent of one local, 240; there soon came a time when Local 138 began, and that was $25. a week more, and with the tips and all, I must repeat, would average $400. and $700. a week, and some weeks more. He was an active participant. He was never arrested on the charge—he was never brought up on the charge—he was never punished for the charge—and he never will be punished for the charge. But you have a right to consider his motive on the kind of testimony that he wants you to consider as the Gospel truth. And even after Thomas E. Dewey was appointed in 1935, he continued to participate and shake down firms, and even when he fled from Dewey—and I say from no other place—before he fled his pal Berger, the fingerman Berger, was taken around by him and introduced to prospective victims of a shakedown. It is no defense when they say that was done at Buchalter's command or suggestion. They could have quit whenever they wanted to. But the fact is that he paid his penalty and they are on the streets free, unharmed, protected by your money—that is the Rubins and the Bergers who live at hotels and spend their summers at the Half Moon.

You have to consider those things when you consider the truth or falsity of their testimony. Now, let us get down to the stoppage. You see, Rubin is no fool altogether—he is a Jekyl and Hyde. There are times when he has to tell the truth; he cannot help it. He talks about stoppage. There was a stoppage and he cannot deny it. But who called it? Who do you think would call a stoppage? The stoppage was not called for Rosen—the stoppage was not called for the benefit of any one person or any individual person. The Court has told you that stoppage is a lawful means used by unions, and it is used now. So there are things that he tells you about stoppage which have to be true. He says that he told Buchalter, when discussing the stoppage, that he anticipated trouble with some, and he mentioned who they were, one of which was the Branch Storage. And he leads you to believe that Buchalter was interested financially in the Branch Storage to have you men draw the conclusion that Buchalter, although an officer, did not favor his own company—that he did not have the power—that even Mr. Buchalter did not have the power to eliminate his own concern from this stoppage. I have gone over the facts with you as to what happened in the Svirsky place once before, and I shall not repeat it again. But he gives a very interesting side-light which has a bearing upon this case. You see, he wanted to convey the impression to you what a kindly soul he was—he who had the right and the power to place workmen here and there and shift them from one place to another place. And he had a right to anticipate, "Well, you as business agents of this local, couldn't you have placed Rosen some place else yourself?" And so he says, "Yes, I tried—not only I tried but Buchalter tried; we went to dozens of places; we went through the entire industry, because unemployment was not a problem with respect to truck drivers in those days." But what is the matter? Why is it that Rosen is discriminated against? Why is it? Rubin gave you the answer. He said, "If you want me to amplify it—Rosen was considered a chiseler." 10814

Now, gentlemen, don't mistake me, I am not disparaging the victim of a vicious murder. I am merely telling you Rubin's language describing Rosen, for the purpose of convincing you that if Rosen was out of employment it had nothing to do with Buchalter. As a matter of fact, he had all to do with himself, despite Buchalter's efforts wherever he went. Rubin says he was unsuccessful. Was there any reason lest somebody believe Buchalter was the one responsible for him not even having bread in his mouth? Rubin says, at page 1468, that Rosen was a chiseler, and, "If you want me to amplify 10815 it, he would go to a tailor shop and he would take $25. from the tailor and he would promise to get him some work, and he would not get him any work; and he would go to a manufacturer and he would take a suit of clothes and he would promise to pay and he would not pay—just petty larceny stuff—Joe Rosen had that reputation." That was the reason the trucking industry refused to re-employ Rosen. In the name of Heaven, gentlemen, Buchalter was not responsible for that condition, if people in the trade did not want Rosen after all the efforts made in his behalf. This was before Dewey, mind you. Don't let it be urged that this was a matter of appeasement—this was before Dewey. He could not work. Maybe Cooper was right when he said, "Rosen bit the hand that fed him." I don't know. And even after Larry Cooper gave him employment, there was difficulty. Cranes was working—Larry Cooper could not fire Cranes. Cranes had to be looked after. And again Buchalter is called in, and spoke to Mr. Cooper—"If you don't want Rosen, don't take Rosen, but take Cranes. Rosen is going to work." He quits that job of his own accord. That was not Buchalter's doings.

Now we come to the very crux of this case. I will skip things here but I will come back to them later, but in the order of my plan, I say we now come to the crux of this case. That is the statement which Rubin made to Mr. McCarthy. What a document! What truth there is in that statement which is consonant with the evidence here. Bernstein not mentioning Lepke's name once, not even repeating the conversation that others mentioned. And a document given after Rubin was shot, not before—after; according to Mr. Turkus, Lepke is on the loose, that is Mr. Turkus said, or on the "lam", I don't know which—a fugitive from everybody. And when I say "everybody", I mean everybody in Manhattan, because the evidence is positively silent and clear that no one in Brooklyn ever looked for him in this case. Where is that statement made? If you are going to consider whether it is true or not—he admits having made it, but 10820 now he comes with his answer, "It is a lie because I was shot." I am not quoting his exact language. You remember it. The Judge allowed the question to be put in a certain way, and I am giving you the substance of it—"It is a lie because I was shot." I took it that Rubin believed, when he was shot, that Buchalter was responsible for his plight. He said he rolled in the gutter with a bullet, or something like that. He was vicious; he was vengeful; he had already testified against Buchalter, and he says to you that is the reason he was shot. His testimony was irrevocable before the Grand Jury. His 10821 own lawyer, Maguire, took him to Dewey, not to Brooklyn. He took him there and he gave his testimony under oath. And he was under police protection—he was at the hospital—he was shot. I can just imagine how he hated Buchalter, and he was right in hating him if it were true. He would lie then—surely, he would, but not in favor of Buchalter. He would lie his head off against Buchalter. He would tell every contemptible lie he could possibly think of to pour forth his hatred and vengeance against a man whom he supposedly thought was responsible for his plight. He would not lie in favor of Buchalter —He was afraid—afraid of what? If he was afraid that Buchalter would personally shoot him, he had a bad guess, because there were racketeers then, but he does not implicate—he does not try to infer, rather, that he would do it personally—he would do it through his agents, because he had a gang. It is so easy to get rid of a man who would involve Buchalter in the Rosen 10823 case—Berger, number one; Tannenbaum, number two—two gunmen off the streets, actually where they belonged, might poison his supper—with them out of the way I have something on them. Oh, no, because they were no part or parcel of this case. He had nothing on Berger then, he had nothing on Tannenbaum then. Only when he found he had them in the groove, then he suggested to turn voices into the perjury you heard on this witness stand. Why, he saw Berger in 1938—he saw him in the street—he was protected by police—he tells us the police would stand aside

10824 while he talks to Berger. The evidence is replete with proof that this same Berger attempted to induce Rubin to give false testimony against a Dewey assistant, and to threaten him with violence if he failed to do so. Berger was arrested for that and was in the "can". That was the time then to look him up for the Rosen case. He did not do it because that charge then was insignificant—it was a misdemeanor—and he could not put sufficient pressure upon Mr. Berger then: so he waits until Berger is in a pretty sad plight himself—in 1941—and then he implicates him. Nobody else does. He saw Tannenbaum in the Federal Grand Jury in Manhattan when he, Mr. Rubin, was under policy guard, and Tannenbaum was a witness there alone and unattended. Well, Mr. Tannenbaum is grabbed and thrown into jail. And with a little bit of luck he is out of the way—my person becomes more safe. He was afraid, was he? Let us see? Did he have confidence in the people who were in that room? You remember who they were—Dewey's officer. He said he had great faith in him after he met him, though not before. He did not even have 10826 faith in Dewey before he met him, because he said, "How could you have faith in a man before you meet him?" He would not have faith in him until there was a personal introduction and he personally saw and supervised his work —then he had faith in Dewey, but not before. It was Frank Hogan, then, who joined the assemblage. He was liked so much that everybody wanted him as District Attorney, and he had no opposition. That was the same Hogan, the same Hogan in whom Rubin had such faith, the same Hogan to whom he was taken by Mr. Maguire when he testified against Lepke. Then there was 10827 a policeman by the name of Giordano, a member of the Police Department, unattached to the District Attorney—a member of the Homicide Squad; there was a stenographer there, and there was testimony against Lepke there and there was testimony against Lepke in the flour case, because the other cases had already been in. He was under guard. He was not under physical restraint. And then Brother McCarthy—the same McCarthy who put such a scare into Mr. Buchalter, or Lepke, or whatever you want to call him, that he said, "This McCarthy is going around, he is going to make a big collar, he is going to catch big fish, get out of town." The same McCarthy, the same McCarthy who begs him—offers him immunity; the same McCarthy who is faced with the situation that Mr. Turkus revealed in his opening. There was no clue—there were no fingerprints—there were no witnesses— What can I do? But maybe you, Rubin, you can tell me, you can help me. We want to 10829 solve this case. The same McCarthy who frightened Buchalter to the point where later he claims —and I don't say it is true—that, "McCarthy is going to be pushed out of the case—" I suppose because of some innuendo against him—"but McCarthy is going to be pushed out of the case." I don't know who could do the pushing.

Well, I don't want to say anything more about that. But I tell you that Rubin was under all the atmosphere in the world wherein he could, if he had any truth to tell, have told the truth. And he did tell the truth because he had confidence in everyone. Now, let us see. If, out 10830 of fear of Lepke, or Buchalter, McCarthy was lied to by Rubin, I take it he had so much faith and regard and respect for Hogan, that as soon as McCarthy left he would have said to Hogan, "You don't think I am going to tell him." Possibly, and this is an inference, gentlemen—it is a logical inference that I draw from this—you can accept it—you may draw the same inference and you may not—he would have said something to the eminent Mr. Hogan out of his own self-respect, like, "I am afraid of Lepke. That is why I told this fellow a lot of lies."

Well, if that was so, you would have had the great pleasure of seeing Mr. Hogan here. I take it, it did not happen. Let us go into the statement to decide then whether or not he had the opportunity to tell the truth. As the Court commented, after seeing the statement, "The witness failed—" in the statement I am speaking of—"in any way to implicate Lepke; on the other hand, he went out of his way to give assurance that if he could, he would." That is the Court's interpretation of the contents of 10832 that statement to McCarthy in the presence of Mr. Hogan and a stenographer.

Gentlemen, is there any reason for doubt? If there is no other reason for doubt, and I say there is, here it is— Vengeful, spiteful, hateful, Rubin, he goes out of his way to say, "If I could, I would." But he did not. Afraid of Lepke? He already had every reason in the world to be afraid of him, if what he had in mind was being afraid of the false testimony in Brooklyn and of afraid of the testimony in Manhattan. He, under guard, afraid of him? If he was afraid of him, he would have been in 10833 a hotel—he would have made known his position —he would have made known his fear, he would have made known his thoughts, he would have told Hogan, or someone in Mr. Dewey's office. But, no, he does not. He never made any attempt to go across the Bridge in the custody of guards and walk into the office of the District Attorney himself. Oh, no, he does not. Let us see what McCarthy was there for. He says, "You know you were at the store of Rosen. We don't want to prosecute you. The fact you were at Rosen's store is already known to the Grand Jury. Even if you are involved, we are not going to prosecute you." In other words, McCarthy, uncertain then whether Rubin was involved or not, says, "It is not you—" by implication he says—"we don't want you. You are just Rubin, the small fry. We want the man responsible for this, the man behind this, the Lepkes, the Gurrahs, and nobody else." That is what Mr. McCarthy infers to Rubin.

10835 "We don't want you. We will give you immunity." He rejects it—he rejects it. Then, as to the store— "I was only over to the store once, and that was on the invitation of Louis Feinberg." Well, that is what he testified to here, so that is not a lie to McCarthy, is it? That is the truth. He was in the store once. He said so to McCarthy in 1937 and he said so here. The evidence bears him out. And so, you see, the first statement is not a lie to McCarthy. He said, "I went to see Joseph Rosen once, a little girl came in and out." That is the truth, isn't it? That is his testimony here.

10833 He had a talk with Rosen for about three-quarters of an hour. That is the truth—he did not lie to McCarthy, did he, that Rosen complained about business? Isn't that the truth? Everybody says so, that he complained about his candy store business. And Rubin said that he said to Rosen, "You had no right to quit the job without letting me know." That is true, isn't it, gentlemen? Isn't that the testimony? That is not a lie to McCarthy. And McCarthy said, "Quit what job?" And Rubin said he was working for Larry Cooper. That is the truth, isn't it? There is no lie to McCarthy there. He was working for Larry Cooper. McCarthy said—you see, there being two Coopers— "You mean that is the fellow from New Jersey?"—meaning Cooper from the Garfield, I take it—and Rubin said, "No, that is not the Cooper. This Cooper has a brother in the Homicide Squad. That is a Brooklyn Cooper." That was true, wasn't it? So, he did not lie to McCarthy, did he? Rosen had jumped off this job without letting anybody know—he quit 10838 of his own accord. That was the truth—he did not lie to McCarthy. Rubin said to McCarthy that Rosen told him he had heart trouble and that was why he left the job. That is what the testimony here is. So, you see, he did not lie to McCarthy. And Rosen said, "I want to go in another business." That was the truth, wasn't it? That was not lying to McCarthy. Rubin told McCarthy he was a business agent for Local 240. That was not a lie, was it? That was the truth. And he said he did not see Rosen from the day when he saw him with Feinberg until he read he was shot. Isn't that the truth, 10839 gentlemen? There is no lying to McCarthy there. McCarthy said to him, "Didn't you leave town?" And Rubin said to him, "Yes, some time in November," and then he volunteered himself, "But not on account of that." That was the truth, gentlemen, wasn't it?

I am struggling in this case to prove to you that he had no reason to flee from Brooklyn, but he did have lots of reasons to flee from Dewey in Manhattan, because there he was a participant in extortion. So that is the truth. And I will show you how that is the truth, that he fled not from Brooklyn but from New York. Then he said to McCarthy, "Yes, but not on account of that." That is something he volunteered. It speaks eloquently, gentlemen, in favor of the defendant. McCarthy said to him, "Did you know Lepke and Gurrah?", and he said, "Yes, very well." Well, that is the truth, isn't it? I am going sentence by sentence. He did not lie to McCarthy, did he? He denies he told Rosen 10841 to leave town, or that he gave him any money to go away with, except fives or tens. That is exactly what I have been trying to prove throughout. Why should Rosen be sent away? What for? What could he do? What could he say? What harm did Buchalter do? What penalty could he suffer? And he denies he told Rosen to leave town. Then he was asked, "Don't you know anything about the Rosen murder at all?", and he said, "No." Now, he wants you to believe that sentence is a lie. Of course, he did not know about the Rosen murder, 10842 because, listen to this, gentlemen, listen to what McCarthy offered him—"I am giving you immunity." Rubin said, "I don't need immunity. I was never taken into anybody's business or confidence, rather, on any murder case—that was always one thing." That is the truth. That is the truth, gentlemen. He doesn't know anything about the Rosen murder; he doesn't want immunity, because he doesn't need immunity. He said himself he did nothing in the Rosen store; he did not threaten or intimidate; he did not do anything for which he had to worry about, or pay the penalty for. And his explanation of why did you say so much, he said, "I was afraid some District Attorney may frame me." Now he has the District Attorney framing him. He said, "District Attorney, District Attorney, District Attorney," they were framing me. Gentlemen, District Attorneys framing Rubin? You know in a desperate situation here I would not dare charge that anybody from the District Attorney's office would try to frame my client. And the District Attorney would "frame" Rubin! Then McCarthy said to him, "Tell me, is there anything else you want to say?" That 10844 gave him carte blanche to say anything. You know there is a stenographer there, there is Mr. Hogan there, there is a policeman there, a perfect record is being made. "Tell me, is there anything else?" Here is Rubin, who had every motive in the world then to get every witness in the case off the street, the Tannenbaums, the Bergers, if they were part of this case, and he says, "All you got to do with me is pray for a break—it will come—and if I can be of any help, and if you find that my story deviates one bit from what I told you, you can do what you want." He challenges the District Attorney, 10845

"If I deviate one single moment from the truth, you can do what you want, and you will find in the long run we will get many of them." Well, now, Lepke, he knew him, but I don't care what "them" means, it does not mean Buchalter and it does not mean Lepke. He would have said so, this vengeful, hateful, spiteful person, when he was in the presence of his best friend, Hogan, and he passes the remark and says, "You will see more of the cop in me today then any cop in the department." You see, he had been shot, he is with the law now—he is apparently imagining himself that some assurance will be given him that he will not be prosecuted, and he says, "You will find a better cop in me than any one on the force." And the Court commented at the conclusion of reading this: "The witness failed in any wise to implicate Lepke; on the other hand he went out of his way to give assurance that if he could, he would."

I say, gentlemen, the case was not broken from 10847 the inside but from the outside. This document establishes the truth of our defense. It is the finest, unsurmountable reason for doubt, sane, reasonable, logical, and flows from the evidence, and in every speech. I don't want any sympathy for this man, but I want justice. I want a fair day in a fair court for him. I do not care what else he did, or where else he is going to be, or what else is going to be done to him. This is my cause. Now, you can see why I say this is my cause. I cannot let this go unchallenged without saying the crux of the case is Rubin here, 10848 when he had every reason and opportunity offered him, saying, "I was afraid of Lepke." He was not afraid of the damage he had done in New York. He was not afraid of his sworn testimony he gave in New York. He was not afraid when he swore positively in the flour case and he said nothing about Tannenbaum and nothing about Berger, on June 5, 1941. That is the Rubin who offers himself as a witness in a murder case.

(At this point, at the request of Mr. Barshay, a recess of five minutes was taken, the Court and the jury remaining in the court room.)

Mr. Barshay (Continuing): Another point, gentlemen, on this Rubin. You remember one occasion about September 11, 1936, his own words were, "I remember that day vividly." That is his adjective, "vividly". In other words, the whole day is brought to his mind. If a man remembers that fact vividly, he ought to remember what he does especially with respect to that portion of the day. This man, whose memory is so vivid that he went to get Berger—I don't want any mistake about it—at the Expressmen's

10850

Association on 17th Street—he, who remembers it vividly, and knows exactly where he went to get Berger, at the Expressmen's Association on 17th Street— You have heard what Berger said. Apparently, he had no business at the Expressmen's Association. He did have business at the Clothing Cutters' Union. You remember Berger saying, "I went to Weinstein's Friday night, the fellows played cards, before I go home, at the Clothing Cutters' Union—" blocks away. Someone is lying. That is what we get, gentlemen, when a man fabricates a story in 1940 when he puts the characters in the cast here and the location there. You cannot crush the truth, no matter who you are.

Do you remember on direct examination Mr. Rubin being led through by Mr. Turkus very skillfully about the vivid recollection of September 11th—"Who was there when you had this so-called talk with Buchalter—description of dictaphones, office help, and all that—who was there?" He did not say a word about Tannenbaum in the direct examination, not a word. I had to draw it out of him on cross examination.

He had hoped to God that it was never brought out, because he was on the spot. He remembers that so vividly, such an important conversation, the inception of a proposed murder which was to take place, where he is simply to participate, willingly or unwillingly, knowingly or unknowingly, he forgets about Tannenbaum altogether in the direct examination. Remember, here he said he was fleeing from the Rosen case. Oh, what a job I had with him. I guess you needed
10854 a chance to be cute, I cornered him through a prior sworn contradictory statement, when I quoted from the flour record, "Then the lawyer asked you, and I believe you testified that that was to avoid being questioned by Mr. Dewey, or his staff," referring about his, Rubin's flight, and he said, "That is right." And then later on in the same record he changed and said that Lepke told him to go away. "Did you testify here that he told you to go away on account of the Dewey investigation? A. That is right." So, you see, we have a little luck. In some places he is anchored, but when you get him anchored finally, he has got to say, "That is right."

In Washington, in March of 1937, which is the last day he saw Buchalter in the hotel, in the bathroom, Buchalter said to him then, he claims, "If you get into any trouble in New York, don't come to me." At that time the evidence is clear that not a soul in the world from Brooklyn was looking for Rubin—that is his own testimony. He is at his home when he comes in—he is at the office when he comes in—in no place is there 10856 word left for him that anybody from Brooklyn is looking for him. Why flee? Why flee when your existence is not even known?

New York—there is no explanation that it meant New York State or the New York metropolitan area. It meant, "New York", the very place where Mr. Rubin was committing his crime. I did not impute to him any wrongdoing in the Rosen case, but his own conscience was bothering him and he did not like the way I was questioning him, and he laughed at me and he said, "Maybe your conscience is bothering you—" 10857 when my whole proof in the case is he did not know anything about the Rosen case. Why should I try to implicate him when I know that a statement is in existence exonerating him? But I did not know his own mind bothered him. He fled from New York—he fled from Dewey—he fled from Manhattan—the only place in the world he had reason to flee from. And all of a sudden I said to him, "Did you ever tell anyone that you were fleeing from Brooklyn?" He said, "No." Because Berger was trapped, he said that Rubin told him that the D.A.'s office in Brooklyn and the Police Department were looking for him. And the Judge said to him, "Was the Rosen case mentioned specifically," and Berger fell into the trap—I don't say intentionally—and he said, "Yes, the Rosen case was mentioned by Rubin or Buchalter, or both—" to Berger. What a lie! They were not looking for him, and when finally the Police Department did come to his home it was a Dewey man—a Dewey man—not anyone from Brooklyn, not 10859 because they wanted to spare him, not because he was a favorite citizen—oh, no. They were looking for anyone and everyone in the solution of this case through a force other than fingerprints or clues. But he did not figure in the case, and that is why I say his statement to McCarthy is true—that they did not let him in on anything—"I don't know anything about the Rosen case. I fled, but not from that case." And the best proof of all is that when he finally surrenders, he, who now claims he fled from the Rosen case—when he finally surrenders through his own lawyer, to whom does he surrender? He surrenders 10860 to Dewey's office—the only office that is looking for him—the only office from which he fled.

I know it is desperate; I know the attempt will be made to show you that inducement of flight is evidence of consciousness of guilt. The Court will have something to say about that, and, if there is any doubt in your minds, gentlemen, from where he fled, you must resolve that doubt in favor of the defendant. You were told that when you were chosen. When the proof of any fact is at issue, you can interpret it in two ways. But I will let the Court tell you about that, but I say to you, gentlemen, you have to apply that rule here because he fled from the only place where he himself committed a crime and he surrendered to the only place where he himself committed a crime; and so the evidence of inducement of flight is hardly believable.

Another thing about Mr. Rubin, he wants to add, on and on and on—six feet deep is not enough for him. There is a lot of evidence or testimony in the flour case that I want to make reference to. He said that when he left Maguire's office—in the hallway, mind you—after 10862 he left Maguire's hallway—he would have you believe that Buchalter would say: "I did not want to tell you this in front of Maguire, but you have nothing to worry about. The case in Brooklyn is to be thrown out of the window." What case? What case is to be thrown out of the window? What window—what case? Mr. Turkus himself told you there was no clue, no identification, no witnesses. What case was to be thrown out of the window? What window could it be thrown out of? The Grand Jury was investigating the matter—the likes of Rubin and the lack of corroboration—or the truth, which- 10863 ever way you may term it, of the Rosen family. What could they proceed on? The case is going to be thrown out of the window! Then he gives McCarthy another boost—McCarthy is not going to take care of it any more. In other words, Jacobs is going to be put in, and Jacobs is going to be "pushed". And somewhere else, in another building, the case will die. Well, you are speaking of a big man when you are speaking of Ralph Jacobs, the second assistant in the office. There was only one man above him. No Rubin will dare to attack the integrity of that man—not if I have a mouth, or the strength, or an ounce of strength in me. That is Rubin, gentlemen. But in the flour case, the same conversation in the same hallway, the same hallway, the same building, here is what he said—at page 967—"Buchalter," said he, "told me—he told me I have nothing to worry about, everything would be O.K., and I should trust him." He was asked further, "Anything else that you can remember?", and he said, "That is all." That 10865 is the time, I believe, he made the explanation that if something was asked about the Rosen case the lawyer for Buchalter would move for a mistrial. He knows what the lawyer would do! Maybe he would, maybe he would not. But the point is, "That is all I can remember—that is all." Now, that he wants to make "flight" a part of this case and dig a little deeper against Buchalter, he gives us an amplified, confounded, lying statement. But even if he said what Rubin claims he said, "Brooklyn is O.K.," why did he run away from Brooklyn if he believed Lepke? I say that there you have him. You have him

The District Attorney will answer me in a lot of things I say, but it will be his interpretation, his personal interpretation, and not out of the evidence. Is there a reasonable doubt, gentlemen? I shall take but a minute with the testimony of Mr. Maguire, the lawyer. Do you expect a lawyer to advise a fellow to flee? Do you remember the statement, "If there are no witnesses, there are no investigations"? Well, how about Sylvia Rosen? She is here, isn't she, a witness? Nobody asked her to leave; there is no evidence of that; she is a witness at the very inception of this whole scheme. There was no effort made to get her out of town—no effort to buy her off—no effort to intimidate or threaten her. "No witnesses, no investigation!" 10868

Finally, they stretch the word "investigation" in a manner that would lead you to believe that perhaps Rubin fled from two investigations. Well, that is stretching it quite a bit. You see, Dewey was beginning lots of investigations—the flour, in which he was connected; crimes in which he was connected; and this, in which he was connected. They were under lots of investigations. Rubin was involved definitely in the flour case—that is out of his own mouth. Maguire said, when Buchalter was up there—and he never saw him before— Buchalter was up there, and when Rosen was not even mentioned in the con- 10869 versation between Rubin and Maguire, there was not a word about it. He said the Rosen case may have been talked of in passing, evidently a remark like, "I read in the paper something about the Rosen case. He was formerly a member of the union—" something which you might read would be passed upon by men in the same trade. But a lawyer like Mr. Maguire, I don't think he came hereto lie—by no means—not by a long shot, do I impute the integrity of any witness like that. But we had him in court because, in the flour case, he gave testimony. You see, he knew of the Dewey investigation. Where his office was, that is where the business was, but with the Rosen case he said he only assumed —"only assumed", that is his language. "Q. Well, then, Mr. Maguire," this is in the flour case, "you don't know what investigations were pending, do you, Mr. Maguire?", and his answer is, as plain as day, "I know that the Dewey investigation was pending then." But not a word like "Rosen" in the answer—not a word 10871 like "Rosen" in the answer. The next question put to him was: "How about the investigation in Brooklyn, in connection with the Rosen shooting?", and the Court made this comment, addressing Mr. Kleinman, who was the lawyer then for Buchalter, "He just said he did not know." Of course, he did not. You see, the Rosen investigation was all over the newspapers. It just happened that Dewey was hammering away, getting closer, and closer and closer, and snatching these men in the net, and Rubin was there with him and could be used against them, and he bought his freedom by turning State's evidence.

10872 We are not concerned with that case.

Now, we have the actor, Paul Berger. He is a fine gentleman, Berger, the cutter. Well, he was a cutter—he was not only a cloth cutter, he was a face cutter—one of the best. When he boasted of his cutting ability, I don't know what he was passing out—whether face cutting or clothing cutting, but he sure was a cutter, and he knew the gangsters, and the guerrillas, and the strong-arm men long before Buchalter appeared on the scene, long before he was with the union, since 1917. He acted as a strong-arm man—he was in the International strike in 1925

—he was on the trolley car with six others when they cut Mr. Johnson in the Borough of Brooklyn. They went to his home, they followed him—he should not go to his place because he did not go out on strike. That is a year or two years, at least, before he said he knew Buchalter. He was the slugger. There was no corruption of Berger by the defendant Buchalter. I take it he is a whole lot older than him. He had a varied career, all right. I asked him about the assaults and beatings and sluggings, and he said, 10874
"If it is in the book, it is there, don't go uptown, downtown, if it is there." He took possession of this court—this 1941 witness—who never hid, or concealed himself, or disguised himself, or used any alias while living here. The only alias he used was when arrested. And even after Buchalter was convicted he was around, even after Mr. Rubin saw Mr. O'Dwyer and Mr. McDermott and Mr. Turkus he was around. Why didn't they pick him up, such a vital and important witness in the case? Did Rubin lose his memory? Oh, no. Again I repeat—afterwards he learned that Berger was the fingerman, and 10875 he said, "He is, is he? Well, I am surprised." Then Berger, who asserted his constitutional rights and waived them and re-asserted them—this same Berger, who never was in trouble, he sent to the union—always the union—for money, for compensation for the lawyers, when he is arrested in this case. He sends for the union. Well, let the union be responsible for him. He did not send for Buchalter. There is no obligation on the part of Buchalter to him. His friend is the union. Damn the union—what do we care for the union? Let them answer—let the Weinsteins and the Katzs, and all the other officers of the union answer for that. You are not going to make him the goat for the union—not in a court of justice, anyway.

So this Mr. Berger casts a slur upon his Jewish people. A fine defender of the Jewish people is Berger. There he is around—nobody picks him up—Berger, the man who holds an interest in a firm which has a Government contract, drawing $150. a week. I dare say that has a bearing 10877 in this case when you have the likes of him drawing $150. a week, living in a hotel—Berger—driving a car at the hotel. Again, I say, it is not my business how the District Attorney treats witnesses, but are you going to allow a murderer to be at the wheel of an automobile driving through the city streets with detectives in his car—detectives, honest, fine detectives, subject to the whim of a man like Berger? Well, maybe that has induced him to give false testimony. You may say to yourselves, "Why does Berger implicate himself?" What has he got to lose, gentlemen? He is smart—his lawyer sat in the 10878 box—his lawyer was always in the box—when he was arrested by Dewey away back in 1937, he was in the box then. Sending to Weinstein for money. He got immunity. You cannot touch him any more. He is free—as free as anyone from this charge. He would not sign any waiver of immunity—not Berger, with his lawyer in the box. There is no worry that he will be responsible for the assault with intent to kill upon Rubin, on the second attack. Do you think he is going in the Grand Jury, waiving immunity and subjecting himself to prosecution? Not Berger, gentlemen. He seeks nothing—he just lives at the hotel, drawing $150. a week. As for income tax, you and I pay it, but not him. This alien, who thinks he is a citizen! Well, I guess if you are on the District Attorney's side, you can do lots of things, from the mere drawing of $150., getting yourself immunity, asserting your constitutional rights, and I gather he will be there on the witness stand before Dewey and he will have immunity before he utters a word of testimony.

Of course, they begin to agree on this. This 10880
Berger, who had the audacity to say to Judge Talley, "You are ridiculous." To such a fine man, a man of such high integrity as Judge Talley, who has to stand there and take the "advice" of a Berger. "Ridiculous," he said to him. Upon that testimony, gentlemen, you are asked to believe the defendant to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Well, he definitely says that he was with Weinstein of the Cutters' Union, he was not at the Expressmen's Association. But that man even wants to volunteer more than is asked of him. Not again do we get a bit of truth. The Judge asked him, "Did 10881 Rubin ever say they were looking for him because of the Rosen case, specifically using the name Rosen?", and the witness, "He did." He did. Well, gentlemen, there are all kinds of truths from all kinds of people—there are all kinds of standards, but we trust to your intellect and to your honesty, we trust that you will keep your promise that you owe no duty to the District Attorney, no duty to the defendant, no duty to anybody, except to render a verdict that reflects the truth. Truth spouting forth from the character of a witness I have just described?

Rubin, who knows that Berger participated in this September 5, 1936, discussion with him in the presence of cops? Was that the truth? Berger, who says on the stand, when he is asked, "Did you pay the $200. to Rubin?"— "What proof have I—what proof has he got that I owe it to him?" That is the kind of a fellow Berger is, Berger who induces this very Rubin to say that the Dewey assistant made him swear falsely in a case where he was a defendant! Truth!

10883 I ask you to consider whether or not that sort of testimony is polluted. You said you would, and I have faith that you will. I think those are reasons for doubt.

And now we have the final character in this drama, created, written, produced, prepared by the Marxian, Rubin—Tannenbaum—Mr. Tannenbaum—the little Caesar. Never have I seen in a court room, and I spent twelve years in this very court room prosecuting cases, a little Caesar. Where do these men get their clothes? How well dressed they are? How well groomed and well 10884 mannered, how soft spoken? Where has all this training come from? Where do they acquire these manners? At the Half Moon Hotel? "Yes, sir," "Yes, sir," "No, sir," "No, sir," cavorting around places like the hotel? What is this business? Who do you think they are fooling—these murderers? Who? Where do they get these newly acquired clothes, manners and speech? In the street, if they passed you and tackled you, they would leave you half dead before they stopped. Little Caesar—Mr. Tannenbaum—the 1940 vintage. He sees Rubin in the Grand Jury, outside—"Hello, Max." "Hello, Allie." The fellow who was in the room when he heard the murder being plotted, but says nothing. But when Rubin hears that Tannenbaum is up in Sullivan County awaiting a murder charge, and when Rubin feels that the back seat of Tannenbaum is being readied for the electric current—Allie, he says, is an associate of Lepke, and I will get him—he will talk as I tell him now that he has turned State's evidence. Who is this Tannenbaum—a Brownsville guerrilla, used before he knew the defendant Buchalter—used before. Yes, he knew the Shapiro brothers—he 10886 knew about the gang, as to who was to predominate in the Brownsville section—Abe Reles or the Shapiros. "But he had no part in it!" Not he—he was an honest, clean, working boy, helping his father in the hotel up in Loch Sheldrake Country Club. No less—the Loch Sheldrake Country Club. And long before the defendant comes up there, a lot of gentlemen are there, so-called "guests", in the Loch Sheldrake Country Club—gentlemen who take a seashore dip in the afternoon and summer at the Loch Sheldrake Country Club. It was a burial ground for Mr. 10887 Tannenbaum's victims. That is all it was. It is not a "country club"—it is a large unlicensed cemetery. And that is from his own mouth.

He is arrested after he comes from Florida, he getting his $100. while the defendant, whom he claims was sending it to him, is already in prison. Rubin has already spilled his guts to the District Attorney, McCarthy, and this fellow sending money. Well, he is around all the time and he is arrested by the Dewey office, and you know the procedure they go through. He is questioned and questioned; he is asserting his constitutional rights. Sure, he has rights, too—the likes of him are entitled to constitutional rights—I must say that. But why, we want to know, was he ever questioned and given a chance to assert his constitutional rights with respect to the Rosen case? I don't care about any other case. But, oh, no, not one word, not one word was put to him in March of 1940, or in April of 1940, or in the early part of May, 1940, long after Rubin had already made his statement—not one word was put to him about the Rosen case until the sec-10889 ond Sunday in May, after he pleaded not guilty and signed an affidavit. "Who, me?" "I am not a murderer—I don't know nothing about murders—not me—I am innocent. I can prove it." I will talk about that in a minute or two. This Mr. Little Caesar Tannenbaum takes active participation in this trial. "I take orders from the mob," or something like that. Well, but there is a way of looking up things, gentlemen, in the public records, and to confront those gentlemen who took the stand who want to try to blame everything on Buchalter. "He is in the hoose-10890 gow anyway, let's give it to him."

Now, let's see about him. There is a little matter that he attended to on his own, with a gun, on his own, when he took a man whom he knew as Alfred Eisenberg and with a loaded gun robbed him. He admitted it here. But, apparently, the victim did not want to be a further victim, and so there was no jail for Mr. Tannenbaum. You cannot charge it to him. Well, now, the Shapiros—maybe he learned it from them. I don't know. This same Mr. Tannenbaum, who goes up to a summer resort and works for his father during the summer, and he says again and again that the guerrillas came up there and spent a lot of money, and he is attracted by it. Nobody made him—nobody put a gun to his back and said, "Come on, work for us." He said, "Big Greeny gave him a job in New York." He was snatched, kidnapped, and forced and compelled to work for them, but he did not want to do an honest day's work. He had already felt the feeling of the "rod" in his pocket, and how easy it was to take a gun, put it in his pocket, and put it up against a man and take his money. 10892

Now, he is taking something like $35. a week. He admitted a hundred sluggings he participated in, and never went to jail; one hundred stench bombs he threw and never went to jail. And the odor of the stench bombs have left his testimony unworthy of belief. This is the 1940 Tannenbaum. What a model? Then all of a sudden, all of a sudden, we have Tannenbaum in 1940 accidently dropping in, by the purest accident, on September 11, 1936, and overhearing a talk between Rubin and Buchalter. I don't know where he was before—we don't know where he 10893 was after—we don't know what he did the morning or the night of the day before the day, or where he got the word, but accidentally he dropped in just as the proper moment to overhear this talk. Rubin saw him there, if it is true that Rubin was there, and spoke about that talk—away back in 1937, you would have remembered it away back in 1940, in the early part of the investigation. But, oh, no, you see, Tannenbaum is not ready for this cast until he admitted six murders on his own account. What a memory he has? Gentlemen, try to think back, any one of you, to some business deal you have had away back in 1936 or 1937, and see whether or not you can remember any of the details as this man Tannenbaum remembers, although everything else in his mind is blank. We will show you what a fine memory this Tannenbaum had. He hears the name of Rosen, he hears the name of Dewey, then he nonchalantly walks out. He knows the "bulls" are around watching Lepke, but he doesn't care, he walks out, he does not make any 10895 effort to conceal himself, or hide, or sneak away —he walks out; and then he reads in the newspaper about the murder of Rosen, and he sees the Rosen name and the Dewey name, and he puts two and two together, and he remembers, not just accidentally, but exactly, the time measured to the second, when Mendy Weiss is there, and again to overhear a conversation, he with his dictaphone mind. Well, here is a record that he keeps intact until 1940 when he himself is surrounded with six electric chairs. He has a great memory. Well, if he has such a great 10896 memory, let us see. He said, like Bernstein, that since Judge O'Dwyer took hold of him he would not tell a lie. Mr. Tannenbaum becomes a roving witness—in California he is a witness—in Newark he is a witness—he got himself a little immunity on the side, you know, but he was a witness—not a witness to the Dutch Schultz killing, participation in it, but he is a witness, and a player for Mr. Rubin—he would put him in any spot he wants—he would coach him and he would put him in, and he would remember, even if he has to be refreshed. They say they don't see much of each other at the Half Moon—they just bunk into each other, and say, "Hello, Max," "Hello, Allie," and that is all. A fine situation. If he remembered the testimony in Newark only in June, 1941, when he testified there, and he was asked there about the affidavit, "Did you sign it?", first he said to me, "I was not asked about it." When I showed him the record that he was asked about it, he said, "If it is in the book." All the witnesses know is the one answer in response to Mr. Rosenthal, "If it is in the book, it must be there." Well, it is in the book—irrevocably in 10898 the book. But when he is cornered in that case, he says, "Becker told me it was a bill of particulars, I don't remember signing it, I signed it as a bill of particulars." So he was making a liar out of an ex-Assistant District Attorney, like the gentleman who represented the family at this time and was assigned by the Court to defend him in Sullivan County then. But he remembers 1936. So I had to call Mr. Becker here—not because I believed Mr. Turkus charged anything against Mr. Becker, by no means, but I would not let that schemer leave the stand un- 10899 challenged by Mr. Becker, and I brought him down to take the stand. And I want to thank Mr. Turkus when he said, "No questions." In other words, he himself did not believe in impugning Mr. Becker's integrity in this case before September 11, 1936.

Judge O'Dwyer goes up there and he is questioned in Sullivan County—Mr. Tannenbaum is not asked a word about the Rosen case. So he is not given a chance—so Mr. Turkus said, "Wasn't Saul Price your lawyer—wasn't Saul Price attorney for Farvel Cohen?" And not

10900 even Tannenbaum would lie about that, because if there was no Farvel Cohen in this case, there was no intimation of this case; there was no Saul Price present when the affidavit was drawn, as you heard from the witness stand there. You cannot confuse the issue that subsequently Saul Price was the attorney for Farvel Cohen. We lawyers have a right to accept retainers in cases. There is no other way that I know how to make a living. Mr. Price, Saul Price, at a later time
10901 had the right to represent Farvel Cohen, but he was not the attorney then. You cannot be confused about this—no, sir. There was no Farvel Cohen then; there was no intimation that Saul Price told this fellow to keep his mouth shut. And he signed this affidavit, did he? "I don't know anything about any murder. I did not do any murder. I did not commit any murder." What is an oath to Little Caesar Tannenbaum?

Then he is brought here again to a hotel. Well, do whatever you want, Mr. District Attorney, with your prisoner—that is your concern, it is 10902 not mine. But it is if—if the treatment of the prisoners results in their coming here and rendering false testimony. I wish that I had the announcing ability of Red Barber when he broadcasts baseball games—in Eastchester, Long Island, or wherever it was—it was in Long Island, and there are these unpunished murderers playing a game of baseball. I know what he would have said: "Tannenbaum at bat—batting average six murders—using the stick, lots of experience—he knows how to slug, he knows how to run. Reles, pitching." Can you imagine that? "Reles can shoot the ball at the plate like a bullet—lots of experience." That is what Red Barber would have said. A pleasant thing—handing a murderer a bat to crush the brains of a detective assigned to guard him, because he does not like him. I know you will say to me, "The cops had guns, they would kill him, and he would be dead already." I don't want to criticize my friend in the District Attorney's office for the treatment of these prisoners. Putting a bat in the hands of a six time murderer— 10904 leaving detectives at the mercy of these men right out there, and getting recreation, seeing their wives—like shouting a clarion call to all the youth of Brooklyn, "Murderers and killers seeing the world, playing baseball, and squealing against the big fish." I do not want to criticize that practice, but I do not want my money or your money to go to the maintenance of these creatures, and I do not want such treatment to be conducive to their subsequent falsehoods in this court room. Reasons for doubt? The case is full of them, gentlemen. Now, that is for 10905 Tannenbaum.

With respect to my client, I think that is the major portion of the case. Now, we have our defense—very brief to talk about—but I go into it. Just another reminder.

(At the request of Mr. Barshay a five minute recess was then taken. The court room remains in order, the Judge, counsel and jury remain in their places.)

Mr. Barshay (Continuing): But even I cannot say that you must remember where the burden of proof lies. Even if you do not like a person's defense, it still does not mean that the People have sustained the burden of proof. I am not suggesting to you that you should not like my defense because it is only the question of lacking opportunity and motive, or the lack of both. The burden is still with the prosecution. That is the law. It never shifts. I cannot go into the jury room with you, but you must not forget it. The burden is with the District At-10907 torney to prove beyond a reasonable doubt the guilt of the defendant—that never shifts. We need not explain nor disprove.

So Carl Shapiro was called. What a Roman holiday with Carl Shapiro. But it was not unexpected. Do you think the defense would call Carl Shapiro and not expect Mr. Turkus to conduct an excellent job of cross examination? Don't you think we had sense enough to know that when we called Carl Shapiro, that you gentlemen would know he was Gurrah's brother? We knew that. We knew it was an opportunity 10908 for Mr. Turkus to bring into this case names and associations of the brother's friends and the extensiveness of their business, and the 700 employees and the $275,000 place in Baltimore, and the place in New York. The Raleigh is not on trial. This young man was not even asked if he was ever convicted of a crime. I take it that this very industrious District Attorney knew that he was not—at least one member of the Shapiro family is salvaged, one that should be thankful for the fact that he was able to wake up and disassociate himself from the loafers who ran the factory in Baltimore as part owner.

What has that got to do with the case? What care I how much the Buchalter family drew from this business? What has that got to do with the Rosen killing? Rosen did not enter into the Raleigh situation all through, he had nothing to do with it. But that made atmosphere and prejudice. What did we call Shapiro for? You will get very briefly our purpose in calling Shapiro. There was testimony that the girl, Naomi, was dead, so we made an effort to bring someone who does not say that Tannenbaum 10910 was not there, who does not say he did not know Tannenbaum, who does not say that Rubin was not there, who does not say that Berger was not there. That is why we called him. He did not deny knowing these people. If he denied knowing them, you would have a right to say to yourselves, "He is a contemptible liar, we don't believe him at all," and throw it in the scales of justice and see what it weighs. All he says is, "I did not see them while I was there." And the best proof he was an honest person, no matter how stupid he looked on the stand, was 10911 checks here and checks there, and all that kind of by-play, giving the District Attorney a chance for atmosphere to show riches in comparison with the poverty of Rosen. That has nothing to do with this case. And look at what he says, at page 2629—he says, "I cannot say exactly I spent every minute of my time that day in the office." You see, there was no effort on the part of the defense to have Mr. Carl Shapiro at certain places, watching who comes in and who goes out and then swearing to you, gentlemen of the jury, "I was there from 9:00 o'clock in the morning until 10:00 o'clock at night, I did not see him," drawing the conclusion that he was not there. But we had the right to a reasonable acceptation of the purpose of Shapiro's testimony to be that, in view of the fact there were so many police around watching who and where and why Lepke associated with other people and gangsters—that is all. So he says, "I did not see him—I did not see him." And so much play is made— Don't you know what you came here 10913 for? Of course, he knew what he came for. Lots of the biggest business men take the stand and they cannot enumerate little items. That was made so important by the District Attorney. He knew what he came here for, of course, but that does not mean he knew what questions were to be put to him, in what specific language, in what specific order, whether it be by his own lawyer or by Mr. Turkus. The fact is that he came here simply to say that, "While I was there I did not see him." He did not say, "I did not go out to lunch that day." He did not

Rubin already has proven to you that it was not Tannenbaum who was there—that there was no Berger there—that there was no Weiss there. Well, how are we going to know about 1936, investigating the case. If a man goes to Baltimore, from New York to Baltimore, it is reasonable to say, "Is there something you can refresh your memory by as to being in the place?" And you pick out some checks, not to prove that he stayed there every single part of the day and watched who came in and who went out, no, just as to the fact that he was in New York in the normal course of events, that is all. What a Roman holiday was made of it! Did you save your railroad ticket—did you save your Pullman ticket? Who saves Pullman tickets? Who saves railroad tickets? If he said, "Yes, I did," and he pulled them out, you might say, "Ah, ha, you knew that some day you would have to testify to an alibi." Who saves railroad tickets? Do you keep them? 10916

Now, the law is that it is not our duty to prove that; it is always the burden of the People. I felt sorry for Shapiro. This set-up had nothing whatever to do with this case, except that someone wants to prejudice you in that direction.

Then we called Mr. Sobler. Again, I was not bound to call him. He, an old man, cheating the insurance company out of $12.50 a week. That is what he is doing. He does not want to admit it—but that is not my business. He is cheating the insurance company, so therefore Lepke is guilty of murder. He is hiding behind his wife—she is the front of the business—he is the owner—this old man. Let the insurance company worry about that. There are District Attorneys—let them go to the District Attorney, if there is any violation of the law. We are not here to worry about the insurance company. You see, he was to the lawyer's office before he went to Mr. Turkus, and he went to Mr. Turkus and he signed an affidavit. Still, we used him. 10917

Why? We had a right, Mr. Turkus, to say to Philly Buchalter, to take him to the lawyer's office and have him sign an affidavit. Who am I, not to go? Who are Wegman and Climenko not to go? Who better than the brother would be interested in going out to get witnesses, who? I haven't any detective— I know them, but they would not go if I sent them. You see, there is our staff—there is Mr. Wegman and his associate. What is wrong about it? There he is, 10919 Buchalter, sitting right there, Philly Buchalter. If it was wrong, he would be right in jail—he would be interfering with this trial. We have a right to get witnesses and speak to them and get their statements. We cannot drag them off the sidewalks to come to the lawyer's office. Where should I see a person—where else? If I saw them somewhere else, they would say, "What is the matter with your office?" Either way they get you. Because they do that, you gentlemen will be left with the impression that it is wrong for a lawyer to investigate a case.
10920 It is not wrong for a lawyer to investigate his case. I never undertake any case unless I can make the fullest investigation at my command. The City of New York has trained me well and paid me well to do that, and I do not take matters that are left in my hands unless I investigate cases, no more than a surgeon would when he sterilizes instruments when someone is brought in on the operating table. There is nothing wrong about that.

Now, Mr. Turkus did a pretty good job himself, and rightfully so. What was it the old man testified to after some questions were put to him about Dutch Schultz? "Like me would be associated with Dutch Schultz?" This old man faints, he almost fainted here. The Court said his emotions were so great that they overcame him. Dutch Schultz would pick him to be an associate? He has a brother-in-law, one Richter, but there is no proof he associated with Dutch Schultz, his brother-in-law, in this case. But I would not care if his brother-in-law was Dillinger himself, it has nothing to do with this case, except that it goes before the jury with 10922 the hope that some juror may say, "Ah, the brother-in-law goes with Dutch Schultz, therefore I cannot believe this old man."

We have these documents, drawn long, long before there was a contemplation of any case like the Rosen case. Are they forged documents? They are originals, and there is no doubt about it. And what does he tell you? The story I told you originally—bad business on account the Pennsylvania route didn't pay. Kelly got out. He drew $75. a week and then there was a stoppage, "And Rosen came to me, 10923 he pleaded, he wanted to quit to work for the Garfield." And he said to Rosen, "Well, Louis Cooper will not take you." "I know," Rosen said, "Buchalter is interested in the concern, and he will take you," which happens to be the truth. Is there any question that when Rosen quit this concern there was a demand for back pay, or the commencement of a law suit for the value of the shares or the block of stock that were Rosen's? There was not. But speaking of the paper drawn, in the affidavit drawn in the District Attorney's office, all of a sudden we get stenographers in the District Attorney's office. Up to that time there was no stenographer in the District Attorney's office. "Tannenbaum, did you make a statement?"— No stenographer present. "Magoon, did you make a statement"— No stenographer present. Mrs. Rosen, did you make a statement?"— No stenographer present. I know the answer perfectly, gentlemen, but before I give it to you, I will tell you what happens to all the steno-10925 graphers in the District Attorney's office. They have not been fired. In the budget there still remains stenographers for the District Attorney's office. But, you see, under the law, as his Honor shall tell you, when a person makes a statement in question and answer form, and then he is offered as a witness, the Court has the right to look at that statement and see if there are any prior inconsistent statements. In other words, if Rubin came in and made a statement to the District Attorney's office —you see that done time and time again, because he knows that the law is that if he told a falsehood then, I might be able to show it upon the stand. But they took private notes of just the sum and substance of what those people stated. Pretty clever—pretty clever, I say. Ah, but when there is a defendant's witness that visited the District Attorney's office, up pops a stenographer. Then they get him. Mr. Turkus will say to you, "Sure, there are other cases pending. What do you want, the lawyers in this case to find out by an examination of the statement what the evidence may be in another case?" That is not the answer, gentlemen. The Judge is the only one who looks at the statement, and he gives me only that what I am entitled to, not a word or a syllable more, and you can trust the integrity of the Judge that he would not show me, or Mr. Rosenthal, or Judge Talley, a single syllable of the testimony that has something to do with another case. That is the answer that Mr. Turkus will give you, but that is not the real answer, and I am nobody's fool with respect to experience in that type of work. I could not find out anything about any other case hidden there in the old statement. The Judge said, the sixth line, the seventh line, the eighth line, or the ninth line, you can have that, and nothing else but that which pertains to this case. But this case is on a movable foundation, gentlemen—a three card monte—not clean.

Sobler made his statement, but Sobler's statement is not in question and answer form, so we do not get what was asked or what was answered, or what was given as an explanation—we only know the conclusion and the interpretation of the Assistant District Attorney wh put down the results of a long conversation with Sobler. Now, for example, Mr. Turkus said to Sobler, "Didn't you say that Bluestein took you into the New York and New Jersey?" He said, "I did not say so." He reads in the affidavit—it says, "Sobler or Bluestein took me into the New York and New Jersey." But the old man says, "No, he did not take me in, we organized it together, there was no New York and New Jersey, 10931 we simply organized it together." So, you see, the meaning is the same, but the interpretation of the assistant who gives his conclusions in the form of an affidavit, whether signed on every line with pencil or ink, had nothing to do with the case. The point is, the way to get a statement from a man so a jury can have it, is by question and answer form. That is the way to do it, and that is the way it has been done for years. What does he say? "One was a slavery business, one was a knee-pants business, one was a gentleman's business." One was a slavery

10932 business. Was there a good living after Kelly got out? Well, you see, there is no date as to when they had a good living. Look at the affidavit, or have that testimony read to you. It is pretty clever. Is Bluestein over here, or Kelly over here? There is no proof they are dead. If they had testimony to give contrary to this old man Sobler's, you would have had them here like they had the man from Kansas, Missouri, Oshkosh, or from any place in this world. How powerful the District Attorney's office is—they can snatch people off the streets, from here and there, if they can only prove the defense is lying.

Well, it was quite a paying business, as he said—it certainly did not net any one of them $100. or $75. a week. Nobody forced them out of business after the stoppage. Sobler continued for six month and then they separated—that is the sum and substance. He was only called to show you what we contended throughout—that he was not forced out of anything that he had—he had nothing and was given something better.

Now, gentlemen, when I sit down I shall feel 10934 the most tormented person in this court room. I know I have not done half as good a job as could be done with an interpretation of the evidence here. I will think of a thousand things I should have said that I did not say. But I am only human— I am not a Tannenbaum— I haven't such a memory; I am not a Berger; I am not a Rubin; I have no such faculties. My thoughts are just going out of my mind and out of my mouth to you jurors here. I know there are rules which permit Mr. Turkus to answer me, but I cannot answer him— I cannot because the law does not allow it; not that I could not 10935 offer proof, because there isn't any argument that he can give in this case, based upon this record—and I do not say this braggadocioally—that I could not answer, but there must be an end some place.

Now, you gentlemen are not bound only by the answer of counsel; if there is any reason you can give in answer to the argument by Mr. Turkus, you give it—you do not owe him the duty to be a convicting jury, no more than you owe me a duty to be an acquittal jury. I want you to consider the evidence fairly, fairly as against each defendant separately. I want you to know that myself and associate counsel for Buchalter tried to do a reasonable, good job—a fair, honest job; and I want you to know that, in my judgment, when I told Buchalter not to take the stand, it was my judgment, and you have no right to draw an unfavorable inference because of that.

The burden of proof is on the District Attorney—he has not sustained it, gentlemen, in this 10937 case. Irrespective of who he is, or what he is, he is entitled to his day in court. I have faith and confidence that the verdict which you will render will reflect truth in this case, based upon the evidence as you heard it and upon the law as his Honor shall give it, with respect to Buchalter, and that you shall say, courageously, fearlessly, and honestly. "Not guilty".

The Court: There will be no further summations today, because summations must not be continued to a point of losing the attention of the jury. The jury must be able to listen and digest 10938 arguments, so we will continue tomorrow morning, and at that time, the other summation by the attorney for the defendant Weiss, first.

In the meantime, gentlemen of the jury, please do not discuss the case, let nobody talk to you about it, keep your minds open, and remember, follow all the other admonitions heretofore given.

The jury will first leave.

Now the defendants are remanded.

(Recess was thereupon taken to November 27, 1941, at 10:00 A. M.)

Brooklyn, N. Y., November 27, 1941.

TRIAL RESUMED

(Defendants present; jury not present.)

Court Clerk: Judge Taylor is confined to his room with a heavy cold. On his telephoned instructions, and unless there be objection by counsel, the trial will resume tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. Rosenthal: No objection. 10940

Court Clerk: Hearing no objections, this case stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

(An adjournment was thereupon taken to November 28, 1941, at 10 A. M.)

Brooklyn, N. Y. November 28, 1941.

TRIAL RESUMED 10941

(Mr. Talley, on behalf of the defendant Weiss, summed up as follows:)

Mr. Talley: May it please the Court, Mr. Foreman, and gentlemen of the jury:

This has been a long and difficult trial for everybody concerned, not the least for you gentlemen, who have had to make such sacrifices to carry out your obligations as citizens of this community. Counsel desire to express their thanks to you for the careful, constant attention that you have given to the presentation of the evidence in this case. As my responsibilities come to an end, yours are about to commence, and they are pretty heavy, because you are going to be asked to do an extremely difficult thing. It is a difficult thing for one man to be called out of his ordinary avocation of life to sit in a jury box and pass upon the guilt or innocence of another fellow man. It is so hard to find truth in all this panoply of court-room justice, 10943 Judge on the bench in his robe, counsel, court officers. They are all created for the purpose of ascertaining the truth, that is all. That is all it comes down to. You know Pilate asked that question many hundreds of years ago, "What is truth?" and it has not been answered to this day.

It is a pretty heavy burden to put upon twelve men called from their homes and occupations, to give them the power to say what is the truth and what are the facts pertaining to any particular case, but it is our method of ascertaining the truth, of trying to. It is our method of 10944 trying to live up to our reputation of being, as a nation, and a people, no respecter of persons. We like to feel that it is a tribute to American life to say that every man, no matter how poor, humble, or benighted or corrupt, no matter how high his position or how influential, or how rich he may be, all men are equal before the law; all men are entitled to the same consideration when they come into a court of justice.

That is why the figure of Justice is blindfolded. She is not supposed to see the identity or recognize the identity of the suppliant that comes before her. She holds at even balance the scales of justice, because they must be held at even balance; they must not be weighed down by power or might or influence of the State on the one hand, or by any consideration affecting a defendant in a case on the other. That is why the symbol of Justice means something.

When you were selected on this jury—and it seems a long while ago, doesn't it—there were certain principles of law indicated to you in your examination as talesmen which now become of very serious and significant importance to you, 10946 because you did not deceive counsel who asked you if you would take these considerations of law into the jury room with you, and this is the time for us to check up with you and see that you are going to, in your jury room, after you have heard the argument of counsel and of the District Attorney and the charge of the learned Court, and apply these principles of American law.

You remember you were asked about your understanding of the American doctrine of presumption of innocence. We are coming back to that now at the conclusion of this trial, and the 10947 learned Court—and I hope it is a well Court this morning—the learned Court will charge you at the proper time in this case the significance and importance of the doctrine of the presumption of innocence, and it means, as you will recall, that under our system of justice, in every state of our Union, a defendant charged by the State with the commisson of crime is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is proven, and then, as an extension of that doctrine, his guilt must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, but we will speak first of his presumption of innocence. It means that merely because an indictment is found by a Grand Jury, that the finding of that indictment carries with it no implication that the man or woman is guilty of the crime that is charged in that indictment. It is simply an accusation in writing, and it is the first thing that starts the wheels of justice moving in a criminal case, but it means this: It means that a man does not have to come into an American court and prove 10949 his innocence. Let us get that perfectly clear in our minds. Were you and I charged with crime, we would not have to proclaim our innocence of that crime from the housetop and say, "I am innocent; I am innocent." Remember the great dramatic story of Dreyfus, charged with treason in France, when the chevrons were stripped from his shoulders and the sword broken over a knee in the public courtyard, as they marched him around in disgrace, this captain of the French Army, who screamed at the top of his voice, "I am innocent! I am innocent! I am innocent!"

10950 You do not have to do that in American law. The State says you are guilty of a crime. Here is a paper that gives you the date and details as to the time of the commission of the crime, but we have to prove you are guilty, and the Court must see that you are proven guilty by credible evidence, in an open court-room, before any jury of twelve men will be permitted to find a person, charged in this country with crime, guilty.

See what a tremendous thing that is, tremendous. We are proud of it here in the United States. It is our system of jurisprudence, and it is the result of centuries of experience where free people must be given some power to resist the power, the majesty, the might of the State. That means a ruling power. Whether he be king or emperor or dictator or president or governor of a state, there must be restrictions upon his power over the individual, else we are not free men, and this is one of the things, and it is of tremendous and vital importance when we consider our heavy responsibilities, yours as jurors, mine as counsel, in a case like this.

The Court, as I said, will charge you about the presumption of innocence, but it is going to come to you, I make bold to say to you, in a rather battered condition, rather battered. In this case it has received its body blow—I am not quarreling with anybody about this—from this host of policemen in uniform and out of uniform in the halls and the corridors where you could see them every day and two or three times a day, in the court-room, in the corridors, placed here, placed there, either in uniform or with their badges conspicuously showing. Even yesterday, the force of policemen on the floor above, where you gentlemen were, uniformed policemen. Why? I do not know. These defendants—these defendants, presumed to be innocent, brought into this court-room with handcuffs on them and paraded before you three or four times a day. What is the purpose of that? What do you think?

Now, we must have proof beyond a reasonable doubt. That you will be charged at the proper time. That means that there must not only be proof given in the form of documents or myriads of photographs, but the testimony from witnesses. Before you can find a defendant guilty in our courts of law, you must be satisfied of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Just let that seep into your mind. You will see why I speak of the terrific responsibility that you twelve gentlemen have. If there is any doubt in your mind that a witness is telling the truth, or has told the truth, if there is any doubt in your mind as to whether these defendants did the things that these witnesses have said they did, that doubt must be resolved in favor of these defend-10955 ants. That is what proof beyond a reasonable doubt means. You have got to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt. The law says not any doubt, but beyond a reasonable doubt, the kind of a doubt that a man might have about the ordinary affairs of his business and domestic life, and if you are not convinced beyond that, then your duty under your oaths and obligations is to free these defendants.

There is another important element about which I would like to remind you and that I am sure the Court will charge you—I know he will 10956 if we request it; I think he will even if we don't—and that is that if you believe—this is again our American law—if you believe that any witness has wilfully testified falsely about any material point in the case, you are at liberty to disregard his entire testimony. Now, understand that. His entire testimony may be simply blotted out of your mind and out of your consideration if you are satisfied, after hearing him testify, that he has wilfully lied about any material matter that affects this case. And on that subject, let me, in passing, say this: It is a supposition, I hope not a vain supposition, that honest people or dishonest people—it makes no difference who they are, once the power of the State has been leveled against them and charged them with crime—have a great measure of protection, because we require every person who comes to the witness stand to take an oath that he or she will tell the truth. I wonder if to you men, during the progress of this trial, seeing it administered to so many witnesses, I wonder if it lost its significance. It never has to me, with all the years that I have seen it taken. It is a 10958 terrible solemn thing. We raise our hand up to heaven and we call upon the Divine Creator, Master of all our lives and fortunes, who holds the destinies of each one in the power of His hand to crush like that—we call upon Him to come into this court-room, stand beside the witness chair, and witness that this person is telling the truth. What a solemn thing that is. It is a far cry from this court-room, 1941, to the 17th of September, 1796, but it is not so far in distance from the place where this sentiment was uttered, in Faunce's Tavern, right down here in 10959

Broad Street, Manhattan—you can get there in five minutes from this court-room—when Washington, laying down his duties, his responsibilities as the purest patriot this country ever saw, delivered an address which we are told took two years to prepare, and in which he said this: "Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in the courts of justice?" That was Washington's comment of warning to people he loved so much, in the country for which he had done so much: "Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in the courts of justice?"

Well, I had to shudder when I heard the oaths taken by the witnesses who have been called by the prosecution in this case. It just gave me a creepy feeling, that all the experience I have had in the court-room has never taken away and 10961 never will.

10962 your responsibility, and I don't think it is a fair responsibility to have placed upon the shoulders of any twelve men in this county, that they bring, one after another, these men who confessed that on other occasions, in other court-rooms as solemn as this and on occasions as important, when men were on trial for murder, these men admit that they have committed perjury, that they have lied under oath, that they have called upon the Almighty to witness truth of what they say, and then in the face of His majestic presence, His omnipotent power, they have lied to deceive other jurors. What, in heaven's name, is the assurance that we have here that they are telling the truth here? They perjured themselves in other cases; why not here? Where is the sense of religious obligation that I have quoted to you that should and must accompany an oath in the case of these men who admit six murders—imagine, admit six. If they admit six, how many have they committed? And they told of the different parts they played in them. They fingered this victim; they drove the car for this victim; they threw a body in the 10964 lake in this murder case; they stood as a look-out while in a field up in Sullivan County the body of a murdered man was dropped into a hastily-made grave.

It is a pretty tough thing, I am telling you, gentlemen, for any District Attorney to bring before you, seeking and yearning to get the truth, the testimony of men of that type, and then ask you to believe it. That is what they have asked you to do in this case. And how you can possibly do it is more than I am able to see or will be able to see, because you are supposed to bring 10965 into the jury room, as you are supposed to bring into the jury box, your experience and your common sense in the ordinary affairs of life. You do not hang those on a hat rack with your hat and coat when you become a juryman. You are supposed to see these things in the light of your own experience, your knowledge of men, your knowledge of things. Would you take the word of any of those people who have been called here—any of them—in any ordinary affairs of life? If you had any business transaction with any of them, would you trust them as far as you could see them? You would not. And yet you are asked in this case to believe what they say in this new, regenerate time. What has happened to them? They have all reformed. They have all become white as the driven snow. They were dark as the depths of hell before, but now they are all white.

Little white lies! They told you in their lives, they blushingly admitted that they had told little white lies. They would not lie to save themselves, according to their reformed, purified dis-10967 position now. They ask you to believe that they are telling the truth, and in the back of their low, degenerate cunning minds is that native, primal instinct that even the animals possess, to save themselves. That is the background that looms behind all this wicked testimony that has been given. They want to save themselves, and, up to now, they have been quite successful by their method in doing it, quite successful.

It is against the canons of ethics that govern reputable lawyers to seek clients and solicit busi-10968 ness. We cannot do that. We cannot advertise like Abraham & Straus advertise the Christmas business. We have got to wait for our clients to come to us, and I am going to violate that right here, now, out in public, and take the consequences. I would like one client who would be a taxpayer here in the County of Kings that would retain me—and I offer my services, believe it or not, without compensation if a taxpayer will retain me to break up for all time this menace, terribly dangerous idea, of locking murderers and criminals and crooks and perjurers, not locking them up behind prison doors, where they belong, but by letting them luxuriate in the best hotels that we have in the county, not on prison fare, but dining in their living room, served by waiters, with dainty cups and dishes, not hotels on the riverfront or down on the Bowery, not the Mills Hotels or the lodging houses where humble people go, not at all. These people are put up in the Waldorf of Coney Island, the Half Moon, with an ocean view in summer, and, I suppose, the exposure to the sun in winter; put up in the Bossert Hotel here in Brooklyn, the Towers Hotel. Just imagine it!

I say that no district attorney nor any other official has the right to spend taxpayers' money pampering these criminals in hotels in the city. What is the effect of it? It is not the mere spending of money. This is an extravagant town, extravagant nation. Officials don't care how they spend people's money these days. We used to stagger at millions; now we don't blink an eyelash at billions in appropriations. But here is the menace of that. They are gathered together in one hotel, on the eighth floor; their rooms are adjoining—this is testimony in this case—twenty-four hours a day they are there; 10971 they dine in community; they don't have to sit in the cell with a tin dish. Oh, no. They dine in their living room. Who was it told us that? Tannenbaum. And, of course, they have an opportunity to talk, and they are given a year and a half in this case—more than that,—May, 1940, or thereabouts—to get their heads together and fit in, fit in the various bits of evidence so as to try to make a complete, unassailable story. There is the terrible menace of that kind of incarceration for people who say, "Why, these fellows are in jail, in the Federal House of Detention; they are behind bars twenty-four hours a day; their food is passed in to them through a steel grating. We are here at the Half Moon Hotel. We are taken out for exercise, for entertainment. Our wives are allowed to come to see us,"—eleven o'clock at night, you heard one of them testify, he saw the wife of Reles.—"This is the best side of the fence for us to be on. Let them sweat; let them suffer; let them burn. We are going to live in the best hotels 10973 that Brooklyn can afford. Just for what? Why, for trying to save ourselves and tell the story that the District Attorney's willing ears would like to hear, and we will try and fit in these loose ends together, and while we are playing cards or eating our hotel meals, why we will just check up our various stories and see if they all fit in." There is the menace of this new, 1941, streamlined method of handling crooks and criminals. See the terrible inducement that is offered to these men to lie and perjure themselves. Why, they were not even indicted for the crimes which they admitted to the District 10974 Attorney a year and a half ago they committed, not even indicted. We have seen them here, not even accused of crimes which they admit, and we see them now, fully confident that because of the testimony that they give in this case—and they are quite willing to give it in others—they will soon be walking the streets as free as you or I, while the victims of their perjury are in prison or in their graves.

Now, I was going to discuss the witnesses as soon as possible in the order in which they appeared, but I cannot do that because I don't want to take any longer than this morning's session. I don't want to asphyxiate you men with too much legal oratory. I want to keep your minds clear, but I must point out to you some of the important things that have been said and the more important things that have not been said in the progress of this case. You remember the information that was conveyed to you when this case opened, about the rule that you cannot convict upon the testimony of accomplices, men who themselves participated in the 10976 crime, and that you must have evidence independent of any accomplices' before you can convict a man of crime. That again has a background of centuries of experience. That again is supposed to be a protection that we in America have against the informer, the informer who is trying to gain something for himself, some benefit to himself, the safety of his own skin, by talking against somebody else.

Mrs. Rosen's testimony about the man who came in was so much lighter in weight than the defendant Weiss, that that is out of this case. 10977
The Court has already informed you of that. That might have been regarded, if you believed it, as some measure of corroboration coming from one who is not an accomplice. That is out of the case. There is only one bit of corroboration that will be attempted to be impressed upon you in this case from other than accomplices in the murder, and that comes from this unspeakably horrible looking Tannenbaum, you remember, the man who looked like a death mask the day he appeared—terrible looking—Tannenbaum. So that that question about the man who came into the store the night before and looked around, that is out of the case and you cannot consider it.

Was it to induce that identification, or attempted identification, of the defendant Weiss that Mrs. Rosen, the widow of the man who was killed, was made a guest at the Half Moon Hotel where these other witnesses who were prepared to try and convict Weiss in this killing were located and stationed? Did you ever hear of such a thing, putting up the widow of a mur-

at all. All you had to do was walk past and you could see every cubic inch of that store, as you can today, tonight. A brilliantly lighted street, Sutter Avenue. Ridiculous, the contention that it was necessary for anyone to come around that store to have Rosen pointed out, as they say they had to point Rosen out to Weiss. It is a single-man business, single-man store, a candy store, a hole in the wall, that is about what it is, despite this gorgeous photograph that every day was put on the stage for you gentlemen to look 10982 at as the place of the murder. Just a hole in the wall with one of these open windows where they could serve soda or candy or cigarettes to anybody on the sidewalk without leaving the store. You know the type of men that stand behind the counter, just hand it out through the window, and yet they go through an elaborate story here of people bringing over Weiss to show him Rosen, what he looked like. He could not possibly mistake him by just walking past that stand. He was the only man there in that store. But, however, that is part of their case.

The first witness of the type that you are asked to believe—the others were all preliminary—was Mr. Bernstein. Bernstein—I do not know whether you remember his appearance; it seems almost like ancient history since he opened this case with his testimony—Bernstein is the man who said he stole the car with the aid of one "Muggsy" Cohen and, in order to put his friend "Muggsy" Cohen in as bad as he possibly could, he says "the best automobile and radio thief in the business," like George M. Cohan says every song-and-dance man thinks he is the best song-and-dance man in the world. "Muggsy" Cohen, and Bernstein, who admits having stolen fifty automobiles, and my point is these are not modest gentlemen. If they stole fifty, you can bet your life that the real number would be nearer a hundred and fifty. That beautiful expression of "Blue Jaw" Magoon "stole a hundred or better." A hundred automobiles or better. Realize, a hundred automobiles, probably more than they will have in the 10985 next automobile show. A hundred automobiles would block up this street outside this court house, take them an hour in single file to pass by; give them one minute to go by and only sixty could go by in an hour. A hundred automobiles he stole, or better. Bernstein says that he, with his record of fifty automobiles that he stole, had to go out and engage a gentleman named "Muggsy" Cohen to steal this particular automobile. See the deviltry of it! Did not want to put himself in this murder as an accomplice, stealing a murder car, so he puts it on "Muggsy" Cohen. And he, Bernstein, tells 10986 us he gave his story about this killing to the District Attorney in April or May of 1940, not this year, last year, April or May, before the summer of a year ago. Two summers have passed since he gave himself up to the District Attorney and, of course, with his innate honesty, he must be presumed to have told the District Attorney of this county all the truth about this killing. Well, it seems to me if I was District Attorney and a man told me he would engage another to steal an automobile for use in a murder, I would hustle out and get that man that stole the car and slap him in. Not so "Muggsy"

Cohen. A year ago last May, we must assume—because Mr. Bernstein, according to the District Attorney, is an honorable man—we must assume that he told the District Attorney all the story, but lo and behold you, Mr. "Muggsy" Cohen did not appear upon the scene until you had heard Bernstein testify for at least two days, and then, for some curious reason or other,—surely it could not have been the theatrical effect,—young "Muggsy" was brought in and stood at the foot of the jury box to have his 10988 old friend Bernstein pick him out, as if Bernstein did not know him. Never had been arrested up to that time. Was not arrested then, but he was put into custody in, I think, the Towers Hotel, in custody, a man who had stolen the automobile, taken the radio out of it, turned the car over in the dead of night—one o'clock, Mr. Bernstein said it was, one a. m. He was not brought in here until he could be paraded before you gentlemen as the villian in a Punch and Judy show is brought before children. It was not any more necessary than bringing 10989 an elephant from Barnum's Circus, bringing "Muggsy" Cohen and saying, "Is this 'Muggsy' Cohen?" "That is 'Muggsy' Cohen." I had to call "Muggsy" Cohen, although they had him in the custody of the police officials, and when I did call him and had him sit in that chair, the District Attorney did not dare ask him a word, not a word, about the theft of that car. But there is this much in the evidence in this case that I was able to get out of that episode,—and it is rather disconcerting, and I would like

10990 the District Attorney in his address to you to answer and explain to you, because it is inexplicable to me,—Bernstein told you positively—I am sure you remember; you may remember my insistence in having him answer definitely—that he had not seen "Muggsy" Cohen from the time he gave himself up in May, 1940, until he saw him standing in the court-room when we were then conducting this trial. I hope you remember that testimony. It is very vivid in 10991 my mind. He said, "I have not seen him since I was picked up in May, 1940." Well, I did not have much success under the rulings of the Court, under the objections of the District Attorney, in getting what I wanted in the way of testimony from "Muggsy" Cohen. The Court sustained the objections, I have to say rightfully, because the Court is presumed to know the law, but I could not get it in except to this extent: that "Muggsy" Cohen admitted that he had been in the District Attorney's office in April of 1941; that he had given a statement to the 10992 District Attorney at that time, which was referred to by Mr. Turkus as an affidavit; and "Muggsy" Cohen also testified here that he had been in the District Attorney's office and had seen Mr. Bernstein.

Now, it does not interest me whether "Muggsy" Cohen is telling the truth or whether Bernstein is telling the truth, on general principles, but they both could not be telling the truth, and I say to you that Bernstein and Cohen met in the District Attorney's office in May of this year, and I point to the evidence and record in this case to satisfy you of it. The point is that the District Attorney sat in this court-room, in your presence, and allowed Bernstein to testify under oath that he had not seen Cohen since May, 1940. This was not a matter that he had to take anybody else's testimony about; this was a matter that the District Attorney knew about, because he was there, and I want to know if that is fair dealing with a jury of twelve men, torn with anxiety to get the truth and do the right thing, that I know you want to do, and that kind of testimony is al- 10994 lowed to appear and go by unchallenged. All he had to say is, "Stop, Bernstein. That is not the truth, and you know it is not the truth. You know that you saw him in my office in April, 1941." Oh, no. That was allowed to go by, and that is a pretty serious situation.

Now, of course, the Cohen business was dragged in solely from the distorted idea of Bernstein that he ought to have some corroboration by somebody that was not connected with the crime, as he thought, to back up his story of the stealing of that automobile, and that is why he brought Cohen in. I say it is perfectly 10995 ridiculous that an automobile thief with Bernstein's admitted record, fifty cars or more, should have to engage anybody else, particularly a little crook of the type of "Muggsy" Cohen, to steal this automobile. He did steal fifty others, he said; why couldn't he have stolen this one? You remember his testimony of how carefully he had gone over the route seven or eight times through streets where he had been brought up as a boy. He knew them even better than he knew how to steal automobiles. They had to rehearse this proceeding seven or eight times, in this automobile, over the route in the city. He knew this car was to be used for a murder; he knew that as well as I know that I am now addressing you gentlemen, and yet he was ready to go out and steal the car; he was ready to go out and get the drop; he was ready to sneak in in the middle of the night, with his flashlight, you remember, screwdriver and flashlight, taken out of his car. Wonderful how these fellows 10997 all have automobiles, wonderful. Maybe, if you can steal them as well as they can, it is not so wonderful. They all seem to have automobiles to ride around in, their own or somebody else's. He not only stole the car and got the place to keep it the night before, but he drove the car there and waited outside of Rosen's place for this killing to be done, waited with his engine going, his doors open, so that the murderers could rush back into the car and get away. He says he heard shots fired, saw the men come out, and he drove away. If that is not cold-blooded, premeditated murder, there never was cold-10998 blooded, premeditated murder. This man Bernstein is as guilty of the killing of Rosen, on his own admission, as the man who fired the shot. A look-out who stands outside of a building while his confederates are upstairs burglarizing, the law says, is just as guilty, just as guilty of that crime on the seventh floor of an apartment, as though he was there himself, and if the occupant of that apartment house, on the seventh floor, is killed during the robbery, the man downstairs, the look-out, is equally guilty with the man who does the killing on the seventh floor. That is the law. And yet this admitted accomplice in this murder is the man who was brought here and whose integrity is vouched for by the District Attorney, else he should not have called him.

Now, let us see this Bernstein who would not tell a lie. Why, he admitted being in a hold-up before he ever met Mendy Weiss, before he ever knew him. He admitted a hold-up with a gun, and he was ready to kill a man if he resisted. Remember the horrible story of his walking nonchalantly around Sullivan County and he is accosted and is asked to get into a wagon and 11000 ride with a dead body of a man named Yuran; rode along with this body of the murdered man, along the roads somewhere up around Monticello, Sullivan County. He rode with the body and then went into the field where they buried it, buried it like you would bury a dead dog, while he stood look-out guard. He gets himself as far away from the actual killing as he can, but he is willing to admit that he acted as look-out, a ghoul, a grave digger, a thing that gives the normal man the creeps even to think about it, and while these murderers buried the body 11001 of Yuran, Mr. Bernstein, the District Attorney's witness, stood looking down this road, down that road, to see if anybody was coming to interfere with the ghoulish job of burying this body. Horrible! That is merely one of his adventures.

The important thing for you to determine is, Is this man, despite his murderous propensities, telling the truth here? Let us put an acid test on that. He admits that he perjured himself in this trial in Monticello, in what is known as the Gangi Cohen case, where he denied any participation, in any form, in this particular Rosen killing that you gentlemen are impaneled to listen to. He perjured himself when he said that, that he had no participation and knew nothing about it. That is his sworn testimony in that case. Now, if he perjured himself there, what assurance have we got or have you got that he is not perjuring himself here? It just does not make sense. Why should he lie up there and tell the truth here? He was in the same situation up there as he is here. He was trying to 11003 save himself from participation in or knowledge of that murder, and, gentlemen, he takes an oath to tell the truth and lies to that jury, tries to deceive them. Who is going to stand here and say that he was not lying and trying to deceive you in giving the testimony about this case? Things don't change that quickly. Men do not become suddenly vile and neither do men become suddenly virtuous. If he testified falsely once before, I say you have every reason to believe he is lying falsely here now in this case. What is the reason? See how adroit these fellows think they are. What reason does he give for 11004 the perjury in Monticello? Very ingenious, but how silly. He says he did not want to tell the jury in that case the truth, even though he swore to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, because some of the accused in the Rosen case had not yet been apprehended, had not yet been put under arrest. What business was that of his? Who gave him the right, if it was so, and of course it was not, who gave him the right to determine how much of the truth he would tell and how much he would keep away of the truth from the jury that was listening to that case? A man's life was at stake in that case just as much as three men's lives are at stake here, and yet he goes on and falsely testifies and tries to deceive that jury up there—he has to—so that they will believe him. "Oh, no, I had nothing to do with the Rosen case. I am not that bad. You saw me raise my hand, and you must believe what I said." And when we asked him why he testified falsely there, that is the answer he gave, and bear in mind that he talked to the District Attorney of Sullivan County and 11006 the District Attorney of this county in Sullivan County, in Monticello, before he went on to testify. Now, was he committing perjury?

Let us see another instance of it referred to by Mr. Barshay in his able address to you—and there cannot be any mistake about this perjury. You remember he said he was held incommunicado in his luxurious hotel? It is not a bad hotel, either, the Half Moon—pretty good. His expression was, wherever he got it, "We had no intercourse with the outside world, no communication with the outside world." That is the ex- 11007 pression that stuck in my mind, "outside world." And yet the counsel in this case was able to show you that he had sent out at least six different letters from that hotel, after trying to make you believe that not only was he not allowed to talk with anybody, but he was not allowed to send out any communications; and so apparent was his perjury in this case that even this honorable Court denounced it from the bench, and I ask that he be committed for perjury right here and now, in this court-room, as an example to him and others who are brought here to perjure themselves to save their worthless lives.

Do you need any further assurance about whether to believe Mr. Bernstein in anything he says or not when even that situation was presented to you in this court-room? Are you going to let these people pull the wool over your eyes, these desperate characters and liars and murderers and strong-arm men, stink bomb throwers? Are they going back to their luxuri-11009 ous sitting room in the Half Moon Hotel and laugh their heads off at the way twelve business men of the Borough of Brooklyn are fooled by their story? I don't think so; I don't think so.

Remember, there always comes a place where these perjuries must stop. You remember his story about spending the night in Farvel Cohen's apartment, waiting for the coming of the dawn to do this murder. He said he slept on a rug. Bear in mind he could not describe the apartment, did not know how many rooms there were in it, did not know who else slept on the rugs, ders, as a look-out over the grave of a victim of a murder, it is a great injustice to ask you to believe anything that this man says, and I am convinced that you are not going to. Don't leave your common sense and your judgment outside of this court-room. Here is where we all need it. The people of this city, the people of this county, need your common sense now more than they may ever need it again. Don't be fooled by this kind of testimony from murderers, sluggers, perjurers.

I am going down the line. Since it takes so long to go over one of them, I am so afraid of burdening you by too much talk.

Probably the most horrifying witness of all the witnesses on this point was one who did not implicate the defendant I am representing at all, Weiss, so much so that we did not even cross-examine him, but if ever their was a villian that showed it in every line of his face, it was this smooth, oily, Communistic, Union Square orator, Max Rubin, who could not restrain his vindictiveness and could not restrain his desire—and he was a great actor—David Warfield, about whom I read this morning in the paper, never had anything on Mr. Rubin as an actor—the sudden outburst of anger, his tear-flushed eyes, great, great; this clothing cutter that could not cut a baby's pinafore and yet was going around dictating to decent men in the clothing business what they should do and how they should conduct their business; this cold-blooded, crafty perjurer, Rubin. I hate a crook. I am a lawyer. I am called upon to defend men charged with crime. I prosecuted them. I have defended them. I have judged them, and I hate them, but I think I hate a coward more; and you have this fellow Rubin coming here to tell you that even in the last war, desperately serious war for the nation then as this one is now, that he not only dodged his duty when he was called in the draft, but he ducked, as Mr. Barshay indicated to you, behind a woman's skirts; he hid behind a neglected, abandoned wife, and gave as his reason that he could not go to the war 11015 with all the rest of our sons or brothers that he had to support a wife, and then this woman—and I would like to shake hands with her sometime, this outraged woman—what is it that Shakespeare said? "Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned"—came forward and said, "This man is not entitled to an excuse. This man is not supporting me nor my child," and the Draft Board immediately shot him up from 4-B, or something like that, to 1-A. He was caught then in that lie when he could not have been more than about half the age he is now. Coward!

11016 Then he was drafted along with all the other decent boys that had to go to that last war. Did he then do his duty? Did he feel sorry that he had perjured himself in trying to evade the draft in the first instance? He did not. He ran away. He deserted his country. He deserted his flag. He ran away and hid himself, so that he could not be called on to take his place in the ranks with the hundreds of thousands of other American boys that had to go to that war and many of whom lie there yet in Flanders Fields. Coward! Coward!

We find him a few years later, curiously enough, in Germany for two years, our enemy then as our enemy now, Germany doing some business with Russia, mind you, Russia, with which we were on most unfriendly diplomatic relations at that time. There is the start that this favorite witness of the District Attorney had in his adventure in life—Benedict Arnold—coward and shirker and draft dodger. Oh, if he had ended his vileness and criminality then, that would be bad enough, but, oh, no, he be- 11018 comes a cool, calculating villain that he has shown you, but not villain enough to be barred out of the Bossert Hotel in Brooklyn in March, 1940, and I think he has been there since, March, 1940, or at least that is the time he talked at that place with the District Attorney of this county, and he has been at the Half Moon Hotel too. Did he tell Judge O'Dwyer the truth then about this case and about his record? If so, if he told him what he had done in this case, why wasn't he indicted? The indictment here is available for you to examine. His name is 11019 not on it. Tannenbaum's is not on it Berger's is not on it. Why wasn't he indicted then? Why wasn't he put in jail? Why wasn't he even put before the Grand Jury that found this indictment in May, 1940? That is the curious thing. He was not even called before the Grand Jury. I don't know how this thing works out. Witnesses have been called here to testify that they knew all about this Rosen killing, not put before the Grand Jury until this case was actually on trial before you men, actually on trial, the indictment found, the trial commenced; then they are put before the Grand Jury sitting in the months of October and November, 1941. The indictment had been found by that time. Was it because it was thought expedient to let these men gather in the Half Moon Hotel, fraternize together, play cards, dine together, play baseball, so they could get their stories fixed up before they would be put under oath to tell it? Is that the reason they were not put under oath any place to tell their story until this 11021 trial was in progress, and were they put before the Grand Jury thirty days ago and less so that they could be told, "Now, if you do not tell this story you have told us before, not under oath, we are going to have you for perjury in addition to this other"? I never heard of such proceeding. I don't think anybody else heard very much about that kind. A murder indictment found a year ago and the principal witnesses, upon whose testimony the District Attorney relies to get a conviction, not called before the Grand Jury until the case is almost 11022 coming to a close. I cannot figure that out. Maybe you can.

Now then, the next witness whose testimony I want to revert to is that of Max Berger. You remember Max Berger did not like his name, as though it made any difference what kind of a name a villain like him carried. You remember his calm admission that he had been a slugger and a strong-arm man all his life; and I say a slugger of the type that he meant and was, who calmly admits that he did the slugging in more than a hundred cases, oh, more than a hundred, was a potential murderer every time he struck one of those men who were trying to earn a living at the time he assaulted them. He did not care whether he killed them or not. He did not care whether, when he left them lying in the gutter, they ever arose with a spark of life in them or not. A slugger. Always available, always ready. You saw his violence on the stand. Do you think you would like to believe him about any business affair you had? Would you like him testifying against anybody that was near and dear to you, upon any sub- 11024 ject, in a civil suit or a criminal suit?

How in the name of heaven can any intelligent District Attorney ask twelve men of your type to credit anything these fellows say? You would not do it outside of the jury box, you know you would not, and, gentlemen, you have no right to do that inside the jury box if you would not do it outside the jury box.

Now, this Berger, never arrested, never indicted for anything here, admits—I don't have to argue these things; I am only reminding you of the testimony in this case—admits that he 11025 was what they, in their parlance, call the finger man in this Rosen killing; admits that he pointed out Rosen, he says, to Weiss. I have told you it is incredible that Weiss would need anybody to point Rosen out. All he had to do was go and see the man in the store. He could get his description. One-man store, that is all; no clerks, no bookkeepers, no attendants, no counter man—what shall I say, salesman—just this man in this poor little hole-in-the-wall store, and yet Berger tells you an elaborate story that he pointed Rosen out when he came out to fix his newspapers on the stand in front of his shop; and he knew violence was going to be done; he knew he was going to be murdered, if he were fingering, which he was not, and he tries to let himself down because he thought he was going to be "schlomed", I think the word was, by beating him over the head, a skull fractured, a brain destroyed in its God-like utility forever. That is all he thought, he was not going to be killed. What nonsense! Fifty to a hundred men he said his assaults have been on others.

11027 My question is, if Berger told the District Attorney his part in this case, it made him an accomplice. He was as much the murderer of Rosen as the man who fired the shot, once he admitted that he had pointed him out to people he claimed were the killers or prospective killers of Rosen. If he told his story to Mr. O'Dwyer, as he said he did, isn't it fair and reasonable for you as citizens to expect that the District Attorney of this county would have put that man immediately under arrest and would have caused his indictment as one of the accomplices and, having indicted him and having shown him that

Let me remind you just of this thing: Was he telling the truth, Berger, or was Rubin telling the truth? I hope you distinguish the two of them. I myself get them confused once in a while. Berger was the big, burly, violent fellow who went through the dramtic episode there, banging the Judge's desk. Was he telling the truth or was Rubin telling the truth about the receipt of money by Rubin? You remember Rubin testified that every week he got $50 sent to him; when he was in Salt Lake City, or wherever else he 11030 was, he got the $50 sent to him. Berger testified that he handed that same money to Rubin right here in Brooklyn or Manhattan—very definite and very positive about it—gave it to him when Rubin came back from Salt Lake City, handed it to him; repeatedly said he never sent him any money by cash or check or money order but always handed it to him here in New York; whereas Rubin went right down the line, asserting that every $50 he got was sent to him by somebody in Salt Lake City; so they cannot both be true. One or the other is lying. It simply 11031 indicates that they slipped up on their story in that detail. They had not expected that would come out, but it just shows you their propensity to lie. Take either horn of the dilemma, take either one you like, one of them is lying, and if he lied about that, what is to prevent him from lying about the more important things in this case? The important thing in their case is try to satisfy the District Attorney about the defendant Weiss, for whom I am speaking, in this killing. That is what they wanted to do. That is what they are trying to do. In back of it all looms their intense anxiety to save themselves as well as to keep out of jail since 1941.

Why Berger was not indicted for this crime is pretty difficult to understand. He was allowed to walk around from the time the investigation was started up to the summer of 1941, and I, for the life of me, cannot understand this—this is testimony that The People brought forward now—Rubin, Max Rubin, fleeing to Salt Lake City, being reprimanded for not staying there,
11033 going somewhere else, and coming back again. Here Berger was the finger man in this case. Berger was the man that knew more about the case, according to his own statement, than Rubin did. Why wasn't he the one that was sent away to flee the jurisdiction of Brooklyn or New York? He floated around New York, large as life, with his automobile. No question about his going away. No question about Lepke or Weiss or anybody else sending him out of town. Oh, no. He just sauntered around until the summer of 1940, when Coney Island looked pretty good to him, and he had himself, at the expense of the County
11034 of Kings and the taxpayers thereof, lodged as a guest in the Half Moon Hotel. I don't know why Rubin was the man that had to do the fleeing, while Berger stayed around here in the City of New York with his $150 a week. Pretty good money. I employ some pretty fine lawyers in my office for much less than $150 a week, college graduates, trained men. Berger, getting $150 a week!

I don't know whether I can make this plain to you out of the mass of testimony, but it is of tremendous significance. I want you to recall Berger's testimony of being in Brooklyn with

Weiss until after eleven o'clock on the night that he bluntly admits that he fingered Rosen. I hate their expression, but that is theirs—you have heard it so often—pointed him out as a prospective victim. Bear in mind that he testified that he lived in Brooklyn. He swore that when he and Weiss finished their business in front of Rosen's place, this pointing out of Rosen, that Weiss drove him back to New York. Then when he, Berger, remembered that he had testified that Lepke had brought him down in a 11036 taxi to meet Weiss on the East Side, he tried to cover that up by testifying that he had left his car on the East Side; had to go back to Manhattan, although he lived in Brooklyn, that night after eleven o'clock; although he had to go back to Brooklyn he testified he came up to get his car, which he testified he left on the East Side of Manhattan, which East Side he described as 12th Street and Broadway. 12th Street and Broadway I know and you men know has never been described as the East Side of New York since Peter Stuyvesant was stamping around in happen but he felt he caught himself in a trap. They had not checked up on that between themselves, and that is how he covered himself up.

Let me tell you another discrepancy that I want you to bear in mind as of tremendous importance, and because of the hours and the dates here I have got to read this: Rubin testified that he saw Lepke in the early afternoon of September 11th, Friday, this day we are talking about of Berger going over there to the car, in the car with the lights lighted, after he and

Weiss had arranged to go over there. During that conversation he says that Lepke hinted that Rosen should be killed—why I still don't know, still don't know; it has not developed in this testimony—that Rosen should be killed to stop him from talking. No evidence here that he had done any violent talking. The District Attorney of Manhattan's representative was here and said they did not know and never heard of him so far as their records were concerned. Rubin then 11039 suggested that he would go to see Weinstein, a Union official, and find out whether Weinstein could do something to stop Rosen from talking. Rubin then left Lepke, so he says, and saw Weinstein and returned and said Weinstein would do nothing, and it was then, according to Rubin's testimony and apparently the prosecution's theory, that it was determined that Rosen should be killed and that Lepke gave Rubin, he says, the truthful Rubin, a message for Berger, that he wanted to see Berger, which he did. That is Rubin.

11040 Berger then testified that Rubin delivered the message from Lepke and he saw Lepke on Friday at about 5 p. m.; that Lepke and he took a cab to the East Side, where they met Weiss at about 6 p. m., six o'clock in the evening, at which time Berger was told to finger Rosen for Weiss. According to Berger's testimony, Lepke then left, and Berger and Weiss went into a restaurant, had something to eat. You remember he said it was getting dark about that time. He testified further that it was absolutely dark when he and Berger reached the neighborhood around Rosen's store; he stated that the lights were lit on the way to Brooklyn. Berger then pointed out Rosen to Weiss, and then they drove back to the East Side, 12th Street and Broadway, where they arrived at about eleven or twelve o'clock at night. Of course, if there was any truth in that story, after Berger had gone with Weiss all the way over to Sutter Avenue, the locality of the Rosen place, Weiss would have driven him home here in Brooklyn. You know Berger did not figure on that, and so he had himself being driven back all the way to 11042 12th Street and Broadway to get his car that he said he left there.

You cannot reconcile that testimony of Berger's with the testimony of Bernstein. It just cannot be done, because Bernstein—let me bring you back to one of the earliest days of this case—Bernstein testified he was seated in his car about one o'clock in the afternoon, talking to Strauss—remember?—at Sackman and Livonia, in Brooklyn, and that Weiss, the defendant Weiss, together with Capone and Farvel Cohen approached his car—that was Friday, Septem- 11043 ber 11th; the killing of Rosen was on Sunday, September 13, 1936—and it was then at one o'clock in the afternoon, says Bernstein that Strauss told him, Bernstein, to steal a car and to provide a drop, a depository for the stolen car; and Bernstein further testified that he met "Muggsy" Cohen about three o'clock in the afternoon and made an appointment for one o'clock the next morning to steal that car. One o'clock in the afternoon, three o'clock in the afternoon.—but that was long before, according to Rubin's testimony, it had been determined at all to kill Rosen. That all happened at one o'clock or two o'clock or three o'clock in the afternoon, whereas, according to Berger's statement, he was told to meet Weiss and finger Rosen late that evening, six or seven o'clock; it was dark when they started out to go to Brooklyn. You just cannot fit those times in. One story or the other is false. You take your pick as to which you believe. I say you cannot be-11045 lieve either. I say that it is incredible that Weiss could have made any arrangements with Bernstein, Strauss, or Capone Friday afternoon because he was not finished with Berger until eleven or twelve o'clock that Friday night on the East Side of Manhattan, according to his description. And so we leave Mr. Berger. I don't think you can believe him. I don't see how, in heaven's name, you can believe anything that he or any of the rest of them say, and if you do not believe them you cannot convict these defendants.

he says. He says in the murder of Solomon Goldstein he helped to dump the body into a lake after the murder. In the Ashkenas case he admits doing the shooting. In the Yuran case he admits driving the murder car. In the Plug Schuman case again he admits that he drove the car. In the Harry Greenberg case, the murder of Harry Greenberg, he says he covered the car for the man who actually fired the shot which killed Greenberg. With them, covering the car means to be ready to interfere with any pursuit 11048 that gets in the way, even though there be a smash-up with the police car that is pursuing; block off anybody who he thinks interferes with the escape of the murderer, ready to do murder in that instance if necessary, crash any car, destroy anybody's life, in order to let murderers get away. That is what these gentry call covering a car. He admits he did that in the case where Harry Greenberg was murdered. He admits that he pointed out the victim in the Whitey Friedman murder and that he was the finger man in the Diamond murder. Imagine a man coming before twelve men—when I say twelve, 11049
I hope you alternate jurors won't take offense, because only twelve of you are going to decide this case—coming before gentlemen of your type and asking you to believe, and recounting these kind of things that I am now retailing to you. It just does not seem credible. It does not seem as if we are living in the Borough of Brooklyn, in a civilized community, when men can come on the stand and in one breath ask you to "believe what I say," and in the other breath say, "and these are the murders I am admitting that I committed." Lord knows how many others that they don't admit, but these are the ones they admit. Finger man in the Diamond case, and the District Attorney is going to ask you to believe what he says about this case. How can you do it? How can you do it? Allie Tannenbaum! I am wondering if it is not Tannenbaum who killed Rosen, the man who is lighter in weight than Weiss that was described by Mrs. Rosen when she came on the stand. I am wondering if he was not trying to save himself from possible consequences of his seventh murder by putting it on Weiss in order to distract attention from himself. One more murder, or one murder more or less is not going to make any difference in his young life.

Is this the reason that they are testifying as they are in this case, to distract attention from some of their own mob, some of the people who are either in the hotel with them or have been, by seeing to it that others are convicted of the crime which they themselves committed or knew who did commit? I am telling you, when you get to analyze the motive that these men have in testifying as they do, and when you consider that they are doing that to save their own lives and the consequence of their acts, you cannot have any greater inducement for the commission of perjury than what you have had in this trial. As I say, I am oppressed with the responsibility that is being put upon you when you are to be asked, as you will be asked from this table, to believe the testimony of these murderers, these devils that have been testifying here under the mockery, sham, the sacrilege of the oath which they took to tell the truth.

11052

This man Tannenbaum is the man who was talking to District Attorney O'Dwyer long before Weiss was taken into custody at all and long before Weiss was interviewed by the District Attorney. Did Tannenbaum tell the District Attorney of this county the truth when he was talking to him over a year ago? If he did, Weiss would never have been permitted to walk around the streets of New York or to go to Chicago or California or anywhere else. He would not have been permitted to dine in a restaurant with Major Kleinman, with a group 11054 of policemen around, including the Police Commissioner, and walk out of that restaurant without handcuffs on his wrists. Let us just, if we can— I cannot; I don't think you can—pass over for a moment the six murders that he admits, this man Tannenbaum, the corroborating witness. How about his additional crime of perjury in addition to his six murders, or possibly seven murders? How about his being a perjurer? Well, the record shows that he admits perjuring himself before the Federal Grand Jury right here in your county. He testified that he knew Weiss only slightly in September, 11055

1939, and here were the questions he was asked and the answers that he made on this point—this is before the Grand Jury in 1939, having taken the oath to tell the truth, all of the truth, and nothing but the truth:

"Q. Didn't you testify before the Federal Grand Jury that you only knew Mendy Weiss slightly? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That was false, you say now? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That was a deliberate false statement you made to the Federal Grand Jury? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you remember when it was? A. September, 1939."

If he was telling the truth then, he only knew Mendy Weiss slightly, and Mendy Weiss, if he only knew Tannenbaum slightly, was not likely to be implicating himself, Weiss, in with Tannenbaum, a man who was almost a stranger to him. Either that was true or it was false. He says

11057 it was false, and, if it was false, he knew that he was committing perjury before the Grand Jury. Now, what is the difference between committing perjury, swearing falsely, before that Grand Jury in 1939, and committing perjury, swearing falsely, before this jury in 1941? You see, they are like rats. They are cornered everywhere they turn. You see, they are able to point out things of this kind to you, and I ask you how in God's name you are going to believe anything they say. How are you going to do it? This man Tannenbaum they have had in custody

know, never was indicted, never even had to answer an indictment, and seven murders,—pretty good. I don't think Bluebeard did very much better than that, did he? Jack the Ripper only had one, and he was desecrated by the world for many years, when I was considerably younger. Seven murders! Not in jail! Oh, no. In the Half Moon Hotel, witr Bernstein, with Reles, with Sycoff, with Rubin, with Berger, occupied the room next to Reles, if you remember, the very next room, the night before he was 11060 called here to testify. Tannenbaum! Gentlemen, you cannot, you cannot and would not convict the proverbial yellow dog on the testimony of a man like Tannenbaum. Any District Attorney should be ashamed to ask you to do it. It is too much of a burden to put upon men of your type. You had to give up your homes, your business, the ordinary comforts of life that we all enjoy, for all these weeks, sitting in this jury, instead of being home and coming in here every morning to do your duty, as you are willing to do. No, you are segregated from the rest of 11061 humanity. Who is going to attack you? Who is going to approach you? Who—

The Court: Please. I must interrupt this.

Mr. Talley: I am sorry that you feel that you must.

The Court: This must be stopped.

Mr. Talley: The heaviest burden is placed upon you by being asked to believe the testimony of witnesses such as this type that you have seen, you have heard. I am merely trying to recall them to you.

The Court: Pardon me just a minute.

Gentlemen of the jury, the purpose in your segregation is not that the Court wanted to impose a hardship at all. It is to keep you from becoming prejadiced against the defendants by reading newspapers and listening to expressions of opinion. This is for the benefit of the defendants and to assure that they will have a fair trial, so that you will judge the case solely upon the evidence and have discussions among yourselves, not among members of your family and friends.

11063 Mr. Talley: Will your Honor advise the jury, if your Honor pleases, that this segregation was not at the request of the defendants or any of their attorneys?

The Court: I don't have to advise that. The Court does not have to ask the consent. The Court is here to administer justice and is not subject to attack upon summation. Don't do that again.

Mr. Talley: The next in this array of witnesses was Seymour Magoon. You remember him, the swarthy little "fifty-or-better" man. Something happened to Seymour Magoon. He 11064 did not make the hotels. He is being held in Bronx County, in the Bronx County Jail, because he was unfortunate enough, the poor boy, to be implicated in a murder in the Bronx. I think they have a good hotel up at the Grand Concourse in the Bronx. They must have several in the upper part of the Bronx. This criminal is not lodged in a hotel. He was lodged in the County Jail. He was a more ignorant type than the other witnesses who were called by the District Attorney but none the less cunning. He is the man who said he dressed himself up as a laborer and for five days hung around in front of Rubin's house to get a line on his habits and customs, knowing that he was to be killed. He is the man that went into Child's Restaurant while Berger, cold-blooded Berger, sat down and had a meal with the man whom he was to point out to Magoon, sat down, broke bread with him, solely for the purpose of indicating that Rubin was the man to be shot. This is Magoon. Day after day sat around in what he regarded as disguise, a laborer's dress that ought to have 11066 been an honor to him to wear instead of the fancy clothes that he and his type always manage to effect. He is the man who met in Child's Restaurant his proposed victim and then went with a man named Cuppie Migden to find Rubin. He followed him with a car, went up to 17th Street and 5th Avenue. He followed Berger. Again, they both had cars. In that neighborhood Rubin was pointed out to him; stayed around all that day and saw Rubin return at five o'clock in the afternoon; tried to tie Weiss into this case, because that is why he was called, by stating conversations that he said he had with Weiss 11067 about the Rubin attack, and you are asked to believe what he says Weiss said. There is no easier way for this type of perjurer to give testimony than by saying he said something to him. You don't have to describe a room or a place or a store, the physical facts about which could be demonstrated and shown that he was telling a falsehood. The easiest way is to get an admission, to have him testify that the defendant said this or said that to him. Nobody can contradict that, you see. They say, "He said this, he said that." When I say nobody can, I mean no physical facts can contradict that.

So the first thing you have got to question yourself about Magoon, is he worthy of belief? It all comes down to this in the case of all the witnesses. Here is a man who admits he stole fifty automobiles or better and admits that he participated in murders in Brooklyn and the Bronx. He admits that he was the driver of the car in the Friedman murder and he participated 11069 in the Bronx murder of Penn, upon which he is now being held, but, with the charm that exists about these so-called informers, although implicated in the murder by his own admission, he is only being held as a material witness, the same as you or I might be held in a case in which we might happen to be an innocent bystander. He says on September 4, 1939, he participated in the killing of Irving Feinstein and helped the defendant in that case to dispose of an oil can, the contents of which had been used to burn the body of their victim. This is the man who naively 11070 stated he would not tell a lie to save himself, just one, and that during all his life he had never told anything except little white lies. That expression coming from that gorilla I never will forget to the rest of my days. He never told anything but little white lies, and he expected you to believe it, the same as he expected you to believe—and there are a thousand reasons why he should expect you to believe—he is vouched for by the District Attorney—he expected you to believe that statement just the same as he and the others expect you to believe their story about the participation of the defendants in this case.

What fools we must all be taken for. Maybe Puck was right, sitting on the top of a cowslip, looking over the world and saying, "What fools we mortals be." What fools they must take us for, to think that any jury would believe the testimony coming from the polluted, blackened lips and hearts of men of that type.

He testified that the first one he spoke to in O'Dwyer's office was Mr. Turkus and Mr. Klein, 11072 in 1941, and at that very moment he was involved in the murder in the Bronx in which he admits participating. Is he making what he regards as a pretty good deal for himself by getting freedom from responsibility in the Bronx killing by testifying here? He thinks he is, but there is one part of the deal he has not yet reckoned on, and that is this jury here. He thinks he is going to be credited and he believed and then for the service he has rendered The People, the District Attorney of Brooklyn will convey his compliments to the District Attorney of the 11073
Bronx and say he rendered great service, he fooled this jury, he made them believe his lying utterances, despite his record as a murderer and a thief, and so we will have to give him consideration.

I must hurry along, because I want to finish before the usual recess hour, and that I will do. I want to call your attention, in passing, to Special Agent Albert Aman, who was called here solely for the purpose of—and this will be made much of by the District Attorney—proving flight.

The District Attorney is going to tell you that only guilty men flee. Of course, that is not so. He is going to tell you that flight is confession. That is not so either, as has been demonstrated thousands and thousands of times. But they are going to say, "Well, the corroboration"—pretty solemn testimony we have here from these liars and perjurers and crooks and thieves and murderers, but we have got corroboration now; Weiss was running away. Well, I ask you
11075 to consider the testimony of Special Agent Aman as evidence that if Weiss was running away it was from nothing having anything to do with this Rosen killing. There was some testimony given here about a Federal charge against Weiss. These agents were interested. These men who are sitting on either side of Weiss now are Federal agents; they are not New York police officers; they are not under the control of the District Attorney; they are Federal agents. The testimony indicates that he is brought here every day from the Federal House
11076 of Detention in West Street, Manhattan; he is in the custody of Federal agents, and I say that this testimony of Aman shows that Weiss, if he was trying to keep out of New York—and I don't dispute that he was—and as such was using an assumed name, because, as one of the witnesses said, he was afraid he was framed—he was being framed by a witness in a Federal case.

Aman made this significant statement, and he was backed up by his associate, Agent Bell: that when Weiss was apprehended in, I think, Kansas City, I am not sure, he waived extradition, and both of them say that they asked him whether he wanted to be brought to New York or Texas and both said that he said he wanted to be brought to New York.

Now, is it within the range of probability or possibility—and you have a right to consider the probabilities in this case at every point; that is where your experience comes in as business men—is it within the range of probabilities that if Weiss was fleeing from a murder case he would have asked these Federal agents to 11078 bring him back to New York, the City of New York, the Borough of Brooklyn, precisely where he would be amenable to the authorities in Brooklyn? Oh, no. You know that he would have said, "Take me out to the Lone Star State of Texas. I will do better out there on this Federal charge. It is not murder. I will do better out there with the Federal Court than I will in New York if I have got to face a murder charge." So that I submit to you that there is no evidence in this case, no credible evidence, that will justify you in any way in inferring 11079 that Weiss was out of town in 1940 or 1941 because of the Rosen case. They tried to hook that up rather definitely, very definitely, by having someone say that Weiss said, "Tannenbaum was talking and I will have to beat it" or "take it on the lam." That is the way they hooked that in. Here is the evidence. That is what Tannenbaum said. As against that is the evidence of these two Federal agents who said he was quite content to be brought to New York instead of going out to Texas on this Federal charge. I think that evidence is of tremendous importance.

11080 Now, Weiss says that he was not present at the Rosen store on Sunday, September 13th, and through the lips of his wife, his two brothers, his wife's friend, and his mother, he gives you the testimony as to where he was. Sunday, the 13th, the day upon which Rosen was killed by somebody, maybe somebody that had testified from that witness stand, that day was his birth day. I had not launched on that testimony for five minutes before the Court said, "Have you
11082 They started their party, as is the custom of that type of people—nobody will deny that—on Saturday night rather than Sunday, that is, they started at ten o'clock on Saturday night, the 12th, and carried it on until the morning of the 13th. You heard the testimony; you had an opportunity to look at the witnesses. Are you going to believe these murderers and cut-throats, these finger men, these perjurers? Are you going to believe them in preference to these people who testified as to where Weiss was that night? I don't see how you can. Of course, it will be said that to prove his alibi he had to bring his own family, those who were nearest and dearest to him: his mother, his wife, his brothers, his wife's friend. Of course they are willing to testify falsely in his behalf. That is human nature. You almost have to blame human nature for that. But you saw them and you heard them. No record of perjury with them. No record of murder with them. No fingering victim with proposed crimes with them. No thefts of fifty and hundreds of automobiles with them. They were just people, true to the type 11084 of the East Side of New York or what you have in a similar section here in Brooklyn. Who else could be called upon to testify about a birthday party except our intimate friends and our family? We don't celebrate our birt iday parties with strangers, do we? We celebrate them with those who are near and dear to us. And that is what this family was doing on that night. You have no right to reject their testimony. You will be asked to regard it with suspicion, but, as I say, gentlemen, who else is there that he could call to testify except the members of his own family. He was there with his old 11085 mother, who was pleased and happy that the row had been patched up between the two boys, and she was going to be a sport that night, in her joy and jubilation, and not only go to the restaurant and moving pictures, but take a ride through Central Park. She lives over here in Brooklyn. So don't be swayed by the argument that he had to call his immediate friends and relations and those closest to him to prove what will be scornfully referred to as alibi, which is just a Latin word meaning "elsewhere," that is all. Because the fact remains, gentlemen, that it was his birthday. It was his birthday. And the records of the Department of Health of the City of New York show it was his birthday. Nothing they say is going to change that. This thing was not grabbed out of the air. It does seem to me, in the last analysis, that the thing for you to consider is, Whom are you going to believe? Whom are you going to believe? Are you going to throw their testimony 11087 out as false and perjured, and are you going to take the testimony of these murderers and thugs who have testified to a condition of affairs that, if true, if true, would show that Weiss, instead of being at his home, with his mother, with his wife, with his wife's friend, the poor creature,—believe the murderers,—believe Weiss was over at Rosen's place; believe these; you will say he was there where they say he was, and back of that looms the certificate, which you may take into the jury room with you, showing he was born on the 13th of September, about 1910.

11088 Gentlemen, I have about finished all that I wish to impose upon you in this case of The People against Mendy Weiss. Bear in mind that we are in the same position here as if he was the only defendant in this case. We wanted a separate trial for him. The Court in his wisdom determined they would have to be tried together. It would have been very much easier for us to try this case with one defendant than with three, would not have had all this panoply of power, policemen with gold shields and handcuffs. I have done the best I can for him. My responsibility is about at an end. Your responsibility is about to commence. I say that it would be a very terrible thing for this County of Kings, this Borough of Brooklyn, your home, and this City of New York, if the crooks and criminals of the type that have testified in this trial are going to be given notice by your verdict that they can perjure, they can steal, they can murder, with impunity, so long as they reach the District Attorney's ear first.

We are living in weird times, weird times. We are living in danger, dangerous, hazardous 11090 times for the well-being of this country, and I know nothing is going to undermine the foundations of our American system of government more certainly and with more deadly effect than just that, a notice that twelve gentlemen of your type would be led to believe the testimony of men whom nobody would believe and nobody should be asked to believe, whose records, whose admissions, whose character, whose appearance, whose everything, belie every attempt of those who called upon them to testify to be believed as honest or reputable or decent men should be believed. Don't be carried away, gentlemen, by 11091 the things you have seen in this court-room. Just stick to the evidence in this case. That is what I want you to do, just stick to the evidence in the case. Remember the character of the people who have given it to you. Remember that you are now called upon to use your common sense—oh, I insist upon that so much—and weigh that common sense in the light of the probabilities in this case. Consider the animus that these men have, the motive they have for testifying falsely, that greatest, that is, the most overpowering of all motives, to save their own worthless lives. This life of ours that can be snapped off so suddenly, and how we struggle to save it. To men of this type, nothing will stop them, they who will murder, they who will call on God to witness the truth of what they say and then lie; nothing will stop them in their endeavor to save themselves, and that is what they have been doing in this case.

Gentlemen, I am very grateful to you for your 11093 attention to me. I am sorry I have had to take up so much of your time in reviewing this testimony. I know you are going to do the fair and decent thing. You will try to do the fair and decent thing. I ask you that your verdict will be a verdict of not guilty so far as the defendant Weiss is concerned.

The Court: The Court will remain in order. We will recess for lunch until 1:30, and I am going to ask you, in order to avoid too much crowding this afternoon, if we may all be here promptly at that moment.

Gentlemen of the jury, please do not discuss 11094 the case, let nobody talk to you about it. Keep your minds open.

Defendants are remanded.

(Whereupon a recess was taken for luncheon, until 1:30 P. M.)

11095

AFTERNOON SESSION.

TRIAL RESUMED.

Mr. Rosenthal summed up to the jury, on behalf of the defendant Capone, in the following language:

Mr. Rosenthal: May it please your Honor, Mr. Foreman and gentlemen of the jury, I would also be remiss in my duty if I did not, just as the Judge, Mr. Turkus, and all of counsel will 11096 do and have done, thank you gentlemen for the long and arduous task that you have had and for the great attention which you have paid to the testimony in this case. You have not seen much of me during the trial but I hope that you will bear with me in the summation which I intend to give on behalf of the defendant Capone and Capone solely, he being the person to whom I am responsible and he being the man whom I will direct all of my argument to you about.

When you were taken,—it took a very, very long time to select fourteen men who will sub- 11097 sequently be reduced to twelve,—from the vast majority of the citizenry of Brooklyn who said at the time that irrespective of any opinion that they may have formed or anything that they may have read, they on their oaths as jurymen and on their conscience as men will fairly deliberate the guilt or innocence of each and every defendant in this trial. For the defendant represented by me, that is all I ask. Counsel have already taken care of the defendants represented by them.

A number of men have never been called to serve on juries before so that it would not be remiss for me at this time to, in some brief manner, remind you of some of the things which you might have given very little thought to and to remind you of some of the questions which were originally asked of you before you were accepted as jurymen. At that time possibly you may have thought the questions a little bit ridiculous but now you can see the reason motivating each counsel in having addressed you and asking 11099 you the questions they did. This trial is divided, in reality, into four parts, the part played by the District Attorney, the part played by defendants' counsel, the part played by the Court, the part played by you. Each one has a responsibility. The greatest responsibility is yours. All the District Attorney had to do was to present to you what was given to him, the Grand Jury having found an indictment which at this time is meaningless, as will be explained to you by the Court in charging you on the law, and if those witnesses fell down, he cannot be heard to 11100 complain. All defense counsel is called upon to do is to fairly and adequately represent the cause which they espouse and each one has conscientiously done that. The District Attorney is a paid advocate. He is paid by the State. He is paid with your money, my money, the defendants' money, the Court's money. He may be paid by individuals and, at times, we are not paid at all but the cause which we represent is just as great as the cause he represents. These defendants are an integral part of the State of New York which you represent and which he represents and so, passing that, we come to the defense counsel who presents such evidence as he may see fit to present and conduct the trial as best he sees fit to conduct it. I have conducted this trial on behalf of my client in the manner which I considered was the proper manner in which it should be presented. In deliberating in your jury room—and this may sound asinine—there is no reason why you should permit the entity of counsel to enter into your deliberations at all. We are not on trial.

The third branch is the branch of the law. If 11102 the Judge makes a mistake,—and you have probably heard us except on numerous occasions to his rulings,—a stenographer is taking down that mistake. We feel that this case should not be reviewed any place but in the case where the error committed by the Judge is of a substantial nature, if it perchance leads a jury into finding a verdict of guilt, there is a way of remedying that mistake because it is impounded upon the record and the exception of the counsel is open to review at a subsequent time. So you see the defendants are protected as against 11103 the Court who, using all its conscientious endeavors, may still err, because none of us know all of the law—I know but little; as long as I have been in it I find that I know very little because if that were not the fact we would not continuously argue among ourselves as to what is right or what is wrong in so far as a principle of law is concerned. But we are protected against such a mistake and, once Mr. Turkus sits down, his job is finished and once I sit down my job is finished, and once the Judge tells you the law, whether you like it or whether you don't like it, you must accept that when you go into your jury room and apply it to the evidence as you see it. But once the three responsibilities are over, then the hard job begins because you men, taken from all walks of life, moulded into one thought, if possible, are the ones who have the final say as to whether the facts in this case, the believable facts, warrant you in justifying a verdict which you will subsequently render either of guilt or innocence; and as to that ver-11105 dict, it is not open to censure, it is not open to complaint, it is not open to scrutiny, it is not open to ridicule, if it is based upon your conscience and there is no outside influence which in any way caused you to determine in the manner in which you did. So you see in the final analysis, the greatest responsibility in this case is going to be yours.

I won't go any further. Judge Talley explained in great detail on that particular point and the difficulty in a case where there are three separate counsel is that one counsel may 11106 have to repeat one or two or more matters in the interests of his client and then it might become boresome to the jury, but it does not add any greater weight because Mr. Rosenthal said it and Judge Talley has said it before. So I am going to try, in defining this evidence, to keep away, in so far as is physically possible, from the things that have been dwelt on by competent counsel who have preceded me, Mr. Barshay and Judge Talley.

You are called from what they call a special panel. Due to the fact that some of you have never served before, it might not be amiss to tell you that the word "special" has no meaning or significance other than the fact that, by calling men of a particular type, time is saved in the examination of jurymen; whereas, if men who had not signed a questionnaire, were called, taking into consideration the length of time that it took to get a jury in this case where men are called from a special panel, the probabilities are we still would be questioning the jurymen rather than having the case coming near its conclusion; but once you are accepted as a juryman, the word "special" must be excluded from your mind. You are now juryman, no more, no less. Your deliberations must be in calm, cool, deliberate manner, laying aside anything except evidence and law as charged by the Court. You are going to take the evidence from the witnesses, not from what I say, not from what Mr. Turkus says, and not even from what the Court says, because, as I told you before, the case is divided into four parts. The Judge's only province is to tell you the law. In telling you that, he may refer to some isolated instances of what he believes to be the facts but he will tell you that that is not binding on you; you are the judges of the facts. You are just as much a judge in this case as his Honor, Judge Taylor. He decides the law exclusively, whether you like it or not, and you decide the facts exclusively, and I say this in no term of disrespect, whether he or anybody in this court-room likes it or not. So that, in judging the evidence, you are going to say what you consider to be important and you are going to say what you consider to be unimportant.

Passing that, how is it that you are brought from your business to this particular court? You are brought because an indictment has been found charging these defendants with a crime. When the defendants entered a plea of Not Guilty, they raised every issue that was set forth in that indictment. The Court will tell you that indictment is meaningless except as a means or mode or orderly way within which to bring people to trial, the same as is done in a 11111 civil case where, if someone were to contend that you owed him money whereas you in your own mind knew that you did not, the orderly way of proving it is by him serving you with a summons and complaint charging you with the money that is supposed to have been loaned to you and you put in a denial and then it comes into a court. So, I say, that the indictment must be dismissed from your minds. Well, then, if that is dismissed from your minds, what is the next consideration which should be in your minds? In viewing this case, gentlemen—and we cannot question the wisdom of years and 11112 years of experience of men such as Judge Cardoza and other learned men of the bench, Bar and Legislature as to the rhyme or the reason why these things happen, but you can take it for granted that there is a mighty good reason,—even as these men sit here now, your mind must be free and open and you must presume their innocence. That presumption follows them even into the jury room and can only be removed when twelve of you agree among yourselves that it has been removed because the District Attorney has taken a burden, assumed it and proved it. That burden which he has assumed is one to prove the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt. Well, the Court will charge you what a reasonable doubt is and anything that I might say as to the law you will disregard. My only reference to the law, gentlemen, is to better enable you to follow the analysis of the testimony as I intend to give it to you and better enable you to see whether or not the District Attorney has, as he has promised you at the outset of the case he would do, met that 11114 burden of proof which the law places upon him to prove each and every defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. When that is done it is not only the question whether you are in the jury room of determining what witnesses have been called. You can also take into consideration the failure to call witnesses that may be available. You will see the significance of that remark as I go on in the summation which I intend to make. You can take into consideration the demeanor of the persons on the stand, their contradictions, their background, their motives, their interests, anything that would enable you 11115 to better sift the evidence and ascertain where the truth lies in this particular case. To better enable you to follow me, the Court will charge you, in substance, that no man can be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. There is nothing mysterious about a definition of that character. It means this, that when the Judge tells you that Bernstein is an accomplice as a matter of law, the Judge means that if that is all the evidence that you were to find in this case that was believable, assuming that you did believe Bernstein, that even then you could not find a defendant guilty because our law does not permit one to speculate on the truth of an uncorroborated accomplice's testimony and so it is that if two or more accomplices were to tell you the same story, there still could be no conviction in your minds. You must look to an unpolluted source for evidence tending to connect the particular defendant with the crime before you can find him guilty.

11117 I told you at the outset that my defendant is being tried for this crime, and that I am here to defend, that and that alone. He is not being tried for any association claimed by the District Attorney, if he so claims, anything that may or may not have been brought into this case in an attempt to prejudice the atmosphere or your minds against any particular defendant at all. He is being tried for this crime and for this crime I am defending him. Your minds individually must be convinced of his guilt, and never mind any statement that the District Attorney may make to you about the fact of hung

is not worthy of the oath which he takes and would be a moral coward because it is his conscience that is involved when he goes into that jury room to vote on the guilt or innocence; but I say further than that, any juryman who will not listen to the reasoning or logic of any other man to see whether or not, perchance, his opinion might be wrong, or will not try to convince the other man that the opinion which he has gained is a correct one, would be just as much a moral coward. So that when you go into 11120 the jury room be sure of one fact and one fact alone, that what your duty is is to find on your conscience where the truth lies and whether it substantiates the charge or does not substantiate the charge.

Oh, I anticipate what Mr. Turkus is going to do. You see the difficulty that defense counsel are under is quite an unsurmountable task. Three defense counsel get up and they tell you their theories of what is or what is not proven in this case and Mr. Turkus, rightfully, takes a paper and a pencil and, whether he is doing a cross word puzzle or whether he is actually 11121 writing down what we say I do not know, but in any event the pencil is on the paper and he is writing, and when he gets up he will say, counsel did not tell you about this. Why? And counsel did tell you about this. This is my theory. The answer to the "why" question, if he says that we did not tell you about it, is this: In two or three hours' time we could not very well tell you everything that happened in about five weeks, could we, so we take what are called the high-lights; and if he tells you that when we said so-and-so the answer to it is so-and-so, well, the answer to that is that maybe his logic is founded on a wrong theory and ours is on the right theory. In the final analysis, that is going to be your job to determine whether what I say is borne out by the evidence or what he says is the conclusion drawn by him is borne out. But what he is going to do, if I know him, as soon as I am finished—and I don't think that will be today, as far as his job is concerned—

11124 not leave it out, we are not interested here in any trial that Rosen got because I will tell you, and I will state this on behalf of my client and myself, I am not in accord with anything that happened to Rosen; but the issue in this case, Mr. Turkus, is whether my client Capone had anything to do with it. The method of procedure used by the killers of Rosen has nothing to do with the issue in this case. It is whether Capone had anything to do with the killing that is the issue. Then he is going to tell you about the line of photographs and the number of witnesses and the parade which was had before you. That being his job, now my job is to show you what that parade amounts to, in so far as my client is concerned.

There are about 4,000 pages of testimony in this case out of which, I dare say, that if I were to read it—and I was only interested in getting the transcript of two of the witnesses so I am not able to read it verbatim,— I could take the lines out of less than a hundred pages and quote where the issue is supposed to affect my client. 11126
Yes, I am exaggerating; I am exaggerating. I think that I would be safe in saying less than forty pages have a line or two—and when he writes, I am going to answer that; I am going to guess what is in his mind; he is going to tell you, well, the testimony of Mrs. Rosen, the identification of the body, the killing and all of that, affects Mr. Capone. It only affects him if you believe Mr. Capone had something to do with it. It does not affect him at all because the issue in this case, when you come down to it, is threefold. The District Attorney must first prove by competent evidence what we term the corpus 11127 delicti. That would apply to any one in the world. In other words, he must prove that there is a dead body and that Rosen was a live man. So that that does not apply to my defendant Capone at all. It applies to Bernstein even who admits that he was one of the killers of Mr. Rosen. The District Attorney must then prove to you the killing itself. Well, you have that from the mouth of Bernstein, whom I am going to talk about in a few minutes, so that only unless you believe Bernstein's testimony and only unless you believe the alleged corroboration which I will also come to, would that affect my client. To make myself clear, when I made mention of the fact that less than forty pages applied to my client, I meant in which his name was directly mentioned in connection with anything arising out of this case, as I will demonstrate before I am finished.

Let us briefly review the witnesses. There were 36 witnesses called by the People. I am going to lessen his necessity for summing up 11129 by telling you some of the things he will tell you and so he will be able to take less time. Mrs. Rosen testified to nothing concerning Capone. She does not even know Capone. Harry Regenbogen is the man who conducted the candy store and heard the shooting and looked into the candy store and saw a dead man. He does not know my client. Louis Stamler is the tailor who looked from across the street in the window and saw the dead body on the floor across the street. He does not know my client. Patrolman Cappadora is the man who heard the cries of this Stamler for the police and responded. He does 11130 not know my client. Dr. Marten described the autopsy and the taking of the bullet from the body. He does not know my client. Detective Walsh is the man who responded to the scene and described what he found in the presence of the medical examiner. He does not know Capone. Detective Dumont, who was formerly in the Ballistics Bureau, received the bullets from the medical examiner and gave them to Detective Butts. He does not know my man. Detective Schaeffer is the man who received the bullets from Detective Butts and returned them to the medical examiner. He does not know Capone. Detective Scheisser found the abandoned automobile on September 13th at Van Sinderen Avenue and described the automobile as a two-door Chevrolet and he saw Detective King there when the pictures were being taken. He told you that this automobile was about fourteen blocks from the scene of the crime. He does not know Capone. Hirsh Merlis, the proprietor of the candy store down there at the B. M. T. station who saw four or three unknown men walk up a trestle, he does 11132 not know Capone. Captain McGowan who took pictures of the abandoned car said there were no fingerprints. He does not know Capone. Samuel Pearl, the man in the embroidery business, who, while he was out looking for a piece of real estate, found a gun which he subsequently turned over to Patrolman Nelson, he does not know Capone. Patrolman Nelson who was the man who took the gun and brought Pearl over to the station house, he does not know Capone. Detective King, the man who went to where the automobile was abandoned and was the one to 11133 whom the gun was turned over by Pearl, he does not know Capone. Sergeant Butts, the man who told you about his ballistic efforts in determining whether the bullets were fired from the gun, he does not know Capone. Max Kaufmann, the owner of the Chevrolet automobile that was parked outside of his house, that was stolen by the eminent Mr. Bernstein with the aid of the ace auto and radio crook Cohen,—whom I will come to in a few minutes also,—he does not know Capone. Detective Jarvis says that the car was stolen and reported to him by Kaufmann as having been stolen. He does not know Capone. Detective Ambraz who investigated the ownership of the license on the abandoned Chevrolet—same answer. Abe Waxman who was the owner of the Ford from which the license plates were stolen—does not know Capone. Harold Rosen, the son of the deceased, who testified in relation to his father's business and the identification of the body he does not know Capone. Hyman Barron, Anthony DeSario, the draftsman and 11135 the architect, they described blueprints which were put in evidence here showing the description of the store—nothing about Capone. Sylvia Greenspan, the daughter of the deceased—she did not know Capone. Edward Maguire, the labor lawyer, he never even heard of Capone. Albert Aman, Joseph Bell, Thomas Wynne, the one the supervisor for the Government, the other the Government agent who testified about the arrest of Weiss in Kansas City, and the custodian over in New York—they do not know Capone. The three rebuttal witnesses used by 11136 the District Attorney, Detectives Malone, Whalen and Federal Agent Newman, they don't know Capone.

By now I suppose you are tired of listening to me. Who does know Capone is what you are wondering. When we narrow the evidence down, the only ones who have mentioned Capone in this case in any way whatsoever are five witnesses, one, Sol Bernstein; 2, Seymour Magoon; 3, Berger; 4, Tannenbaum, as an afterthought, and 5, Rubin as to a memory of years ago. I am going to take these five witnesses apart in discussing them because every thing I tell you gentlemen when I start to analyze the facts, I am going to give Mr. Turkus pages for everything I tell you and when he come back tomorrow, having bad time to look up where I give you the quotations from, I want him to answer whether anything which I have said is not borne out by the evidence in this case. Never mind casting reflections against lawyers, clients or otherwise. I am going to stick to the evidence. I am not going to characterize anybody except, perchance, one or two of the witnesses but outside of that there is a lot of food for thought in respect to 11138 characterizations. I will just give you one illustration. I saw Mr. Turkus writing down when Judge Talley was summing up and saying about the Half Moon Hotel down by the seashore and the segregation of witnesses there. I anticipate what Mr. Turkus is going to say about that subject. He is going to tell you of the necessity of keeping these people together under guard so that they cannot be tampered with and so they cannot be touched. Before this case, gentlemen, that theory could not be exploded but one little thing happened in this case that explodes that whole theory and I am going to tell you 11139 what it is before I go into the direct part of my summation.

Magoon is a witness for the People not only in this case but others, according to the testimony. Magoon is just as much essential to this prosecution in Brooklyn as the baseball players out in Heckscher Park. Mr. Barshay forgot to tell you about foul balls. I wonder when they were playing ball whether they hit any foul balls. I wonder in the court-room the same thing. But let us take the evidence to see whether or not some foul balls were not struck, not by the District Attorney but by the witnesses who are such good baseball players that they have twelve on a side instead of nine when they go out on their tours on Long Island. But I am diverting from the subject. Magoon is not getting sirloin steaks with waiters with the towels over their arms, and playing cards and visiting or having his wife come in at eleven o'clock in the evening, or any of the things that 11141 you heard admitted here as to the rendezvous down at the Half Moon Hotel. Oh, no, Magoon is in the regular prison and has been there for months. Well, then, ask yourselves this when he expounds that theory which he is going to give to you about segregation of witnesses, sirloin steaks—and I am interrupting myself again—he will tell you that the prisoners need exercise. I admit that. So do vicious bulldogs need exercise but they put a muzzle on them when they take them out on the street and they put a leash on them too. They do not allow

Now then I finished the testimony of those who do not affect me, and when I say me I mean my client. Let us take the exhibits. Why, he has put a parade of exhibits in here 56 in number. He has even got a card from a chicken farm out in Kansas City. Photographs, maps of every type and description. Don't let it fool you, gentlemen. None of these exhibits are worth anything when you come to deliberate this case in the light in which the Court is going to charge you. These exhibits are only worth what 11144 they are worth to prove that a crime was committed by someone but have no corroborative value whatsoever in so far as any one of the defendants on trial is concerned. They are not the evidence which the law says is necessary to tend to connect the defendants with the crime, so that for all purposes, when you get into your jury room to deliberate, the only value that can be attached to those exhibits is two-fold, one, that you will be able to ascertain that Rosen was killed, and nobody doubts that by now; two, you will be able to judge that he was killed 11145 at a particular place, in a particular manner, and we don't dispute that. I don't dispute it on behalf of my client. But when it comes down to the crucial test as to who killed Rosen, you have a different story involved and none of these exhibits are worth that much in enabling your mind to determine whether or not any of these defendants is guilty, much less the defendant whom I represent.

So we will pass that now and go to one other thing. I know you are anxious, as you must be, but I am going to say this at the outset, gentlemen, a little bit unlike Judge Talley and his fear that you may be bored. I have a man's life and liberty in my possession and that is a big responsibility and, until I feel that I have amply presented to you what I consider to be sufficient for you on your conscience to come in with a verdict that is Not Guilty, I don't intend to stop. It is not going to take me too long and I don't want to bore you but I trust, because I would like to conclude today in as brief a time as I 11147 physically can, that you will bear with me because this part of my summation is meaningless. The balance of it, as soon as I pass one or two other points, will be of grave interest to you in trying to ascertain whether the People have sustained their burden in this case.

Well, Mr. Turkus will say to you, well, if these men did not kill Rosen, who did. If he should say that to you—you see I have to guess what he is going to say—he may fool me now, having heard me tell you the things which I have heard him say before, and not tell you them at all and 11148 then you go into the jury room and say, Mr. Rosenthal was wrong again: Turkus did not even mention a word about it—but I am not taking that chance. He may say to you, "Well, who else would have a motive?" I am not here to ascribe a motive to anybody but I could answer it just as logically as he could answer the motive which he attributed to Mr. Barshay's client, because the very secretiveness of Bernstein. Bernstein the shylock who says he did not even know the brother of Abe Reles, the shylock: Sandy Reles, the shylock: Seymour Magoon, the shylock; Seymour Magoon, the man who says that although he knew that Reles' brother Sandy was a shylock in East New York, would not be pinned down to the corner of Ardie's luncheonette which is right across the street from Rosen's candy store; and we had to get from Mrs. Sylvia Greenspan, a woman who should never even know of the existence of any of these men, the fact that Sandy Reles not only existed but he existed right across the street from her father's store. I don't know. Do 11150 you want to look for motive? Rosen, according to Mr. Turkus in his opening address, was starving for money. Who knows, maybe he borrowed from the shylocks. Seymour Magoon and Bernstein, the only two shylocks in the world that did not beat the people within an inch of their lives so that they even almost surprised the Judge out of the chair, so that the Judge had to make the statement, "Why anybody knows what shylocks do"— "Yes", says one, "I threaten but I don't hit. I charge somebody a little bit more"—Seymour Magoon, 11151

"Oh, I would not even threaten anybody. I don't think so much of money that I would threaten a man." That shylock, soft, smooth. I wonder if he is so soft and smooth out on the street if you met him on a dark night. But let us pass that and let us come to the facts in this case.

So that if you are looking for motives, he is the one that must ascribe the motive. He is the one that could prove that this defendant Capone had some reason. So we will pass that question and we will come to the question of the evidence.

I am almost ashamed to take your time on Mr. Bernstein. I am almost ashamed to take your time. Mr. Bernstein who says, "I am a rat." I wonder if they feed him cheese down in the Half Moon Hotel. But Abe Reles is only a mouse. I wonder if there is any distinction in his mind between a mouse and a rat. A mouse a little rat maybe, or he is a grown up 11153 mouse. Is that what he meant? I do not know the distinction but those are his words, not mine, "I am a mouse, no, Abe Reles is the mouse, I am a rat." Now let us look at the rat, and before I go to that there is one other thing. You see Mr. Turkus is going to say I am a good lawyer. I will say he was on a par with Mr. Rosenthal before 1940, on this side of the fence; now he exceeds Mr. Rosenthal on the other side of the fence. I have been unfortunate. Most of the people involved in this case have their personal titles or ex titles. I 11154 am a plain ordinary lawyer, without titles; but his experience before the Bar and the causes which he espoused were just as great as the causes which he is espousing now on the other side. You see sometimes jurymen get the opinion, because of their inexperience, that a District Attorney wears a cloak of saintliness. I wish he becomes District Attorney because he is a good friend of mine outside of the courtroom; inside not so good, but outside he is a good friend, but had Judge O'Dwyer been elected Mayor and somebody came in, maybe he would be counsel with me on this side of the fence next year; so don't let that impress you, the entity of the District Attorney. You see what I am worried about is the false issue here being raised about the holiness of the District Attorney's office, the sanctity of it, the false issue of perjury or subornation of perjury on the part of the District Attorney, which is not an issue here at all. He has got to take what is given to him. He took it when he was on the other side of the fence and believed it and presented it honestly and fairly as we are 11156 doing and he has got to do it on the other side of the fence and nobody finds any fault with him, with his actions, or with Judge O'Dwyer who happens to also be a club member of mine and a good friend of mine; so don't let them create any false issue in this case. I am not attempting to try Judge O'Dwyer or Assistant District Attorney Turkus or anybody else. I am asking you, irrespective of the entity of the persons in the District Attorney's office, to make them satisfy you under the legal rules of evidence of the guilt of my man before you convict him. 11157

Now Bernstein—you see I won't be so long now because I have only got Bernstein and Magoon to talk about. As a preamble to my talk about Bernstein, it really should not be necessary to talk about Bernstein for this reason: The Judge will tell you that the uncorroborated story of Bernstein is of no value, that if you go into your jury room, even if you were to believe Bernstein—and I am laughing up my sleeve—even if you were to believe him, that you could not convict unless there was outside unpolluted evidence tending to connect the defendant with a crime, but the alternative of that is this, that you must seek other evidence of a dependable nature tending to connect the defendant before you can believe Bernstein. You see you have a two-fold duty. If you disbelieve Bernstein, irrespective of whether you think there is some evidence, the case falls. You must both believe Bernstein and you must believe that there is other evidence tending to connect the 11159 defendants before you can find the defendants guilty, and that is the reason why I must spend time on Bernstein, to show you that even though you were to believe that there was some outside evidence, that Bernstein is so unworthy of credence at your hands that even then you could not convict the defendant Capone.

I usually analyze pretty thoroughly. I have divided Bernstein into a number of parts—that should have probably happened to him long ago but I am merely dividing him mentally and on paper, on his own admissions. I see Mr. Turkus writing down again. I wish I knew what 11160 he was writing because I would give you the answer.

The Court: Please.

Mr. Rosenthal: Yes, h wrote down "it should have happened to him long ago." Well, in any event he may say, and I agree with him, that it should have happened to a lot of people long ago. Don't think that any lawyer standing up in a court, whether he be a defense lawyer or a prosecution lawyer, has any use for murderers or criminals. Don't get that idea at all. I consider my reputation as good as that of Mr. Turkus or anyone in this court-room at the Bar and I think that is known generally. The cause that we are espousing is a cause and that has been demonstrated to you by Mr. Barshay. As long as I fairly present to you the arguments which I conscientiously believe are applicable to the particular case, that is my duty, the same as Mr. Turkus' duty is to conscientiously present the evidence which he has at hand.

Now, let us first take the background, because when you are going to judge a witness and when 11162 you are going to judge whether you are going to believe him, you first want his background, isn't that true? I got his background—and I say this to you so as to save time—as to everything I am telling you I have a page. It will take time to repeate these pages but I will cheerfully give them to Mr. Turkus and hand them to him at the conclusion of my summation for him to verify before tomorrow morning. He stole 75 cars. In 1930 he pleaded guilty to unlawful entry although he was charged with a felony. In October, 1933, he stole a car without anyone's assistance, pleaded guilty first to a felony, was allowed to 11163 withdraw the plea, then pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor. His first theft was 1930, when he was 18 or 19 years old. His second was in 1933. Those both were before he ever heard of Capone. This is the man who said he is taking orders from somebody. When that man was 22 years of age—remember first he denied, when Judge Talley questioned him as to there being any guns in that car, but on my cross-examination I was able to prove from his own lips that he was a potential murderer before he attained his majority, that he went out with two known stickup men before he had ever met Lepke or any other person connected with this case, with the intention to kill a man in the event the man was to resist being tied up and held up. That is his word and it is in the record and we can find it on pages 748 down through to page 752, and 855 to 856 of the record. In other words, this man went out when he had just attained his majority, having done no lawful work of any character 11165 after he had lost his third job, and he did not even remember whether he was in a job when he did this, and with guns in the car, with ropes in the car, with known stickup men, went out deliberately, when he was fortunately apprehended by a policeman, to kill a man if he resisted being held up and robbed of his money. That is not all. That is not all. He helped to dispose of the body in the Yuran murder. He was a shylock, gambler, bookmaker, on his own account and then, if you remember those significant words when I asked him before he met Capone about these questions he says, and that is on page 587, 11166 "I was not an angel. Does that satisfy you?"

This man that had ten, twenty customers, this man that was a small shylock, was able to borrow $50,000 in his youth, endorsed by Meyers' signature. For what? To run his shylock business, this angel who only charged two a week instead of one a week and who never threatened, or threatened but never hurt anybody. Well, what else? Then he suffered a lapse of memory. You remember he forgot that his benefactor, his benefactor Meyers, the man who endorsed the back of his notes, stopped loaning him money. He denied that he assaulted this man's daughter but he did not remember whether in court, where he was brought, she did not withdraw the complaint and say that it was an accident that he assaulted her. He was a strong-arm man in a gambling place. He threatened people who owed him money and, now here is the significant thing, this man who was utilized as a People's witness, up in the mountains in Monticello, admitted way back, way back, he was asked by this man Strauss to take a gun and go out and kill Cohen in California. Of course he did not kill him but 11168

he did go to California. Use your common sense. And then to justify his going to California, he said he even got Cohen the job in the movies. Do you remember that? Well, then, whom did he go to California with? Well, he fumed and he fretted and he did not know about Hershel Bernstein until the Judge said to him, "Why, wasn't Hershel Bernstein a notorious burglar and crook?" and then for the first time he remembered that his companion on the way out to California was the burglar and crook, Hershel Bernstein.

Well, believe him or not, he followed carnivals 11169 all over the country—no, excuse me, only as far as Maryland; he did not go all over the country. On all of his trips to California and all over the country he did not burglarize and steal. He was merely a "schil" for a carnival. That is his story, and this saintly creature then buys himself a candy store which he runs as a blind for his crooked and for his loan shark business. I am only repeating that to show you, when the District Attorney tells you about his taking orders, this is the man who takes orders. You can 11170 imagine him taking orders. And then he drove Fat Kupperman, his friend, to a doorway—of course he did not put him on the spot, oh, no, but he says he did not meet Fat Kupperman by accident that night, oh, no, but Fat Kupperman, his friend, did not live any more after he delivered him at the doorway of his home.

Now, why go further? There are other things he did. But now let us analyze it further. That is his background. Who is this man who sits 11171 before you? Well, you have a right to say, in view of all these things that are known, is he in jail, instead of in the Half Moon eating steaks and chops, charged with something? Oh, no. No charges of any kind are pending against that man up to the minute that he left the stand. In other words, he got immunity before the Grand Jury in the Yuran case. You understand what immunity is. It means that he can never be prosecuted for the crime, so he is out of that, isn't he? He testified before the Grand Jury in this case. He got immunity in this case before the Grand 11172 Jury, so he can never be prosecuted for that. And his answer, on pages 962, 3 and 4, when he was asked by me the question as to whether theer were any charges pending against him, was the words, now no charges pending against him of any kind, of any kind. As far as this man is concerned, as far as you are concerned, he is merely in protective custody so that right now, close to Christmas of 1941—what a Christmas present he is getting, what a motove for a man to go on the stand and lie, but I will show you that that motive is mild to what else there is in this case in so far as Bernstein is concerned.

Remember a man was being tried for his life Monticello. A man was on trial for his life just as my client is on trial for his life now. Twelve men were put in a box. I do not know whether they had alternates or not in that trial.

The Court: You may not discuss it.

Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except, sir. I am not discussing anything.

The Court: If there is anything further said, I will excuse the jury.

Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except, sir. This 11174 man, as I will show you from the evidence of his contradictions between his mountain testimony as borne out by the evidence in this trial, swore in a trial in Monticello before the ever living God that he would tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. This man on this trial, as I will show from a quotation from the evidence, told you that he deliberately lied before the jury in Monticello in a court of similar jurisdiction. Let me get to his contradictions between his mountain testimony and here. I intended to go into the contradictions which comprise all of these pages but I will run them 11175 through fast so that I do not take too much time. This is his testimony on page 778 of this record: "Q. You were under oath in the Gangi trial, weren't you? A. Yes, sir. Q. Swore the same way as you did in this court-room, didn't you? A. Yes, sir. Q. To tell the truth? A. Yes, sir.

Q. A man's life was at stake, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had a jury similar to this, sitting there listening to your story? A. Yes, sir. Q. And in the court you told the jury, I am telling you the truth? A. About the case."

At page 866: "Q. Now, then, do you recall now at this time whether or not you were not directly asked the question in the mountains, in the Gangi Cohen trial: 'Q. You want to make sure every word you say is heard? A. I am telling the truth. Q. You were coached to answer? A. Telling the truth.' Have you any recollection of whether or not you did not make, in form or substance, that statement in the presence of the Court and the jury in the Gangi 11177 Cohen trial? A. About Gangi, yes, sir.

"Mr. Rosenthal: I move to strike out the answer as not responsive.

"By the Court:

"Q. Do you remember those questions and answers, yes or no? A. If it is in the book."

If it is in the book. And so I say to you, as appears in this record, he admits to you that before a jury similar to you, in the mountains, he deliberately faced them and swore that he was telling the truth. He lied. Oh, they are 11178 going to tell you some of the men were on the lam. Why, that man deliberately tried to put the issue on to Mr. Turkus' shoulder or the District Attorney of the Catskill Mountains because he says, "I was told by some one in the District Attorney's office." Oh, the Judge rightfully said to me at that time, "You don't want to make an issue between the District Attorney". No, I don't. That man is a deliberate unqualified liar and would lie to anything to save himself. I know that Mr. Turkus or Mr. O'Dwyer or any District Attorney would not tell that man to conceal the truth where a man's life was at stake. Now, let us take for instance, his statement that he was told to conceal because men were on the lam. Try to believe that. Conceal what? Conceal what? Conceal that he knew about this case. I will show you that that is even a falsity because in the mountain testimony he swore he never used an alias. Whom would that affect? Would that affect the Rosen case? That would affect his credibility. Here he admits that he did. In the mountain case he said he was not 11180 a thief. Did not the jury in the mountains have a right to know whether they were talking to the man who had stolen 75 cars? Who was that protecting? Who was that protecting? Bernstein. In the mountains he swore he never committed a murder in his life or never saw one. Did that affect the men that were on the lam? Whom did that affect? Did the jury in the mountains have a right to know that they had a murderer on the stand, a thief on the stand, and thereby be able to weigh his testimony so as to be able to determine for themselves whether he was telling the truth? So we will pass that by. 11181

There are a number of other things. When he tells you that he lied under oath in the mountains to conceal outside persons, he lied there; he lied here, and he will lie hereafter. Because the things that he lied about, which I will show you from the record, only affected himself and no other persons.

Let us briefly then go to his contradictions because I have got them analyzed here, gentlemen, his contradictions between here and the mountains, his contradictions between here and the testimony before the Grand Jury in this trial, his contradictions between his direct examination and his cross-examination. I have got them all analyzed. I am only going to briefly annotate them because it will take too long to give you the illustrations, although I have got them word for word here. Now let us go ahead. In the mountains—oh, that will ring in my ears after this case is over—if it is in the book, I said it—if it is in the book I said it. Whoever told you 11183 to say that? Nobody. Well, how did you know that it was in the book? Who would know it was in the book? Well, you are reading from something. Anyhow that is the reason. Cagey, cagey. If it is in the book, I said it. So, as I go into these contradictions, you will find this, never would he say, yes, I said this in the mountains. If it is in the book I said it. Then I would have to turn to Mr. Turkus: "Is it in the book?" "Yes, it is in the book." "Here, mister, it is in the book". "Well, if it is in the book, I said it." So, let us go to the "If it is in the book, I said it".

11184 In the mountains he swore he never had a bank account, never had a bank account. "Did you keep a bank account? (on page 15)? A. No, sir. Q. Never? A. No, sir."

Lo and behold, what do we prove on this trial?

"Did you have a bank account? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where? A. Manufacturers Trust Company."

I have to read this one. This is a good one.

"Did you think of that expression 'If it is in the book, I said it' "—this is on page 779 and 780: "Nobody told me anything.

Q. You thought of that yourself, did you? A. What do you mean, I thought of it myself?

Q. Did you think of that expression 'If it is in the book, I said it' by yourself or were you told by somebody to say 'If it is in the book, I said it'? A. Nobody told me anything.

Q. So you thought of it yourself, did you? Did you think of it yourself? A. I myself, sir.

"Q. How did you know there was a book? A. You are reading a book, aren't you, sir?

"Q. So that you thought of it when you got 11186 on the stand, is that it? A. You are reading a book."

Now, let us just take that for a minute. Whom was he hiding? Who was on the lam, so-called, or on the run, that would have been affected by his telling the jury in the mountains that he was a loan shark, borrowing $50,000, and had a bank account? Anybody? No. He is an innate, inborn liar and he could not tell the truth. Let us take the next.

In the mountains—I am going to run through them quickly without quotation but I am going 11187 to give the pages so Mr. Turkus can verify. 775 to 777, in the mountains, he swore, never threatened anybody in his life in the shylock business. What? Did not threaten anybody? Here, well, he admits that he threatened them, after the Judge had asked questions about the methods of shylocking, but he never hit them. Whom was he hiding in the mountains when he said he did not threaten?

As to his alias, page 779, he was asked in the mountains whether he ever used any other name. No.

11188 "Q. When you say you did not want to give out any information, do you mean information about yourself and the aliases that you had used? Is that what you mean? A. Yes, sir:" Was not the jury entitled to know that in the mountains? Was he hiding something because somebody was on the lam?

Now, about his employment. He even contradicted himself about the employment, and now here is the significant thing; here is the signi-11189 cant thing. In the mountains he said he did not know Buggsy Goldstein. In the mountains he did not know Buggsy Goldstein. In this trial he did know Buggsy Goldstein. That is page 832. In the mountains he knew Reles very well; Abie Reles he knew him very well. Here his answer is that he did not know him so well but if it is in the book, it is in the book, and if it is in the book, it is so.

Page 841, 842. In the mountains he swore that he was a reformed thief, that he had only stolen one car in his life. Here he swore he 11190 stole 75 cars, mind you, gentlemen, up to 1940, up to the date almost that he was testifying in the mountains, and there he had he had not stolen a car since 1930. Was the jury entitled to know that? Was he hiding somebody that was on the lam or was he putting himself in a false light?

In the mountains, in regard to guns—and now this is a very important thing—you see it takes a little longer than I thought—this is very important and I want you to listen carefully because the Judge will charge you on reasonable doubt. Reasonable doubt arises not only from the evidence itself but from the lack of evidence. You know in this trial he told you about these guns that were handed out on the corner. You remember that, don't you? He not only told you about the guns that were handed out on the corner; he told you about the guns that were used in the stickup when he was almost a boy. He told you about the gun that was shown to him by Harry Strauss when he wanted to go out and kill Gangi Cohen, the very man whose life—maybe he did not have 11192 the courage to put the gun up against him but he had the courage to testify against him. In the mountains this man testified—and this I am going to read:

"'Q. You know what muscles are? A. Yes, sir.

"'Q. You know what guns are? A. Yes, sir.

"'Q. Have you seen a gun many times? A. No, sir.

"'You have never in your life seen a gun? A. Yes.

"'Q. Why did you say at first 'No, sir'? A. 11193
I just reminded myself.

"'Q. How many times did you see a gun? A. Once.

Q. What year was it? A. I don't know what year it was. I seen it.'"

"Were you asked those questions in the mountains and did you give those answers? A. I can explain about that.

"Q. That was not true that you had only seen a gun once in your life when you told that to the jury in the Gangi Cohen trial? A. No, sir."

Now, let us analyze that. If a man would have the temerity to take the witness-stand, whether it be in this court or any other court, and swear before a jury that he had only seen a gun once in his life and then when it was shown to him in 1937 by Harry Strauss, what assurance have you got that when he now says that he has seen them many times and when it has been brought out from the evidence that he not only saw them but was willing to use them when he was almost an 11195 infant in arms, what assurance have you got upon which you can rely on a man's testimony of that character?

I have only skimmed the surface. Why, there are reams and reams of his contradictions and I am only going to pass them as quickly as I can so as not to bore or tire you because I think, even by now, it is clear that that man's story is unworthy of belief in any court-room.

Oh, he admitted that in the Cohen trial. He said he had taken five or six trips with loan shark money for his vacations. Here the story changes. He trips to California and it was not 11196 with loan shark money but if it is in the book, it is in the book. He admitted to Judge Talley that he used the name of Jackie Berman in Miami. And admitted that that was not true.

Here is another very important thing, another very important thing. Why, in the mountains, in the mountains, this man had the temerity to tell a jury that he did not know Tannenbaum, that is, that he did not have any business with Tannenbaum. Can you imagine that? Can you imagine that, when the man has the temerity to come here and admit that he not only went out on jobs with him but that he did everything but commit murder with him, the Yuran, the carrying the body, and so forth? Can you imagine him telling a jury that he never had any business with Tannenbaum, under oath; the same oath as he takes in this court he took in that court. Need I go further? Oh, but I will. Those are only mild. They are only mild compared to some of the things. Why, he said here he did not point out to the police anything about where the pick or the axe were buried, not he, not Bernstein; but he forgot that under oath in the mountains, under oath in the mountains, was the very statement of his that he did point them out. 11198 Another little bit. You think that that is bad. You think that is bad. I think I should stop going through this record when I take the next one, because the next one is applicable to this case and this case alone. When asked in the mountains whether he ever was connected with any murder, including Rosen, he definitely said no. No. Why, can you imagine this Judge here is going to charge you as a matter of law that this man is a murderer in this case, that this 11199 man is an accomplice, admitted, by law. Up in the mountains, why, he never saw a murder committed, not the innocent Mr. Bernstein.

Should I waste your time and go through these contradictions? Should I go through the contradictions between his testimony now and as it appeared in the Graund Jury? Should I go through the contradictions between the testimony on his direct and cross-examination? What more need you have in front of you? What more need you have than the deliberate, downright perjury committed by this man? I think it would be an insult to your intelligence. I really do. And even though I have spent nights and days getting up these contradictions of a material nature, I think I should pass on. I really think that I should take the brunt of this situation.

Now I am going to give you two or three more and I am going to throw all of this away. I am going to give you two or three more, if you need more. This man deliberately said on this stand
11201 about "Muggsy" Cohen. Now, remember that "Muggsy" Cohen was in the District Attorney's office, according to "Muggsy" Cohen, in April of 1941. If this car was stolen in September of 1936, I am going to ask the Court to charge you that the Statute of Limitations regarding the arrest of the individual does not expire until five years pass, so it was within the time of the Statute of Limitations. If the District Attorney believed Bernstein, that "Muggsy" Cohen was out on that job with him, and if "Muggsy" Cohen when he was in the District Attorney's office in April and was let go, admitted that Bernstein
11202 was telling the truth, then "Muggsy" Cohen would be behind bars now, charged with the theft of that automobile. But that unmitigated liar had the temerity, even here, to tell you that he has never seen Cohen since 1940, when he took a trip to Florida; he has never seen Cohen; where Cohen takes the stand and says that in the District Attorney's office he was confronted with him. Now, say you to yourself, "What significance did that have?" Oh, it has got great significance. and I will give you the page if there is any question about it, Mr. Turkus. Cohen, when he was called on the stand by Judge Talley, testified that in 1941, in the presence of Mr. Turkus, in the District Attorney's office, he confronted Bernstein. That is his testimony. If there is any question, I will take it from the record. And Cohen was let go and Cohen was not used as a witness to verify. Why? Is there a doubt in your mind as to whether he would say that he was with this man? Well, if he was not with him, then Bernstein is a liar.

To add everything up,—and to do what I said I would do with all of these records, because I 11204 had no idea it would consume the length of time that it has, and I see then the necessity for shortening,—the thing that stands out in this trial is this. This man, in the safety of the Half Moon Hotel never thought, never thought that his acts would ever be discovered. The theory of the prosecution—oh, how he said in his opening and how he described it when the witness took the stand: bars on the windows, bars on the doors, shot guns around, policemen sleeping here, mirrors in the hallway, mirrors here, guns out, a regular Wild West proposition to guard these 11205 witnesses; men sitting at the bedside when they are asleep, that is the testimony, sitting up all night alongside of the bed of Mr. Bernstein, so he could not talk. That is the testimony. Why, they even sat up all night watching this poor, innocent man sleep. How his conscience let him sleep, I don't know, but that is none of my affair. In any event, with the thought of the power of the State behind him, he goes on this stand, and little did he know that he would be exposed; he was tied down by me as to whether he ever wrote a letter, whether his wife ever took one, whether he ever had a stamp, whether he had an envelope, whether it was ever secretly taken out, whether a policeman was always at his side. I had the mountain testimony to know what a crawler he was, and I was not going to let him crawl. I gave him every opportunity in the world to crawl from under, and you can have the testimony read if there is any doubt in your mind, because this has been a long trial.

11207 Oh, did I give him time to crawl from under: "Did your wife ever write or did you ever secretly get it out? Did a policeman ever see you? Did you ever use a stamp?" And I used him and I tied him and I tied him and I let him go. And he thought he got away with it. He thought he got away with something. Because little did he imagine that there was anybody in the world that could find out that he had the power to send out letters, send out letters. Now, if he would have told you yes, he sent letters, you could not have found any fault with that, because even if he was in protective

11208 custody, there would be no harm sending a legitimate letter to a nice character, to the ordinary individual. Unfortunately, and that is a rule of law which the Court applied, to which I excepted, the contents of the letter is none of your concern at this time. However, the fact remains that he deliberately told you this. Let me wind up with it. If this has not convinced you—and I have, as I say, a hundred more even more important contradictions, if there could be such, because there is a great deal of significance to this—you may not see the significance—the District Attorney says police watching him, they cannot even talk. They sit down to eat. I suppose the detective sits in between them so that they cannot look at one another. You see, that negatives the opportunity to concoct. You see, if I cannot talk to you and if he is always around, we could not concoct a story together, could we, so we have got to have detectives with bars, shotguns, sleeping in the room, standing up while we are asleep, and everything else. But the bottom falls out. The bottom falls out be- 11210 cause that shows an opportunity to concoct, the ability to write the type of letters which he wrote and the things which he said and the things which he secreted, so you do away with that theory they could not concoct a story between themselves; and what would there be to prevent their being separated from one another? Anything? But they are all together, playing cards.

Now, finally—I am quoting from page 1071 of the record, 1084 of the record, 598 of the record, and 682—and in this regard, when counsel was 11211 cross-examining Mr. Bernstein, this is the remark which the Court passed: "The rest of the letter must be submitted before the Court can pass on it. He has admitted now that he lied. You do not have to establish that:" (at 1071) "It is established that the witness testified under previous cross that he did not send out a letter, and now he admits that he did."

"Mr. Talley: Your Honor has stated from the bench that this witness has testified falsely with regard to sending the letter.

"The Court: Yes.

"Mr. Talley: Your Honor stated—I think the language was—that he had lied before this jury.

"The Court: Yes. That is obvious."

At 598:

"By the Court:

"Q. Did you testify in the trial of Gangi Cohen to anything that was not true? A. Yes, sir." • • •

"Q. Did you fail to testify to some things 11213 that were true? A. Yes, sir."

Page 682—well, that is only repetition.

So, to sum it all up before I go to his story, to sum it all up, he not only admits he lies, the records not only show he lies, but you have even the statement of the Court that he has lied.

Well, as Mr. Turkus started to say when we started this case, "What has that got to do with the Rosen killing?" Now we will come to his testimony in so far as it affects my client. I have subdivided that, gentlemen—and this, of course, is of importance:

11214 The first meeting, not that we admit it, but the first alleged meeting between Bernstein and my client was, according to him, in the year 1932 or 1933, when he says that he met my client at the Coffee Pot and was introduced by Mike Sycoff. You see, I am going to analyze each thing from now on of what was said in this case about my client. You remember—maybe you forgot—Mike Sycoff is one of the baseball players. He is down in the Half Moon Hotel. He has been down there eighteen months. He is still down there. I do not know, like the others, whether he has any charge against him.

but he is one of the team that was down at Heckscher Park and he is one of the bosom companions of Bernstein. Say to yourselves, "Why wasn't Sycoff called to verify this proposition?" They put in photographs that are meaningless, smile as much as you will; they put in photographs that have no meaning in the ordinary case. All they would have to do is say, "A car was stolen." They do not need license plates and this and that, and men to hand the bullets back again, the photograph of the sidewalk, the 11216 grass that was on it. Why, then, if they are so particular, don't they bring Mike Sycoff to show that he introduced—because I assume the purpose of that is to try to show association of my client with somebody. Now, assuming that you believe him, because he says that my man—I am going to show you how ridiculous it is—was one of the crowd, but isn't it a funny thing that he became a gambler and a shylock in 1930? He says in 1930 he borrowed money (at page 485) while he was working, and he became a gambler and a shylock and a convicted thief 11217 three years before he ever saw my man, if he ever saw my man in his life. Now, just let us compare, because we have got to compare. When I make reference to any of these witnesses that may affect any of the other defendants, it is with no desire in any wise to say that I believe their testimony, but only for the purpose of comparison. Tannenbaum was supposed to be a man who had access to Buchalter's office five times a week and was on his payroll, according to him, for many years, ten, eleven, since 1931. Tannenbaum was brought up in Brownsville, and Tannenbaum is supposed to be one of the mob. Now, if what Bernstein says is true, how under the sun is it that Tannenbaum says that he never met Capone until the year 1938, two years after this crime? Two years after. The first time Tannenbaum ever saw Capone in his life was in 1938. Tannenbaum, the six-time murderer, Tannenbaum, the alleged member of the Combination; Tannenbaum, the man who hangs out on the street corner; Tannenbaum, who was 11219 always present in Mr. Buchalter's office; he never saw Capone until 1938, never saw him in his life. Well, whom do you believe? I am not believing either, but I say that there explodes the theory of Capone, but they have got to put him in some way.

Let us go to the next point in the case. Oh, it is very funny; there are so many of these things that it is impossible to analyze all of them. I just want to take the highlights. What took me nights and nights of ferreting to get out of the record so as to be sure that what I say 11220 is founded on fact, I don't want to burden you with by taking the same amount of time. If there is any doubt of the testimony, on 2425 and 2426 of the record it appears that Tannenbaum met Capone for the first time in 1938. He frequented this neighborhood continuously from the year 1933 and, according to the witness Magoon, was a member of the Combination. Now, isn't that peculiar? If my client had anything to do —and I don't admit there is a Combination— but if he had anything to do, as this liar Bernstein would have you believe, with this alleged Combination, why didn't Tannenbaum know?

Does that create a doubt? Let me pass that, even though I have a number of other things on the same subject. I will tell you why: Atmosphere. Atmosphere. Not facts—atmosphere.

Let us go to the next thing: Bernstein says that he met the defendant Capone on September 11th at Sackman and Livonia, between twelve and one o'clock. I am taking this from the record. He said that while he was waiting for Mike Sycoff—all of these meetings, by the way, are accidental; I never saw so many accidents in 11222 my life as I did in this case—he was waiting for Mike Sycoff to come along. He never came along. Around one o'clock, accidentally, Harry Strauss came along, accidentally got in the car in order to have a general conversation, when accidentally along came Capone and the other men and accidentally they left, and accidentally they came back, and then he got his orders. That is his testimony. Let us analyze it for a minute. This testimony is palpably false, because you have got to weigh one with the other. He says that at one o'clock in the afternoon of Friday—and I am 11223 not going to give you his contradictions about his changing it, went from four back to one to seven o'clock and all that—that is all in the record, and I have discarded that already; I don't want to go back and bore you by giving you all those talks, but listen to this: According to the others, Tannenbaum, Berger, and Rubin, the plan to kill Rosen was only perfected at five o'clock at night, and the alleged meeting with Capone—and I am coming to that—took place around nine-thirty at Sackman and Livonia. I will come to that when I come to Berger's story. Well, which is true? If the plan to kill did not start until five, six, seven hours after the alleged meeting, how could the alleged meeting discuss the plan to kill? If, as the witness said, he tried to plead that the defendant Buchalter give him another chance and went over to Weinstein, and came back, and Rubin and Berger and all of that happened, how is it, then, at 12:45 in the afternoon, before the murder was even conceived of, this alleged meeting happened? Does that raise a 11225 doubt as to whether it actually happened? Well, you can have the testimony read. Berger did not leave New York, according to him, until five o'clock. It was not decided that they were going to go ahead and finger this man until that time. He did not go over from New York, where he was supposed to be taken in a taxicab by Lepke to meet Weiss in New York, and leave and come over until nine-thirty, when the finger was supposed to have been placed on this man

Rosen, and it was only accidentally—another accident—and I will come to that when I come to 11226 his testimony—that they saw Capone alone on the street, but he heard no conversation, but he said
"Hello" to him. That is inference. Association.
You are supposed to convict a man of murder in the first degree on an inference of that character.
But we will come to that. However, is there a doubt created in your mind as to the truth of the statement, if you need any more about the truth of the statement of Bernstein, when I say to you that this alleged meeting in which was discussed the question of the killing, the stealing of the car, took place five hours before it was even thought of that they were going to kill him?

Now let us go to the next point: Well, the next point is the question of his attempt to get the drop and his effort to steal the car. Well, poor "Muggsy" Cohen. Or should I say lucky "Muggsy" Cohen? You know, when I say "atmosphere," I say it advisedly. If "Muggsy" Cohen, when first confronted with Bernstein after this indictment, or prior to this indictment, in any wise verified the story, then he should have been one of the baseball players along with the rest of them, with Mike Sycoff, Allie Tannen- 11228 baum, and the rest of that team. But no, he walked out of the District Attorney's office, and the only time that you see him is when I brought out from Bernstein on cross-examination about Cohen, out go the detectives, in comes Cohen. To testify? N-n-n-n-n-n. Just like the handcuffs and other things. You have to have effect. So he stands back here. "Bernstein, who is that man standing in the court-room?" "'Muggsy' Cohen." "Right." Cohen, out. What is that for? What is that for? You see, if Cohen was not put on the stand by Judge Talley, you would 11229 think that Cohen was in custody, wouldn't you? And you would have a right to think it, and you would say to yourself, "That substantiates Mr. Bernstein," wouldn't you, and you would have a right to say it. So you don't know that Cohen was just grabbed off the street and put in the Hotel Bossert, smoking big cigars, and steaks also. You don't know that. Oh, no. And I would like to lay a bet he is not there now. You don't know that, and you would never know it, because they did not think counsel for the defendant, Judge Talley, would have the temerity to call a man who was in the custody of the District Attorney, but he did, and you found out that Cohen is under no charge, that Cohen was only picked up after Bernstein testified, although he had been picked up a year ago and let go. Figure that out, whether there is a doubt created by that.

Now let us pass on, with his drop. Oh, wait. This man testified in the Grand Jury that Cohen went back with him the next morning. I did 11231 not read that to you. Here he said Cohen was only with him the night. He did not want to get poor Mr. Cohen in trouble, so he took the radio back to him. Stole seventy-four cars alone, some of which were used in murders, and he knows this one was going to be used in a "schlomming" job, so he went to "Muggsy" to get the radio. I am wasting time on that. However, we will get to the next proposition.

When is he supposed to see Capone? Now, he is supposed to see Capone the next day. Here is the first time for Capone in the case, on September 11th. At 4 p. m. he is supposed to see 11232 Capone. Let me tell you this, gentlemen, and this is important: In the Grand Jury he said it was 7 p. m. Once it is light, the other time it is dark. The Grand Jury—don't confuse yourself—was no more than a year ago, so his memory now is no better than then, but when you manufacture a story you get a little bit mixed up sometimes, and hours do not make so much difference. This, to me, is the most laughable thing of anything. Remember, he never gives Capone a conversation at all. Weiss orders him to do this; Strauss orders him to do that, but in this trial, because the District Attorney in his opening told you Strauss is dead, so we have to have a live substitute for a dead man, and it appears that he said in the Grand Jury these different things took place through Strauss, he just changes the name. What is in a name for Mr. Jackie Berman of Miami, who forgot he used the alias when he was testifying in Monticello? So he changes it from Strauss, who is dead, and he put in Capone, who is alive. That is taken from the Grand Jury. Oh, how you could send 11234 anybody even to jail on a disdemeanor charge on testimony of that character is more than I can say. But the most ridiculous thing of all—and I am not going to take time doing it because it will take too long—is this man, born and brought up in Brownsville, who on his examination tells you that he knows every street there by heart, he has got to rope him in, so Capone took him eight times over the route. You take the map in the jury room. I don't want to waste time. The route consists of about this, that is about all, about one or two turns, that is all the route consists of, so he had to take 11235 a man who knew Pennsylvania Avenue and Blake Avenue and Van Sinderen Avenue, and he took him eight times, back and forth, back and forth, back and forth, and then he gives the conversation.

"There is a man going to be killed." You know what the purpose of that is? That is the purpose to show that Capone was in on the murder.

Let us pass that; let us pass that. The most significant thing of all is the alleged next meeting. I am not going to waste time. In the Grand Jury he said Strauss told him to steal the plates. In the Grand Jury he said he drove the car, he, Bernstein, drove the car over the route. Here he says Capone drove the car and "I sat alongside of him." You cannot make those kind of mistakes. Either you drove it or he drove it. If you drove it over the route, he would have to tell you the streets; if he drove it over the route, you would just watch the route, 11237 but that was not a good enough story that he told to the Grand Jury, because if he, Bernstein, drove the car, Capone would have to say, "Turn here, turn there," so he has got to put Capone at the wheel. "Capone always has my car, so Capone sat at the wheel," but either he lied to the Grand Jury of this county or he lied to you, and you can take your choice, whichever one you want.

Now let us go to the next proposition. What I am trying to figure out is this: You know in his examination how mysteriously Capone dis-11238 appears from the picture when he forgets about it, is more than I can conceive of. You know when he came to going to the park, "Where is Capone?" Oh, Mr. Turkus had to direct his attention. "Wasn't he there?" "Yes, he had my car, so he must have been there," was his original answer, but here is the point: There is no Capone any place. They go to the park. There are supposed to be guns distributed. Capone is not there. That is his story. They look over the place and he stays in the park. Capone is not there. They then arrange to delay it until the next morning, and Capone is not there. And what am I asking myself is this: There is one little loophole in this man's whole story about Capone, "How did Capone know to be on Junius Street on Sunday morning at six o'clock?" Figure that one out. How did he know to be on Junius Street at any time? There is nothing in this conversation or alleged conversation that Capone said, "I will be waiting with a car," in fact, the testimony is that when they left the park he went over and delivered the car and when he came back everybody was in Cohen's 11240 house. That is his testimony. There is no question that anybody went to Junius Street and said, "Here, don't wait here any longer. We are going to do it on Sunday." There is no testimony that anybody left the house all night, in fact, he says he did not sleep all night, in fact, they gave him a sandwich and they left, and so how in the world did Capone know to be at Junius Street on Sunday after the alleged killing? Well, Mr. Turkus, the only answer I can see to that is, "How do we know that somebody unbeknown to Bernstein did not go over 11241 and tell him? How do we know that Capone did not have a telephone? How do we know this? How do we know that?" But I say to you that I am going to ask the Court to charge you that you cannot speculate a man's life away. You are bound by the evidence in this case, and there is nothing in this case that at any time Capone agreed to wait on Junius Street, and there is nothing in this case to show that Capone at any time knew that they would be on Junius Street on the following morning, assuming that the killing is true.

Well, the District Attorney says he has a system. "We have a system," says he. You know, gentlemen, if a man signs a written statement, if a man is questioned and he gives answers, under our law as it now exists, we have a right to demand that that statement be handed to the Court to see if any inconsistencies exist, and if so, it is the duty of the Court to hand so much of the inconsistencies to counsel as he, the Court, sees fit. You saw that happen when 11243 I got the Grand Jury minutes of Bernstein. What is this system of the District Attorney's office? What is this system that takes no statement from murderers—confessed murderers? What is this system that does not take down in question-and-answer form from confessed murderers, so that counsel may be able to confront them with their original story; but they stayed eighteen months together, eating, sleeping, playing baseball, and concocting; and what is in this system that makes the District Attorney take affidavits, sworn ones, from persons who are not 11244 confessed murderers? Oh, he took a sworn statement from Sobler. Did that violate his system? He was tickled to death to bring that out when Mr. Sobler took the stand. He took a sworn affidavit, if not two of them, from "Muggsy" Cohen. He showed it to you. He asked "Muggsy" Cohen about it. Was the system violated then? Oh, no, nothing from Bernstein, nothing from Tannenbaum, nothing from Magoon. N-n-n-n-n-n-n. No statements, no signing, no questions, no answers, only from men who might be telling the truth and who made affidavit and who are not being confined down in the Half Moon Hotel, eating steaks, Mr. Cohen and the rest. What is this system? I don't understand it. I don't understand it.

Well, I think I have pretty well covered Bernstein. I could have covered him much better. Oh, even remember the race track. You know, I knew what I had in mind. I made a statement to you as to what I intended to do when I opened this case, I mean in the formal questioning. My opinion changed subsequently and I take the responsibility that the defendant has offered no 11246 evidence, the defendant Capone. Judge will charge you that that cannot be used at all. Counsel is responsible for that. I accepted that responsibility, and I still accept it. But when, at the outset of this case, Bernstein took the stand, I asked him about whether he had ever been to the race track in Queens. What is so hard about a question, "Were you ever to the race track?" "What do you mean?" The Judge said, "You have to make your question more specific." So as soon as I said, "Were you ever to the race track when Louis Capone—" "Oh, sure I was. Sure I was to the Queens race 11247 track plenty of times with Louis Capone." What is another little lie for him? This man's testimony so reeks with perjury that I cannot see, even if there were outside evidence, how you gentlemen could in any wise give him any credence whatsoever.

Well, we will pass to the next man. I think the Judge is going to charge you in this case—of course, you are going to be bound by his charge—that the only evidence tending to connect the defendant Capone with this trial is the evidence of Seymour Magoon. I think you are going to get that charge. In other words, as far as your verdict is concerned, the liberty of Louis Capone is going to rest on that hair-line alleged conversation. I am coming to that Seymour Magoon. So it becomes my duty to talk to you about Magoon. As I said, I could talk for hours more about this man Bernstein and tell you contradictions. I would tire you, I would tire myself, and I don't think I would accom-11249 plish any more than I have accomplished by showing you these contradictions.

Now let us take a peek at the next character and the only character who affects us, so that you won't be bored. He is not going to take as long as the other fellow. Seymour Magoon. Well, he started off life pretty nice. "I want to be truthful with you, Counsellor, I never was interested in work or school." Why, he started when he was in public school. He says he knows the defendant Capone for seven or eight years, but he was in public school twice that long, if not more. He started when he was in public

did not even know the difference between sixteen and fourteen. Well, in 1928, that is thirteen years ago, years and years before he ever heard of Capone, at 1:30 in the morning, he committed a robbery on William J. Kennedy, a poor bricklayer whom he had never seen before, and with a fellow named White, and he stole the automobile, made him drive him some place, beat him up, robbed him,—force and armed—when a kid, before he ever heard of any of these defendants. That is the start of his background. He, take 11252 orders? That man who admits that in addition to that he has never served a day in his life, that he waived immunity on that charge and had it dismissed against him? I wonder did he tell the Grand Jury in that case a little white lie, the man that never told a lie, only little white lies? Can you remember my asking him, "Did you falsify? Did you testify fasely before that Grand Jury in 1928?" Remember he got out of that? He now admits that he stuck up William Kennedy, this bricklayer, at 1:30 in the morning. He admits that now. You know why he admits it now? Five years have passed. He cannot be 11253 prosecuted. He admits that now. But what did he tell the Grand Jury that led them to let him go? He does not remember, says he, whether he testified falsely then. He started pretty early, but he said, "Counsellor, I told little white lies." He did not even tell big ones, only little white lies. Do you remember his expression?

Again, he took the employees of Max Udell & Son. This was in 1930, before he ever heard of this defendant, according to him. You remembered they robbed the goods from the concern and everything and, lo and behold, he had a good detour during the few minutes that he might have seen my friend, the illustrious Mr. Bernstein. Here is his answer to that: "If you say so, Counsellor." You remember that is when I told the Court he was getting too nice to me and I said, "We'd better adjourn for the day." I asked him, "Isn't it a fact that you threatened these people, these Udell people?" "If you say 11255 so, Counsellor, it must be so." That is when I said, "Don't say if I say so." "He is getting too affable. Let us take an adjournment." He was starting to agree with me.

He was a shylock for years, roughly. He was in business with this fellow Burns. He was familiar with the vicinity. He had a fight with a patrolman by the name of Murphy. He knocked him unconscious. He rented a garage—there is another one—this is very important in this case. Mr. Bernstein told you—I do not know why I passed it, because this is applicable to this case—11256 Mr. Bernstein told you in this case that the guns he thinks were delivered by Joe Pilch and he thinks Joe Pilch delivered the guns, and on cross-examination I brought out that he told the Grand Jury that it was Joe Pilch delivered the guns and on cross-examination I brought out that he knew Joe Pilch for years and there was no question. If Joe Pilch is in custody, why wasn't he brought to substantiate Mr. Bernstein about the delivery of the guns? I will tell you why: Because Mr. Bernstein now changes his story and Mr. Pilch's probably would not stand up to it, so we have no Pilch in the court-room here, because the story is changed. Think that over. Does that create a doubt? Well, we had passed Bernstein. I thought I would not have to go back to him.

This fellow has never been convicted of a crime in his life except vagrancy, and he admits participating in a crime of murder in Brooklyn, in the Bronx, and about the oil can in the death of Shulman; he helped get rid of the body of Feinstein—oh, I forgot, I forgot—way back before he knew any of these defendants, and I don't admit 11258 he knows any of them, but before he says he knows the defendants, he was a little playful and he shot one fellow by the name of Whitey Whelan and never was prosecuted. I wonder if he told a little white lie that time—and another fellow whose name was Jerry, whose last name he does not even know, both of them were shot in this Borough of Brooklyn, never prosecuted for that—maybe they feared to prosecute him, and that was long before he was supposed to have known any of these defendants. I wonder if he told little white lies to get himself out of those 11259 scrapes. Well, maybe he did. But let us come to what he says here. What is his present status? Because in order to get the background you must know the status of the individual. His present status is the same as Bernstein's. There are no charges against him at this time—no charges. The murders which he admits he committed, he has no charge against him for, even the one in the Bronx where he says he signed a waiver of immunity; he is only held as a material witness. Pretty good pay-off for a man to go on that stand and lie about somebody else to protect his own hide, pretty good pay-off, pretty good motive, pretty good incentive for an act of perjury.

Well, you have to have somebody to furnish corroboration, so it might as well be Magoon. Now let us see. I do not know whether you noticed how dissatisfied Mr. Turkus was at the beginning by Mr. Magoon's testimony. I do not know whether you noticed how he struggled to get Magoon to give a conversation. I do not know whether you noticed how Mr. Turkus 11261 asked him was the word "luck" used and Magoon answered, "Not that night, the next night." And, lo and behold, if you seek the testimony, nothing was ever said about an alleged conversation, about the word "luck" after that question had been asked him. I do not know whether you noticed any of those things or not. I do not know whether you noticed Mr. Turkus walk over to Mr. Klein, his assistant, and start to talk to him, and go back. I do not know whether you noticed that Mr. Turkus even threatened he was going to impeach his pet witness, Mr. Magoon, 11262 when I went ahead and raised an objection. I do not know whether you noticed any of those, but they all took place in this court-room, and finally, by a dint of a great deal of strategy, we have two things that Magoon said, two things, and upon those two things you are asked to find a verdict of guilty against this man. The one is a conversation alleged to have been had in the fall of 1938; the other is a conversation alleged to have been had in the defendant's home in 1939. Now, remember, gentlemen, that it is the contention of the prosecution—and I am not going to cover that portion of the testimony at all—that Magoon was asked to follow this man Rubin. Isn't it significant—and you can have this testimony read; I am not quoting verbatim, to save time, because it is in my memory and it would take too long to give you the pages, but if there is any doubt as to whether what I am telling you are the actual facts, borne out by the written testimony here, that is, briefly, having taken the length of time that it did, you can have it read over. That is clear. That you are entitled to. Mr. Magoon 11264 says that in the fall of 1938, first it was Weiss that spoke to him; then it was Strauss that spoke to him. He got orders from Weiss and he got orders from Strauss, and as he was leaving, Capone is supposed to have said something. Here is a peculiar thing. Magoon says that when he was told by Weiss (this is at 2325 to 2327) in the presence of Capone to go to Ratner's Restaurant tomorrow morning, that Magoon testified that he knew Berger for two years. Now, get this in your mind. Magoon said that when he was asked by Weiss to go to 11265 Ratner's Restaurant he had already known Berger for two years, so there was no necessity at all of anybody saying anything about who Berger was. He knew him. But Berger testified when he had the conversation, the alleged conversation, with Weiss, that he, Berger, was asked by Weiss, "Do you know Magoon?" and Berger said, "Maybe if I see him I might be able to recognize him." One said he knew him for two years. Poor Magoon is not getting steaks and chops. He is up in the Bronx. Berger and the rest of them are in the steak and chop department down in the Half Moon, so they cannot tally as well, so (1) Berger, he does not even know Magoon, but maybe if he sees him he might be able to recognize him. Magoon wants to add it on, lay it on thick, because he only tells little white lies. That is a little white lie, just to add on he knows him when he does not know him. To him that is a white lie. So he said yes, he knew him. That is only the beginning of the conversation. Here:

11267 "Q. What else did Weiss say? A. He says, 'After you find out what is what, come back on the corner and we'll see what we have to do'—not in those words, but to that effect."

"Q. After the defendant Weiss gave you those instructions, what did he do? After he told you this that you have just told the jury, to meet Berger in Ratner's restaurant, and the other instructions, what did Weiss do? A. I don't know. I left the corner."

This was where Mr. Turkus started to try and get this conversation.

11268 "Q. Before you left the corner, did you have any talk with either Capone, Reles, or Strauss? A. Not that night."

Compare that. Compare that. It is a physical impossibility that this man is telling the truth, because, according to the testimony of Berger, Berger said that he, Berger, went to East New York that night with Weiss, picked up Harry Strauss; but, of course, Louis Capone is alive, Harry Strauss is dead—he picked up Harry Strauss and then went to Cohen's house, and after leaving Cohen's house Weiss then asked Berger whether he knew Magoon. How do you account for it? Berger, the man whom he is supposed to have been meeting, this alleged conversation on the street corner is happening at the same time that Berger says that he went to East New York and went to Cohen's house, in respect to the same subject-matter. It cannot be.

Well, what is the next thing? The next thing is, the following morning he, Magoon, is supposed to have gone to Cuppie's restaurant. This is only an insignificant thing but just shows you how far they go. You remember Berger testified that Cuppie went in the machine with Magoon when they left the restaurant to go up Fifth Avenue. No. You see one is in a jail and the other is in the hotel. Magoon did not get the story right so Magoon's story is that Cuppie went in a car with Berger. Berger's story is that Cuppie went in the car with Magoon. Each one of these is trying to shove it on to the other fellow and they have not had time to tally. But, here is a peculiar thing. Magoon had testified that Goldstein and he and Strauss and a few others were buddies for fifteen years; they visited one another socially; they were out almost every night together; that he and Reles practically slept together and were socially bosom companions. You notice that neither Reles nor Goldstein is brought into either of these conversations. His boss is never around. His boss is never around.

The Court: Mr. Rosenthal, I will excuse the jury. The jury is excused. Do not discuss the case.

Mr. Rosenthal: I except to the Court excusing.

11272 Summation on Behalf of Defendant Capone

(The jury retired from the court-room.)

The Court: I don't want to cause you any loss of face. Don't you want to take that back about Reles?

Mr. Rosenthal: Maybe you misunderstood me. In these conversations alleged to be had, it is funny that Goldstein and Reles were never around. That is in the testimony. I am not saying anything about Reles at this time.

11273 The Court: I thought you meant around here, in court.

Mr. Rosenthal: No; read what I said.

Mr. Turkus: The words were "brought in" that I heard.

The Court: If I understood it that way—

Mr. Rosenthal: You misunderstood.

The Court: —the jury would be quite apt to understand it that way.

Mr. Rosenthal: You misunderstood me. My intention was this, that these conversations they are alleged to have had on this street corner, that neither Reles nor Goldstein were around or 11274 brought in.

The Court: Isn't that far-fetched anyway?

Mr. Rosenthal: No, it is in the testimony that Goldstein was never around. I asked Magoon that particularly. That is one of the questions.

The Court: What about?

Mr. Rosenthal: Because it is contended by Magoon that he, Strauss, Reles and these people are close bosom companions and members of a combination.

The Court: I will undertake this responsibility. In order to avoid confusing the jury, which has not been informed of Reles' tragic death during the course of this trial, which is a matter notorious throughout this city, I will instruct you to make no reference to Reles unless there is something in the record showing that he was away. You can take your exception.

Mr. Rosenthal: As long as we are here, the point that I am trying to bring home,—

The Court: I understand your point. What may confuse the Court may confuse the jury.

Mr. Rosenthal: I except.

The Court: I saw Mr. Turkus jump up just 11276 as if he responded mentally in the same way.

Mr. Rosenthal: I did not mean it as your Honor understood.

The Court: You know how I stand. Do not refer to that again.

Mr. Rosenthal: I won't. I have enough other things to refer to. Does the same thing apply to Goldstein, because it is in the record that I asked him whether Goldstein was there?

Mr. Turkus: Goldstein was electrocuted.

The Court: It is worthless as an argument.

Mr. Turkus: That is the way it sounded.

Mr. Rosenthal: I will take your Honor's ruling. 11277

The Court: I would not mention it. That is my judgment.

Mr. Rosenthal: I will take your Honor's ruling. It is in the record so I cannot help mentioning it.

The Court: Bring back the jury.

Mr. Rosenthal: The opening of Mr. Turkus said that Strauss is dead.

Mr. Turkus: Let me just say this, Judge, for the record. It was brought out, I think by Mr. Rosenthal—

11278 The Court: Will you let me interrupt, please? Mr. Rosenthal, you understand the danger of this. If, by any possibility, through the grapevine, possibly by passing a newsstand and seeing the screaming headlines about Reles' death and features on the first page, so much as one juryman has been able to get that fact to the jury it will prejudice your argument and it will cause you to lose face with the jury, if you appear to be in the position, even though 11279 mistakenly, of misleading the jury.

Mr. Turkus: May I say this: More than that, the record of this trial indicates that from October, 1934, to October, 1936, Reles was in jail so that he could not possibly have had any connection with this homicide. It is a very dangerous situation.

Mr. Rosenthal: As long as your Honor took this recess, suppose you take five or ten minutes, Judge?

The Court: It will disorganize the court-room.

11280 Mr. Rosenthal: I want to review and leave some of the things out which I have.

The Court: You won't have any trouble about that.

Mr. Rosenthal: If you give me five minutes, I won't.

The Court: Bring the jury back.

(The jury returned to the court-room.)

Mr. Rosenthal: In respect to this conversation, gentlemen, of 1938, in the Fall, I want you to keep in mind this, that it was supposed to have been had with Weiss and with Strauss but the allegation is that Capone is supposed to have been there. Now, how are you going to ring that in to Capone? He is not supposed to have given any orders. He is not supposed to have given any directions. So, after struggling for a while and trying to get him—did Capone say anything? Did Capone say anything? Did Capone say anything?—they finally got him to say, "Capone said he is hurting Lepke and you got to hit him in the head." Remember, there are three conversations, lasting three nights, during which all of this is supposed to have been gone into; direction, go uptown, go downtown, go to Ratner's, stay up there, come back—given orders, given directions —all this time the defendant Capone is supposed to be a silent observer but here is where Magoon, stationed in the Bronx, away from the Half Moon Hotel, again did not jibe with the other man because he wanted to add, he wanted to add, so he said he told Weiss that there was a cop guarding this man and Weiss said, "We will have to whack the cop, too." What he forgets—in the same conversation that he told Weiss or Weiss told him that as long as there was a cop they did not want to hurt any cop so that they should not do anything to Rubin. Do you remember that? How do you coincide with them? Each one of them is telling the truth. That is the point at issue.

As far as this man Magoon is concerned, just like I have with the others, I have a number of contradictions which I have not even bothered to tell you of, not only on this trial but on the trial in which he has testified before.

So that conversation, I think the Court is going to charge you, in so far as it affects the defendant Capone, is not what we would term corroboration.

Then, say you, why is Capone here and why do we have to judge him? The reason why you have to judge Capone is because Mr. Magoon says that in April, 1939, he went to Capone's home to get a little advice. Isn't it significant, gentlemen, he does not even know where Capone 11285 lives. He thinks it is on Avenue K. He thinks it is a couple of blocks away from Utica Avenue. He thinks that it was in 1939 he lived in Avenue K. He merely thinks. He is supposed to be a great friend of this defendant. Why, he went to him for advice. Even though Mr. Strauss and the rest of them were his close friends and buddies with whom he had committed crimes, according to the record here, Mr. Tannenbaum was in on a murder with him, according to the record, and I don't know whether Mr. Bernstein was or not, but he is supposed to have gone for advice. "Mr. Capone, I don't want anything
11286 from you; all I want is advice." "Why ask me?" he says, so he says, "Well, I do not ask you. I only came to you for you to advise me." Three years after this killing, this man Magoon is supposed to have walked into this man's house at an address which he does not even know to this day and upon that this man's life—

Well, let us see. When he spoke of Capone, according to him, Capone said to him, "What are you worried about?" He said, "I worked in the Rosen thing and it was right on Sutter Avenue and I was not made." Get these words. Upon this and this alone rests your verdict in so far as it affects the defendant whom I represent. Even if you were to believe this man Bernstein, because if you don't believe him then of course even this does not amount to anything and if you do not believe this, that does not amount to anything, but whichever way you take it, this liar Bernstein and this isolated sentence are all you have in this whole case with the exception of three little items which I will talk about as soon as I finish this—"I worked on the Rosen thing and it was right on 11288 Sutter Avenue and I was not made."

Well, now, according to this man Bernstein—let us go back and see whether we believe his story. Let us see whether we believe his story. Did Capone work on Sutter Avenue? Was Capone on Sutter Avenue? Why, all that is alleged by Bernstein that Capone did was to drive in an automobile on Sutter Avenue and as he was driving along, not even stopping the automobile, he pointed out a store and said, "There is where a man is going to be killed," and drove around through Pennsylvania, Blake 11289 and Van Sinderen Avenue and drove around again and again and again and again, so he was not on Sutter Avenue. How could he be made? If this statement is true, how could he be made? What else did Capone do, according to Bernstein, the perjurer, even if you believe him? Why, he stood over on Van Sinderen Avenue, 14 blocks away from Sutter Avenue, 14 blocks away, with an automobile. Are those the only two things which it is alleged by the prosecution that this man did? Then, what is the meaning of this sentence: "I worked on the Rosen thing and it was right on Sutter Avenue and I was not made"? Why, the very conversation, all the alleged conversations that were had, were never had on Sutter Avenue. He did not go and watch from a doorway. He did not watch from a park. He did not go over and look at the store. He did not go in and shoot the gun. He did not have the motor running in front of the door. All it is alleged in this case that he is supposed to have done, which is ridiculous, is that he is sup-11291 posed to have taken this man Bernstein on a ride in Bernstein's own automobile—with a change of face; one time it is supposed to be him driving, the other time Bernstein—and did not even stop in front of the door, according to Bernstein, and pointed out a store and said, "A man is going to be killed." So he was not on Sutter Avenue and if he was not on Sutter Avenue, how could he be made? So you see the ridiculousness of the entire conversation, and upon that a man's life is at stake in this courtroom because that is all that there is, even if 11292 you believe Mr. Bernstein, even if you believe Mr. Bernstein. Why, this man who says that when he was first questioned—let us take the background of this man for a second because upon this—I have left all these contradictions and other things out, gentlemen—I cannot leave this out—

"Q. You do not expect to be electrocuted for any of the murders you have committed, do you? A. I hope not.

"Q. You do not expect to be? A. I hope not.

"Q. Would you lie to save your own life? A. No, sir.

"Q. Your answer is you would not lie to save your own life, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you ever lie in your life? A. Little white lies.

"Q. White lies? A. Little white lies.

"Q. You have been telling little white lies pretty nearly all your life, haven't you? A. No, sir.

"Q. Well, from the time you went to public school and started to steal you told little white lies, didn't you? A. Yes, sir. 11294

"Q. And you continued on telling little white lies all the way through? A. Just at intervals.

"Q. But you never told anything but little white lies? A. Yes."

There should be wings sprouting from that man. Little white lies! Never interested in school. Never interested in work. Started off from infancy, without the aid, dictation, help, suggestion, or instigation of anybody—the little white lies. Well, let us see about the little white lies. He was questioned way back in 1940. Did he do anything about the Rosen case? Oh, no, not he. Through pages of testimony it appears that this man says that he definitely, both for Judge Foley in the Bronx and for Judge O'Dwyer in Brooklyn, signed a written statement, a written statement he says, with a stenographer present, not one, not two, twenty or more. And he told me—and it is in the record here—I will use their words—it is in the record —it is in the book—he told me that he signed a statement for Judge O'Dwyer, signed it. Where is it? Where is that statement, because you have a right to believe that if he lied once he has put the integrity of Judge O'Dwyer and 11295

11296 Mr. Turkus in issue here. If he lied then, what assurance have you got that he has not lied to you? Oh, I believe Mr. Turkus. I believe Judge O'Dwyer. He lied. That is what we say, he lied, but what difference is there if he lied about my client or he lied about Judge O'Dwyer and Mr. Turkus? Can you tell me the difference? Little white lies. Little white lies. But the fact is that there is no statement. Oh, there is no statement from any of these men because state-11297 ments would have to be turned over to the defense and would show whether there has been a concoction among these criminals in the last 18 months while they have been eating their steaks and playing baseball.

Well, I could tell you about Mr. Magoon's associations and I could tell you about a number of things, but, before I pass to the three short witnesses who made cursory reference to my client, I want to show you this. You know Magoon and Tannenbaum have been close friends since 1933. I want you to get the sig-11298 nificance. Magoon says—and I am quoting, Mr. Turkus, from 2425 of the record:

"Q. Did you meet him"— I am referring to Tannenbaum; this is Magoon's testimony—

"Q. Did you meet him (meaning Tannenbaum) at Saratoga and Livonia Avenue at any time? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you see him at Saratoga and Livonia Avenue frequently during the years 1933, '34 and '35? A. Yes."

Then the Court asked a question:

"Q. Was he a member of the combination? A. Yes, sir."

Do you see the significance of this? Magoon says that Allie Tannenbaum hung out on the corner, hung out on the corner of Saratoga and Livonia, where this defendant is supposed to have been since 1933 and was a member of the combination. Magoon says that he saw him frequently on that corner since 1933 and yet Allie Tannenbaum says that he never knew Louis Capone in his life until the year 1938. Figure it out. Tannenbaum is not trying to help Capone but Magoon is stationed up in the Bronx 11300 and is not one of the baseball players so there is no time to tally, there is no time to tally with Allie, so Allie tells the truth in this one instance and has Capone entering the picture in 1938, two years after the killing, but Magoon has got to put him there in 1932 in order to have a conversation in 1939, three years after the killing.

What more can I say, gentlemen? I say that the life of my client hangs on this alleged conversation three years after a murder, supposedly had in his home, without solicitation of any character by him of the man coming there, and then the man says, he says, "I was 11301 in on Sutter Avenue on the Rosen thing", whereas the fact is that he never was on Sutter Avenue so how could he be made, excepting that he rode past in an automobile. Well, let us pass that. I think I have made that impressive enough.

Well, the District Attorney is going to yell to you, association, association. Let us see. You know it is a pretty far-fetched proposition in this case. You have to get Capone associated some way with the defendant Lepke, don't you, or Buchalter? Well, according to Allie Tannenbaum, Allie Tannenbaum, the man who says that he had been working for the defendant Buchalter since 1931, and has been in his office day after day, four or five times a week, and collecting a salary up to 1937, 1938, 1939, says that he never saw Capone in his life, which means either at the place of business of the defendant Buchalter or in East New York, but they have to slip something in so the versatile Mr. Rubin goes on the stand and—listen to this— I think I am 11303 insulting your intelligence— "Do you know the defendant Capone?" "Yes." Never introduced to him. Never saw him in his life except twice. He tried to stretch it to three times on cross and went back to twice. Well, you would think he had a conversation or he was introduced, or something. "What is the first time you saw him?" Now in 1932, gentlemen, in 1932 he saw him walk into a place, had no conversation with him, was not introduced to him, does not know where the place is. I finally pinned him down to the small City of New York with its six mil-

11304 lion inhabitants and its thousands of miles of streets, including Central Park, but that is as near as I could get him to any particular place, but he saw him walk into a place unknown, the name of the place unknown, the place unknown, the hour, the day, the year, the month, all unknown, but he saw him walk in and—here comes the dirty part of it—suspicion—oh, they are not trying to get the jury to be unfair to these defendants, oh, no—they don't want any outside influences; they don't want any suspicions to put a man's life away. Oh, no. He walked in—remember this—he walked in with Buggy Goldstein, he walked into a room and he saw him for a fleeting glance, fleeting glance. Why, could you remember any person that you saw ten years ago walk into an office and where he walked into? So he is going to say, yes, somebody told him about him; but the point is this, that, according to Rubin, nobody told him anything about him. He was not even introduced and he did not even know who the man was and he does not even today know who he was. The next time he saw him was in the Fall of 1935. 11306

I merely asked him one question, did it have anything to do with this case. No. So you see on this man's testimony Mr. Turkus has offered an association between the defendant Capone and the other defendants.

Well, Mr. Rubin has been taken care of by other counsel. He does not affect me at all, excepting that he says he saw—and remember that in the millions of people that exist, with all the millions of people that exist, nobody ever saw this man any place either in the Raleigh or any other place, nobody.

Oh, Mr. Turkus, you are just as cute for the 11307
D. A. as you were for the defense. He asked witness after witness, Shapiro, Mrs. Isaacson, Mrs. Weiss, oh, I don't know how many, "Do you know Farvel Cohen?" "Yes." "Did you know Buggsy Goldstein?" "Yes." Did you know this one and the other one? All the different names, all had aliases. That was done for a purpose. Alias so-and-so. The only one he forgot about was Bill Cody and forgot to call him "Buffalo Bill," but he never asked anybody. "Do you know the defendant Louis Capone?" Think it over. Think it over. Sobler —any one of them? Any one of them? He asked Shapiro did he know Weiss. He asked Shapiro did he know Cohen. He asked Shapiro did he know Tannenbaum. He asked Sobler. He asked every one of them. Ah, did not ask anybody about Capone. Now, then, he gives me a winning smile. I suppose he is going to say, why didn't I ask him. I am going to give him a good answer to that. It is not my duty to prove 11309 lack of association. It is very, very, very safe to assume that if any one of these men whom he questioned before they got on the stand or after they got on knew the defendant Capone, that would have been the first question that he asked them. But, again, even if I did not ask, you cannot take suspicion; you cannot conjecture; you cannot surmise; you cannot read in. The fact is that according to this testimony it is barren about any association in any of these places.

All right, the next witness was Berger. Well, 11310 Berger is the "hello" conversation, if you remember. Berger said he knew Capone and at eleven o'clock of a night—and I have discussed that before—while riding in Brooklyn with Weiss, Weiss got out of the car and Weiss walked over to Capone; Weiss walked over, they had a conversation outside of his hearing, and then Capone walked back to the car and said "Hello, Berger," and Berger said, "Hello, Capone," and he went away. What is that for? That is to show that somebody saw him talking to Weiss on September 11th. Another suspicion, another circumstance, but you cannot speculate as to what was said there. Are you going to speculate a man's life away on what might have been said? Oh, you cannot do that. And even if you were going to do it as to Berger or Rubin, let me tell you this; they are both, in my opinion, accomplices to this crime from their own admissions, from their own admissions, and if they are accomplices they must be corroborated. And why do I say they are accomplices? They got a good pay-off in this case and this cannot be disputed. I want to ask the District Attorney, 11312 and I defy him to answer. My defendant was indicted in 1940. That Grand Jury is out of existence. Why, in 1941, after this trial started, after the trial started, after you men were suffering, being taken away from your homes and your families, was it that some unknown Grand Jury that had nothing to do with this case were permitted to have these two men appear before them? I will tell you why.

The Court: Will you pardon me a minute? Whom are you arguing about?

Mr. Rosenthal: Berger and Rubin. They both 11313 appeared. I will give you the pages—

The Court: Wait a minute.

Mr. Rosenthal: —before the Grand Jury after this trial started.

The Court: You are on a question of law now and for that reason, to avoid confusion, the Court may have to make a preliminary ruling.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I state what the purpose is to your Honor?

The Court: Yes, but you may not argue it to the jury.

Mr. Rosenthal: I can state it up there.

The Court: In addressing the Court, I will let you state it, without oratory, from where you are. The jury will disregard this.

Mr. Rosenthal: I will go up there. I don't want to have it said I said it in front of the jury. Let Mr. Turkus come up.

Mr. Turkus: There has already been a challenge handed to the District Attorney about a Grand Jury proceedings.

The Court: This does not call for colloquy.

11315 Berger was the finger man?

Mr. Rosenthal: That is right.

The Court: I am going to charge the jury that he was an accomplice as a matter of law. You need not argue that to the jury.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I state the purpose that I had in mind? The purpose is to show that he procured immunity if he appeared before the Grand Jury and testified.

The Court: You do not have to argue that he was an accomplice. It is a close question because he says he did not know there was going to be a murder, that he thought it was going to 11316 be a "schlam", but I am giving the defendant the benefit of the doubt and I am charging the jury that he was an accomplice.

And Rubin, I am going to charge the jury, that I find no evidence justifying the Court in submitting the question of accomplice to the jury as to Rubin; that he must therefore be viewed as a non-accomplice witness.

Mr. Rosenthal: Of course, that is the other defendants. I have no interest in that.

The Court: Yes, I am going to charge that.

Mr. Rosenthal: I won't waste any time.

The Court: Berger and Bernstein are the two accomplices and the others are not. That is a question for the Court, not for the jury, because no question of accomplice as a matter of fact is going to be submitted to the jury.

Mr. Rosenthal: All right, then, may I just say this. The Court now has informed us of his attitude in respect to the witness Berger.

The Court: The charge has been prepared and I am just anticipating part of the charge.

Mr. Rosenthal: All right, sir. That being so, 11318 his testimony again must be viewed like Bernstein's, in other words, it has to be corroborated; but the point that I wanted to bring to your minds was this, that these men did not appear before the Grand Jury until after this trial started and if they were questioned regarding this particular crime, they were given immunity if they did not sign any waiver. Why? You have a right to think. Why did they wait until the trial started and take these two men before the Grand Jury? You think it over. I leave that to you.

baum and I have already discussed that he said he only met my client in the year 1938. You can take your choice but you cannot speculate. If Tannenbaum was where he said he was, namely, in Buchalter's place of business, every day of the week as well as frequenting Saratoga and Livonia Avenues and a member of the so-called combination as far back as 1932, and frequently on that street corner, and if Tannenbaum never saw or heard of the defendant Capone until 1938, then you can judge for yourselves whether or not Bernstein or Magoon is telling the truth because the two things could not be true.

Now, regarding Magoon, before I pass on to almost the conclusion, I want to call another thing to your attention. You know Tannenbaum told you that when he was questioned up in the mountains he told everything he knew to Judge O'Dwyer. Each one of these witnesses told all he knew when he once determined to talk. Not so Magoon. Magoon said nothing about the 11321 Rosen case until 1941. He was questioned twenty times. He could not fix the dates. It was between January and June, 1941. It was after January and he was questioned, questioned, questioned, questioned and questioned and the first time he ever mentioned the Rosen case to the District Attorney of Kings County was in 1941, a year after his arrest. A year after he had been questioned concerning his participation in other matters, and he is the only one who was not asked and did not volunteer. Think that over when you try to give credence to the statement which he made.

11322 Now, I have covered the testimony in so far as it affects my defendant. You know there are some very peculiar things in this case in so far as it affects my client. Mr. Turkus started out with Judge O'Dwyer starting war on the mob and everybody gets an alias. He started out by giving everybody an alias. I don't know Weiss from a hole in the ground. I don't know what his first name is. It is Emanuel, I understand here, but I know that if your name were Emanuel somebody would call you Mendy. My name is Sidney. Somebody calls me Sid. But they give aliases to everybody, alias Mendy Weiss, alias this one, alias that one, alias the other one. I don't know why it is, why we escaped observation. Capone has no alias. His name is Louis Capone. It was that when he was born. It stiil is that and he is the only one on the indictment that has not got some kind of a cognomen pinned to him. I forget some of these names. I tried to remember them. They certainly are good. Tear-eyed this one, Buggsy the other one, Cuppie the other one, Cock-eye the other one,—all kinds 11324 of names, but, thank God, they have not pinned any on my client. Now, that is number one.

Everybody is running all over the world, Tannenbaum, Bernstein—Florida, California, God knows where. They even have Weiss—and his lawyer has explained the reason, Kansas City, Denver, Texas—you have the map of the whole United States and everybody is running, everybody. Tannenbaum ran, Bernstein ran, everybody. There is no proof that Louis Capone was not home with his wife and his children until his arrest. He did not run. He did not run. 11325

Well, everybody is connected with unions. I heard figures so great in this trial that I started to get dizzy. I had to walk outside when I thought that I was supposedly educated, went to school and the years that I have studied and the work that I have done; it made me dizzy I confess. But is there a word of anything concerning Capone in any of them?

Well, another thing struck me. Why didn't Rubin, Berger or Tannenbaum say that in any of the conversations allegedly had with either Weiss or Buchalter that Capone's name was mentioned? Not a word throughout. Why, even there is an alleged conversation with the defendant Buchalter in which it was said or alleged to have been said, "Why do you worry?"—I think to Rubin—"They are looking for Cohen and Weiss and Shimmy." No mention of Capone, assuming that that conversation actually took place. I am now taking the face value of these alleged conversations.

Well, the witnesses, Mrs. Isaacson, Sidney
11327 Weiss, Blanche Weiss, Sobler, Carl Shapiro, and Berger, even Berger—you remember how Berger said that he hung out in Blum's candy store next to the station house over in New York, you remember that—and he was asked who hung out there and then you had another description of your Allie Tannenbaums, this one, that one, the other one. No Capone. Not one of these persons who took the stand, questioned—oh, I think one of the defense witnesses, Shapiro, that was called was questioned, I do not know, for a day or a day and a half—but not one word by Mr. Turkus, "Do you know the defendant Capone?", 11328 not one word, not one word.

Well, of course, Berger says he would lie to save himself from prison but not from the electric chair. Tannenbaum at least is truthful enough to say that he would die to escape the chair. But Magoon, n-n-n-n-n he would only tell white lies. He would not lie, not that big, soft-hearted Magoon. He would not lie to escape the chair.

Well, by now you should be tired of listening to my talking. I think I have spoken longer now than I have throughout the whole trial, with the exception of the time that I examined Mr. Bernstein and the time that I examined the little white liar. I think that would make a good one for Walt Disney. I might be able to make a little money on it. I have tried to keep you interested, gentlemen. I may have appeared facetious at times. If I did outwardly, I don't inwardly. The task which any man has, whether it be the District Attorney or defense counsel, is a very trying one. It is trying on their nerves. Even the Judge gets irritated. We all do. We 11330 are human beings. I do not know whether I have covered the things or not. As I lay awake last night, knowing that I had to sum up to this jury, a million thoughts went through my mind. There is any amount of things which I have not covered which I feel in my mind would convince any ordinary man, and I am only concerned in so far as my defendant is concerned, of the innocence of my client; but then, when you get up on your feet, you look at twelve men who have sat here, tired, want to go home, being kept away from their families, their friends, their asso- 11331 ciates, you wonder whether or not you could not over-do a situation by trying to impress things on them which they as ordinary common-sense individuals would ordinarily think of anyway.

You see there is nothing strange about jury duty, even though you have got a tough job. There is nothing strange about it. Why do we take twelve, as I said at the outset, rather than one? You know it is a moulding of opinion which makes the United States what it is in this troubled world, moulding together of the opinions, the thoughts, into one because if that were not true, there would be no necessity. How easy it would have been for me, if we would have had a separate trial. There would have been no five week jury; there would have been no five week trial, because, as far as the evidence in this case is concerned, our evidence would have been in in less time than it takes to snuff out a candle, practically or figuratively speaking.

You men are all of different walks. Each one of you has had different experience. That experience fits you to pit your mind against the 11333 other man's. That experience gives you the power to analyze in a different method than your fellow man. So that when you go in there and you argue among yourselves, without stubbornness, without rancor, without bitterness, you can see the light as others see it and you can see whether there is a fallacy in your argument and whether the argument advanced by others is a better argument, and then when you finally come down to moulding, moulding, moulding into the final form, you are able to say whether the State has proved its case. Well, I 11334 would rather the job was yours than mine. It is a disagreeable duty to anybody. I imagine it is disagreeable to Mr. Turkus or any Assistant District Attorney to have in his charge the prosecution where a man's life, finally pronounced by the Judge, may be at stake. It should be a hard job but, in the final analysis, whatever he thinks, whatever I think, whatever the Judge thinks, has nothing to do with you. The facts remain with you and you alone. That is our law and if that is carried out, gentlemen, no man can be heard to complain.

Now I say, and I think the Court will agree, I want you to listen carefully because law is foreign to most of you men, but the law in this case is a very important thing to me because if, when you listen to the Judge charge the law, he says to you: "Gentlemen, if you disbelieve Bernstein and if you believe or disbelieve the outside or alleged outside evidence, or if you believe either of them, you must acquit; if he says to you that there must be other evidence of an independent nature which you believe, 11336 tending to connect the defendant with the crime or you must acquit; if he says that in so far as the defendant Capone is concerned the People only seek to prove his guilt by the isolated statement of the little white liar Magoon and that even though you may believe Bernstein, which I consider to be physically impossible, even though you may believe him, if you disbelieve the statements or if it is insufficient to convince you that it is of such a nature as tends in your mind to connect this defendant with the crime, you must, whether you like it or not, 11337 whether you like his associates, whether you like his past life, whether you like his record, which of course is not in issue here, no matter what it may be, whether you like his face, whether you like my face, whether you like his wife, whether you like his children, whether you like his nationality, whether you like his religion, it does not make any difference what you like, it does not make any difference what you dislike, if in this case the Judge charges you that there is but one and one thing only that would justify you in finding a verdict of guilt in so far as it affects Capone and that is the statement of the little white liar Magoon, supposedly issued three years after the murder, in a house where he does not know where it is or where it is not, in the presence of nobody, and in the uncertain manner in which he has already testified, you must acquit this defendant."

All I ask of you is, when you listen to the Court charge you as I am sure the Court is going to charge you, that as far as the de-
11339 fendant Capone is concerned, there is nothing in this case except the word of an alleged accomplice Bernstein who alone cannot convict and the alleged statement to Magoon whom you must believe in its entirety and be convinced of the truth beyond a reasonable doubt before you can convict, if you hear that from the Court and if you have agreed with my interpretation of what the evidence is in so far as it affects, (1) the man who had the temerity to sit before a jury in a box and say, "I am telling the truth" as he did in this case and then tell you that he deliberately perjured himself, and the man who 11340 had the temerity to sit in this box and tell you he was telling the truth and then had the temerity to perjure himself, so that even the Judge said he is a liar; (2) Magoon, a man who would not lie and never lied in his life except little white lies, acquit this defendant; and I expect, gentlemen, knowing the attention which you have given to the evidence and to me, that you will do that.

I want to thank you sincerely for your attention.

The Court: Gentlemen of the jury, tomorrow is Saturday and we will resume at ten o'clock in the morning. I just want to say this. Please listen very carefully. This is a lengthy and very important case. It is desirable that your deliberations will not be forced, will not become hasty at the last minute from natural desires to be at the family firesides. I feel the same way as you do. I am very anxious to get through with the case, but the thing to have uppermost in our minds is that regardless of all other considerations, the steadiness and the deliberate 11342 procedure which has been followed up to the present time is necessitated by the importance of the issue in a case in which substantially a million words of testimony and otherwise are on the record. So we cannot get fussed at the last minute and have an abortive verdict. I hope that the case will go to you tomorrow. I hope that I may see things shape up so that it goes to you tomorrow so that you may deliberate. The law permits it to go on Saturday and permits the taking of a verdict on Sunday. The law does not permit the Court sitting on 11343

Sunday to take evidence or to charge. If, in the event that we don't finish tomorrow, because I cannot absolutely promise it, I am going to ask you to all be good soldiers for a little while longer. I am apt to go on vacation when this is through and it is delaying me the same as it is your anxiety to remain home. If by any mischance this case does not go to you tomorrow, then something has come up which may necessitate that on Monday morning we won't be able to work. One of the counsel has to be in the Court of Appeals and that takes precedence over this trial. However, I am with you heart 11344 and soul and hoping for the best results. My main worry is whether or not my voice will hold out for the charge. If it holds out for the charge, you will have the case tomorrow, but I cannot give a hasty charge in this case. It is going to be a lengthy charge. I will do my best.

Do not talk about the case, let nobody talk to you about it. Keep your minds open. Remember all other admonitions.

The jury may go.

11345 The defendants are remanded.

(Thereupon an adjournment was taken to November 29, 1941, at ten a. m.)

PROCEEDINGS, November 29, 1941.

(TRIAL RESUMED.)

The Court: There must be no interruption at any time during the summation.

11346

(Mr. Turkus made closing address to the jury, as follows:)

May it please the Court, Mr. Foreman, gentlemen of the jury:

No one who has sat through this trial can avoid being cognizant of the fact that for the past eleven weeks, in devotion to the performance of your duty as jurors, you have made sacrifices. You have been away from your personal affairs, deprived of the comfort and society of your loved ones at home, in devotion of your duties as jurors, to the end that the People of the State of New York may live without violence and without outrage at home, in peace and security, and the right to live without spoliation.

I trespass upon your time for just a moment to express my appreciation to Judge O'Dwyer for designating me to conduct this prosecution and to express my gratitude to my associates, Mr. Klein and Mr. Josephs, and to all law enforcement agencies, agents of the city, county and Federal, who have participated in the gathering of the evidence in this, a five year old 11348 murder.

Counsel for the defense are to be complimented for giving all their talent and energy to the most difficult, and I might say hopelessly difficult, case for the men at the Bar, to the end that the defendants on trial may have given to them and secured to them every legal and constitutional safeguard that the law of the land permits.

Never before in the history of criminal jurisprudence has there been brought to the Bar of justice at one time the "boss"—the man behind 11349 the scene—described by his own lawyer as the czar of the industrial rackets, with a half a million dollar take on one racket alone; number two, behind the scene, who directed the murder; and, number three, Lepke's lieutenant and triggerman, who fired the lethal shot. Never in the annals of criminal jurisprudence has the District Attorney so conclusively and irresistibly, fact upon fact, established a moving picture, a veritable moving picture reenactment, of the crime of murder in the first degree, as was portrayed to this jury in this court room in the five weeks of testimony by thirty-five witnesses and fifty-eight exhibits.

Can five weeks of testimony be erased from the jury's mind by the talents of defense counsel, whose technique was an education to the members of the Bar who sat through, week after week, in that other jury box. Every legal stratagem that the law of the land afforded was employed in behalf of Lepke, Capone and Weiss. It is true, as Mr. Talley said, that justice has 11351 been portrayed by the figure of a woman with a blindfold, as she evenly balances the scales of justice. That is something he lifted from my summation without benefit of the author in the Goldstein and Strauss case, but, nevertheless, it is true.

The Court: No, just confine yourself to the record.

Mr. Turkus: That record is before the Court. However, that is a symbol, gentlemen—a symbol with us that justice does not differentiate between the high and the low, the strong and the 11352 weak, or the poor and the rich. Yes, justice is blind to these things, but that does not mean that justice is deaf, dumb and blind, nor are jurors either. It is unthinkable that sometimes orations or talks of counsel can so befuddle an American jury that they can blot out of your minds week after week of testimony and make the evidence meaningless. There is only one issue in this case—only one—are these defendants at the Bar guilty as charged or are they innocent? That is the issued that has to be decided with common sense and understanding, and I hope, as I go on, that my personal feelings are not reflected in anything that I say to you, for it is not my personal feelings that matter, nor my inferences that I draw from the testimony, but yours and yours alone. And if there is anything that I say that does not agree with your concept of the evidence, disregard it. I tell it to you as an inference as I see it.

What is more powerful than the facts? Five weeks ago the District Attorney set forth what he said the proof would reveal in this court room. Let us analyze and reason. I will take you through the opening statement, sentence by sentence, paragraph by paragraph, to refresh your recollection, if that, indeed, needs any, that every fact stated therein has been conclusively proven and that the guilt of Lepke, Capone and Weiss has been established beyond the shadow of a doubt. Five weeks ago the District Attorney said he would establish that shortly before seven o'clock on the morning of Sunday, September 13, 1936, a uniformed police officer who was patrolling his beat on Sutter Avenue suddenly observed a man in the middle of the street frantically waving both arms, shouting, "Police, murder." The police officer ran to his side. The civilian quickly blurted out a story. The officer dashed into the candy store located at number 725 Sutter Avenue. Inside he saw a ghastly sight. There on the floor of this little candy store lay the proprietor, Joseph Rosen, flat on his back, with his arms outstretched, his face, neck and shirt were drenched with blood, pools of blood flowed from the body in the direction of the counter. Scattered newspapers were strewn on the floor. The body was at an angle; he was facing toward the rear; feet facing toward the front and side, legs spread apart. The eyes of the corpse were wide open, staring toward the ceiling. That is paragraph number one. Has that been proven beyond the shadow of doubt? Is there one person in the court room that can deny each and every fact therein stated has been proven? There it is—a visual picture of it, taken the day of the murder.

Continuing with the opening—"The police officer questioned the civilian. He was a tailor 11357 who lived across the street. At approximately 6:45 A. M. the tailor heard a series of shots ring out of the quiet of that Sunday morning. The tailor looked out the window. He saw an automobile pull away from in front of the Rosen candy store and start down Sutter Avenue. As the car drew away from in front of the store, the tailor saw the body of a man lying on the floor of this candy store. Whereupon, the tailor followed the car with his eyes to get the license number. As the car was going down Sutter Avenue, and before it reached the 11358 corner of Wyona Street, into which it turned, the tailor memorized the license number of that car. The policeman then telephoned an alarm: an alarm for a black sedan, license number 'L-1677', with four occupants." Hasn't that been established beyond all question? Is there a single individual in court who doubts a single sentence or paragraph of that representation of proof? Can you forget the tailor, Stamler, the grocer, Regenbogen, the officer who gave the alarm?

Continuing with the opening: "Radio cars converged at the store, detectives and commanding officers arrived. The ambulance surgeon who responded pronounced the victim "Dead on arrival". The body and the scene of the murder were guarded and remained untouched and undisturbed pending the arrival of the Medical Examiner. Photographs were taken by detectives of the photo gallery of the Police Department." Is there a single word, a single sentence, that has not been proven beyond a reasonable doubt in that paragraph? There are the pictures, every one of them, before your eyes, taken at the time of the homicide. The ambulance surgeon did pronounce him, "Dead on arrival"; the body was removed to the Morgue.

Continuing with the opening—representative of the proof that the District Attorney of this county said would be submitted to you—"Doctor Marten, Deputy Chief Medical Examiner of the City of New York, arrived and made an examination and inspection of the corpse at the scene. He then ordered the removal of the body to the Kings County Morgue, for autopsy. There, and prior to the autopsy, Harold Rosen viewed the body and identified it as being that of his father, Joseph Rosen." True?

And from the opening: "The autopsy revealed that Joseph Rosen had virtually been riddled with bullets—his body had been pierced with seventeen entrance and exit bullet holes." True? "One bullet entered the left side of his face near the ear and came out in the back of his neck on the right side." True? "The second bullet entered at the lower left jaw, passed through the brain and lodged itself in the temporal muscle on the right side of the head, where it was recovered by the Medical examiner." True? "A third bullet entered on the left side of the neck, went from left to right almost horizontally, and imbedded itself in the back of his neck. This bullet was likewise recovered by the Medical Examiner." True? "There were thirteen other entrance and exit wounds where bullets had punctured and penetrated the chest, shoulder and neck of the victim." True? Do we have to take the autopsy 11363 report and medical testimony of Doctor Marten and trace it again, bullet by bullet?

Continuing with the opening—and this, gentlemen, is factual—factual—not any summation, not any oration appealing to hatred and race—not any race appealing to baser motives in behalf of Lepke, Capone and Weiss. That is something that rancored me for three days, this summation which went on—eleven hours of oratory. I had to sit here three days listening to it, and those three days of summation were more telling on me than the entire twelve weeks of this trial. I will come to that in a moment. So, if 11364 I appear to you to be unduly protracted in this summation, may I receive your indulgence. I am not here to wrap Lepke in an American flag, or drape the hammer and sickle around Rubin. I am here to talk facts, through the opening. "Two bullets," as stated, were recovered by Doctor Marten on autopsy. The bullets are in envelopes and I can bang them on the desk here—there they are, the two bullets. "Four bullets were pried out of the floor directly beneath the victim's body," and the four bullets that were pried out of that floor were here described as being within a nine inch circle. Bear that in mind—four bullets removed from underneath the body, about in a nine inch circle—some marksmanship. "Another was extracted from the floor near the body, and still another bullet which passed through the wall of the candy store was recovered on the floor in the millinery shop next door." The recovered bullets were sent to the ballistic bureau of the Police Department for examination. There they are (indicating). Is there a single sentence, or is there a single word, in the representation of proof that 11366 has not been established beyond the shadow of doubt?

Continuing with the representation of proof by the District Attorney: "At approximately 10:40 that very Sunday morning, on Van Sinderen Avenue, about twenty-five or thirty feet north of Livonia Avenue, in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn, a detective discovered an abandoned automobile bearing license plates, 'L-1667, N. Y., 1936,' the very car for which the alarm had issued." True? The photograph taken on the day of the murder and the discovery of the 11367 car—another view—and the detective's testimony. "This car was a Chevrolet, two door—" the two door is important, because one of the defense counsel said—and by the way, I am not here to apologize for the character of any witness that the People of the State of New York put on the stand. Who did you expect the People to bring into this court room after the voire dire, or preliminary questioning of the jury? Did the District Attorney conceal a single thing from you? Did you expect that he world go to the halls of Harvard University

11368 and from there bring down professors to talk of these men? Or, perchance, to bring choir boys here to speak of them? We brought men here to speak of them who knew them—men to speak of them who associated with them—men to speak of them who broke bread with them and who committed this murder with them. And the responsibility for the production of those characters upon the stand does not rest with the District Attorney; it does not rest with the 11369 Court, or with you. It rests with them—the three of them. They alone were responsible for the production of those characters in the court room. It is not their character we are here to ferret out. The thing is, do their past associates speak the truth of them on the Rosen murder.

Let us get along with the representation of proof, sentence by sentence, paragraph by paragraph, facts—facts: "This car was a Chevrolet, two door, four passenger, hard top vehicle, black in color, now commonly called a coach. The place of abandonment of the vehicle was close 11370 by the I. R. T. and B. M. T. station and railroad bridge at that location." True? Look at it. You heard the testimony. There it is, the picture, taken the day of the murder. True? Is there a single person in this court room that doubts a single sentence or paragraph?

Continuing— And this, gentlemen, I am reading verbatim from the opening statement of the representation of proof, sentence by sentence, word by word, paragraph by paragraph: "The operator of the candy store and newsstand at this station actually saw this car abandoned at about 7:00 o'clock that Sunday morning. Four men got out of the car and walked up the stairway to the left of his stand. This stairway permitted access to the I. R. T. station and to a bridge which crossed over the railroad tracks, and had an exist a block away on the other side. The newsstand operator paid no special attention to the men and could effect no identification of any of them." True! Is there a single representation there not proven conclusively! Here is the picture—there is your entrance—not only to the I. R. T. but the B. M. T. and the rail- 11372 road—the bridge across the railroad tracks with the exit on Junius Street. Is there a single man that doubts that Merlis, the operator, saw four men get out of that abandoned car, and that he saw them go up that stairway, and that he could effect no possible identification of any of them! Was that a good spot for the abandonment of the car! In the event the police pursued—mind you, if Cappadora, that patrolman of the Honor Legion of the Police Department, had come by ten minutes before as he was patrolling Sutter Avenue, and that black Chevrolet careened down 11373 with those four killers in it, what do you think would have happened to Cappadora! And assuming there were other police that took up the pursuit, gentlemen, what do you think about that for ingenuity, for a place of abandonment of a getaway car in a murder! A waiting car on the other side of the bridge—two of them—for a getaway, to get lost in the subway, to get lost at the railroad. Does that look like the work of amateurs! That showed the brutality—that showed the cunning—that showed the cold-hearted planning and deliberation and premeditation.

To continue with the factual opening, and the representation of proof: "The abandoned Chevrolet coach was a stolen car; it had been stolen from the Crown Heights section of Brooklyn some time between midnight of Friday and 9:00 o'clock in the morning of Saturday, from in front of 621 Lefferts Avenue, where it had been parked overnight by the owner, near his residence. The 11375 discovery of its theft and the report thereof was made by the owner on Saturday morning, and a police alarm then sent out for its recovery." True? Didn't we bring from Peoria, Illinois, the owner of that automobile? Didn't the District Attorney bring here the policeman who received the alarm? Isn't there a picture of the very spot where the car was stolen from? True? Is there a single person in the court room who can legitimately doubt a sentence of that representation of proof?

To continue with the opening: "The license 11376 plates, L-1667, affixed to the Chevrolet, were not the license plates which had been issued for the car by the Bureau of Motor Vehicles." Is that true? "The license plates, L-1677, also had been stolen, but from a different vehicle, namely a Ford, which had been stored in a private garage on East 96th Street, in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn. The owner of the Ford automobile had last seen it the day after Labor Day when he put the car away and locked the garage doors. The discovery of the theft of the plates was made the very morning of the murder when detectives came and interviewed the owner of the plates. Accompanying the detectives to the private garage, the owner discovered for the first time that the padlock had been broken and the plates were missing." True? Is there a single human mind that can dispute a single factual representation in that paragraph? Didn't you have the barber here, who owned the car? Gentlemen, he told you how he locked it up, in the garage. Didn't he tell you how Detective Ambraiz came and went to the garage with him, and that he discovered for the first time that 11378 the plates were missing? They talk about atmosphere. Captain Ambraiz, formerly Detective Ambraiz, from the New York City Police Department—the commanding officer of the Military Intelligence Corps of the United States Government in the Second Corps Area, was brought here to the stand in his civilian suit. They talk about "atmosphere" when they even put that Sammy on the stand in his Army uniform—forgetting entirely the "Major" (Kleinman), whose contribution to this case was nil. And they talk about "atmosphere".

Continuing with the opening—and these are facts, gentlemen—fact on fact: "Under the direction of Captain John J. McGowan, the commanding officer of the Brooklyn Homicide Squad, in charge of all detectives in the Homicide Division in the Borough of Brooklyn, photographs were taken of the stolen car. In addition, under his supervision and direction, a chalk and mercury mixture was dusted on the windshield, the body of the car, the license plates, the inside mirror, and all other places where there might likely be fingerprints, in an endeavor to bring 11380 out fingerprint evidence. The search for fingerprint clues was fruitless." True? Is there a single individual in the court room within the hearing of my voice, who recognizes candor and sincerity, who can doubt a single one of the representations of that proof by the District Attorney? Hasn't that been established beyond the shadow of doubt? That is significant, because that shows, too, when there are no fingerprints, when there are no clues, that this was 11381 done by somebody with cunning, somebody with a coldblooded, brutal mind.

Continuing with the factual representations: "Far away from the place where the murder car was abandoned, a pedestrian, shortly after 11:00 o'clock, the very morning of the murder, walking along Ralph Avenue, at a point about one hundred feet north of Church Avenue, discovered a gun in the grass, near the sidewalk. He picked up the weapon, looked at it, and carried it over to a police officer directing traffic in that vicinity. Quickly, notification of this 11382 find was given to the detectives working on the Rosen case. The gun was sent to the Ballistic Bureau of the Police Department for inspection and examination." I want to show you that I am taking it word for word, fact by fact, so as to show you conclusively that every representation of proof was carried out by the District Attorney. Is there a single individual who can deny that? The finding of the gun. Here it is (indicating). Police officer Nelson, who testified in court, corroborated the finding. Is there a single individual in this court room that can doubt his very senses? You can have it, here it is (indicating).

Continuing with the representation of proof: "The Commanding Officer of the Ballistics Bureau personally conducted the examination and inspection of the weapon. This gun was a Colt 38-caliber, police positive, special." True? "In an endeavor to trace the serial number of the gun this ballistics expert made an examination of the gun at the three points where the serial numbers should have been." True? 11384
"There he discovered that the numbers had been mechanically removed and obliterated, so that they were not visible either to the naked eye or with a magnifying glass. Then with acids he attempted to bring out or restore those serial numbers by etching, that is, bringing to view a ghost-like number which then gives you what the number was before it was obliterated." True? "The obliteration, however, had been too thorough and the expert was unable to bring out the serial number or enough of it so that a trace could be made." True? "In addition to 11385 the obliteration of the numbers, the gun had received other mechanical treatment after it had left the factory. At the muzzle end of the barrel a thread had been cut." True? "This had been cut for the attachment of a 'silencer' to muffle or do away with the sound of a report." True? "The 'silencer' was not affixed to the gun but the threading for it was covered by a 'collar'." True? Not the usual kind of a gun found in an empty lot!

Continuing with the opening—

The Court: Keep that weapon in its place on the desk.

11386

Mr. Turkus: May the record indicate, so there will be no misunderstanding, the only time I held that weapon was while I was going over the opening and going over the factual parts of it.

The Court: When you made your last reference, that is correct.

Mr. Turkus (Continuing): Continuing with the factual representations: "As I have already related, eight bullets were now at the Ballistics 11387 Bureau for examination. Of the eight, you will remember, two of the bullets had been extracted from the body of Joseph Rosen by the Medical Examiner, and the remaining six bullets had been found at the scene of the murder." True? "Four of these eight bullets were half metal-case bullets and the other four were copper-coated bullets." True? Four of the eight bullets were half metal-case bullets and the other four were copper-coated bullets. True that there were two different types of ammunition? "One of the bullets recovered from the body of Joseph 11388 Rosen by the Medical Examiner was a half metal-case bullet, and the other was a copper-coated bullet." You remember the distinction --half-metal case is a metal jacket over the lead nose, and copper-coated is copper plating over the entire lead nose of the bullet. Two different types of ammunition, although of the same calibre. "The eight bullets were microscopically examined and tests made. The tests revealed that the four half metal-case bullets were fired from the very gun found in the lot—" the gun which I just turned over to the clerk--"whereas the four copper-coated bullets had been fired from another gun, of similar make. The gun, however, which fired the four copper-coated bullets, was never recovered." True? Is there a single factual reference not conclusively established in that paragraph and in that representation of proof?

Continuing: "Thus, briefly, the proof discloses that in advance of the murder an automobile was stolen from the Crown Heights section of Brooklyn; the license plates were stolen from another car in the Brownsville district, 11390 the stolen plates were switched to the stolen car; the murder was committed; the killers fled from the scene in the stolen car; they abandoned the car at the railroad bridge, and escaped without identification." True? Is there a single person in this court room who disputes a sentence of that? "Not a single fingerprint clue was found on the murder car; only one of the guns used in the killing was found, but that with the serial numbers obliterated, blocking trace of its sale and ownership. In short, the killers had made a clean getaway and left no clues in their 11391 wake." True? True, of September 13, 1936? And one lawyer wanted to make capital of that isolated sentence, and read to the jury, "In short, the killers had made a clean getaway and left no clues in their wake," to confound and confuse. As of September 13, 1936, when the blood drenched body of Rosen lay in the candy store," that was true, the killers—the men who fired the shots—the four men who made their getaway, made a clean one and left no clue in their wake. True?

And to continue: "This is the point, gentle-

11392 men—" remember, too, that we discussed this five weeks ago when I said, "This is the point, gentlemen." So I will repeat, "Where we naturally ask ourselves what is the proof as to why the proprietor of a penny business should be the victim of a brutal murder, carried out with flawless technique. Who was this Joseph Rosen?" And one of the defense lawyers gets up and criticizes the technique of the murder. It was good enough to be an unsolved murder for 11393 four years. That is how good that "technique" was. The lawyer finds fault with the experts who did it. "Who was this Joseph Rosen?" Do you remember how I said that five weeks ago, after five weeks spent in the selection of a jury?

Continuing with the representation of proof by the District Attorney: "Joseph Rosen had been a candy store owner in the Brownsville district only a few months. All his adult life he had been in the clothing trucking business, starting as a driver and working up to a partnership 11394 in the business." All right—I used the word "partnership" five weeks ago. The trucking concern in which he was a partner was disrupted. Rosen was forced out. Had he only been in the Brownsville district as a candy store proprietor a few months? Had he been a truck driver? Had he worked himself up to a partnership? Was the business disrupted? Was Rosen forced out? I don't care whether Rosen's business was worth five cents or $50,000, from the standpoint of motive in this case, and we will discuss that as we go along. They talk about atmosphere, and bring in here a lot of "contracts" and a lot of papers to tell you that the business was poor, wobbly. What difference does it make? But I will point out to you, Rosen, if he had a five cent business, was a truckman who had to be dealt with. We will come to that in a moment.

Let me continue: "The defendant Buchalter and others manipulated the deal." I will go into that a little later when I "break" it from within. "Rosen, through Buchalter and a union official, was put to work as foreman." Gentleman, you 11396 heard Lepke's lawyer in the examination of the People's witness try to bring out that Lepke, the undisputed czar of rackets, as his lawyer painted him, became a public benefactor and put Joe Rosen to work. "Several months later Rosen was discharged." True? "Then he walked the streets endeavoring to reinstate himself in the clothing trucking industry, complaining that Buchalter had put him out of business." True? Didn't he make complaint? Have you forgotten what he said to Rubin? Have you forgotten how his wife came to the clothing district and how it was reported to Lepke again and 11397 again that he had been heard squawking, "about us"? Did he make complaints? Do you think that is the only complaint he made to people in the clothing district? Use your heads. Did he make complaints? "Finally, Buchalter and this union official put Rosen to work again, but this time as a truck driver." You now know that this "union official" was Max Rubin. True? The defense starts off with the boss, Larry Cooper, who put him to work as a truck driver, and who admitted he had to make a switch, just like Rubin said, and take Max Cranes, the little guy that Louis Cooper did not want but was forced to take after Lepke said so—took him, Cranes, away from Larry, and switched him to Louis, and put the victim, Joseph Rosen, to work for Larry. True? Is there a man in the court room that doubts that? "This job lasted only a short time and again Rosen was out of employment." Ah, you talk about atmosphere, you talk about a "smoke screen", you talking about trying to con-11399 fuse a jury. Gentlemen, they are too smart to think they can "finagle" twelve; they only want to get one or two with a little doubt. You have been together twelve weeks, you have been locked up five; throw a "smoke screen", get one or two confused get the jury fighting with each other, get them mad at one another, break the whole thing up, hang the jury, play for one or two, you cannot fight twelve. Are you going to fall for that kind of a "smoke screen"? So they try to work on one or two. Get the jury fighting. Ah, yes, "technique"—that is "technique". But, as 11400 I said, justice is not deaf, dumb and blind, nor are jurors.

"Ultimately, Rosen ended up in the little candy store in Brownsville at 725 Sutter Avenue." True?

Continuing with the factual opening: "In the latter part of the year 1935, the Honorable Herbert H. Lehman, the Governor of the State of New York, appointed an Extraordinary Special and Trial Term of the Supreme Court for the purpose of inquiring into: (1) Any and all acts of racketeering and vice; (2) Any and all acts of organized crime or any other crime; (3) Any connection between such acts and any law enforcement officials, committed or alleged to have been committed by any and all persons, including public officers, within the County of New York, in violation of, and so forth. Thomas E. Dewey was the Special Prosecutor designated to conduct the investigation." True? You know that of your own knowledge, and if the Court does not take judicial notice of it, there it is—photostatic, exemplified, certified photostats, and everything you want. Proof of it? True? When Dewey 11402 was appointed, do you think that Lepke's lawyer, who designated him in this court room as no "angel", but who, in fact painted him as he was—the czar of industrial rackets—do you think that meant something to Lepke, with half a million dollar take, that his lawyer talks about now? Oh, you talk about "atmosphere"! Oh, is Lepke running away from Dewey when you get Rubin on the "lam" at Lepke's instigation—making him run from Dewey! Next month when he is over in Manhattan, he will have somebody running from O'Dwyer.

What is the difference, gentlemen? Can you 11403 conceive of this Rubin situation? I will come back to that in a minute. If a prospective Dewey witness, do you think that Dewey is going to let that go by? Brooklyn—New York; Brooklyn—New York. Is he running from Brooklyn or from New York? If somebody has two things on you, one in Brooklyn and one in New York, and you put him out on the "lam", common-sense is that you put him out on the "lam" for both—particularly when they are away. Calling a Dewey witness in Brooklyn a prospective Dewey witness in Brooklyn, and then coming in here and juggling—having mental acrobats, or tight-rope walkers, to confuse and finagle twelve men? Not on your life. One or two is the hope.

Continuing with the factual opening: "Several months after the Dewey investigation got under way, Joseph Rosen threatened to go to Dewey and tell what he knew." True? Does anybody deny that? "In an attempt to silence him, $200. was turned over to Rosen in his candy store, and 11405 he was told to go out of town and stay out until everything blew over." True? With $1.20 in the bank, Rosen came home to his wife with $200. and had to leave town. That was known in 1936, but you cannot establish that fact, because if the wife testified as to what the husband told her, the law is that is hearsay—it is no good. But that was known in October, 1936. That is significant, because even in 1936 there were certain things known—not enough to bring the case into court—not even enough then to get an indictment, to establish what is known in law as a prima 11406 facie case. "Rosen took the $200. and he did leave town, but he stayed away for only a few days and then came back." Is that true? Did he leave Brooklyn? Did he go to Reading, Pennsylvania? Did he speak with his son? Have you forgotten the testimony of Mrs. Rosen on the telephone call, the condition of her health and then Rosen came back? Is there a single human being with an ordinary mind who disputes a single representation of that proof?

Continuing: "Thereafter, Rosen again threatened to talk. On September 13, 1936, in the manner that I have already described—" Do you remember how I said that? "—Rosen's lips were forever sealed." Weren't they? Weren't they? And then I said to you five weeks ago, "Nothing happened; weeks passed; in fact, year after year went by—still nothing happened." True? True? "In May, 1940, something did happen. The case was broken from the inside." Ah, some lawyer said, "Let them prove that." How glad I am he said that, because, if by now he himself is not convinced—and if he did not have his tongue in his cheek 11408 when he said it, like one of them said, "The District Attorney is a paid advocate." Are the three of them here for their health? Is the pay I get from the County of Kings tainted, in comparison to what pay they have gotten from Lepke, Capone and Weiss? Is there a million dollars that would make me, a young man with the blood of life going through my veins, understanding all that it means to live and breathe—is there a million dollars that would make me frame the three of them? A flower in one hand —these lawyers—the greatest preparation I ever saw. "The great District Attorney's office. 11409

Judge O'Dwyer, a man of unquestioned integrity." I would not say a word about Talley, a flower in one hand, and the defendants with a stiletto in the other. An "architect" was Rubin! He was an "architect". That kind of an accusation, gentlemen, is what had me this morning, and that is what had me for the last three days of this summation. Think of it, gentlemen, when they don't do any damage with a flower, Talley just came out with a hatchet. Think of it, accusing Judge O'Dwyer and Burt

11410 Turkus and Sol Klein and Lewis Joseph and every law enforcement agent that had something to do with this case, of murder, of an attempt to kill them. That is what it is, if one-fiftieth of their insinuations are true as to the manufacturing of this case, sticking witnesses together to compare notes, and framing them. If one-fiftieth is true, take O'Dwyer, Turkus and the rest of us, tar and feather us, and run us out of town on a rail, and put us in jail. That is 11411 where we belong—not here representing the People of the State of New York. Think of it, gentlemen. It is monstrous—that kind of "atmosphere". A hopeless case—if they did not know it when they got their retainer, there is no lawyer in the court room that does not know it, when all of the evidence was in, that there are three guilty men at this Bar of Justice. They accuse the District Attorney of a frame-up and when the case does not dove-tail on the point they yell: "Ah, it is subornation of perjury!" But one of them exploded a theory—one man is 11412 in jail in the Bronx and the others are in a hotel, so they did not get together.

The Court: You must not discuss what you think or believe, or what anybody else in the court room thinks or believes. The jury will disregard about what other lawyers think.

Mr. Turkus (Continuing): They said to you, in substance, gentlemen, when the case did not hinge—a five year old murder—when it did not dove-tail minutely, point by point, that it was a case of subornation of perjury which was not done properly. That was an unanswerable inference to their argument. That is what they try to throw as a "smoke screen"—put the District Attorney's office on trial. Let the jury forget that Lepke, Capone and Weiss are on trial. Anything to confound, confuse, create "atmosphere" —not to ball up twelve—they are too smart for that—one or two—get them fighting.

Now, let us continue. I said, "In May, 1940, something did happen. The case was broken from the inside. Then on May 28, 1940, the Grand Jury of Kings County handed down an indictment for murder in the first degree against 11414 these defendants, Buchalter, Weiss and Capone, together with others, for the murder of Joseph Rosen." True?

"The indictment duly found by the Grand Jury reads:

'County Court of the County of Kings.

'The People of the State of New York,
Plaintiffs,
against

Louis Buchalter, alias 'Lepke', Emanual Weiss, 11415 alias 'Mendy Weiss', Harry Strauss, alias 'Pittsburgh Phil', James Feraco, Philip Cohen, alias 'Little Farvel', Louis Capone, Defendants.

'The Grand Jury of the County of Kings by this indictment accuse the defendants of the crime of murder in the first degree, committed as follows:

'The defendants on or about September 13, 1936, in the County of Kings, wilfully, feloni-11416 ously and of malice aforethought, shot and killed Joseph Rosen, with revolvers.

William O'Dwyer,
District Attorney.

'A true bill.
John B. Malone,
Foreman.'

"The defendant Harry Strauss, alias 'Pitts-11417 burgh Phil', is no longer alive. Insofar as the defendants Philip Cohen, alias 'Little Farvel', and James Feraco, are concerned, the indictment against them has been severed by this Court, which means they will not be tried together with these defendants at the Bar."

A "severance", the Court will charge you, is something concerning which the jury exhibits no concern.

Then I said, "The testimony to be given in open court will show you what the Rosen killing is all about." And now, let us talk about 11418 that; let us talk about Sholem Bernstein. Now, there has been a great "smoke screen" put about Sholem Bernstein. To begin with, did anybody here tell you that Sholem Bernstein did not steal the murder car? Did anybody do that? Did anybody show you that he did not steal the plates? Did anybody say to you that he did not chauffeur the murder car when Rosen was killed? After five days of cross-examination by highly touted, capable lawyers, did they shake him on one material fact in connection with the Rosen murder? Let me show you that they did not. Now, the significance of Sholem Bernstein is not so much through the standpoint of jury proof, it is from the standpoint of investigation, and I will show you why. The Rosen murder, on January 1, 1940, was a challenge to Judge O'Dwyer and the entire office, as it would be to any decent public prosecutor. Do you remember Sholem Bernstein's testimony, how the District Attorney and the police swept down onto the Brownsville and East New York area of Brooklyn, and that people went to the four winds, including Sholem? How he went south—how he went west—how he went from here to there—until finally he came and gave himself up? Do you think that there was police activity here? Do you think that when the investigation went on Judge O'Dwyer sat down, and out of seven million people in New York City, or out of twelve million people in New York State, he selected Lepke, Capone and Weiss for a witch hunt? Is that a "smoke screen", too? Is that "atmosphere"?

Now, let us go back to Sholem. Sholem, on April 12, 1940, was arrested, and shortly thereafter he "talked". On May 20, 1940, he was taken before the Grand Jury investigating the Rosen murder—a Grand Jury conducted under the auspices of Judge O'Dwyer. Now, from the standpoint of investigation, we are now beginning to get somewhere. Did you see, when defense lawyers got the Sholem Bernstein Grand Jury minutes, what happened? They asked him four or five questions and dropped him like a red hot stove, because an inference is inescapable that, just like Sholem Bernstein said, on May 20th of 1940, when he went before the Grand Jury, he told his story just as he told it to you. Four or five insignificant questions on cross and they dropped him like a red hot stove. Oh, sure, keep on the "fringes" of Sholem Bernstein's testimony—make him out to be a car thief—make him out to be a shylock. Did I paint him out as an angelic character? I did not. Didn't I submit him to you in his true light? Did you expect the chauffeur of the Rosen murder—their associate—to be a pious gentleman who goes to 11423 his synagogue every Saturday? Oh, they kept on the "fringes". Let me show you about Sholem's significance there. Now, when you have the chauffeur of a murder car under investigattion, do you see what that adds up to? Now, you know that Sholem Bernstein stole the car, stole the plates, put the car in a garage for safe-keeping, how they met in Lincoln Park —how they watched the victim the Saturday night before the murder—how they developed the plot in the hallway of the apartment. One witness said, "Until the 'rat' came out," re-

of letters. You can imagine who Sholem wrote to when they had photostatic copies of letters. Nobody said he was an angel. If he were sweet, angelic creature, he would not have been useful to them. What did they need him for? Have they got any use for you? Do they come to your house? Do they have any business with you? Of course, not. It is with the Sholem Bernsteins, and such tools—the men who have dipped their fingers in crime, who like the feel of easy money. They are useful to them—not 11426 you. Well, he wrote letters. What is that, to get the jury all confused—that he lied when he said he did not write letters? And to add it all up, suppose he did write letters? He did write them, suppose he had told you? No harm in that. Even in Sing Sing Prison, where you are a convict, you can write letters. What is wrong about that? Sholem, this misguided man, wanted to protect some employe in the hotel, and he denied it until they brought here the photostatic copies of letters. Then he had to admit it. Ah, said defense lawyers, denying the truth of such 11427 things, destroys his credibility beyond all doubt. Then they have another plea to destroy his credibility: "Didn't you go up to the mountains—weren't you sworn under oath?" I conceded, for the purpose of saving time, that the testimony up in the mountains, if given by the stenographer up there, would be the same as it was read.

Now, let us talk about the mountains. "He raised his hand up to Almighty God and testified falsely." Did he testify falsely to one single sentence against Gangi Cohen up in the mountains. Not on your life. Even Mr. Rosenthal, the canniest, the wiliest of lawyers, admitted that. "And he told lies about himself," said Rosenthal. He went up to the mountains and gave three pages of direct testimony. Who was the lawyer up in the mountains who cross-examined Sholem Bernstein? The lawyer for Gangi Cohen—the lawyer who on March 26, 1940, before Sholem gave himself up had advised Tannenbaum to stand on his constitutional rights 11429 when Tannenbaum was picked up and brought to the District Attorney's office—the same lawyer, who by coincidence, later became the lawyer for Little Farvel Cohen, a defendant in the Rosen murder. That is the lawyer who cross-examined for seventy-five pages to try and create any doubt about Sholem's three pages of testimony against Gangi Cohen. Not on your life. It was a fishing expedition. Now, watch. He has got to go to Sullivan County. Sholem was sent to cooperate with a lot of enforcement agents there. He was told to discuss only, ac-

under oath—you cannot condone that, and nobody can—I do not do it—I do not condone it—but I am showing you an explanation of that kind of testimony as he gave it from the stand and the reasonableness of it. He thought—with the situation as he knew it—with the fugitives out—of the necessity of secrecy in the progress of the investigation, that he would disclaim knowledge of something he had already testified to in detail before the Grand Jury in Brooklyn one month before he went to the mountains. 11432

Now, whether he was right or wrong—and I admit he was wrong in doing it—that was his explanation. And you can see it was reasonable for that kind of a mind, because as long as Sholem Bernstein was to give one word of testimony in the mountains, it would expose him to the purge of cross-examination about anything and everything under the sun in which he was in, no matter how many investigations were going on. He should have told the truth—there is no question about that. But this is all the "fringe". Has there been one lawyer in the five 11433 days of cross-examination who was able to even get you doubting as to the stolen car, who stole the plates, who did the "casing"—he said he was innocent of the murder. And doesn't the rest of the proof show that Capone and Mendy Weiss were the ones with him?

Now, let us go back a minute. This "architect" that somebody spoke about. He meant subornation of perjury, not architecture. "Rubin," he said, "Ah, he is a two-timer—this is the second time he has testified against Lepke." But the proof shows that Rubin is Lepke's nemesis, inescapabably, inescapably—Rubin.

The Court: I think at this point we will give the jury a five minutes recess. Gentlemen, return in five minutes. Remember the admonition. The court room will remain in order.

(Jury returned to court room after a short recess and summation continued.)

Mr. Turkus (Continuing): At the point of recess I got to where we were discussing the 11435 breaking of the case from within, and I told you about the break that came when Sholem gave himself up. There came a break before that The "break" before that was Max Rubin. You remember the testimony of Rubin, not only brought out on direct, but brought out with a great deal of force and effort by defense counsel on cross-examination, because they read from the very record that was then made by William W. Kleinman, who was then Lepke's lawyer in that case.

The Court: That is not in the record, is it?
11436 Mr. Turkus: It is, it has been read in.

The Court: All right, proceed.

Mr. Climenko: May I take exception to Mr. Turkus' answer?

Mr. Turkus (Continuing): If it is not in the testimony, gentlemen, throw it out. That is my recollection of it. If it is not, then you disregard it. And I say to you, with every degree of candor and fairness, if there is anything I say to you that differs from the way your understanding and common sense sees it, if it does not pertain to the issue, the single issue here, disregard it. It is your decision that counts, not my interpretation of the evidence, or anybody else's—it is yours. If there is anything I say that does not square up with the facts, throw it out of your mind entirely. With that understanding, I will continue.

You remember Rubin's testimony how shortly after the trial of Lepke, which was in February of 1940, he met Police Inspector McDermott, and through Police Inspector McDermott Rubin was brought to meet Judge O'Dwyer. That would make it, he said, I think, a month after the trial; 11438 that would make it in March of 1940 that Rubin had a talk with Judge O'Dwyer and another Assistant District Attorney by the name of Heffernan on that occasion, and that notes, memorandum notes, were taken by either Judge O'Dwyer or Assistant District Attorney Heffernan. That is a pretty good way to get secrecy. They talk about a "new system". What do you mean, a "new system"? Are you children? Is that the kind of business meant to confound or confuse one or two jurors, to think there is a doubt? Do you think we have to put information we 11439 gather on confidential investigations in the public press, or put it where there may be some prying fingers or some lurking eyes that may see it? Let us be sensible. We are dealing, when we investigate a Rosen murder, with men whose fingers are dipped in the blood of Rosen—whose very act shows they would stop at nothing. Do you think we used any discretion in being secretive with our investigation?

Now, let us go back to March. The case then broke from within. They tell you Rubin is the "architect". Why, isn't his own testimony undisputed on direct and cross? Rubin, after a few preliminary interviews in March of 1940, never came back to the District Attorney's office again until 1941. That is the "architect", who has engineered this. Judge O'Dwyer put in his record and background. Who do you think he is? A fool? Do you think he is going to permit witnesses to run his investigations, as one lawyer insinuated? Now, it is so significant on an investigation like this. They want to be 11441 shown how it was broken from the inside—as if they did not know. But since they raise it, let us say a little more. Do you see the significance of March, 1940? You remember Magoon. Now, we have Rubin in. Do you remember Magoon—do you remember Tannenbaum? Now, watch. In March of 1940 the defense lawyers themselves bring out from William W. Kleinman that Mendy Weiss was brought into the office of District Attorney O'Dwyer—March 28, 1940. They brought it out because Mr. Kleinman was a little hazy on memory on that point, 11442 but rebuttal detectives fixed the date as March 28, 1940, Rubin putting us on the right track. Mendy Weiss was brought in prematurely. That was a blunder, gentlemen, I am going to tell you right now—Mendy Weiss was brought in too fast—brought in only on suspicion—and Sholem had not opened up till April. Now it is March. So they take him in, and what happens? Look at this picture in the District Attorney's office. Here we are, January, 1940. Sholem Bernstein told you what went on in that office. Do you think we were sleeping during the days? Do you think every night we went to bed? You just use your head as to what went on in the District Attorney's office from January 1, 1940, when we saw a challenge like the Rosen case and other matters we wanted to investigate. What do you think was going on—a pink tea? Now, watch. March 28, 1940, I am in the District Attorney's office, and I will show you, going back to March, 1940, I am supposed to have some kind of a memorandum book when Kleinman was on the stand. I did not remember that Kleinman came to my office before Mendy Weiss. I did not remember that 11444 Kleinman was sitting in the office with me when he shook hands with Mendy, when Mendy was brought in, when he said, "I have been retained by your brother Murray, you know where to get me when you want me." And then he walked out. Kleinman did not remember, because Kleinman said he did not see Mendy Weiss in the District Attorney's office. That is something that happened in March of 1940, and we have a five year old murder that the witness is talking about now. If it doesn't fit like that (indicating), they lie: and if there are any material facts, irresistibly they fall back on the 11445

District Attorney suborning perjury.

Now, let us go back to this investigation, as disclosed by the evidence. Here is Kleinman in my office even before Mendy Weiss arrives. Then Kleinman goes out and I am left with Mendy. You use your head as to how much I could get out of Mendy, because he was released March 28, 1940. That is a very significant factor from the standpoint of the investigation. Now, watch this: In March of 1940 Rubin was in the office. They tell you, "Isn't it a coincidence that Rubin and Tannenbaum remember the conversation in Lepke's office?" March 26, 1940, after Rubin, we bring in Allie Tannenbaum, and the record shows what happened. We sat him at the desk. To everything we asked him, "I refuse to answer on the ground it might tend to incriminate me; I have constitutional rights." March, 1940. And then Allie goes up to Sullivan County. His "constitutional rights" in Brooklyn step out for a 11447 while. But do you remember the testimony of Allie that the first or second Monday in May be opened up? Ah, now we are beginning to get somewhere. Allie opens up in May. Do you remember Magoon? We will talk about him a little later. Now comes the "break" from within. After Allie opens up, what happened to Mendy Weiss? Ah, look at this for "atmosphere". Mr. Police Commissioner Valentine is in a restaurant in April, they tell you, eating a steak, and Mendy Weiss came in with a lawyer. Ah, they want you to infer first that the Police 11448 Commissioner should know every wanted man in town. We did not want Mendy Weiss until after Allie opened. Then we had something. Then you have corroboration, which you will hear the Judge talk about—corroboration. You cannot convict on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, even though they are telling the Gospel truth—you would be as helpless as a new born babe—you have got to have corroboration. Look at the inference. Do you think that Police Commissioner Valentine would suspect anybody who was having dinner with a lawyer in a public restaurant? Look at the inference they want to bring forth and draw from that. But we do find this: That Mendy when he hears that Allie is going to open up, tells Berger, "I have got to 'lam'—I have got to duck—it looks like Allie is opening." Even jails have grapevines, gentlemen—things do get out sometimes. And what do we find with Mendy? Mendy hears that Allie has, or is about to "open". On June 6, 1940, he is established, by undisputable, documentary evidence—and you certainly can believe your own eyes—as being a new creature, a 11450

"James W. Bell," vice-president of the Chihuahua Tungsten Mines, with an operator's license from Colorado, with a phoney driving card. Oh, they get up here and they wrap the Star Spangled Banner around Lepke; they want to wrap a red sheet around Rubin—they want to take men who have served the United States Army to prejudice you—because they are on trial—to prejudice you against witnesses because they evaded military service. Where was Mendy Weiss in this emergency? In Kansas City, safe, with a phoney driving card. That is only to 11451 bring "atmosphere" in here.

Now, when you are prepared to push a case you get an indictment and then you want to arraign defendants—that is your next move—that is common sense. We did not arraign Lepke in this until May, 1941, although it was a May, 1940, indictment. Processes had to be gone through. The indictment, which is an integral part of this case, shows the date of the arraignment before Judge Martin, where he stood mute and a plea of not guilty was entered for him. Mendy Weiss was not even caught until April 6, 1941. He cannot be arraigned before you catch him. And Judge Taliey speaks about the Federal officers and all the officers that are here—about his having been apprehended by the United States Government. The due process of law requires his detention there and his production in court by them here when needed for trial. That is why there are other policemen here that he speaks of. And they talk of "atmosphere". The defendants have been arraigned—arrangements having been made to arraign them in preparation for trial before that, which was the spring of 1941. The case is ready for trial. And then Mr. Rosenthal says, "Ah, Magoon—I will explode the theory." They take him down from the Bronx; they give him chops; they give him steaks; and in January—between January and June of 1941—they get something out of Magoon. Gentlemen, we gave you everything we could give you in the case. It is true that some defendants leave themselves a little more open than others. Why, the evidence in his case shows you that, as cunning and as smart as was Lepke in New York, his cunning, shrewdness and trickery was equally matched by Louis Capone, of the combination in Brooklyn. I will show you how cute that man was—how he left a minimum opening—a minimum number of openings.

11452

11453

11454

Do you realize, gentlemen, that we have two of the men behind the scene, as well as the triggerman, in here? Men behind the scene—not actors who can be identified.

Now, let me go ahead with the opening, sentence by sentence, paragraph by paragraph, and don't let anybody tell you that any witness manufactured this case for us. You don't think the evidence walked into Judge O'Dwyer's hands, do you—a four years unsolved murder in 1940? Do you think that dropped as manna out of the Heavens into District Attorney O'Dwyer's hands? All right let us go on to the testimony, sentence by sentence, paragraph by paragraph, and see if I have not irresistibly established guilt beyond a reasonable doubt—irresistibly and logically. But before I do that, there is one point I do not want to pass on. The lawyers have told you of the great and grave responsibility. "Would you 11456 do business with these witnesses?" Of course, you would not do business with them any more than you would have them do business with you. One of them went so far as suggesting, "Suppose it was some member of your family who was on trial, would you believe them?" Well, members of your family, gentlemen, do not associate with them. Responsibility! I have a responsibility in this case—Judge O'Dwyer has a responsibility—the responsibility of a prosecutor to fearlessly, courageously and with honesty, to present all the evidence in the case. Your responsi- 11457 bility! Don't let anybody put on your shoulders what does not belong there. Your only responsibility is to decide the single issue of fact. Has guilt been proven beyond a reasonable doubt, or are Lepke, Weiss and Capone innocent? The Judge himself, in all the majesty of the law, garbed in the black robe of justice as he is, has no more responsibility with this case than doing his job of instructing the jury on the law, conducting the trial, and doing what the law says. Don't let anybody insidiously try to get you thinking about punishment. That is not your responsibility. It is their responsibility, for if they had not been three of the killers of Rosen, you would not have them sitting here. That is where the responsibility is—with them—and don't let anybody fool you on that.

Quoting from the opening representation of facts: "In the days when Rosen was a partner in the clothing trucking business the defendant, Lepke, together with certain officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, set out to 11459 run that industry, to their liking and benefit." True? They talk about "atmosphere", to bring in "unions". Why, you had the spectacle here of Lepke's lawyer saying to you that the situation between the unions and the gangsters was monstrous. He said that, to put it in for "atmosphere"? We only put in this case what the law of the land permitted, the association of Lepke with crooked union officials, and to show that Lepke and these crooked officials were like that (indicating). We did that because the law permits it on motive, and Judge Talley gets up 11460 here and tells you, admittedly in violation of the Canon of Ethics, "I hereby, in public court, advertise for a taxpayer to bring to a halt, to scuttle the O'Dwyer investigation," and to be a signal that he, a former Judge, has a right to scuttle, to sabotage, the investigation of a duly elected District Attorney of this county. "Atmosphere"—confound and confuse! Get one or two mixed up.

Then Lepke's lawyer, "Ah, I know all about the other figures and racketeers who infested the unions. I am against them," he said. Gentlemen, this goes for me and for me alone—no insinuation or innuendo with reference to anyone else—any resemblance to anybody living or dead, purely coincidental. Whatever my lot in life may be, whether I go out of public office after this case or stay in, whatever the future holds for me, I say to you with all due solemnity, that nothing I have ever learned as a public prosecutor, no talent that I now enjoy, would ever be used in any way with any of you to make you feel that I had discredited you or myself, or any member of the public. And that is just for me 11462 alone. And one more thought—if I could spend the rest of my life fighting this type of a situation, I would like it. And that ends it.

Mr. Barshay: I make objection to that most respectfully. That is giving testimony here from the floor as to what this gentleman would do in the future. It has nothing whatever to do with this case, or the issue in this case, and it is not based upon any record.

The Court: We will have no further interruption. That applies to Mr. Turkus and applies to all other counsel in the case. The rule 11463 will be impartially applied as to every counsel. The Court may interrupt and will, if it deems it proper. As to all other matters, you will be covered by your exceptions taken at the conclusion of the summation.

Mr. Turkus (Continuing): "In the days when Rosen was a partner in the trucking business, the defendant, Lepke, together with certain officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, set out to run that industry to their liking and benefit." Did they? Wasn't the most eloquent admission of that in the summation of 11464 Mr. Lepke's own counsel, that after Weinstein, Katz and Lepke, after prior negotiations which I do not have to go into, after the Hillman and Orlofsky situation—after the Lucky Luciano meeting—they sat down to run the industry, the clothing trucking, to their liking and benefit. True? Have you forgotten that, to the benefit of those crooked union officials, it was to their benefit to keep the trucking industry here in New York—not to let it go to Pennsylvania, 11465 and that Lepke said, "If the business goes out of town," he could not make a dime. Can you forget that day after day of testimony, how it was shown that the stoppage was done by crooked union officials and Lepke operating as one—each one hand in glove with the other? What more of a confession of guilt would you want than the summation of his own lawyer in that regard?

"To effectuate this, Rosen was one of the clothing truckers who had to be dealt with and who, as I have already stated, ultimately wound 11466 up running a penny candy store." What is the difference whether the New York and New Jersey had a lucrative business or whether it was just another business concern. Through the lips of Sobler, produced by the defense, you see, complete corroboration that Rosen was a man of vision—never mind him being a chiseler—at least, he had this much vision, that if you operate in Pennsylvania you get away from the racketeers in New York, who were operating then, and it was brought out by one of his own lawyers, even after Mr. Dewey took office. Did you hear what Sobler, brought by the defense, said about the Pennsylvania business? The New York and New Jersey business was fine—that was the cream of the business; the Pennsylvania was not doing so good, but doing good enough —doing good enuh to worry the Weinsteins and the Katzes and the Lepkes that there was something in the wind; that the New York manufacturers were sick of paying tribute; that Pennsylvania was a field of production to honest American labor and industry—a way out to save the enslavement of American laboring industry. They 11468 talk about taxpayers' money—every suit you had on your back was part of that—the enslavement of American industry and labor. Why, they provided complete corroboration of the motive, with their own witness. Sure, Rosen had to be dealt with. If he had money in the business, if he had trucks, Rosen would not have made a fight, not against him (indicating). But what stood behind him? All Rosen had was his two hands and vision—Pennsylvania. That is why he fought. That is why he was dealt with in the Broadway Central Hotel. That is why 11469 at the meeting books were produced, with Lepke in the background, Gurrah at the desk, and Rubin and Fields. That is why he was given a job as foreman with Louis Cooper. Not any public benefaction on the part of Mr. Lepke. What are we, children? Didn't he wind up ultimately in a penny candy store?

Again, the representations on the opening of the prosecutor: "Rosen, however, was bitter. He complained endlessly against Lepke for his plight. When the Dewey investigation got under way Rosen threatened to get even." Didn't he?

Didn't he complain? Didn't they have to send people down from the local of the truck drivers' union to patronize the store? Didn't he threaten to get even, to go to Dewey? You could have a seven year old child sum this case up to a court and a jury. The case, gentlemen, is a power house, a power house of proof, and there is no person in the court room that is not cognizant of it.

"To keep Rosen's mouth shut, it was the de-11471 fendant Lepke who ordered Rosen to get out of town and stay out until the Dewey investigation blew over. Max Rubin, the business agent of Local 240 of the Clothing, Drivers and Helpers Union, and a trusted aide of the defendant Lepke, was sent by Lepke to do this job. It was Max Rubin who delivered Lepke's message and the $200. to Joseph Rosen. It was at Lepke's orders that Rosen left town, but, as you now know, Rosen came back." True? Didn't Max Rubin come down there with $200.? Didn't he deliver the message? Didn't Rosen go to Read-
11472 ing, Pennsylvania? Ah, watch this maneuver of clever defense lawyers. When I brought out that Harold Rosen were visited by Mr. Cuff and Mr. Barshay, do you think I imputed any base motive to a lawyer interviewing the son of the victim of one of the most vicious and brutal murders I ever heard of? Of course, not. They visited Harold Rosen a year ago. I made a mistake. Do you think they would have gone down there if they thought the testimony of Harold Rosen as to the meeting in the Broadway Central Hotel and the pantomime there connected, and the visit of Lepke, and the visit of Lepke with the limousine in their place when the father went with him the second time—this visit was significant. Do you think, as Mr. Barshay called him, the venerable Mr. Cuff, for whom I personally have the greatest respect, would have gone with Mr. Barshay down to Reading, Pennsylvania, if there was not something about Harold's testimony that was vital? That is the purpose of bringing that out. Don't let us have any "atmosphere" about that. "The Dewey investigation was under way". It certainly was. 11474

Ah, ha, somebody says, Lepke—the smart Lepke —with the Dewey investigation under way, with cops around, do you think he would continue? Why, that was from the lawyer who brought out from Rubin that the flour racket was going on right while Dewey was investigating. Do you think the investigation did any more than hamper Mr. Lepke for a while? His lawyer says—"He calls him 'Lepke' ". I call him "Lepke"! Why, he was called "Lepke", gentlemen, when I went to public school. That is what his associates called him, "Lepke". Once he was "Murphy", 11475 on the telephone, and his partner was "Callahan". What did he want us to do, call him "Murphy", or "Lepke"? I call him as his associates call him, "Lepke". That, they say, is "atmosphere".

Continuing with the opening: "The Dewey investigation was under way. Word that Rosen was back and again threatening to tell all that he knew, reached Lepke. Then it was that Lepke ordered the execution of Joseph Rosen; the murder to have a double-barreled effect; an object example to all others who might dare to 11476 talk; and to forever end Rosen's threat to go to Dewey." Was that proven? What was the first thing that Lepke wanted to know from Paul Berger after the murder of Rosen? "How did they take it in the market?" The report was they were scared to death—even Weinstein and Katz would not go to meet Lepke in the Hotel Governor Clinton any more at that time. That was the effect in the market. 1940 was the time of the Dewey talk. That incident was in Septem-11477 ber, 1936. Figure it out for yourselves. Were people scared? Did that have a double-barreled effect? Did word reach Lepke? You heard Rubin, Rubin who was not an accomplice, as a matter of law—you heard what he said, corroborated by Tannenbaum, who in this case is not an accomplice, as a matter of law. And I will talk about Tannenbaum later. Has that been proven beyond a reasonable doubt? Now, here is where we get the logic of the defense lawyers. From the opening, I quote: "Even moved with rapidity. Weiss was assigned to handle the 11478 details by Lepke; Lepke personally furnished Weiss with the man to 'finger' Rosen." And, Judge Talley: "A little candy store, why did they have to 'finger' Rosen in a little candy store? Why, he could be the only man behind the counter in a little candy store," says Mr. Talley. A "little place"—look at the photograph, look at the diagram, and see how little it was. "Who needed to 'finger' Rosen?" This murder, gentlemen, was to seal the lips of Rosen and to have a double-barreled effect by frightening all the witnesses in the market. Did you ever hear of a wrong man being killed? That is why he is

"fingered" by somebody who knows him, so that there will not be any mistake on the part of the employe. That is why Lepke, personally, personally, took the "finger" to Mendy Weiss, so there would be no mistake. And, believe me, gentlemen, the evidence shows there was none. They "hit" the right man. Now, you know what "hit" means, by now.

I will continue with the opening: "Lepke personally furnishing Weiss with the man to 'finger' the victim, that is, to point out the victim to Weiss. Capone, 'Pittsburgh Phil' Strauss, Feraco and 'Farvel' Cohen went to work with Weiss. 'Sholem' Bernstein was brought in. The conspirators made their plans. The preliminary details, namely, the theft of the murder car and plates and a 'drop', or garage for its concealment until needed, were properly attended to." Now, watch this—One of the defendant's lawyers, if not two, says, "Look at this fatal flaw in the People's case," and they dig a hole in the People's case. Do you remember he said to you that Berger 'fingered' Rosen to Weiss late on Friday night. Do you remember from the testimony that plans to steal a car were under way before the 'fingering'? Thus, they argue, inescapably, the logical conclusion that somebody is lying. Ridiculous—ridiculous. Look at it: Lepke on the fatal Friday, September 11, 1936, that usual soft-spoken Lepke, raised his voice, even his face was flushed, when he spoke to Rubin. He had his mind made up when he spoke to Rubin that Rosen had to go. That was the tenor of his statement to Rubin. And when Rubin—and I do not say that Rubin is any angelic creature—he has lived on the sweat and toil of others—I don't paint him as any angel—but he was the perfect tool, the perfect man for Lepke; outwardly he looks good, talks well, is well-mannered, but had larceny in his heart—a perfect tool for Lepke. But Rubin does not go in for murder, that is too much for Rubin, and Lepke knew it. So when Rubin wanted to run to Weinstein and Katz to try to straighten the thing out by getting Rosen out 11483 of the picture, Lepke let him go ahead; but Lepke had his mind made up right then and there that Rosen was "going".

Is there any such thing as organized crime—Lepke having a messenger go down and give word that a car would be needed before the "fingering" was done, and getting that under way? Let us be sensible, gentlemen. Can an American jury be "finagled" with that kind of logic, the timing is not right? Preliminary details could be—someone could be sent to Brownsville and arrange for the car before the actual 11484 "fingering". What flaw in the People's case is that? What kind of logic is that? You could even do that on the 'phone, and say, "Get a car right away." Somebody says Dewey's detectives and police surrounded the whole place. If there had been that kind of surveillance of Lepke, they would have caught him—I don't mean that—I mean the law enforcement would have caught them red-handed, the whole bunch of them. Oh, yes, they talk, they say, "Tannenbaum is no good, Berger is no good, Magoon is no good, Bernstein is no good." They say because you convict the "finger man", Berger, and the chauffeur, Bernstein, let those three out—that is logic—that is their logic. If you cannot get the tools, Bernstein, the tool, the chauffeur, and Berger, the "finger man", if you cannot get them, their logic is you have them stuck in hotels, acquit the three killers of Rosen. I would love to convict the whole caboodle of them—I would like to have every one of them at the defense table who had their fingers dipped in Rosen's blood, but you cannot do it, gentlemen, you have to break from within, you have to open 11486 somebody up—otherwise the District Attorney would have an unsolved murder right as I talk to you now.

They talk to you about the taxpayers' money. What is there concerning the taxpayers' money? One of the lawyers inferentially let it slip out of his mouth that Bernstein should have been cut up long ago. That was his thought—that was Capone's thought. Sure, if you had Bernstein cut up, you would have gotten no where near to Capone, who surely hid in the background. And he talked about him as the "come-on". Sure— 11487 electrocute the witnesses, the tools—that would make O'Dwyer a great District Attorney, according to them. Take Sholem Bernstein, take Berger, get their admissions of guilt, and put them in the electric chair. That is great prosecution for which the taxpayers should give hosannahs to O'Dwyer, so that those three could get out. "Kill all the witnesses," so the three big shots can get out—that is logic.

Then, Judge Talley, of Manhattan, threatened to undertake a taxpayers' action. Don't you worry about the taxpayers' money. The Court has supervision of the holding of witnesses.

11488 Don't you worry as to what is going to happen to the witnesses in this case. Don't let anybody fool you with Christmas present nonsense. Gentlemen, the courts have confidence in the integrity and common sense of juries and jurors. Have a little faith in the integrity of the Court and the prosecutor as to what will happen to witnesses. Right now they are too valuable pieces of bric-a-brac to be dealt with as Lepke, Weiss and Capone would want. Let us use com-
11489 mon sense here. What kind of rubbish is being handed out to you? "We will have to get one or two—not all—one or two, a little confused." The victim was "fingered" to Weiss. Capone schooled Bernstein as to the route to be used for the getaway, driving Bernstein, who was to be the "wheelman", or the driver, all over the route, again and again, until Bernstein knew it by heart from beginning to end—the end being the place of the abandonment of the car at the railroad bridge. Oh, he talked about the association of Capone. Why, didn't you hear in the

Then came one lawyer—the great detective—only forty pages of testimony. Well, those forty pages of testimony show that Capone was a cowardly, shrewd, conniving, individual, who hid pretty safely behind the scenes and left very little to nail him. He did not have the physical courage of the loathsome character like Weiss, who at least pulled the trigger and took his chances with Cappadora, or any policeman who may have come down to block him. Talk about Capone—your responsibility to him in this case! Why let me show you how cunning was this Capone in this Rosen case, as disclosed by the evidence. His lawyer said he did not hang around Sutter Avenue. You can bet your bottom dollar he did not. When he drove around there, it was not in his car— it was in Bernstein's car. The murder was in preparation and he even kept Bernstein's car with him. I will show you the significance of that. This director, behind the scenes—this director, behind the scenes, picking an appropriate spot for the abandonment of the getaway car. Did he leave any opening other than being with Bernstein on Sutter Avenue? So what? If Capone had been seen riding on Sutter Avenue with Bernstein—so what? Does that put the director behind the scenes in the Rosen murder? Have you forgotten the preliminaries here when Mr. Rosenthal said, "The fact that Capone may know some of these People's witnesses, may have associated with them, are you going to hold that against him?" No, you don't hold it against him unless he was associating with them so that his fingers were dipped in the blood of Rosen along with the others. Then you hold it against him. That is your sworn duty to do so then—but not for just holding social intercourse with them.

11492

Continuing: "The stage having thus been set, the conspirators set out to kill their victim. Briefly."—and then I say parenthetically, "For the details will be given you in the testimony—the victim was followed from his home to the little candy store that Sunday morning, September 13, 1936." And let me show you, then I proved more than that—far more. Have you forgotten "Lincoln Park"? Have you forgotten Ardy's candy store on the corner? And have you forgotton that twice Mendy Weiss went over 11495 to look things over, as testified to by Bernstein, to see if it was all right to "take" Rosen Saturday night. Have you forgotten Cappadora's testimony that, on his way to work, around ten o'clock, or thereabouts, he stopped at Rosen's candy store for cigarettes? Maybe—I should not say "maybe"— but see if there is an connection with that and the return of Mendy Weiss, that it was not wise to go ahead; that there were people around Ardy's who might "make" them —identify them. From Sholem Bernstein's testimony you figure out who was the man who 11496 prowled around in the Rosen candy store September 12, 1936. You see, they leave Lincoln Park and they go to Farvel Cohen's apartment —scheming, conniving, planning how to cut down a man with a hail of bullets. And when they got there, they were eating—mind you, they were eating. They gave Bernstein a sandwich—

The Court: That reminds me; we had better take lunch now and resume promptly at 1:30. Gentlemen of the jury, please do not discuss the case, let no one speak to you about it; keep your minds open; remember the previous admonitions. The court room will remain in order. Let the jury first go out. The defendants are now remanded.

(Recess was thereupon taken until 1:30 P. M.)

(Afternoon Session. Trial Resumed.)

(Mr. Turkus continues his closing address, as follows:)

Mr. Turkus: Continuing with the factual discussion in my opening statement, a representation of the proof: "Briefly, the victim was followed from his home to the little candy store that Sunday morning, September 13, 1936. Pursuant to plan and agreement, Weiss and Strauss entered for the 'kill'. Armed with a loaded gun, Feraco stood outside as the 'lookout'. Bernstein sat at the wheel of the getaway car, motor running. Weiss and Strauss pumped shot after shot into Rosen. They made sure he would never reach Dewey's office." They made an ob- 11499 ject lesson of Rosen—a death burial certificate. "Into the waiting getaway car they piled. Weiss and Strauss gave instructions, but Bernstein adhered to the route that Capone had drilled into him the day before. The car, as planned, came to a half at the railroad bridge, where it was abandoned. Out stepped the four, Weiss, Strauss, Feraco and Bernstein. Past the newsstand, up the stairs, and over the bridge across the tracks to the Junius Street side they walked, to keep their rendezous with Capone and Farvel Cohen." One of the defense lawyers says, "How 11500 did Capone know to be on the Junius Street side?" Well, Bernstein didn't hear that—they sent him away Saturday night to put the car in a "drop". Where was the flaw in that? Was he told? That is proven by the fact that he was there. And while Weiss and Strauss were pumping shot after shot into Rosen, where was the "behind the scenes director, Capone"? Just where you would expect a cute, cunning boss—fourteen or fifteen blocks away. And where was 11501 Lepke? Not at the scene—I should say not. And they tell you, gentlemen, Capone was in Bernstein's car on the Junius Street side—not Capone's car—so that if anybody got the license number, it is Bernstein that gets the rap as an accomplice. An accomplice without corroboration is not worth a nickel. Does that show the cunning, shrewd Louis Capone, who is called "Sir" by his employees? Capone has no alias, says the lawyer—that is too bad, Capone not to have an alias. If this case was not broken from the inside, Capone never would have been ex-11502 posed either to you or to the rest of the world.

Suppose there had been pursuit by the police with Mr. Capone in Bernstein's car, waiting on the Junius Street side of the bridge? Think that over a minute—would he have waited for them?

Continuing: "There, in wait, were Capone and Cohen—with two automobiles." Lying in wait, protected by Bernstein's car. "Weiss passed his gun to one of his confederates, for destruction." He did, and the gun was destroyed. "The killers separated—Weiss, Capone, Strauss, and Farvel Cohen fleeing in one of the waiting cars in one direction." And there again is the cute Capone—no longer in Bernstein's car—a different car, a legitimate car. "While Feraco and Bernstein fled in the second car in a different direction." Now, Bernstein is in his own car. "Weiss' gun was destroyed." You heard the testimony. "The second gun was flung into the lot, where it was subsequently discovered." I have no witness who saw it thrown in the lot, but the unmistakable and inescapable conclusion is since that was one of the murder guns, it was flung in the lot, be- 11504 cause the gun that was found in the lot checks up by ballistics as one of the guns that pumped bullets into Rosen. A conclusion—irresistible. "The murder having been successfully completed, Weiss duly made his report to Lepke." After making the report and getting a pat on the back, somebody tells you, "Ha, would Weiss be fool enough," they say, "to talk to Tannenbaum about the part he played?" Tannenbaum was not there to play tiddlewinks—Tannenbaum was there on business. He was there on business in Lepke's office. Weiss even told the Fed- 11505 eral agents who picked him up in Kansas City, Missouri, that he would have gone back to Brooklyn when O'Dwyer was out of office. Well, if he talked like that before the Federal agents, how do you think he would talk to Tannenbaum? Do you think those boys held any secrets from each other?

"Lepke set out to insure—" Still quoting from the opening, and we are taking sentence by sentence and paragraph by paragraph—"Lepke set out to insure that there would be no arrest and prosecution in the Rosen case—no arrest and prosecution of himself and his accomplices. Lepke maintained contact with the movements and happenings in the Rosen investigation. To thwart and frustrate all investigations, Lepke sent witnesses out of the jurisdiction, keeping some out—permitting others to be questioned when he was satisfied that it was safe to do so." Have you forgotten that he sent Mendy out? Mendy might be "made" in front of that store. Mendy is a big, husky fellow, whom you 11507 might not be able to miss. Maybe Mendy was "made" by the boy at the newsstand. But he thinks he is not "in"—the shrewd Lepke—Shimmy Sales who was not even in the murder—and Little Farvel, who was with Capone fourteen blocks away on the other side of the railroad bridge. Who could identify Capone and Little Farvel in the Rosen case? Oh, no, he did not want Mendy "in"—I should say not. "Lepke soon decided" quoting from the opening, "investigations must collapse if witnesses are not available." In line with that decision, 11508 he ordered Rubin to leave town. Is there a single man in this court room who disputes that? Oh, you have the same mental juggler—"What would he leave town for?" If a witness knows of two things, he is sent out of town—he is sent out of town on both. And if there is any doubt about accepting Rubin's word for it, the cleanest witness in the whole case, Maguire, admitted to the United States Supreme Court of America to practice, a labor lawyer of refinement, and culture, and respect, and decency—you can see that from his very demeanor—and what does the counsel for Lepke bring out?—That before Lepke went to Maguire's office Rubin consulted Maguire about leaving town on both matters, the Rosen and the Dewey. That we could not bring out, because that conversation was not admissible against the defendant. But by cross-examination it was opened up by Lepke's counsel. Do you believe Maguire when he says that Lepke said, "If witnesses are not available, investigations must collapse." Why, the very killing of Rosen, the very murder of Rosen, is concrete proof of that philosophy. A move to 11510 frighten off others at the same time. Concrete proof of the philosophy of Lepke.

Continuing: "At Lepke's insistence and direction, Rubin was at times hidden and concealed in the City of New York and at other times shuttled from city to city, throughout the nation. This continued until Rubin could no longer stand the continuous flight and concealment. Contrary to Lepke's order he, too, came back to New York City, to stay." Is there any doubt in anybody's mind about that having been proven? 11511

Somebody talked to you about money. Do you remember those checks I picked out of the check book and had marked in evidence here? The very union that Rubin was business agent for. Do you think that Rubin could have been out on the "lam" and collecting money as business agent for services not rendered unless he and Lepke were that close (indicating): unless, as the proof and evidence indicate, Rubin was then his trusted lieutenant? Have you any doubt about that? And think of Mr. Barshay's summation when he described Lepke's activities in 11512 Manhattan. Three days after Max Rubin testified, this is quoting right out of the opening, before the Grand Jury in New York County—and mind you, gentlemen, Grand Jury proceedings are secret—and this was a Grand Jury in Manhattan under the auspices of Mr. Dewey and the Court of General Sessions—a bullet was fired into the back of his head which emerged at the bridge of the nose, in close proximity to his eye. Did Rubin roll in the gutter with a 11513 bullet in his head? Weren't his nerves and speech affected, his head crooked—on one side, permanently? Is there any doubt about it?

Continuing: "This shooting was directed and planned by the defendant Mendy Weiss, who had learned that Rubin was 'talking'." Is there any doubt about that from the testimony in this case—how Rubin was "cased"—how he was followed from his place of business, stood up in Child's Restaurant, and run down as if he was a dog, and injured permanently? That is what they did with Rubin. Hunted him down, tracked him 11514 down, set him up in a restaurant.

Continuing from the opening: "Miraculously, however, Rubin was more fortunate than Rosen." Wasn't he? He lived. "Unlike Rosen, Rubin's lips were not sealed. Rubin survived, and will testify at this trial," I told you, "the trial for the murder of Rosen," and didn't he? Wasn't it a miracle? A bullet from the back of the head, out of the eye—thirty-eight days in the hospital. Wasn't it miraculous that he lived? Yes. But his lips were not sealed.

And then I said, in conclusion, in my opening statement: "Mr. Foreman and gentlemen of the jury: The proof that you are about to receive in this court of justice will establish to your satisfaction, beyond all doubt, that these defendants, Louis Buchalter, alias "Lepke," Emanuel Weiss, alias "Mendy Weiss", and Louis Capone, in combination are three of the killers of Joseph Rosen." And didn't I? And I concluded the opening representation of proof of evidence: "For the People of the State of New York, the interests of justice will require a verdict of guilty as charged—guilty of murder in the first 11516 degree."

There I have taken you, sentence by sentence, word by word, and paragraph by paragraph, of that opening statement to you, and I have not only proved every word of it, but more—but more: Flight on the part of Mendy Weiss, spoliation of evidence on the part of Mendy Weiss, attempted spoliation of evidence on the part of Capone. These are the things which I represented to the jury would be established in my representation of proof, and those matters were established.

Let me show you how canny this whole situation has been arranged. One lawyer got up and he said, "Our defense"— What a true word he said, "Our defense". Those three were together, irrevocably interwoven. They talk about "atmosphere". Because one counsel sits at one table and the other at another table, is that a separation of these three? Let me show you how each one of the defenses were put in, and then you can consider the summation of Mr. Rosenthal in the wind-up and see if he did not pay back for what Lepke and Mendy did for Capone in the defense. Now, watch this: To start with, there is no obligation on the part of any defendant to interpose any defense, not at all. The burden of proof rests exclusively upon the District Attorney. But Lepke started a defense—let me show you what I mean—the three interlinked and interwoven in the Rosen murder, as the evidence shows. Sobler—there is a fine one for you. Instead of being outraged by the violent death of his partner, he visits, in June or July, 1940, the 11519 lawyer's office on Broadway and 35th Street—the lawyer is still unidentified in the record—and he says the next time he went to his office it was on Wall Street, and at that time it slipped out of his mouth, "but not under orders." The first time, Philly Carver, sometimes known as Buchalter, took him there. When the District Attorney, in proper investigation and conduct of the murder of his own partner, sends down a detective—I brought him into court here for you to see—my personal aide in this investigation—Detective Frank Gray—and out of the lips of that Sobler came about "kidnapping me". Sobler was comin-law, Sam Richter, read every single word of the statement, made corrections, and then signed every page, and swore to it. And that is the outraged partner who tells you that the District Attorney "kidnapped" him.

Now, let us see the significance of Sobler. You see, if Sobler in this case were believed by the jury, the three defendants are "out", because if Sobler had been believed, there would have been no motive, and if Lepke had no motive —you see, if the Pennsylvania business thing 11522 was knocked out, if there was nothing to take away from Rosen, if there was no reason that he had to be dealt with, there could be no motive. If Lepke had no motive to kill Rosen, Capone had no reason or motive to direct the murder behind the scenes, and Mendy Weiss had no reason for firing a shot. Destroy the motive and the three are "out". And what did happen to Sobler? They talk about lying witnesses! That man jumped off the stand, he started to walk out of the place. I took him line by line, paragraph by paragraph, of his own affidavit 11523 made in the sanctity and safety of his own home, and then he categorically admitted it. If they could have done a job like that on any of the People's witnesses in the case, I would like to see it. The difference was that Sobler told the truth on cross-examination when he was compelled to tell the truth.

Now, let us see the next character they bring in, and if you believe him, the three defendants are "out". Now, the technique—watch this one. Here is what I call the three card Monte—Carl Shapiro—now you see it, now you don't. Checks, 11524 here, there, everywhere. $132. payroll in New York—he has a relative in the business. He can sign checks for the $9,000. payroll in Baltimore. That is intrusted to strangers. But the defense lawyer gets up and says, "What did the Raleigh have to do with the case?" Greenberg and Shapiro was the hangout for the mob. Greenberg and Shapiro became the Raleigh, and at the Raleigh, the mob went there when required on business. That is the inescapable in-11525 ference from the testimony. Not to hang out and look at Greenberg and Shapiro, but to the Raleigh when required by business—at the smaller office which could not be glutted up, but when required by business they were there. What has the Raleigh got to do with it? It was right in the Raleigh office that the murder order was given by Lepke. It was in the Raleigh office that the $100,000. a year dividend—$40,000. to Mrs. Lepke and to Mrs. Gurrah, and to somebody else. What has the Raleigh got to do with it? Well, figure it out. What has the Raleigh

11526 got to do with it, when an order, right in the Raleigh office, is given, when Berger is sent for, when he leaves, Lepke with Berger, to meet Weiss to "finger" the victim? What has the Raleigh got to do with the case? Did he come here with any diary or any office record? He came here with cancelled bank checks, and if you look at the cancelled bank checks which they produce—the very check made out to Carl Shapiro did not clear September 11th—the check to himself for $50., that cleared two days later. Do you get the significance of that? That was not cashed September 11, 1936, when it was drawn

—his own check. What would preclude anybody, with the ease and facility of this fellow, pulling blank checks right out, from signing all those checks in advance of going to Baltimore, and leaving them there? The whole caboodle didn't amount to more than five or six hundred dollars. But the purpose of Carl Shapiro was, if he had you believe it, that he never went to lunch, he did not go to the barber shop, he never even went to the bath room, he just sat there as a sentinel, on September 11, 1936, and if the 11528 jury, not all, but one or two, could swallow the idea, why, then, of course, the order could not have been given out, because Rubin and Tannenbaum could not have been there. Berger could not have left there, if Carl Shapiro did not see them. That being the case, it would fall, this case, against all three defendants—if you could believe Shapiro.

But after Shapiro's cross-examination, after the damaging admission as to what went on in Greenberg and Shapiro's, after other things were dragged from this unwilling witness' lips, 11529 not another witness took the stand for Lepke. Did you notice that? That ended it. One almost jumped out of the chair—the other put in damaging admissions—and that ended the defense. When the lawyer tells you, "Oh, we could not bring the employees on—we could not bring the employees on. Who would believe them? That is why I ended the defense." Figure it out for yourself, if we might not have gotten some more damaging admissions from them, if the defense did not conclude. Oh, they had no obligation to make a defense, but having started it, they fell flat, and having started it, it provided additional corroboration to the People's case. Had that defense been successful, the Rosen case would have been successfully sabotaged against all three defendants.

Now, let us look at Weiss' defense. Let us see how the interlinking interests went along, one with the other. Yes, an all-time low, this is. The evidence portrays Mendy Weiss to be what he is—I am not giving him any "titles," 11531 when I say it portrays him as a vicious, loathsome creature, as this evidence shows him to be. But there was brought to the stand, Lena Weiss. I had no questions to ask of this mother. He, Mendy Weiss, puts his mother on in the eve of her life—not far away from the sundown of life. He puts that poor soul on the stand to lie for him. Who would have the heart to cross-examine her? What mother would not lie for any one of us under any circumstances?

Then we have Sidney Weiss. I want to show you the effect of this alibi, what it would have 11532 done to this case, if believed, for all three. Sidnew Weiss, the man with the twenty-sixth birthday—the birthday of birthdays in his life, the twenty-sixth birthday. This late anniversary. Sidney Weiss, who drove Mendy's car back with Blanche with him from Kansas City, Missouri. The man who made the first visit to the only outside alibi witness in the case, Dottie Isaacson—not to her house—not to Blanche who spent ten days with her in Atlantic City, but Sidney, of the late anniversary the one who was interested in the interests of justice—who went to Brownsville in the interests of justice—he meets Dottie

11533

Isaacson on the East Side, on the sidewalk near a candy store; his concern over his brother in the Federal "frame-up"; his calls to Portman and Rainey out in Kansas City, Missouri—the color of that "interest in justice". Sidney Weiss, if believed, would have been the saboteur of the People's case, because if Mendy Weiss was at this birthday party, Mendy Weiss could not have been pulling the trigger. If Mendy Weiss did not pull the trigger, Lepke could not have sent him. Where is the case? All three, "out".

11534

Sammy Weiss, the second Weiss to work on the "frame-up"—this amateur photographer. Listen to this: "Now, as an amateur photographer, how do you account for your head being on the rest of this picture, People's Exhibit Z-26, for identification? A. Perhaps the District Attorney can explain."

The Court: You cannot go into this. The picture was ruled out.

Mr. Turkus: But the question and answer were not.

11535

Mr. Turkus: (Continuing): I will just get through in a couple of sentences. He has disgraced the uniform which he discredits—the United States Army can do well without Sammy—the amateur photographer. Captain Ambraz of the Second Corps, can come in a suit. Sammy, with his United States Army uniform—that is enough of Sammy.

Blanche Weiss, on the alibi! Blanche Weiss, Blanche Hoffman, Blanche Newman, Rose Miller, Rose Bell—take your pick. You heard her associates from her own lips. And here is Mendy Weiss, putting on member after member of his family—not content, not content with the part he played in it, let them get dirtied up, so he can try to sneak out. Sacrificing the whole family, from the mother down—disgracing them, so he can hide. The damaging admission that came from Blanche Weiss, though, is important. She was in Hot Springs with Mendy. Do you remember the picture I had of her in Hot Springs, and I asked her how many copies there were, and who she gave them to? That forced the admission—she thought Cuppie may have given it up—so she admitted Cuppie was in Hot Springs in 1935 and 1936 with Mendy and her—that they all went together. This is Cuppie, gentlemen, who with Magoon, was sent by Weiss on the second attempt to kill Rubin. This is the same Cuppie Migden who was referred to when Rubin was rolling in the gutter with a bullet in his head. That was the damaging admission taken from her. That is the woman, Blanche, who accidently met the only outside alibi witness in Atlantic City and spent ten days with her. There was not a word said about the case, although the indictment in this case came out in May, 1940, and Mendy was apprehended April 6, 1941. She is in Atlantic City with a woman who was allegedly at this birthday of birthdays. You don't hear from Dottie Isaacson until Sidney Weiss, interested in law and order, and justice, finds her on the East Side of New York, in front of a candy store. She is the woman who left New York after first spending time at the Unger flat and when west via Chicago. I don't have to go into associations there, only up in Rocky

Ford, Colorado, and Kansas City, Missouri, and her meeting many characters out west. This is the woman who under the guise of Rosen Bell, started to knit bandles for Britain—even disgracing that lovely charity, so she could have a "cover-up" of identity, just like her husband with the documents in his pocket. Dottie Issacson, the only outside eye-witness—that poor unfortunate thing dragged in here—dragged in here for no use at all—a poor, disreputable little creature whom you cannot help but feel sorry 11540 for in retrospect. I did not feel sorry for her on the stand because she tried to sabotage this case, and possibly I went at her a little too strong—but, in retrospect, as I look at her now, I have nothing but pity for her, the wife of a pickpocket, the so-called wife of a pickpocket, I will put it that way—going back eighteen years in her associations—eighteen years through a life of crime—a miserable pickpocket—and the only outside witness to the alibi, who was met on the street, on the East Side, by Sidney. She has a lapse of memory as to everything that 11541 happened on the East Side of Manhattan this year, but she has a remarkable memory as to what happened on September 13, 1936—she remembered the birthday of all birthdays, the twenty-sixth birthday. She even remembered it was Joan Crawford and Robert Taylor who played in the picture, I think, so that poor soul, to pay off an obligation, and Mendy Weiss sat by and let that go in, too, to save him—he let that miserable little creature perjure herself, too. But if she had been believed—that she was having her toes tickled and her hair pulled, when, in fact, Mendy Weiss was pumping bullet after bullet into the victim in this case—if that alibi was believed—Capone did not direct the murder—Weiss could not have been there to pull the trigger—Lepke did not give the order in this murder. That was Weiss' defense, backed very neatly in summation by Capone's counsel, who tried to break the People's witnesses in every detail, even when they did not affect Capone. If he summed up for Capone alone, that 11543 would be one thing, but his summation was to pay back, to pay off, even when it did not affect his client. Think that over.

Says Lepke's lawyers—"The Rosen family, the Rosen family." That is simply putting the dead man on trial. Let the jury forget all about the defense here—put the dead man on trial. And Harold Rosen, and Sylvia Rosen—oh, Sylvia is a vicious, vindictive woman who lied about the meeting with Lepke, Gurrah, Fields and Rubin, about the bringing in of the books. Let me tell you something—think this over—anybody 11544 in the clothing business as was Rosen—poor but for the Grace of God, say his children on the stand—let me tell you about the Rosen family—contrast the treatment accorded to the widow of the victim of this brutal murder when she went on the stand with the treatment accorded Mrs. Lena Weiss, the mother of the defendant, when that mother was on the stand. Contrast the difference in treatment, not only by questioning, but in summation. Here is one of the lowest legal punches in the case—Judge Talley—do you remember his cross-examination of Bernstein—and this is in the record, gentlemen, this is in the record—he said to him, Bernstein, "Muggsy Cohen, if there is such a person—Muggsy Cohen, if there is such a person." That is why, gentlemen, I walked Muggsy Cohen into the court room in answer to that—"If there is such a person." And, mind you, Judge Talley asked those questions, "If there is such a person," knowing full well that there was, because Sidney Weiss had brought Muggsy Cohen to his own law office. And he asked Sholem Bernstein, "If there is such a person." That is in the record. 11546 Now, watch the legal manouver on that. Why didn't the prosecutor question Muggsy Cohen? Does anybody in the world doubt that Sholem Bernstein stole this car, stole the plates, and placed this car, as he said he did, in the "drop"? What was the value of Muggsy Cohen's evidence? Another car thief—cumulative evidence that does not tend to connect a single defendant in the case? So what does Judge Talley do? He puts him on the stand and leaves him there. Did he or any other defense counsel ask Muggsy Cohen if, in fact, he did not 11547 steal the car with Sholem Bernstein? Not on your bottom dollar. That was manouvering—that is why I asked for a recess to think it over, and that is why I did not ask Cohen a question after recess, which happened to be after lunch. That was the smartest legal manouver in the case, to confuse the jury. Muggsy Cohen—why didn't any single defense lawyer ask a question? What did they have to lose if Muggsy Cohen, in fact, did not help Bernstein with the car?

Now, a few words about Capone. Watch these mental gymnastics of a legal mind: How could Rubin remember—how could Rubin remember—that Capone, together with Buggsy Goldstein, was in Lepke's office on the occasion before the Rosen murder? Do you remember when we picked the jury, that there was one juror here who even remembered seeing Lepke in a night club?

The Court: No, no reference to that.

Mr. Turkus (Continuing): The visit by a member of the combination—Capone—to Lepke's 11549 office, registered with Mr. Rubin. Those things usually do register, you remember something like that. Oh, Paul Berger—there is nothing to that! Paul Berger—how does he remember Capone? Paul Berger met Capone that Friday night, that fatal Friday night when the word was sent out that Rosen had to go. When Berger was brought over to meet Mendy Weiss, when he and Mendy Weiss went over so that Berger could "finger" Rosen, that is the night he met Capone, with Mendy Weiss—the night that Mendy Weiss and Capone spoke off at a distance. Sure, the cunand in the case, from this witness, you have heard—you saw the respect—the "sirs" that they gave to Capone. That might help you to figure out his status.

Oh, I cannot go into all this testimony and continue here ad infinitum. You cannot have forgotten it all. Let me go one point here in regard to Capone that was made so much of—Capone's lawyer: "They did not tell Bernstein that this was a job for Lepke." When the combination gave Bernstein an order to steal a car, 11552
I believe Bernstein when he said that at that time he did not know what it was to be used for, because he stole a car with two doors; that if he knew it was going to be a homicide at that time, it would have been four doors, so they could easily pile in and out quickly. But after he saw Capone—after he saw what was going on by way of the combination meeting and the orders he was getting, nobody had to tell Bernstein soon after that what the car was going to be used for. He could figure that out for himself. Now, Capone, they say—"Why should 11553 Capone in the presence of Magoon say that they were to do a favor for Lepke and 'hit' Rubin in the head and get rid of him?" That was a different story. Here they had Magoon "casing" a man who was being protected by a police guard. That gave it a different status. When you want a man to "case" a victim who is being protected by a police guard, you have got to show a very important reason for "casing" him and trying to "hit" him on the head. That is why it was said, "That is for Lepke, we have to do Lepke a favor, he is hurting Lepke, he has got to be 'hit' in the head." That explanation was due Magoon, if he had to go out and follow a man, "case" him, for a murder, even when a man was protected by a police guard. Even that was due Magoon, lower on the ladder than Capone though he was. And Mendy Weiss was there and said, "We will have to walk away, too," when they saw the narrow escape Magoon had, when he was stopped by the police in a laborer's clothes, and Mendy Weiss said, "We 11555 will leave it lay a while." Capone's lawyer wants to make a mountain out of this. The record shows that when I asked Magoon about his social contacts with Capone, all I was allowed to bring out on the record, there is an objection by Mr. Rosenthal and it was sustained—all I could bring out was that Magoon continued his watching—that is all I was permitted to bring out. Is it a fair argument that they had no contact? Rosenthal argued that he could not have even been in Capone's house—he did not know the street address. Did you hear Magoon describe it? Did you hear him describe the en-11556 trance and the very room he was in—the parlor? Didn't you hear him offer to take Rosenthal right to the house—and if this was a case which the District Attorney padded, don't you think I could have slipped Magoon the address? We had a picture of the house. That is the kind of atmosphere to confuse. He would have taken him right to the house.

And then he said, "Oh, why should Capone leave himself open with Magoon on an admission, as it is called?" This was in 1939. Rosen's murder was in '36. Forgotten—practically. Nothing certainly was being done, you see that from the evidence, from the standpoint of prosecution.

Now I will read this from the record: "In Capone's parlor I asked him if he thought it was advisable that I work on the Friedman thing, because I hung out about a block away and I thought I would be recognized.

"Q. When you said that you hung out about a block away and 'I thought I would be recognized,'—when you said that you hung out about a block away and it was sort of off Sutter Avenue, did Capone say anything to you? A. Yes, sir. 11558

"Q. What did he say? A. He said, 'What are you worried about?' he said, 'I worked on the Rosen thing and it was right on Sutter Avenue, and I was not made.' Then Magoon said, 'I am not worried, Louis, I am asking for your advice.'"

There is the shrewd, conniving Capone. It is all right to put Magoon in jeopardy, but not Capone. He worked on the Rosen thing; he admitted that all right. But who could talk about him? Bernstein? An admitted accomplice. 11559 And then when you bring in Magoon, the lawyer says, "What can you tack upon Capone?" Did you ever see such creatures? Did you ever see such characters?

What does he expect me to bring here,—people who Capone associated with? He is the one who is responsible for their production here—Capone himself. Sure, let Magoon get made. What did he care about Magoon? But he admitted, "I worked on the Rosen thing, and I was not made." He was not the man—because when he went by on Sutter Avenue it was in Bernstein's car—there wasn't much of a chance of picking him, or his being made. It is true he was not "made," and there was not much of a chance—he did not leave much room. The slip-up Capone made was in trying to do Lepke a favor a second time, to kill Rubin, and his admission to Magoon, who addressed him, "Yes, sir," and against whom he felt pretty safe from incrimination. And then Capone's lawyer:

11561 "Isn't it miraculous that Capone and Tannenbaum never met?" So what? Tannenbaum belonged in New York; Capone operated, as the evidence shows, in Brooklyn—pretty big by the way he ordered the men around in Brooklyn. So they never met. That made Tannenbaum frame it. So what? Does that explode the case? Does that explode the case? Capone and Tannenbaum never met. So what? So what? What is the significance?

Oh, yes, why didn't they bring Pilch, somebody hollered—the man who was present when the guns were passed? Why, all they had to do 11562 was, to procure the production of any witness the District Attorney has in custody, get his Honor to sign a subpoena and the witness is here. What do I gain by bringing Pilch here? Another one of those characters who said he saw the guns passed—it would be cumulative—what does it mean? Did they bring him into court or ask for his production and put him on the stand? What did they have to lose?

Mikey Sycoff: why wasn't he brought down? He is in the People's custody. Does that hook Capone up with corroboration? Is it anything more than cumulative? Did they ask for Mikey to be brought here? What have they got to lose? They could have put him on the stand and asked him, but they didn't even do that. They talk about not producing witnesses. Oh, yes, get the jury guessing. Baseball game, somebody said. Well, that is one baseball game that Lepke didn't manage—that is one baseball game that Capone didn't captain—that is one baseball game that Mendy Weiss didn't do any hitting on. So what? The witnesses played baseball. 11564

So what? That is their interest in the taxpayers' money. Talk about a fair and impartial trial! Look what they get: Mr. Rosenthal told you I would say that, but that does not prevent me from reminding you about it. They got everything. They got twenty-three men in the Grand Jury to hear the evidence. They got an indictment. They got nine lawyers, a former Assistant District Attorney, a former Assistant United States Attorney, a former Judge of the Court of General Sessions, and one of the lawyers said, "I have no title." But he has been a 11565 lawyer since before I went to public school. He has not title? He is one of the wiliest, one of the smartest lawyers in the court-room. He doesn't need any title.

Look what a trial Rosen got! No Grand Jury deliberated for him, when the verdict was rendered against him. Oh, yes, there is another thing which has been said:

"Why didn't Berger go in hiding?" Berger was the finger man. Nobody saw Berger finger him. What was there to go in hiding for, for Berger? Berger was safe until either Lepke or

11566 Summation on Behalf of People

Mendy Weiss opened up in the drama of 1936, because he certainly figured Rubin, the trusted aide, would not open up. But when the evidence started to come into our office, in June, 1941, when Berger was confronted in the District Attorney's office, as the evidence shows, held on a murder charge in the Rosen murder, as the finger man, then Berger opened. That was a different story.

11567 One of the lawyers said—talking about atmosphere and prejudice— "No Coughlin would stand for a Union Square fakir." Well, no decent man on this evidence will stand for a Lepke or a Capone or a Weiss.

And now they talk about Rubin's statement, which misrepresents him. We will get through with this in about five minutes—in order not to miss a single question, give me ten minutes:

11568 "Rubin"—says the defense lawyer—I do not know the descriptive adjective he tacked onto Rubin—"the architect." I can remember that. Judge O'Dwyer and the rest of his staff—would they sit by and let a Rubin or anybody pick three men out of seven million and send them up on a false murder charge? "Architect!" December, 1937, Rubin made a statement to Assistant District Attorney McCarthy in Frank S. Hogan's office, where he not only failed to incriminate Lepke in the Rosen murder, but in fact went out of his way to throw suspicion off him. That was a great point they raised here, to show that Rubin, who had every reason to feel vindictive, exonerated Lepke. There was a recess, and I was permitted to put one question and I got one answer, and the explanation was that he was afraid of Lepke.

Now let us see what the evidence disclosed in reference to Rubin's state of mind at the time he made that McCarthy statement, which, by the way, you will remember, gentlemen, was a statement that at the end of Rubin's direct testimony I had marked for identification, and then asked was it true or false, and the answer was blocked.

Let us get to this McCarthy statement. Do you remember the forecast that Lepke made 11570 about the Brooklyn investigation? Do you think that stuck in Rubin's mind? This isn't any insinuation or innuendo against any public official in the past. Public officials in the past were as honest and decent as they have been, but sometimes they are betrayed.

Whether it was the boast of a kingpin like Lepke that he has an "in"—"What difference does it make?"—the forecast came out on the Rosen matter. Everything he predicted came true. Did Rubin have reason to be afraid to talk? What was his state of mind after he rolled 11571 in the gutter? Do you think he had reason to be afraid? Were his fears justified. Haven't you heard with your very ears and seen with your very eyes that even after Rubin had been shot once an attempt was made to kill him while even under police guard? Now, this is taken verbatim from counsel's summation, referring to Rubin: "I did not impute to him any wrongdoing in the Rosen case, but his own conscience was bothering him and he did not like the way I was questioning him, and he laughed at me and said, 'Maybe your conscience is bothering you,' when my whole proof in the case is he did not know anything about the Rosen case."

Now listen to this: "Why should I try to implicate him when I know that statement is in existence exonerating him?" That statement was not put in evidence until long after the Rubin cross-examination on the main story. Then later, when Rubin was recalled to the stand to connect up the final link in an endeavor to spoliate evidence by shooting him through the 11573 back of the head—it shows conclusively that Lepke knew of the Rubin statement on the very summation of counsel.

Did Rubin have reason to believe he had an "In"? We need not have much difficulty in finding out what was what in connection with Rubin. Inspector McDermott prevailed on him to come over and have a discussion with Judge O'Dwyer. Rubin was not the kind of a witness that ran to help law-enforcement agents. He was, as he said, a reluctant witness, and you can see that from the stand, and when he was 11574 asked by one lawyer, "Aren't you vindictive against Lepke?" he said, "I have every reason to be, but I am telling the truth about him." And the evidence in this case shows that he did.

Gentlemen, I told you I would finish up at "nine" on the clock. I will keep my promise.

This was no killing in the heat of passion—it was not a killing for the possession of a woman or an article of value. This was not even the killing of a corner thug on a stick-up who shoots his victim when there is resistance. This was a well-plotted, cold-blooded, brutal murder, to silence Rosen and to frighten others—a murder to silence the man and to frighten off others.

The District Attorney would like to convict every one of them in this matter—every one whose fingers are dipped in the blood of Rosen—that goes for the chauffeur; that goes for the finger man; but you cannot. You just cannot. Because if you do not use the finger man and you do not use the chauffeur, the three top-notchers, the three principals, would escape. The only way to bring a solution to this cold- 11576 blooded murder was to break it from within. You cannot let the three killers of Rosen escape here—the three king-pin men in the murder of Rosen—the two behind the scenes and the one firing the lethal shot, because the tools, like the chauffeur and the finger man, cannot be convicted. It would be monstrous, absolutely monstrous. It is unthinkable that such logic can be urged before a jury. Four degrees of homicide will be charged to you by the Judge. Four degrees: Murder in the first, murder in the second, manslaughter in the first, and manslaughter 11577 in the second. That is the law that must be charged to the jury in this case. That is not an indicated, that is not a signal to you to look for any compromise verdict in this case. There is no compromise with this kind of murder—the Rosen murder.

Take the corroboration—you are going to hear the law on corroboration—take that corroboration tending to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime. There is nothing "tending" here. They are connected—irresistible and conclusively—fact on fact, by witness after witness. It is unthinkable that five weeks of testimony can be blotted out by the orations of defense counsel with weaseled words trying to show you the holes and flaws in the case where none exist.

11578 Exceptions to Court's Refusal to Permit Objections During People's Summation

Gentlemen, the four degrees to be charged here are not a signal for compromise. The Rosen murder is not a case to be compromised. Bring in a verdict, a verdict that is consonant 11579 with our principles of American justice—a verdict that is consonant with the facts that have been so irresistibly and conclusively established here. There is only one verdict the law of the land will permit here on the facts by the jury and that is "Guilty," that is the guilt of Lepke, Capone, and Weiss of murder in the first degree—that is the verdict.

The Court: (addressing the jury) Gentlemen,
11580 we will now take a recess for 15 minutes. Please do not discuss the case in the interim. This is to allow you a little time to relax so that you will not be thinking about the summation and possibly confusing it with the charge. I do not want the two to conflict. The jury may leave.

Mr. Barshay: First, your Honor, I respectfully except to the Court's refusal to permit counsel to make or take objection to the summation of the District Attorney during his summation at a time when counsel thought there was a proper reason and ground for the objection.

Secondly, I respectfully except to your Honor's excluding the jury now and taking these objections and exceptions in the absence of the jury, on the ground that the damage already has been done and the jury will be in no position to know whether or not the Court has ruled.

The Court: Do not argue, just take your exception.

11582

Mr. Barshay: Now I move for the withdrawal of a juror on the ground that by the District Attorney's unfounded and baseless statements and wrongly-interpreted statements when he wound up his summation with "Lepke knew of the existence of such a statement made by Rubin to McCarthy," and when he further said that "the statement was not offered here until two weeks after Rubin left the stand and was recalled," when the evidence specifically shows that on direct examination of Rubin Mr. Turkus personally offered the statement in evidence, which was properly objected to and sustained.

11583

I further move for the declaration of a mistrial on that ground.

The Court: Motion denied.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

I object to that part of the summation of the District Attorney which was purely an appeal to prejudice and passion and not founded upon facts or a fair inference therefrom, and on the ground it contained improper statements and conclusions and improper inferences therefrom, and on the further ground that he brought, in his summation, into issue the integrity of the Distriet Attorney and his Assistants, who were not on trial. On that ground I move for the withdrawal of a juror and the declaration of a mistrial.

11584 Exceptions to Court's Refusal to Permit Objections During People's Summation

The Court: Motion denied.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

May I point out specifically some of the things which are prejudicial in nature and use them as the basis of a motion for the withdrawal of a 11585 juror and the declaration of a mistrial? For example, when he urged in his summation this point: "What would have happened to Patrolman Cappadora if he came along at the time?"

The Court: If there is much of this, you had better submit it in writing and put it on the record later.

Mr. Barshay: That is all right. I will dictate them separately.

The Court: If any attempt is made by each of counsel to review the entire summation and to make motions based on each and every point 11586 on which they do not agree, it is going to take a very long time and it will serve no useful purpose. It simply is not done—I have never found it to be done.

Mr. Barshay: We will do it your way, Judge.

The Court: There are plenty of places where counsel on both sides crossed the line. Due latitude for encroachment is recognized in summation. I never heard one that was strictly fair to anyone else.

Mr. Barshay: I will reserve my rights in accordance with your Honor's instructions.

Mr. Talley: I ask that all the objections made to the summation by either or both other counsel in this case apply to the defendant Weiss. I have one or two objections which I would like to urge now, which will only take a couple of minutes.

11587

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: I except to your Honor's direction to counsel that there be no interruption of the summation of the District Attorney. I object to the District Attorney's summation upon all the grounds presented and to be presented by counsel for the defendant Buchalter.

11588

I ask that an exception be granted on each and every one of those grounds, if denied.

I object to the summation of the District Attorney upon the ground it is based solely—or rather, the appeal was based solely upon passion and prejudice, to the prejudice of the defendants.

I object to that part of the summation which constituted an attack—because it was so unjustifiable and unjustified—upon defendants counsel. For instance, reference to the defense of Weiss, and in reference to the episode of calling the witness Muggsy Cohen, a witness in the direct custody of the District Attorney, as "the lowest bunch in the case."

I object to all reference by the District Attorney to the shooting of Rubin as being perpetrated by Weiss, upon the ground there is no credible evidence to justify that contention. In any event, it was a reference and discussion in an attempt to persuade the jurors with reference to a separate and distinct crime from that which was named in the indictment.

I object further to the misquotation of evidence and to reference to matters by the District Attorney not in the evidence at all.

11590 Exceptions to Court's Refusal to Permit Objections During People's Summation

I move for the withdrawal of a juror and the declaration of a mistrial upon those grounds.

The Court: Motion denied.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

Reference was also made by the District Attorney as to money being paid to defendants' counsel being tainted. I take an exception to your Honor's failure to not only warn but to stop the District Attorney from making remarks 11591 of that kind.

The Court: Motion for a mistrial; denied.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I have it appear at this time that I have refrained from interrupting the District Attorney's summation when I considered, at times, it was highly improper, merely because of the Court's admonition not to do so, and that I will submit, in accordance with the Court's statement to Mr. Barshay, in written form, various items which I consider were improper in this case and which I would have had 11592 reason to object to, had I not had the Court's admonition not to interrupt, and upon that written statement which I intend to submit I ask for the withdrawal of a juror and the declaration of a mistrial because the appeal, in so far as the defendant Capone is concerned, was purely to prejudice and passion, and not in any wise founded upon the evidence, but merely and clearly avoidance on the part of the District Attorney to in any wise attempt to justify from the evidence facts sufficient to warrant the jury in finding a verdict as against him.

The Court: Motion denied.

Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

11593

I understand I have permission to submit these in writing to the stenographer, so they may be spread on the record?

The Court: I will take them now. I will take the motion now.

Mr. Rosenthal: I did not mean the motion; I meant the statement.

The Court: Before this jury comes back, whatever you say is going to be on the record.

Mr. Rosenthal: I thought your Honor said we could submit. 11594

The Court: I am not going to give permission, after the trial is over, to argue an appeal on a padded record.

Mr. Barshay: I will put mine on the record very quickly.

I object to the statement of the District Attorney with respect to "What would have happened to Patrolman Cappadora if he had come along when Weiss and the others were outside of Rosen's candy store?

I object to the reference by the District Attorney in his summation, to this part, where he said, "Do you think that Rosen had only that complaint to make?" 11595

I object to the constant reference by the District Attorney that counsel for the defendants were seeking to confuse one or two jurors for the purpose of obtaining a disagreement or a hung jury.

I object to the Assistant District Attorney's reference to that part of the activities of counsel with respect to Rubin's testimony: "If, next month, the defendant Buchalter will be in Manhattan, his lawyers will have him running from O'Dwyer."

11596 Exceptions to Court's Refusal to Permit Objections During People's Summation

Mr. Turkus: I never said that at all.

Mr. Barshay: We object to the reference of counsel for the People to the fee we received in this case, saying that it was "tainted money," as compared to the fee which the City pays him, or words substantially to that effect.

11597 I object to counsel for the People urging to this jury that counsel for the defense asserted or insinuated by direct evidence or by inference that we accuse Judge O'Dwyer or his Assistants of framing the defendants, or that they suborned perjury, or that they have committed subornation of perjury, and that we put the District Attorney's office of Kings County on trial, when the facts show directly to the contrary.

The Court: Do not argue. This is all out of order. It has never been done in any trial before. I have indulged you to the utmost throughout this trial, and that is the only reason I am allowing you to do it.

11598 Mr. Barshay: I object to the District Attorney's charge that counsel for defense is accusing the District Attorney's office of attempting to murder these defendants.

I object to the statement of the District Attorney that counsel knew, when they were retained, that the defendants were guilty.

I object to the statement that the lawyers in the court-room knew the defendants were guilty and that the people in the court-room knew the defendants were guilty, and on that score may I say to your Honor, while there is not any evidence, there is some talk that relatives of the jurors have been in this court-room during part of this trial.

The Court: Strike that out. It is wholly unwarranted. If you make any more misstatements like that, I will direct you to take your seat. You have no right to make such a statement. That is manufacturing a record.

Mr. Barshay: I take an exception.

The Court: When counsel sum up in the course of three days, it stands to reason the summation steps on somebody's toes over and over again.

11600

Crying over it after it is all over is not nice. You never get anywhere in this world by crying.

Go ahead with your exceptions.

Mr. Barshay: I take an exception.

I object to the District Attorney saying in summation, referring to his own office, the reason they did not take a stenographic statement was because there were prying fingers or lurking eyes who can see it, and therefore they made memoranda on pads; and at the same time that they knew they were dealing with men whose fingers were steeped in blood.

11601

I object to the District Attorney saying in summation that while he was questioning Tannenbaum, Tannenbaum kept on saying, "I assert my Constitutional rights," when the evidence shows he never questioned Tannenbaum on the Rosen case.

I object to the insinuation by the District Attorney that Lepke was indicted in 1940 and was not arraigned until 1941, as innuendo that may lead the jury to the conclusion that Lepke was in flight, when the fact is—

11602 Exceptions to Court's Refusal to Permit Objections During People's Summation

The Court: Do not argue; take your exception.

Mr. Barshay: All right, I except.

I object to the District Attorney saying, "If they had not been"—referring to the defendants —"killers of Rosen, you would not have to sit here."

11603 I object to the District Attorney saying that Rosen had the foresight to run to Pennsylvania from the New York racketeers, on the ground there is no proof in this record to that effect.

The Court: I will not hear any more argument. After mentioning the ground, the rest is entirely out of order.

Mr. Barshay: I take an exception.

May I argue that?

The Court: No, sit down. We will indulge in no more disorder.

It only demonstrates that the Court was wise in not permitting the sabotage of any summa-11604 tion, but enforced from the beginning the request that due courtesy be shown by one counsel to the other in permitting orderly argument.

Mr. Barshay: I take exception.

Mr. Talley: In addition to the objections I have urged upon your Honor, I object to the reference made by the District Attorney about money paid to the defense counsel as contrasted with the compensation that he receives as Assistant District Attorney.

I object further to the reference that he made that counsel for the defendant Weiss was willing and ready to interfere or "sabotage," to use his word—with the investigation being conducted by the District Attorney.

I make the further objection, with great respect, to your Honor permitting a blown up photograph, being about 4 feet by 5, or 4 by 4, let us say, affixed to a board about 5 by 6, placed behind the witness chair, in full view of the jury just at the time of the beginning of the summation of the District Attorney.

The Court: That is another statement for the purpose of manufacturing a record. The Court did not know of it until you attracted its attention just now. The exhibit is of no value whatever and it could not possibly influence the jury. You saw it throughout. If you wanted to object you could have stood up and called attention to it. You are now accusing the Court of permitting it to be there or permitting it to be used, and that is untrue.

Mr. Talley: Surely your Honor does not say you have not observed it; that board was directly behind you.

11607

The Court: My back was turned to it; you were facing it throughout.

Mr. Talley: I note an exception to your Honor's remarks in regard to the photograph.

The Court: This is disorderly.

Mr. Talley: Note my exception.

Mr. Rosenthal: I intend to make a general objection, without quoting from the summation itself.

I object to the summation of the District Attorney upon the ground that it places before this jury a false issue, the integrity of the District

11608 Exceptions to Court's Refusal to Permit Objections During People's Summation

Attorney; further upon the ground there were statements made by him not contained within the record of this trial; further upon the ground that by his summation he drew, indirectly, an inference as to Capone's failure to take the stand, contrary to law; further as to his unwarranted characterization of defense counsel; further, his reference to "combinations" of people outside of the jury box; and further, his reference, in so 11609 far as attempted spoliation of evidence is concerned, with respect to the defendant Capone.

The Court: Now the Court instructs the court officer to remove from the room all of those enlarged photographs and to put them in an adjoining room. I have not eyes in the back of my head. I will not have any more manufacturing of the record that is impugning the honor of the Court. I also instruct the Clerk to find out who put it there at the beginning, or whenever it was put there this afternoon.

Clerk Clark: This is the first time I noticed it, Judge.

11610 The Court: You did not notice it either?

Clerk Clark: No, sir.

The Court: I want to find out who gave the tip-off to put it there, because, obviously, it was for the purpose of manufacturing a record.

The Jury then returned to the court room.

The Charge of the Court

Taylor, J.—Members of the Jury, the case is submitted to you today, even though it involves a late charge of the Court, because the time is now 3:20. It is done because one of the counsel for the defense has to be in the Court of Appeals in Albany on Monday, and that takes precedence over the trial of this case. I do not think it advisable to let you be for two days idle under simply a direction by the Court not to discuss the case. Forty-eight hours is a long time to 11612 keep people together after summations by all sides. It therefore seemed better to charge the jury today.

Under Section 5 of the Judiciary Law, a verdict may be taken on a Sunday, so there will be no interruption of your deliberations.

I wish to impress upon you this: When you go to the jury room just put entirely out of your minds any desire that any of you may feel to be back with your families or back in your homes. You will be a good many years, I hope, in the company of your families, but after being for so many weeks in the trial of this case, the issue 11613 in this case is of paramount importance. Just now it completely overshadows the matter of personal convenience of any member of the jury or of the Court. The important thing is to get a mature decision, based upon the evidence and the evidence alone, a decision which will be fair and impartial, which will be without passion, without prejudice, and without sympathy.

In one of the summations you were told that the only reason for a special jury is in order to save time in the selection of the jury. That is not strictly correct. The fundamental statutory purpose of the special jury is to get men who are above the average in both intelligence and character to determine issues presented on trial in either civil or criminal cases, where those issues come under the provisions of that statute, and thereby indicate the advisability of having a jury above the average in intelligence and character. I think that is a fair statement.

At the outset of this trial, when you were selected, you took an oath to render a true ver-11615 dict upon the evidence. That means upon the believable evidence and the case and upon the legitimate inferences which may by law, within the province of the jury, be drawn therefrom.

The case must be decided fairly, without prejudice and without sympathy. That means not only to one side, but to both—fairly, without prejudice or sympathy to either the defendants or to The People of the State of New York—because this requirement is a rule that works both ways. The scales of justice must be kept evenly balanced to see that the rights of both sides are respected. That is what the trial of 11616 a case in court, according to accepted standards, means.

Of course, gentlemen, after the evidence is in, each side has a right to argue its case. This presents practical difficulties, because there is a tendency for anybody, in arguing his own side of the case, to step across the line; but the argument of a case, that which is known as the summation, must not be a fight among counsel. Each side is entitled to state its argument without interruption. Of course, when there is an overstepping, I trust that you recognize it. You will not be inflamed by anything that is said, and you will not be misled by departures from the record. You will apply such parts of the argument as received from any counsel only as it affects the record, the evidence in the case, and use it only as your guide, if it meets your own common sense and judgment.

At the outset I asked all counsel to respect one another's rights, and on the first two or three objections by the District Attorney, I put an end to any further interruptions. I tried, fairly and without playing favorites, to notice certain things 11618 that required judicial interruption. That is different because the Judge is not fighting either side. The Judge is trying to avoid being knocked down by both parties to the fight. The Judge is like a referee, rushing in between combatants. He takes a chance of being hit, but he does not hit back.

The question of application of the rule of fairness is not one of mere apportionment; it is one of applicability according to wherever those rules indicate truth and justice lie. Decide the case upon the believable evidence as you find it 11619 to be established.

As you sift through the mass of testimony that has gone into the case, in a record approximating a million words, you will seek to bring forth the germs of truth. Decide without fear and favor; see that the rights of both sides are preserved throughout, and to the full extent permissible, without prejudice.

If it is not established beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants, or any of them, are guilty, there shall be an acquittal of such defendant or defendants. If beyond a reasonable doubt you find the case to be established as one of guilt as to any or all defendants, you will announce that verdict at the conclusion of your deliberations.

Questions of law are for the Court. It is not the purpose of the Court, in making any allusions to evidence, to do so for the purpose of refreshing recollection or particularizing in order to emphasize one point as against another. You heard the witnesses. You heard the evidence exhaustively discussed by counsel. The Court 11621 placed no time limitation upon the discussion, simply tried to preserve order and dignity, two qualities which are inherent in the administration of justice, and which it is the duty of the Judge to do.

It is the record of the evidence that counts, and that is left to your memory, to be refreshed in such particulars, if any, as you may desire, by a re-reading of minutes on any particular point, should that be necessary.

When I said that questions of law are for the Court, that means that you must eradicate from your minds any interest in the rulings of the 11622 Court upon objections of counsel. There is a little way that lawyers have, regardless of which side they represent, of arguing back when the Court rules on points which are so simple that they know as well as the Judge does that the Judge is right. It is a pardonable trend, but, if the Court permitted it, it might presently get some jurymen thinking, "I wonder if this Judge is giving a fair trial? If I were the Judge, I would rule so and so." Well, of course, the answer is that the Judge has a lifetime of study and experience in learning the rules of evidence, and the jury is a lay body with no knowledge of the law of evidence, so the jury has nothing to do with that.

If the Judge makes a mistake—and to err is human—there is another way of its being corrected, if correction be necessary.

The law requires the Court to charge, for one thing, that the jury shall not consider the question of punishment. That is not the responsibility of the jury. That is the responsibility of the law of The State of New York or, in a lower degree than murder in the first degree, 11624 it is to a certain extent within the discretion of the Judge. I say that because the law says the Judge shall so charge the jury. There is a good reason for it. In a capital case the jury must get out of mind that it is fastening the punishment. It is the law that fastens the punishment. With the spectre of punishment before the juror's eyes, he may think that he is disinclined to view the case impartially, logically, and honestly, in accordance with his oath of office; so I charge you that your sole responsibility is to decide whether or not the defendants, or any of them, 11625 are guilty, and consider that the question of punishment is not in your province but is that of the law and of the Judge.

The indictment charges murder in the first degree, committed as follows:

"The defendants, on or about September 13, 1936, in the County of Kings, wilfully, feloniously, and of malice aforethought, shot and killed Joseph Rosen with revolvers."

You will not be concerned with the severance as to one of the defendants, in fact, you will not be concerned with any of the procedural matters connected with the trial of this indictment. Just have this in mind, that is the indictment, and that is what each of these three defendants is charged with.

Under the law which permits the three defendants to be tried together, you will have to consider in connection therewith the definition of the word "principal" as set forth in Section 2 of the Penal Law, which reads as follows:

"A person concerned in the commission of a crime, whether he directly commits the act con-11627 stituting the offense or aids and abets in its commission, and whether present or absent, and a person who directly or indirectly counsels, commands, induces or procures another to commit a crime, is a 'principal'."

You see how broad that is. A principal means, of course, that he is guilty, if he is a principal. It includes not merely the man who does the shooting; it includes the lookout, the wheel man, the finger man, and the man who, even though at a distance, gives the directions.

The law provides that where one degree of 11628 crime is charged the Judge shall charge the jury as to all other degrees and for that reason the Court is charging you in this case as to two degrees of murder and two other degrees of homicide, to wit, manslaughter, but instructs you that your verdict, if one of guilty, shall be of such crime and of such degree of crime as is shown by the evidence to be the one that was committed. Do not compromise. Find your verdict according to the evidence.

The law says that no person can be convicted of murder or manslaughter unless the death of the person alleged to have been killed and the fact of the killing by the defendant, as alleged, are each established as independent facts; the former by direct proof, and the latter beyond a reasonable doubt.

The former is what is known as "corpus delicti." There, you see, direct proof is necessary. It would never do to convict somebody of murder and then find out, after the penalty of the law had been carried out, that the alleged victim was still alive. You cannot take chances on that. You need direct proof.

For that reason, during the first part of the trial, considerable time was taken up in proving what is known as the corpus delicti, consisting of the testimony of the Medical Examiner and of those who found the body and identified it to the Medical Examiner, knowing it to be the body of Joseph Rosen.

I charge you now that the difference between murder and manslaughter is this: With murder there is an intent to kill; with manslaughter there is a killing, but without intent to kill. The intent to kill may be inferred from the act itself because it may be reasonably assumed, under given circumstances, that a person intends the reasonable and natural consequences of his act.

You will not consider manslaughter at all unless you find that there was a killing but not with an intent to kill and that the killing was done by these defendants or any of them.

I am charging you on these different points because the law says I must. Don't think it is a cue to compromise. I have charged you not to compromise. Your verdict shall accord with the evidence.

11632 The Charge of the Court

The difference between murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree, broadly speaking, is that murder in the first degree is done with premeditation and deliberation, whereas murder in the second degree may be killing with intent to kill but without premeditation and deliberation, and so you find murder in the first degree as applied to the alleged facts in this case to be defined as follows: "from a deliberate and premeditated design to effect the 11633 death of the person killed."

On the question as to what is necessary as premeditation and deliberation, I charge you that all the law requires is this: There shall be some reflection and some thought which precedes the act. If there is thought, if there is reflection on the act, and if there is a choice and determination as the result of these mental actions, then there is sufficient deliberation within the law. It is only essential that the period of premeditation shall be long enough for the perpetrator to decide between doing and not doing the act. Nevertheless, I charge you that in your applica-11634 tion of that, the period must not be simply such as to permit a conviction in the first degree upon a microscope or infinitesimal consideration and conclusion so far as the time element and deliberative element are concerned. Deliberation means a very real thing. It means an act of the intellect. It means something in the nature of a cold-blooded decision, rather than a hot-blooded, irresistible act.

Murder in the second degree is defined, as applied to the alleged facts in this charge, as follows:

"Such killing of a human being is murder in the second degree when committed with a design to effect the death of the person killed but without deliberation and premeditation."

But deliberation and premeditation, as with intent to kill, may be, I charge you, inferred from the act, and where there is evidence of preparation, evidence of a preconceived intent, and that evidence is unmistakable, or, at least, I should say if it is established beyond a reasonable doubt, that is murder in the first degree and is not murder in the second degree. 11636

Manslaughter in the first degree, as applied to the alleged facts embraced in this charge, is stated by law as follows:

"Such homicide is manslaughter in the first degree when committed without a design to effect death, in the heat of passion, but in a cruel and unusual manner or by means of a dangerous weapon."

Manslaughter in the second degree—and only such part of the definition as could possibly be construed as having application to the alleged facts in this charge—is defined as follows: 11637

"In the heat of passion, but not by a dangerous weapon of by the use of means either cruel or unusual, or by any act or procurement of any person which, according to the provisions of this article, does not constitute the crime of murder in the first degree or murder in the second degree, nor manslaughter in the first degree."

I charge you that the verdict as to each defendant and your consideration of the evidence as to each defendant shall be separate, because, from place to place on the record of this trial, is evidence applicable to one or two defendants only. These three defendants are tried together because that is provided for by a statute of this State. We cannot question the wisdom of that statute. It was passed by the Legislature and signed by the Governor. It is the law. But that does not lessen your responsibility in seeing that the evidence as against each is properly segregated and applied only as to him.

I shall have to later come back, and in a sort 11639 of way which I hope will be fair, attempt to point out certain parts, possibly the bulk, possibly all of the points of evidence in connection with the defendant or defendants to whom they apply. I will do that as a safeguard against your own confusion, but when I do it, remember it is your own recollection of the record that counts. Try as hard as I may to be fair in epitomizing for the purpose of segregation from, as I said, approximately a million words of record, I do not guarantee it to be true, because I cannot give assurance against the human frailty of making mistakes.

11640 Your verdict, as I have charged, shall be separate as to each. In announcing it, I wish you would bear in mind to make your announcement in substantially the following form—please remember this, Mr. Foreman—in returning your verdict, say it something like this:

"We find the defendant Buchalter"—and then announce "guilty" or "not guilty" or "disagree":

"We find the defendant Weiss"—and then announce "guilty" or "not guilty" or "disagree":

"We find the defendant Capone" "guilty" or "not guilty" or "disagree."

But remember, as to disagreement, that while the law permits that you may agree as to one or two and disagree as to one or two, it is in the discretion of the Court to keep you out longer than you may think necessary in an effort to harmonize you and to get you to agree as to those whom you have thus far or up to that point failed to agree on.

I charge you that when the evidence approaches such a point, and only if it approaches such a point as to establish a conspiracy, a 11642 coming together of minds and an agreement and an overt act pursuant thereto for the purpose of doing a homicide, only when and if that point is reached may the act of one person be binding upon and become the act of another, but if that point is reached then from that moment on, from the moment of coordination and joint action as evidenced by an overt act—and only one overt act is needed—then the act of any defendant pursuant to such conspiracy, may be binding upon the other or others, and bring them all within the provisions of Section 2 of the Penal 11643
Law defining principal. This does not apply, however, to anything that may be done after the commission of the crime or anything that may be admitted by one and not by another concerning what is alleged to have been done. On the latter point, let me specifically say that if, after the commission of a crime, a defendant runs away, that counts against him but it does not count against those who do not run away.

If a defendant causes a witness to run away, that comes under the law known as spoliation of evidence, and that counts only against such defendant as causes the witness to run away. This applies likewise to hiding.

If a defendant tries to kill off a witness, that comes under spoliation of evidence and it counts only against such defendant as is in on it. It does not count against those who are not shown by the evidence to be in on it.

Likewise, if after the commission of a crime one or more defendants admit guilt or make any admissions along the line of guilt, those may be counted as evidence only against the one 11645 who makes them, and are not binding upon or applicable to any of the others. Please bear that in mind. I emphasize it because it is a very important point in this trial.

It is alleged in this trial, and is submitted to you on the evidence, that Weiss ran away and he ran away after a declaration that "It looks like Allie was talking and I will have to duck," and that when he was picked up in Kansas City he made a statement to a Federal agent in which he specifically referred to O'Dwyer and to the position he would be in, sitting between O'Dwyer 11646 and Dewey, and that it had been his intention to return after O'Dwyer was out of office, which, as implied by the evidence, would be after a reasonable length of time. Of course, that is up to you to figure out.

As to the alleged Rubin spoliation, that is, getting Rubin to run away and hide in various places in the United States and secrete himself in various places in the city under assumed names and, at times, in disguise, and the alleged conversations between Buchalter and Rubin in connection therewith, and the bringing in or alleged bringing in by Buchalter of Berger to take charge of it, under Buchalter's supervision or direction, that has nothing to do with anybody except Buchalter, because there is not a scrap of evidence that either Weiss or Capone had anything to do with that, but—and this is very important for you to bear in mind—the alleged shooting of Rubin through the head was months after Buchalter was last seen in town. When he was last seen in town, he is alleged to have made a statement to Berger that he would have to get 11648 out, things were getting too hot, or words to that effect. So you see there is no evidence connecting Buchalter with that shooting. That would come down to Weiss and Capone. The evidence for you to consider in connection with that I will have to come back to later, because I want to be accurate. It concerns both Weiss and Capone, that is, so far as your consideration is concerned, but without any hint from the Court as to how you shall decide the truth or the falsity of the evidence on that point or what inference you consider legitimate to infer 11649 from the evidence on that point.

The law says, concerning overt acts, that no agreement amounts to a conspiracy unless some act besides the crime be done to effect the object thereof by one or more of the parties to such agreement.

The defendant in a criminal case is presumed to be innocent until the contrary be proved, and in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal. So that is the task which you have to face; that is the task to which you must give all of the intelligence that is in you, in order to accomplish an accurate solution.

It has been said, I believe, in the course of this argument, that a reasonable doubt is one for which you can give a reason. That, however, is not strictly clear, because there may be good reasons and there may be bad reasons. The law does not mean a doubt the reason for which it is unsound or whimsical. It means a sound, sane, intelligent doubt existing in the 11651 mind of a man who has brains which he is willing to use and does use in an earnest application of them whereby to arrive at an accurate conclusion from the evidence.

I will read you something on the question of reasonable doubt from an authority. I think it is considered good law, because this is quoted from the case of Holt v. U. S. It was in the United States Supreme Court, and I am reading from the opinion (218 U. S. 245):

"A reasonable doubt is an actual doubt that you are conscious of after going over in your minds the entire case, giving consideration to 11652 all the testimony and every part of it. If you then feel uncertain and not fully convinced that the defendant is guilty, and believe that you are acting in a reasonable manner, and if you believe that a reasonable man in any matter of like importance would hesitate to act because of such a doubt as you are conscious of having, that is a reasonable doubt of which the defendant is entitled to have the benefit."

Gentlemen, in quoting from what an appellate judge writes, that only reflects his own expression, but it comes from a high source and, even if it may be debatable as to an accurate statement of text, it is worthy of consideration because of the high source from which it comes.

Now I will quote from People v. Trimarchi, 231 N. Y., from an opinion in the Court of Appeals:

"The rule is that all the evidence, when considered by the jury, must, beyond a reasonable doubt, exclude or remove every other reasonable hypothesis than that of the defendant's guilt. The evidence of facts and circumstances, in order to justify a conviction, must all be consistent with and point not only to the guilt of defendant, but they must be inconsistent with his innocence."

11654

I think that is enough on the point. You have brains and I trust you will use them.

On the question of accomplice turning State's evidence, we have a statute which reads as follows:

"A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless he be corroborated by such other evidence as tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime."

11655

Bear in mind this part of the text: "as tends to connect". That is all that is required.

Gentlemen, this is very important in this case. Please follow me closely. Don't let your attention deviate. I will read it again:

"A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless he be corroborated by such other evidence as tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime."

In connection with the meaning of the word "accomplice" I will read again Section 2 of the Penal Law defining "principal", because when 11656 that statute was enacted in this State it threw together both the common law meaning of "principal" and "accomplice" under the head of "principal."

Under that statute in this state an accomplice has to be found, in order to be an accomplice, to be a principal. In common law the principal was the man who did the actual act. A man who met any of the other requirements of this statute was known as "accessory before the fact." But, as I say, these two have been united in this 11657 statute. I will read it again:

"A person concerned in the commission of a crime, whether he directly commits the act constituting the offense or aids and abets in its commission, and whether present or absent, and a person who directly or indirectly counsels, commands, induces or procures another to commit a crime, is a principal."

That is what is meant by the law when it says "accomplice". The law says that the question is one of law, and the Judge must decide it unless there is a dispute of fact. In the latter complice or if certain evidence is, on the other hand, accepted, he is not an accomplice, then the question is one for the jury to decide, as to which evidence is true and which evidence is false, or what is the inference to be drawn from uncontradicted evidence which is capable of more than one construction but is sufficiently ambiguous to require an application of the jury mind in determining the question.

Here is what the law requires, according to the accepted authorities of the learned Appellate Courts of this state. 11660

"The other evidence required to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice need be no more than as tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime."

It is enough if it tends to connect the defendant in such a way as may reasonably satisfy the jury that the accomplice is telling the truth. The corroboration is not restricted to any particular point. Its connection with the defendants' own statement and denials, if any, should be considered where by witnesses an issue is created, or 11661 if the statements or denials are put in as having been made prior to the trial and therefore in the nature of admissions.

It may vary in its nature according to the circumstances of the particular case. It is not necessary that corroborative evidence should of itself be sufficient to show the commission of the crime or to connect the defendants with it, but it is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendants or any defendant with the commission of the crime.

As stated substantially in a leading authority in this state, People v. Cohen, in the Court of Appeals, the statute does not require that the whole case be proved outside of the testimony of the accomplice. It simply requires evidence from an independent source of some material fact or facts tending to show that a crime has been committed and that the defendant was implicated in it.

I now charge you that both Paul Berger and Solomon Bernstein are accomplices as a matter
11663 of law. Please bear this distinctly in mind. I am mentioning the names of Paul Berger and Solomon Bernstein, but they are the only ones in the case who are accomplices as a matter of law. Therefore, the law as to accomplice corroboration which I have read applies as to their testimony. They must be corroborated by such evidence as tends to connect the defendants or any of them with the commission of the crime, but it is not required that the whole case as testified to by Berger and by Bernstein be proved outside of their testimony. It simply 11664 requires evidence from other witnesses who are not accomplices, of some material fact or facts tending to show that a crime has been committed and (I stress the word "and") that the defendant or defendants were implicated in it.

I now charge you that I find in the record no evidence from which I can be justified in submitting to you that either Rubin, Tannenbaum, or Magoon is an accomplice in the murder of Rosen. You cannot guess at it. To submit the question of either Rubin, Tannenbaum, or Magoon being an accomplice in the Rosen murder, there must be something in the record to submit to you so that you may find them or any of them to be accomplices as a matter of fact. There is no such evidence in the record. I cannot charge that to you and must therefore charge you to treat their evidence as coming from witnesses who are not accomplices. Remember that, now: Berger and Bernstein are accomplices. Rubin, Tannenbaum, and Magoon are not accomplices in the Rosen murder.

The statute as to accomplices does not apply 11666 as to collateral matters. Unquestionably, if you accept Rubin's testimony that he ran away and hid to protect Buchalter, that makes him guilty of attempted spoliation of evidence, flight and hiding, making evidence unavailable without which investigations collapse, but that does not come under the accomplice act. He does not have to be corroborated for that. If you believe him, you can take his testimony as true, without corroboration.

Likewise with Magoon. Magoon is a crook, 11667 murderer, and he, according to the evidence, if true, was hooked up with an attempted spoliation of evidence by attempted assassination of a witness. That is another matter. That is not the Rosen murder, and the accomplice statute does not apply to that, so he does not have to be corroborated as to that unless you independently find that he has, in order to satisfy yourselves as to the truth of his statement.

The same way as to Tannenbaum. Tannenbaum testifies as to certain alleged admissions, hooking up Weiss, but, according to the record, there is nothing to show that Tannenbaum was in any way connected with the Rosen murder; therefore you have a right, if you see fit to accept Tannenbaum's evidence without corroboration, to do so.

Of course, the law never charges a jury that it must have no corroboration. That would be foolish. The law leaves it to the jury to say in any case whether it accepts the testimony, or any part thereof, by a given witness or witnesses without corroboration, or to require cor-11669 roboration if it deems that necessary; or, if corroboration has been given, whether or not to require further corroboration. That is within the province of the jury on all points, in all cases, regardless of the question arising out of the accomplice statute. That has always been so. It was so long before the accomplice statute was even thought of.

It is for you and you alone to say whether the evidence on a point required to be corroborated, given by the non-accomplice witnesses, is true or whether, on the other hand, it is not suffi-11670 ciently shown to be true, this because you are the sole judges of the facts; but if you find such corroborative evidence to be true, to be duly established to your satisfaction, then it is for you to say whether such as you find to be established constitutes evidence tending to connect the defendants or any of them with the commission of the crime as provided by the statute to which your attention has been directed.

Now, the law as to spoliation of evidence: The act of intentionally destroying or fabricating evidence has always been regarded with suspicion. It is a circumstance indicating a weak cause.

One's conduct in thus destroying evidence may be attributed to a belief that the truth would have operated against him. The unfavorable inference will not arise unless the destruction was intentional.

It is well said that the deliberate destruction of written evidence, or, you might say, any evidence, gives rise to the inference that the matter destroyed is unfavorable to the spoliator. This unfavorable presumption will not dispense with the necessity of the other party's introducing 11672 some other evidence. The force of the inference is rather of deliberative than of probative value, of subjective rather than objective relevancy.

The law as to fabrication of evidence is the same as spoliation.

The law as to running away and hiding, you may say, has substantially the same force as an inference on the fabrication of evidence or the suppression of evidence in this respect: that it is of deliberative rather than probative value, but it may be of probative value, depending on the circumstances, and, if correctly hooked up, 11673 that is up to the jury to say.

Obviously, a person running away may fairly be said to run due to an impulse of fear; but we come to the next question: What is he afraid of? Is he afraid of being caught and convicted because he is guilty, or is he afraid of being caught and convicted because he may be framed, or because, upon fabricated evidence, he may be convicted of a crime of which he is not guilty?

You see, that is an open question, so it all depends on the particular case involved and the facts thereof as to what the legal effect or inferential effect is of the alleged flight.

It has been stated, and it may be fairly considered, that flight from justice and its analogous conduct have always been deemed indicative of a consciousness of guilt. It is today conceded that the fact of an accused's flight, escape from custody, resistance of arrest, concealment, or assumption of a false name and related conduct are admissible as evidence of a consciousness of 11675 guilt and thus of guilt itself, but the weight which the jury is entitled to give it depends, as I have stated, upon the circumstances of the individual case.

I will read from text, just for guidance, not as a necessarily accurate statement of the law, but as an expression from an opinion of the court of last resort in this state, People v. Florentino (197 N. Y.):

"Evidence of flight is competent because, when unexplained, it tends to show consciousness of guilt, though standing alone it raises no legal 11676 presumption thereof. When the crime is proved, but the identity of the criminal is in doubt, it depends somewhat on the question of identity. Ordinarily it is of slight value, and of none whatever unless there are facts pointing to the motive which prompted it and, hence, any explanation of the accused should always be considered in connection therewith."

The points of alleged spoliation of evidence which may be considered will be reviewed further on in this charge.

When a witness takes the stand to be cross-examined, he submits not merely to ordinary questions, but to leading questions. The lawyer who puts the witness on the stand for direct evidence is not, ordinarily, permitted to ask leading questions, although the trial court may, within sound discretion, so permit, and it has not been the policy of the Appellate Courts to disturb it when the discretion is fairly exercised, but, ordinarily, the asking of leading questions is permissible only on cross-examination and in certain circumstances, as I have mentioned, which are discretionary in direct examination. 11678

Also, we have two rules of evidence which counsel is entitled to use on cross-examination, if he sees fit. This is a little technical. I am telling you of it, not in submitting it to you as an issue, but in order to clarify your minds on rulings of evidence which you have listened to, so that you will not intrude upon the Court's function in that respect.

One of these is known as specific impeachment and the other is known as collateral impeachment. Specific impeachment would occur in a case where a witness, taking the stand, is asked 11679 by counsel if on a previous occasion he said or did something which contradicts anything that he has just testified to on the stand. If the witness says yes, the witness thereby becomes specifically impeached. It simply means that what he says on this occasion is impeached by something he said in contradiction thereof or in variance therewith at another time, whether wilfully untrue or due to memory fault. If the witness says no, then the lawyer is entitled to later put witnesses on the stand to prove that he did on a certain occasion say thus and so which is in contradiction of or variance with the present testimony, or to read testimony given by the witness on the previous occasion covering the point and shown to be contradictory, that is, inconsistent with the testimony presently given on direct examination. That is the reason why stenographer's minutes of other trials or hearings where questions and answers are used may be made a method of cross-examination.

11681 The usual method is to say, "On such and such an occasion were you asked the following question and did you give the following answer?" Well, of course, if a man is asked whether he made an admission a long time ago, he may remember that, but to put a burden upon him of remembering the exact text of question and answer is an unholy thing. We have a court reporter here to supply daily minutes in this case because counsel forget over night the questions and answers in text form of the day before; but, you see, when a witness is asked, "Answer yes or no," about something that he 11682 testified to a long time before, you get a normal response sometimes, "If it is in the book, it is so." There is a concession of the accuracy of the minutes the witness is not disputing. I am just calling your attention to it. That is a matter of application of sound common sense.

Concerning what we know as collateral impeachment, however, we have a narrower rule in one respect. If a witness says no, that ends it. Counsel can cross-examine until Doomsday, but when a witness says no and sticks to it, counsel is not permitted to put any witness on the stand or to introduce any other evidence to prove that the "no" answer is not correct.

Now, you see there is a sound reason for that. If you allowed the actual trial of collateral points, the jury would get so mixed up it would not know what the case was about. The law has for a long time recognized that and has said, when the witness says no on a collateral matter, that is binding. Both sides must accept it whether they like it or not.

In collateral impeachment we also have al- 11684 leged misdoings and previous criminal convictions of the witness who is testifying. Anything that depends upon his honesty should be considered in determining whether or not he is likely to be telling the truth. You are entitled to know who is being examined and take that into consideration in judging the worth of his testimony.

The only condition under which the witness's "No" may be contradicted is where he denies a criminal conviction, and the only reason that there is an exception there is that the statute was passed in this state which permits it. It is 11685 the only exception. In cross-examining a witness he is not permitted to be cross-examined as to prior arrests. An arrest is no disgrace. It happens in the best of families. There are a great many arrests which are unjust. It would be quite unfair to cross-examine a man and try to impeach him on that basis, so he must be impeached on crime either on the basis of actual conviction of crime or as admitting the commission of crimes for which he has not been convicted; but if, when he is asked if he committed a certain crime for which he has not been convicted, he says no, that ends it. That issue cannot be tried.

This is well settled, gentlemen, but it may remove a little puzzle that may be in your minds on account of the frequent wrangling that took place concerning the Court's rulings, wrangling which was entirely out of order and is not tolerated and not usually indulged in in most trials.

But there is always a danger that when a wit-
11687 ness is asked whether or not he did a certain disreputable thing, even though he says no, the jury may have a lurking idea that there was something to it or he would not be asked the question. I charge you to not have that lurking idea. You consider yourselves bound by the "No." You have to, in order to be fair.

The sole reason why a previous conviction of a witness for crime is admissible is as having a bearing upon credibility. This applies likewise to admitted crimes or anything which has a bearing upon the likelihood of a witness's being a truthful man. The jury is entitled to know, is 11688 this a clean, honest man; has he a clean record; is he a good citizen, or is he a criminal; is he a man who has been convicted of crime; is he a man who, although not convicted, has been, by his own admission, guilty of other crimes, of wrongdoing, of grossly immoral acts; is he a man who has had prison contacts while a convict under confinement?

Please consider the interest of witnesses in weighing their testimony. In deciding who tells the truth and to what extent and what are the reasonable inferences from established facts, you have to consult your native intelligence as to motive for either wilfully false testimony or wilfully false coloration of testimony. This includes the question of self-interest. This is not limited to money interest. It may be interest based upon anything that stimulates a desire to testify one way or the other. It may be based upon gaining immunity from prosecution for crime; it may be based upon relationship, that is, kinship; it may be based upon marriage; it may be based upon friendship; it may be based upon official position. In short, it may be based upon 11690 a witness's interest, whatever it may be. There are such a multitude of things on the subject of interest that the Court leaves this entire question for the jury to determine. You will say whether or not a witness who has testified in the case has an interest, and, having such interest, whether or not he has been actually influenced thereby into giving false testimony and to what extent, or in giving testimony which is at variance with the truth, regardless of extent.

If any witness testifies wilfully falsely on a material point, but not a collateral point, not a 11691 casual point, the jury has a right to throw out the witness's entire testimony as unworthy of belief, but only, as I say, if the testimony is, first, on a material point, and secondly, being on a material point, is wilfully false. Even though on a material point, if the falsification is not wilful, the entire testimony may not be thrown out. Truth is sometimes found in strange places. It is the jury's duty to search for it. Likewise, if the testimony is on an immaterial point, not a determining, but a minor point, then even though it be wilfully false, it does not warrant throwing out the entire testimony of the witness. In such event you will try to sift the wheat from the chaff; you will try to find where, if anywhere, there is truth, and be guided thereby, disregarding the false; so please be guided by that which you find to be true and reject that which you find to be false.

Naturally, people remember some things more than others. We are not superhuman. The mind of the individual does not click with one hundred per cent accuracy. The outstanding 11693 things are those which tend normally to favor our observation and favor recording by the human mind. Nevertheless, in cross-examination, counsel have a right to go into matters of purely collateral observation and recollection, and this is more or less on the basis of memory test.

In weighing the relative importance of accurate memory as directly related to the issue itself, as contrasted with memory of things not related, but only collaterally relevant, please put your brains to work in figuring out how much by way of observation and memory a human 11694 being of normal intelligence should be charged with. If errors of observation and recollection occur in matters which are purely collateral or of comparative insignificance which obviously fall short of being wilful falsification on material points, you are not justified in throwing out the witness's entire testimony as unworthy of belief.

Now, I want to take up a little matter with you. I heard it in the summation of one of the counsel, and I feel that I really should see that none of you is misled by it. Much was said about a foolish remark—it might better be characterized as a fool remark—by one of the witnesses to the effect that he had never told an important lie. I would not specifically allude to this if so much had not been made of it in the argument. I charge you not to let the decision of so important a case as this turn on a question of mockery or ridicule, I mean your reaction to mockery or ridicule, of a specific witness for a stupid answer such as that. This case is too important to be decided on the basis of ridicule. It must be decided on a basis of reason. I dare say there is not one of us who has not at 11696 some time or other made a foolish break which caused him to lose face due to the ridicule of others; but ridicule, gentlemen of the jury, is a childish trait. This case has to be decided by grown-up, serious men, who will decide it upon an adequate comprehension of the record. Ridicule is an emotional reaction. It works contrary to reason. It is a bad substitute for reason. It is primeval. That is why I say it is childish. It is something that appeals to and activates the immature mind, but does not and should not affect intelligent men whose minds are mature. 11697

Of course, like every other part of the record, that is something to be considered, but do not let it blind you to reason based upon all of the record of the case and all of the work of this trial. A stupid answer like that should not be the turning point. The case is far too serious.

Something else was said in regard to an alleged failure of some witness to tell something to the Grand Jury that the witness testified to here, but, gentlemen, the Grand Jury is not a trial body. It may take only ten minutes to get enough evidence to get an indictment, but it may take ten weeks to get all of the evidence before a trial jury and get a decision as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. The failure to state facts concerning which the witness is not asked before the Grand Jury means nothing whatever. You will just disregard it. The only reason you are permitted to hear a witness cross-examined in regard to Grand Jury minutes is where he testified before the Grand Jury in contradiction of something that he testified to here.

11699 Bear that in mind. Don't be misled by that argument.

There has been considerable confusion in the argument, so far as your receptivities are concerned mentally, on the question of the housing of witnesses. Gentlemen, I charge you the District Attorney does not house those witnesses. The District Attorney has not charge of those witnesses. Those witnesses are in custody under a court order, which the jury may not question, because you don't know the reason why that order was made in each case, and I would 11700 not dare to tell you: I would not be allowed to tell you. Sufficient unto the judgment of the Court which had the facts before it, such orders were made because the Court deemed it to be a case where the witnesses should not be kept in the House of Detention or in prison. I am not permitted to tell you the reasons. They were not guests of any hotel, as alluded to by the summation. Don't fool yourselves on that. They could not come and go; they could not mingle with anybody; they could not go out to take a walk. They were prisoners, held under rigid guard. All of this argument about their having eaten fare provided by the hotel instead of fare sent up from Raymond Street Jail will be disregarded. They were held prisoners in the hotel, and, of course, they had to get their food in the hotel, in their rooms.

This practice is not novel to this case. This practice is taken from the manner inaugurated in the Dewey investigation in New York. I believe it was Supreme Court Justice McCook who had charge of that. We borrowed that practice and used it over here. In the Court's 11702 judgment it is sound, but I cannot tell you why. All I can tell you is to disregard it. Don't be fooled about all this stuff about beef steaks. In prison, the one who is confined gets his daily recreation, exercises in the corridor, but those who are confined in hotels cannot exercise in the hotel corridor. They are in their rooms twenty-four hours a day, but they have to be kept alive; they have to have exercise. The Court and those who are in authority under the Court and have the custody of these witnesses must provide them with reasonable exercise, and it is no 11703 more a sin to play baseball when held as a witness under a material witness order signed by the Court, than it is for the prisoners in Sing Sing to play baseball. That is in the interests of health and reasonable recreation. It is only in the event that you find, instead of being a hardship, the imprisonment in the hotel was a treat to such an extent that the witnesses were so entranced by it that they were persuaded to alter their testimony or color their testimony by reason thereof, that you will take any stock in this argument. Otherwise you were simply misled.

Now, gentlemen, I don't like to review testimony in a long record. I don't think it is humanly possible, with this enormous amount of text, for a judge to do this, no matter how fairly he tries to do so, without being accused of trying to color it.

Just as with an anthology, any epitomization of record is terribly personal with the person 11705 who prepares the epitomization. I know it has to be done in some cases. I will do it if counsel for the defense request it. This has been a long trial. Witnesses have been put on in certain order. I don't know how much of the record you remember and how much you don't. A lot of it has been discussed in the summations from the viewpoint of counsel who argued. However, there are certain points of the evidence to which I feel under the necessity of calling your attention, first, because where more than one defendant is tried for a crime and the evidence is different as against the different defendants in its

Also, I express no opinion as to the believability of any of the witnesses on any of the points mentioned.

Also, this particular summary is not a general one; it is merely a segregation of evidence to keep you from misapplying it as against certain defendants.

The believability of any witness on any of the points mentioned is your job to decide, and I do not go into details of cross-examination because that likewise is your job. These are references purely. Cross-examination is almost impossible to correctly state in such a manner that two people can agree on its fairness because, while 11708 direct examination goes right to the point, cross-examination, being for the purpose of breaking down the direct, is largely hit or miss; it is blank cartridge shooting. Once in a while you find it shown that a bullet had hit, but whether there is a hit or not may be a matter of dispute.

Unless there be an outstanding point come out on cross-examination, the Court would only tend to confuse and mislead the jury if it attempted to discuss it.

Let me say at the outset of this, please scrutinize with suspicion and accept with caution 11709 and in a degree which accords with the character and extent of the impeachment, the testimony of each witness, and give due weight to all believable evidence put in by the other side which tends to contradict or discredit it. Then decide, if you can, is the witness telling the truth now. Put your brains to work on that, because you will need them.

There is nothing disreputable in a prosecuting attorney putting on the stand a witness who turns state's evidence. It is a proper method of prosecution and enforcement of the law. When rogues fall out, it is a wise man's delight;

11710 so, while the Court submits to you consideration of the testimony of witnesses who, by their own admissions and otherwise are impeached as professional criminals, murderers, thieves, perjurers, in the long run it comes down to this: Are they telling the truth now? If you are not reasonably satisfied that they are telling the truth now, you may not accept and be guided by their testimony, but if you are reasonably satisfied, having viewed with suspicion and accepted with 11711 caution their testimony, taking into consideration its impeachment, then you will be guided by it.

In segregating the points of evidence applicable to each defendant, we will take first the evidence which may be considered in relation to Buchalter. Gentlemen, this is very brief. It is only touching the surface, just the high spots. You have the testimony of Bernstein as to the alleged arrangements for the actual killing of Rosen. These depend upon the evidentiary value of the other evidence in the case 11712 in order to bring Buchalter in on the killing as a principal, under the provisions of Section 2 of the Penal Law, which I will now read to you again because you must keep this in mind and have a clear recollection of its provisions in order to follow what will come thereafter.

"A person concerned in the commission of a crime, whether he directly commits the act constituting the offense or aids and abets in its commission, and whether present or absent, and a person who directly or indirectly counsels, commands, induces or procures another to commit a crime, is a principal."

11713

I am not reviewing the testimony of Bernstein. I don't think I have to, but if it becomes hooked up by other witnesses with Buchalter, then all of the evidence as to the killing becomes applicable to Buchalter. As to this other evidence, in making this connection, we have the testimony by both Rubin and Tannenbaum, who I have charged you are not accomplices, about the alleged conversation between Buchalter and Rubin a few days before Rosen's death.

11714

If I recall correctly, and, if not, I will be corrected at the proper time and I will reinstruct you, the alleged conversation was supposed to occur between Rubin and Buchalter with Tannenbaum walking in on them, noting Buchalter was excited and noting what he said. Buchalter is alleged to have alluded to Rosen's return to the city after being given money to go away, and saying, in part, that there was one so and so who would not go down to Dewey and talk about him and that this was the end of it.

11715

You may consider that, if that is true. What did it mean? Now bear in mind, according to my recollection, no hour of the day is stated as to when this alleged act took place, what part of the day it was. It may have come out on cross-examination, but, if so, it slipped my mind. There was evidence there that Rubin asked for another opportunity to straighten it out with a third party and was told that he could try; that he was told by Buchalter to send Berger to him, Buchalter; that he came back and reported his inability to straighten things out through the medium of this third party.

11716 In connection with this, you have Berger's testimony that he received such message from Rubin and that he responded to that message by going to see Buchalter; that Buchalter then took him to see Weiss on the East Side for the purpose of pointing out Rosen to Weiss, and that he did actually go with Weiss to Brooklyn and point out Rosen.

In view of the fact that this was particularly discussed in reference to hour of the day, and it 11717 was argued by one of the counsel that inasmuch as the pointing out was at night, after dark, and the testimony by Bernstein as to the theft of the car and the hiring of the drop was during several hours of the day which preceded the pointing out, that that proved that the testimony did not hitch.

Gentlemen, I refer you to the record because I don't want you to get twisted up on that. There is not a particle of evidence in the case as to when, if at all, Buchalter communicated in reference to the preparation work. The case 11718 is blank on that. There is no way of knowing. We do not know whether he did so, or, if he did, whether it was in the morning or the afternoon or the evening; but you have the testimony of Bernstein about when he received the alleged instructions to steal a car and hire a drop, which was earlier in the day.

Taken in connection with the other facts, or alleged facts, concerning the alleged preparation work, and putting this and that together, you have a right to draw such inference as you see fit.

Apparently, in the argument that was offered, counsel assumed that Buchalter waited until after the fingering before he gave the instruction; but, under the record, I charge you you are entitled to consider whether or not, at the time of the alleged excited statements by Buchalter during the day, that may be taken as evidence connecting him with either previous instructions or instructions immediately thereafter in connection with the hiring of the drop and the stealing of the car. I don't say you have a right to draw an inference that he sent such an instruction over the telephone, but I do say you 11720 have a right, if you see fit, to reconcile the testimony by Rubin and by Bernstein and by Paul Berger on the various points of evidence they have testified to in connection with Buchalter and the preparation work on that day, and that the definite hook-up, if true, is the fingering plus the declaration by Buchalter. I feel that for accuracy I should refer to the record on this, so that you won't be misled.

At page 1190 of Volume 2 of the record, the witness testified Lepke said to him:

"'I have stood enough of the crap that you 11721 have been handing me. That so and so, that so and so is going around Brownsville and shooting his mouth off that he is going down to Dewey. Well, he is not going down to Dewey or any other place. He and nobody else are going down any place or do any more talking or any talking at all.'" Then follows the protest: "I said, 'Louis, don't be rash; don't be foolish; don't do something that will get us into trouble. I can straighten it out. He is harmless. Leave him to me.'"

Reply: "'No, I have stood enough.'" Further protest: "'Let me handle it. I will run over to Murray Weinstein. I am sure that Murray Weinstein will do something about it. Give me a chance to straighten the thing out. Don't forget I was in the store in July.' He said to me, 'I don't care where you go. Straighten the guy out.' I ran as fast as I could to Murray Weinstein."

On page 1192: "Q. Did you go back and talk 11723 to Lepke after you had the talk with Weinstein? A. I did.

"Q. Relate that talk to the Court and jury that you had with Lepke after the visit to Weinstein. A. I said to Lepke—I come back from Murray Weinstein and I told Murray Weinstein that—I just don't know how to put it—

"Q. Tell us the best of your recollection what you said to Lepke after you had the talk with Weinstein. A. I told Lepke that I went to Murray Weinstein and asked him to do something for me about Joe Rosen, and that Murray Wein-11724 stein said he can't do anything.

"Q. Did you say anything to Lepke about an invitation from Weinstein? A. I then told him that Murray Weinstein said I should not worry, that the Local 4 baseball team was playing a baseball game in Vineland, New Jersey, and that he invited me out there to attend the game. The game was to take place Saturday afternoon, which is September 12, 1936.

"Q. After you told Lepke that you could not get Weinstein to do anything, what did Lepke say? A. He said, 'Go ahead to the game.'

"Q. Do you know a man named Paul Berger? A. I do.

"Q. Is that Paul Berger the one whom you earlier in your testimony described as an intermediary between Lepke and the union? A. He is.

"Q. Was Paul Berger's name mentioned that Friday, September 11, 1936? A. He told me to get Paul Berger and send him up to him right away.

"Q. Did you go to see Berger? A. I did.

"Q. What did you tell Berger? A. I told him Lepke wants to see him."

Now, gentlemen, in going over the text, those are the only questions and answers that I can find covering that point in the direct. It is possible that I have overlooked something that is in the cross. I will be glad to instruct you on that by a quote if my attention is called it, but, so far as the time element is concerned, you will note there is nothing there to indicate whether or not Buchalter had contacted in preparation, with the Brooklyn end, for the proposed murder before or after Rubin ran in on him and found him in that state and making those declarations, if that testimony be true—and please remember what the Court said to you about that—no speculation.

You have also the testimony by Rubin that the day after the alleged murder he said to Buchalter, "Now I am in real trouble. I was there in July", and that Buchalter responded, "Brooklyn is all right. You have nothing to worry about."

You have also the testimony by Tannenbaum that a few days after the Rosen murder he saw

11728

Weiss and Buchalter together; that on that occasion Buchalter asked, "Is everything all right?" and that Weiss replied, "Yes, except as to Strauss, who shot Rosen after he fell on the floor", to which Buchalter responded that it was all right as long as a good job was done and they got away with it.

This, of course, is applicable to both Buchalter and Weiss, but is not applicable to Capone. Bear that in mind. And, as you see, it makes 11729 direct reference, if true, to this specific murder and may, if you see fit, be found to be enough to connect up Buchalter with the actual murder, under Section 2 of the Penal Law.

The evidence as to the later relations between Buchalter and Rubin, concerning Rubin's alleged flight with money supplied and under directions and from time to time alleged comments by Buchalter tending to show the applicability of the flight, are usable only as against Buchalter. They are not applicable as against Weiss and Capone. They are competent both as implied 11730 admissions and under the law as to spoliation of evidence by inducing a witness to flee and hide. This part of the evidence covers a large amount of detail. I trust you will remember it.

Rosen's murder is specifically mentioned in several of the alleged conversations. If true, that hooks it up, if in your judgment it is sufficient for that purpose.

Also in this connection you may consider the testimony by Rubin that his photographs were allegedly removed from his room as a precaution against police search and getting his photograph. I do not recall whether he went so far as to say the latter part. Also testimony by Rubin as to a misleading letter written by his wife to the Union on Buchalter's instructions, to the effect that there was a separation between the two. Also the use of false names and the facial disguise, in connection with the alleged instructions.

You may also consider as against Buchalter the alleged conversation during a rain storm, under an awning, in which, Rubin tells you, Buchalter asked his age, and on being told "Forty-eight" remarked, "That is a ripe age." 11732

Berger testifies likewise on many of these details. Rubin's testimony on those may be considered, if the jury sees fit, as corroborative of Berger's testimony, Berger, being an accomplice and Rubin being a non-accomplice.

Now, the actual shooting, or, I should say, alleged shooting of Rubin has not been carried by the evidence as far as Buchalter's door because that alleged shooting was in the fall of 1937, and you will recall Berger's testimony that as early as June of that year Buchalter told him that things were getting too hot and he was going to lam, after which he did not see Buchalter again. 11733

So far as the evidence is concerned, Buchalter drops out of the case as an entity beginning then until the time that he is arrested.

The particular so-called "lamming" has no evidentiary value because it has not been specifically connected with the Rosen murder and may therefore have been, under the rules of evidence, because of the Dewey investigation. You see, he did not say "too hot in Brooklyn"; he just said "too hot". Therefore, under the rules of evidence, I must charge you that that particular "lamming has not been connected with the Rosén case and may not be considered as against Buchalter. It is insufficient anyway as evidence of flight. It is merely a declaration of intention.

11734 The Charge of the Court

You may consider as against Buchalter the testimony of Rubin and Maguire and what was allegedly said to Buchalter about the legal infer-11735 ence of guilt from flight, following the alleged consultation between Maguire and Rubin in which the Brooklyn matter was discussed.

Counsel for one of the defendants asked him whether he found from the facts related in the conversation between himself and Rubin about the Rosen murder that Rubin was in any way hooked up with it. The District Attorney could not have brought that out. That was asked on cross-examination. Maguire said he did not find him to be hooked up.

I was a little surprised that that was asked,
11736 but I charge you that that simply means that, as Rubin's attorney, Maguire expressed his judgment that he was not in effect an accomplice. I charge you that Rubin was not an accomplice under this evidence.

I also charge you that notwithstanding that Maguire gave that testimony under cross-examination, you should not consider it as having evidentiary value. The only reason I am charging you about it is to keep you from being misled by the answer and making a misapplication of the lawyer's alleged advice to a client or his opinion thereon.

You may consider against Buchalter the alleged reply by him to Maguire, "All I know is when there is no witness around there cannot be a case", or words to that effect.

The evidence as to Rubin's alleged flight and hiding is not applicable against either Weiss or Capone because they have not been shown to have had anything to do with it; but the later intended murder of Rubin a year later, if true, is applicable, as I have stated, against Weiss and possibly Capone. 11738

Berger's testimony is also applicable to Buchalter on the alleged events leading up to and causing the Rosen murder. Others who have testified for the People on this point are Rubin, Sylvia Greenspan, nee Rosen, and, very slightly, by Harold Rosen, and also by the decedent's widow. I shall not review this. It covers quite a ramified field, but I charge you as follows:

The testimony by members of the Rosen family as to the financial status of the business is too sketchy to have value as evidence. For that reason it has been stricken out. 11739

So far as the People's case is concerned, the furthest you can go in figuring out motive on Buchalter's part for wanting Rosen out of the way is that because of a business grudge carried by Rosen against Buchalter, having to do in some manner with the trucking company affairs in relation to the Pennsylvania business apparently, and the grudge relating particularly to Rosen's severance with the business, and apparently blaming Buchalter for it, Buchalter feared that Rosen would reprise by giving information to Mr. Dewey which would get him, Buchalter, in trouble with the authorities.

11740 The Charge of the Court

That is enough as motive evidence, if you find these facts to be established to your satisfaction reasonably, but I charge you that motive need not be shown if the case is otherwise sufficient.

When I mentioned Weiss and Capone, please bear strictly in mind what I said at the start, that this is purely a segregation to guide you against misapplication of evidence as against defendants to whom it does not apply. It is not a discussion of evidentiary values; it is not an 11741 expression of belief by the Court as to whether or not you shall accept such testimony as true. For that reason there is no review of cross-examination or of any of the evidence on the several defendants' side of the case. It is strictly and only a segregation.

The testimony of Berger as to the alleged fingering of Rosen to Weiss, following the automobile trip from the East Side, New York, over to Sutter Avenue, is followed by the testimony of Bernstein as to Weiss's alleged active participation both in the preparation for and in the 11742 actual doing of the Rosen murder, also the escape.

You have Berger's testimony that a year later, about September, 1937—this is several months after Buchalter had dropped out of the scene, but after Rubin had returned to the garment district—that he, Berger, met Weiss, and Weiss said that he had information that Rubin was squealing and would "have to be hit", and that Weiss asked Berger to point out Rubin to Schlermer. He says he contacted Schlermer and finally Rubin; that about two months later he met Weiss, who said, "Look how lucky that so and so is. He was hit in the head but is still alive. We will catch up with him yet." He said that several months after this, Weiss asked him to point out Rubin to Magoon, saying, "The next time the so and so ain't going to be so lucky."

The alleged second fingering, according to this witness, was to both Magoon and Cuppie, but you are told that nothing came out of it because of police activity interfering. I shall not go into these details. They cover a substantial part of 11744 the record.

About May, 1940, according to Berger, there was something in a newspaper about Tannenbaum. He said that he went to Weiss with the paper and talked to him about it, and Weiss said, "It looks like Allie is talking and I will have to duck." You have a right to consider that only as against Weiss and only as having a bearing upon the reason for the alleged flight to Kansas City and Colorado Springs, and only because it states as a reason that this was about Tannenbaum, and Tannenbaum, gentlemen, is a 11745 witness in this case, which is the Rosen case.

The foregoing covers direct evidence which, if true, may be accepted by you as involving Weiss in the preparation and shooting, also in the attempted spoliation of evidence, also in declaration of intended flight; but, as to Bernstein and Berger, they being accomplices, you must see what, if any, other evidence there is from non-accomplices tending to connect Weiss with the commission of the crime. For that reason I have just charged you, in part, about the testimony by Rubin and by Tannenbaum.

Now, we will go further. Tannenbaum, who is not an accomplice, says that three or four days after the Rosen murder he saw Weiss and Buchalter together. I charge you this a second time because it has an application to a different point. Buchalter asked, "Is everything all right?" Weiss said, "Yes, except as to Strauss, who shot Rosen after he lay on the floor", to which Buchalter responded, "All right, as long as a good job was done and they got away with 11747 it." This, gentlemen, is applicable not only to Buchalter, but Weiss, but not to Capone.

Tannenbaum then said he went to a coffee house with Weiss. There he had a conversation. He told you that Weiss told him that he had just got through with a piece of work himself and that he, Tannenbaum, said in effect, "Yes, I just heard you talking to Louis about it. Who is Rosen?" That Weiss's explanation was that Rosen had threatened to go down and tell Dewey about Louis.

Now we come to Magoon, who is not an ac-

11748 complice in the Rosen murder, and see what application his testimony has to Weiss. He says that he was told by Weiss about the fall of 1938 that Berger would finger Rubin; that this was allegedly in the presence of Capone, Strauss, and Reles. He tells how the alleged fingering was done and how he claims to have tailed Rubin, even to the use of a disguise as a laborer, but that he was frustrated by police activity. He said there were two more meetings with Weiss, Capone, Strauss, and Reles, when they went into a huddle—he used the word "huddle"—as he made his reports and received instructions.

In one of these Weiss is reported to have said, "Then we will have to whack him and the cop."

Rubin, who is not an accomplice, testified that he was shot through the head in September, 1937, but this may be considered as against Weiss only and then only if found to be sufficiently connected with Weiss's alleged later declaration on this point, provided that declaration was true.

Magoon says that he had seen both Weiss and Capone in Buchalter's Company and had also seen Weiss in Farvel Cohen's company, but I 11750 charge you that these unrelated meetings are not connected up with the Rosen murder. At the most, they go simply to the matter of association of the individuals mentioned.

Federal agents Aman, Bell, and Winne gave the evidence on Weiss's alleged flight and hiding following his alleged declaration to Paul Berger, about May, 1941, "It looks like Allie is talking and I will have to duck." I will not here review the details of that flight to the West and hiding. If you find that it occurred, you may accept it as evidence solely applicable to Weiss, not ap- 11751 plicable to Buchalter and Capone, but applicable to Weiss only, provided that you find it to be motivated either wholly or in part by a desire to flee from arrest in connection with the Rosen murder and not from the Dewey investigation alone.

On that point you have Agent Aman's testimony that Weiss said he "hated to sit between O'Dwyer and Dewey and that O'Dwyer had been in St. Louis trying to make a big shot of himself" about him—twice. Also that Weiss said he "had intended to surrender himself at a later date when O'Dwyer would be out of office."

You may also consider, on the question of why Weiss fled and hid, if that be the case, Tannenbaum's testimony that he had talked to O'Dwyer's men and having thereafter testified before a Brooklyn Grand Jury in the spring of the year when Weiss made his alleged flight. Take that, if true, in connection with Berger's testimony, if true, that about May, when he 11753 showed a newspaper to Weiss, the latter remarked that apparently Allie was talking and he would have to duck.

Now as to Capone and please pay strict attention, gentlemen, on this point; it is quite important. In mentioning the points of evidence applicable to this defendant, Capone, I particularly wish to impress upon you the comparative paucity of the corroboration from non accomplice witnesses so that you won't confuse the evidence applicable to the others and use it against Capone. Most of the evidence against this defendant came from the accom-
11754 plices Berger and Bernstein. Berger testified that when he rode with Weiss to Brooklyn for the purpose of fingering Rosen, Weiss first stopped the car for a few minutes at Sackman and Livonia, where he left the car and walked across the street and there talked to Capone. He did not hear what was said, but Capone and Weiss then re-crossed the street, where Weiss re-entered the car and drove to th place where Rosen was pointed out by the witness, but Capone was left behind. We do not know what was said and cannot speculate as to what was said in the alleged interview between Weiss and Capone. It is valuable, if at all, only on the question of contact.

Sol Bernstein went into much detail as to Capone's alleged active participation in the alleged preparation for the murder, including several rehearsals of the escape route and in pointing out the Rosen candy store, saying, "Here is where somebody is going to be killed." Also that Capone was waiting with Bernstein's car the next day following the escape, and in the course of the alleged escape, on the other side of the foot-bridge over the Long Island Railroad tracks, and that Capone assisted in the escape, he, Capone, being first seated in Bernstein's car, which was a stolen car, but then getting out and riding in the other car with Cohen, Strauss, and Weiss, after telling Bernstein to take Ferraco in the stolen car.

That is substantially Bernstein's testimony as to Capone, but, as I have told you, both Berger and Bernstein are accomplices as a matter of law and you must look to other evidence in the case to see if there is evidence tending to connect Capone with the commission of the crime outside of the evidence of these accomplices.

Now, what is it? It comes down to Magoon. It depends on whether or not you believe that Magoon told the truth when he gave the testimony which I shall now refer to. If you believe he told the truth and you accept it as evidence tending to connect Capone with the commission of the crime, then it will be sufficiently corroborative, according to your finding, and you will then, if you accept the testimony of the accomplice witnesses in the light of this alleged corroboration, apply it against Capone.

If you do that, you will be entitled to convict, if there is no reasonable doubt in your mind as to Capone's guilt based upon that.

Magoon testified that Capone was in the Weiss group which went into what he calls "huddles" at the corner of Saratoga and Livonia Avenues, when he received instructions in regard to the fingering and tailing of Rubin in the fall of 11759 1938. According to this witness, the group consisted of Weiss, Capone, Strauss, and Reles. He says he met Berger at Ratner's Restaurant following this first huddle, or meeting, I should say, to go with him for the fingering. He says that usually Weiss did the talking, but once it was Strauss, on which occasion Capone took part by saying, "That Rubin is hurting Lep. We have got to hit him in the head and get rid of him."

Magoon also testifies that in April, 1939, he went to Capone's residence and stated an objection to working on a matter which he called the 11760 Friedman matter, upon the ground that he himself hung out about a block away from Friedman's place, and that Capone replied, "What are you worried about? I worked on the Rosen thing, which was right on Sutter Avenue, and I was not made."

Those two items, as I have said, are the only evidence from non-accomplice witnesses which can be submitted on the question of corroboration. You will have to ask yourselves, "Is it true?" Possibly it would be better in view of the great importance of this feature of the case, if, instead of depending on what I have just said, I use just a few minutes more and refer to the exact text of the record, because this must not be carelessly decided; it must be intelligently decided.

Voume 3, beginning at page 2327, we have this on the examination of Magoon:

"Q. What did the defendant Mendy Weiss say to you in the presence of the defendant Louis Capone, and Strauss and Reles? A. He says, 'Go to Ratner's Restaurant tomorrow 11762 morning and meet Paul Berger and another fellow. He will point out Rubin, Max Rubin, and you tail him and find out all his habits and see if he has a police bodyguard with him.'"

Page 2330:

"Q. What else did Weiss say? A. He says, 'After you find out what is what, come back on the corner and we'll see what we have to do'—not in those words, but to that effect."

Then on page 2337, after Magoon testified to having followed Rubin all the afternoon, and the alleged fingering of Rubin, in which Berger said 11763 in connection with it, "Maybe it is the law."

"Q. All afternoon did the man that you had seen with him on the corner when Berger whispered, 'Maybe it's the law,' or 'It is the law'—whichever he said—did that man remain with Rubin all afternoon? A. Yes, sir."

Further down on page 2338:

"Q. That night whom did you see at the corner? A. Weiss, Capone, Strauss and Reles.

"Q. Was there a talk on the corner between all of you? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What was said at the corner that night, and by whom? A. Weiss spoke to me. He said, 'Tomorrow morning put on old clothes and here is Rabin's home address and go up there and watch his house, see who he comes out of the house with, how he walks over to the subway, who walks with him, and so forth.'

"Q. Now, when he said, 'Here is his address,' did he give you anything? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What did he give you? A. An address.

"Q. Can you remember what the address was?

11765 A. It was some address on Gunhill Road.

"Q. In the Bronx? A. In the Bronx.

"Q. Was that said by Weiss to you in the presence of Capone? A. In the group.

"The Court: How close? We want to know if he could hear.

"The Witness: A foot away."

At page 2341:

"Q. Was anything else said in connection with what you were to do the next morning up at Gunhill Road? A. Yes, find out all his habits, I would say."

At page 2342:

11766 "The Court: What other clothes did you wear?

"The Witness: I wore overalls, a lumber jacket, old pants, a slouch hat, and he says, 'Use a pipe.'

"Q. Who said 'Use a pipe'? A. Weiss."

Further down:

"Q. And were you told that the night before? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And was that in the presence of Capone? A. Yes, sir."

At page 2344:

"Q. Did you that evening go to a saloon? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you know where that Saloon was located? A. On Grand Street.

"Q. East Side of Manhattan? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you know the other street? A. I think it was Lewis Street.

"Q. Did you there at that saloon see one of the defendants? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Which one? A. Weiss. 11768

"Q. Did Weiss ask you a question? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What did he ask you? A. He said, 'What happened?'

"Q. Did you tell him? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. After you told him what had happened up there in the Bronx, did Weiss say anything else? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What did he say? A. He says, 'Go back to Brooklyn and see Harry Strauss, and he will give you further instructions.'"

I am reading that, gentlemen, because that connects up and makes applicable to Weiss what- 11769 ever Strauss said.

"Q. Did you go back to Brooklyn that night? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you go to the corner? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Whom did you see at the corner? A. Strauss, Capone, and Reles."

Further down:

"Q. Tell us who spoke and what was said. A. Strauss spoke and he said, 'What happened up there?'

"Q. Was this in the presence of Capone and Reles? A. Yes.

11770 "Q. Were you all close to one another when you were talking? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. State where you were in proximity to one another. Do you know what that means? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. All right, tell us. A. About arm's length away from one another.

"Q. Continue to tell us what was stated there. A. He asked me, 'What happened up there?' and I explained to him exactly what happened. He 11771 says, 'Well,' he says, 'go up there again tomorrow morning and watch him again and stay around there until about 7:30 and see if he comes out of the house after supper; if he does come out of the house, where he walks to and with whom.'

"Q. At that time did Capone say anything? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What did he say? A. He says, 'That Rubin is hurting Lep, and we got to hit him in the head and get rid of him.'"

At page 2349:

"Q. What did you tell Weiss? A. I told him

11772 once more that he has a guard with him at all hours, at all hours that I was there; he walks out of the house with the guard and back into the house with the guard; he has the bodyguard with him at all times.

"Q. Had you ever seen Rubin leave the house by himself? A. No, sir.

"Q. And from your observation of him, had he always been with the bodyguard every time that you saw him? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. When you told that to Weiss, that he was always in the company of the cop or the bodyguard, what did Weiss say? A. He said, 'Then we will have to whack him and the cop.'

"Q. After Weiss said about what would have to happen to Rubin and the cop, did you say anything about the incident of the policeman? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What did you say? A. I explained what happened, that I was stopped up there that morning and questioned off a cop.

"Q. Did you tell them what the cop asked you? A. Yes. 11774

"Q. And did you tell him what you said to the cop? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How close together were you, Mendy Weiss, Capone, Strauss, and Reles, when this talk went on? A. All in a huddle.

"Q. And were you in a huddle when Weiss said about watching Rubin and the cops? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And were you in a huddle when you made your report as to what you had seen up in the Bronx in connection with Rubin and the cop? A. Yes, sir. 11775

"Q. Tell us what you said in that huddle to them in relation to your experience with the uniformed police officer that stopped you and questioned you."

That question was revised.

"Q. Tell the Court and jury what you said about that incident. A. I told him that as I was sitting on the curb a police officer walked over to me and he saw me sitting there, and says, 'What are you doing here?' I says, 'I am a plumber and I work upstairs and I am waiting for my boss.' So he says, 'Well, leave it go for a while, drop it for a while.'

"Q. Who said, 'Leave it go for a while,' then? A. Weiss."

Gentlemen, I think that is the text applicable thereto, unless there was something on cross-examination applying to it. You see how it is limited down. It is limited down on corroborative points to what Magoon, the non-accomplice witness, said was his conversation with Capone 11777 in which he alleges Capone made reference to the Rosen matter and that he had not been made, and then you have the alleged complicity, according to the testimony I have just read, testified to by Magoon, who is a non-accomplice witness. These are two non-accomplice witnesses.

If you believe that testimony, and it is for you to say whether you believe it or not, then you may ask yourselves is it sufficient as tending to corroborate Berger and Bernstein. If it is, you may convict. If you do not believe it, or,
11778 believing it, you don't deem it sufficient as tending to connect, you will have to acquit Capone, because if Capone was in a huddle there and was a conspirator in the proposed trailing or tailing of Rubin for the purpose of another attempt at assassination, then that may be used as evidence of guilt on the part of Capone.

But, please do this fairly, honestly, and intelligently.

Now, gentlemen, just a word of caution: Remember that I told you brains shall decide the case. It is hoped that there will be no stubborness creating a closed door of prejudice when you retire. The jury is presumed to, or at least should, use good judgment in determining what are seeds of truth and to pick them out and check up on the story. See what there is which you believe that tends to connect these defendants with the commission of the alleged crime, from witnesses who are not accomplices, provided the crime itself is made out and provided the proof be beyond a reasonable doubt. I have charged you as to the meaning of that. As reasonable men, you should know it. That is what you have to do. 11780

The Court will read to you a certain section of the law. It is Section 393 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of this State. The Court is not permitted to comment on that statute. The furthest it may go is to read it to you and then keep still about it.

"The defendant in all cases may testify as a witness in his own behalf, but his neglect or refusal to testify does not create any presumption against him."

We are not concerned with the question of the policy of the prosecutor's office. It is an unfortunate thing that in the administration of criminal justice, criminal courts may from time to time deem it necessary to use the testimony of accomplices under either expressed or implied promise, hope, or expectation of reward of some kind by reason thereof. This is a tool used at times in the administration of criminal justice. You can see that there may be cases where a notion of necessity may activate the use of testimony of accomplices. Just what the wisdom or lack of wisdom may be on the part 11781 of the prosecuting official in taking the testimony of accomplices is his responsibility. It is not for the Court to judge it; it is not for you to judge it. The prosecutor's office is not on trial. What you have to do is to use your intelligence in determining what, if any, seeds of truth are there. Use them if you find them. See what proof there is. Scrutinize it carefully.

Just a word of caution. Remember what the 11783 Court said about the real purpose, as far as the Court can disclose, of witnesses being housed elsewhere than in the jail. Do not concern yourselves with that unless you find, as I say, that it went to such an extent as to be deemed by the witness not a hard deal but a luxury and therefore persuasive, and as being a sensible reason for actuating false testimony here on the stand against these defendants.

Now, in every-day life you are called upon to decide who tells the truth and to what extent and what are the reasonable inferences 11784 from established facts. You have little difficulty many times in so determining. You have constantly to say who tells the truth and to what extent. Use your native intelligence in so determining in this case. The common sense and judgment you use in every-day life is a fair cross-cut of what is believed to be more than normal intelligence in a jury of twelve selected here. You have to determine that question.

The administration of criminal justice is not pleasant. It is a task. It is a strain on those who are charged with its administration. This trial has been a strain on all of us. It is particularly a strain on the jury, because the jury has not the opportunity or experience that those who are engaged in that line every day have. It is a responsibility of doing justice and doing it accurately. It is the responsibility of finding the truth and then announcing it, regardless of which way it hits.

If, under the strain of this trial, there has been any evidence of nervousness or strain on the part of counsel or Court, if there have been interchanges which may have shaken the decorum 11786 of the court-room, if there have been arguments and recriminations which may seem unnecessary, please overlook and disregard them in coming to your verdict. This includes the Court. The Court is human. It has to be strict, in accordance with the responsibility of its job, whether it likes to be strict or not, but if I have spoken sharply at any time, just forget it. The Court is trying to be fair. It is trying not to express any opinion or to give any impression as to what its own notion is concerning the guilt or innocence of any of these defendants. It is trying 11787 to see that the case is kept within reasonable bounds, although it has given a great deal of latitude in this trial. It is trying to see that the jury has it fairly and fully presented as a case so that it may properly decide it.

I charge you that the law presumes every defendant innocent unless proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, the language of the statute being:

"A defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent until the contrary be proved; and in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal."

Gentlemen, a reasonable doubt is not any doubt; it is not a foolish doubt; it must be reasonable. It must be a doubt that is reasonable, existing in the mind of a man who has brains sufficient to be properly applied to the trial and determination of the issue. You have brains. Please apply them soundly, sensibly, and accurately.

11789 If you find that the case has not been proven against the defendants or either one of them beyond a reasonable doubt, return a verdict of not guilty as to such defendant or defendants.

But if you find that guilt has been proven beyond a reasonable doubt as to any or all defendants, you will find such by your verdict.

It will be separate as to each, as instructed. Obviously, it will have to be the same degree as to each, in the event of conviction of more than one, because it is just one crime and can be only one degree. It would be either—that is,

11790 in the event of finding the defendants guilty, or any of them

Guilty of Murder in the First Degree, as to such as are guilty, or

Guilty of Murder in the Second Degree, or

Guilty of Manslaughter in the First Degree, or

Guilty of Manslaughter in the Second Degree, but bear in mind that if the crime was committed, the nature of the conviction, provided the crime was committed by the defendants or any of them, must correspond with the evidence as to how the crime was committed and as to whether or not, in the event of murder being shown, there was premeditation and deliberation. In the latter event it will be Murder in the First Degree—nothing less.

Now, gentlemen, it is about half past six. I don't want to confuse requests to charge with the charge as just concluded. I am going to have a brief recess before listening to requests, and I think you will be glad to have it.

Please do not discuss the case, because in a little while you are coming back here. I will pass on requests, and after that you will go out and decide the case. First you will get your dinner. The jury may retire.

11792

Mr. Talley: Judge, may I suggest that you take a recess for dinner? You have been charging for three hours, and the requests and exceptions will be a couple of hours. I merely make the suggestion that I think it would work out very much better if we could go out now and get some dinner and come back in an hour. The exceptions and so forth will take a considerable length of time. There are three of us.

The Court: All right.

11793

(To the jury) Do not discuss the case; let nobody talk to you about it. Keep your minds open. Dinner will be provided.

We will reassemble in just one hour, at half past seven.

Defendants are remanded.

(Recess)

11794 Requests to Charge and Exceptions

EVENING SESSION

(Trial Resumed)

The Court: I will hear for defendant Buchalter first. May I suggest that you speak slowly and clearly. I will have a better chance to think and follow your requests.

Mr. Climenko: I understand your Honor desires requests first?

11795 The Court: Yes, because the exceptions involve reconsiderations of questions on the record, that may involve discussion.

Mr. Climenko: May it please your Honor, the Court is respectfully requested to instruct the jury that at no time in a criminal cause is it incumbent on a defendant to prove his innocence, but that at all times it is incumbent on the District Attorney by competent proof to prove the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt before the jury can convict.

The Court: So charge. That is already charged. I charge it the second time.

11796 Mr. Climenko: I respectfully request your Honor to charge the jury that the burden of proof is always on the prosecution and never shifts to the defendant.

The Court: That is already charged. I charge it the second time.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully request your Honor to charge the jury that there is no proof in this case that the defendant Buchalter abandoned his defense or failed to call any other witness.

The Court: I so charge. I will put it in this form: No matter what you may think on the subject, it has no evidentiary value. You will dismiss it from your minds.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that the jury may draw no unfavorable inference because of the defendant's failure or neglect to call any particular witness.

The Court: I so charge.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that each defendant 11798 is presumed to be innocent and that the presumption of innocence is evidence in his favor and is with him right now.

The Court: Yes, it has probative force and continues until and unless, upon all of the evidence being in, the jury is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt. I so charge.

Mr. Climenko: May I respectfully request your Honor to charge the jury that any charge now given, in response to a request, becomes a part of the charge with the same effect as though 11799 originally charged by your Honor in the main charge.

The Court: I so charge; only try to avoid repetition so that the jury can get upstairs; it is so late. May I ask, in the meantime, Mr. Rosenthal—

Mr. Rosenthal: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Will you look over your written requests and cross out those that you think are sufficiently covered?

Mr. Rosenthal: I am doing that.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully request your

Honor to instruct the jury that if any juror is satisfied upon his own conscience, from the evidence adduced in the case, that there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendants, or any of them, it is that juror's duty to vote for an acquittal unless such doubt is removed by discussion with the other jurors upon the evidence adduced on the trial, and that only, and that the juror should not change his opinion and must vote for the acquittal of the de-11801 fendant Buchalter, or other defendant so affected, as to whose guilt he believes there is a reasonable doubt.

The Court: That is so, except this, that he does not have to be persuaded. He may change his mind of his own volition.

Mr. Clinenko: That is right.

The Court: He may change his viewpoint. So charge, otherwise.

Mr. Clinenko: I respectfully request the Court to charge the jury that the testimony of an accomplice is not to be weighed or considered 11802 or judged in the same manner as the testimony of other witnesses, but that it is to be viewed with suspicion and subjected to careful scrutiny and caution, and that in weighing the value of the testimony of the accomplice, the juror must consider any inducement held out to him for his testimony.

The Court: I have already so charged. I charge it again.

Mr. Clinenko: I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that the fact that a homicide occurred and that Rosen was the victim in and of itself is not to be considered as proof or even as the basis of a suspicion that the defendant Buchalter conspired to cause that homicide.

The Court: That is obvious. So charge.

Mr. Clinenko: I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that the physical facts proved in this case do in no wise connect the defendant Buchalter with the commission of the crime and that the jury may not consider the physical facts proved as corroboration of the testimony of any accomplices.

11804

The Court: You mean the physical facts attending the killing?

Mr. Clinenko: That is right, your Honor.

The Court: So charge.

Mr. Clinenko: I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that one accomplice cannot corroborate the testimony of another accomplice.

The Court: I will modify it in this respect: He may not corroborate it, standing alone, to an extent sufficient to entitle the jury to accept the other accomplice's word. The corroboration by outside testimony which tends to connect the 11805 defendant with the commission of the crime must come from a non accomplice, but the testimony of every accomplice witness, other than as aforesaid, may be considered by the jury for what probative value it is worth, but not as sufficiently corroborative to accept another accomplice's testimony.

Mr. Clinenko: I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that in evaluating the credibility of the witness Rubin, the jury may take into consideration his own past admitted criminal activities for which he has gone unpunished, his hope of reward, his prior perjury, and his criminal evasion of military service in 1917, and his motive and his desire for revenge.

The Court: If I recall correctly, Rubin's criminal activity was as a graft collector, that is, an extortionist in the trade, for some alleged group, with which he has mentioned Buchalter. Now, what was the rest of that? He did not admit participation in any murders or other 11807 crimes that I can recall. The testimony, if I am correctly quoting, is that he waived immunity, so he gained no immunity. What is the next part?

Mr. Climenko: I was referring, if your Honor please, to the fact that he admitted that he had committed perjury in or about 1919, and also his criminal evasion of military service in 1917.

The Court: One thing at a time. What was that perjury in 1919?

Mr. Climenko: At that time, if your Honor please, he knowingly perjured himself in the obtaining of a passport under the name of a 11808 member of his family rather than his own name.

The Court: Yes, I charge you you may consider that for what, if anything, it is worth.

The next was what? Failure to report for the draft. You may consider that for what, if anything, it is worth as having a bearing on credibility.

Mr. Climenko: And his own admission, if your Honor please, that he has never been punished or even arrested for any of the crimes which he admitted, including the extortions which he admitted he participated in.

The Court: That does not mean anything yet. If he is getting immunity from the extortions in consideration of his testimony, you may consider that for what, if anything, it is worth.

Mr. Climenko: Well, specifically, if your Honor please, I respectfully request your Honor to charge the jury that he did gain immunity by virtue of the testimony he gave in that case.

The Court: Would you mind telling me in what respect?

Mr. Climenko: He gave testimony in that case, such as the proof in this record, your Honor, by reference to the other record. 11810

The Court: What case is that?

Mr. Climenko: The flour extortion case in New York.

The Court: I don't recall the evidence on that point.

Mr. Climenko: Well, if your Honor please, he was asked whether he had not testified against Buchalter in a prior case. He said that he had, and he said that he testified in that case.

The Court: That does not apply to this case. Decline to so charge. 11811

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

I respectfully request your Honor to charge the jury that if the jury believe that the witness Rubin fled from the Dewey investigation in the Borough of Manhattan, then his flight or the fact that he had been induced to flee by the defendant Buchalter cannot be considered as evidence against the defendant Buchalter as a consciousness of his guilt in the Rosen case, and on that point they must consider his statement to Assistant District Attorney McCarthy on December 10, 1937, to the effect that he fled, but not on account of the Rosen case.

The Court: I charge the jury in this form, and I have already charged it. There is evidence here on which the jury can find that one of the causes, at least, was the Brooklyn case, the Rosen case. There is evidence there that the jurors' attention has been called to. On the second point of that request, he did not testify before McCarthy at all. He was not under oath. I decline to so charge.

11813 Mr. Climenko: I respectfully except, your Honor.

The Court: That is not perjury. That is a contradiction, and he has explained it. He says he had been shot once through the head because of testifying before the Dewey Grand Jury, and he was afraid to give McCarthy any information about the Rosen case for that reason.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully except to your Honor's observation, and I now respectfully request your Honor—

11814 The Court: I charge the jury that they can consider the explanation in connection with the apparent evasion on that point before McCarthy. If it was on the basis of fear, they can consider the extent, if any, to which it ameliorates the contradiction and whether or not the contradiction and evasion, admittedly so before McCarthy, really amount to anything at all. He was under no obligation to give any evidence—it was not evidence; it was not sworn to before any official, so far as legal procedure is concerned; it was not compulsory.

Mr. Climenko: I now respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that, by the concession of the District Attorney, in the trial of this case no point was made about the fact that that statement made by Rubin in the presence of Assistant District Attorneys Hogan and McCarthy was not signed or was not sworn to, and I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that it is for them to decide whether Rubin then spoke the truth when he made that statement, and that, in deciding his credibility at that time they may consider the fact that he was then under triple police guard and that 11816 the statement was made in December, 1937, after the Grand Jury testimony which he said he gave in August, 1937.

The Court: I do not know whether he was under triple police guard or not, but he says he was afraid to tell McCarthy what he claims was the truth and what he claims he is telling here is the truth. It is up to your common sense to decide if it is worth anything by way of contradiction or impeachment. Otherwise I decline to charge as requested.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

I respectfully request your Honor to charge 11817
the jury that in this connection they must consider the testimony of Rubin himself that the authorities of Brooklyn, both the police and the District Attorney, never looked for him, and the further fact that he and his counsel—

The Court: Never what?

Mr. Climenko: Searched for him, sought him.

The Court: He does not know whether they did or not.

Mr. Climenko: No, if your Honor pleases, as I understand the record he said they did not, neither the police nor the District Attorney.

11818

The Court: Pay no attention to that. He does not know what the police do behind his back. He is not the Police Commissioner. I decline to so charge.

Mr. Climenko: Exception. I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury in that connection that, as to that, they may take into consideration the further fact that Rubin and his counsel concluded that Rubin had not done anything in the Rosen case for which he had reason to flee.

11819

The Court: I charged the jury on that point for a particular reason. I wanted them to avoid confusion that would arise if I charged them in the form you request.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully except.

The Court: He did not say that at all. He could not say what was in Rubin's mind by way of fear of being apprehended and falsely accused. The most that the attorney could advise him, and that is as far as this goes, is that upon the statement of facts made by Rubin to the lawyer that Rubin was not responsible for the Rosen murder, he should not flee because that would be evidence of guilt; the best thing he could do would be to go back to the garment district and resume his old occupation and forget it. I am not saying that that is in the evidence, but I think that request is so confusing I have to clarify the situation because I saw what counsel was driving at when that point came up in the course of the trial, and I anticipated just this thing. I decline to charge other than I just have charged on that point.

11820

Mr. Climenko: Exception. I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that if the jury entertain a doubt as to which jurisdiction Rubin fled from, either the Dewey investigation or the Brooklyn investigation, then and in that event they must completely disregard Rubin's testimony with respect to flight.

The Court: I decline to charge in that form. I will charge in this form:

Gentlemen, there is evidence that I called your attention to and there is evidence which you remember which, if true, directly connects 11822 flight with the alleged Rosen murder fear and also on instigation from Buchalter because of the Rosen murder. If there was another cause, that does not lessen it. It is enough if the Rosen murder was one cause, and only in event that you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the Rosen murder and fear in connection therewith and instructions in connection therewith from Buchalter were in part connected with the flight, may you disregard that evidence.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully except to your Honor's comment. I respectfully request your 11823
Honor to instruct the jury that in determining the reason which prompted Rubin to flee, it must consider his testimony and that of the witness Maguire that when Rubin voluntarily surrendered in August of 1937, he surrendered to the District Attorney's office in Manhattan and he was never surrendered to the Brooklyn District Attorney's office.

The Court: I decline to so charge.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury on that same subject of the flight of Rubin that the jury may consider his own testimony as to when he fled and as to why he fled, as given in the flour case in New York.

The Court: A little more slowly and clearly.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that in considering the question of Rubin's flight the jury may consider Rubin's testimony as to why he fled, as he gave that testimony in the flour case and which testimony he admitted in this case.

The Court: They may weigh that for what,
11825 if anything, it is worth on the question of impeachment only.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that if the jury believe the witnesses Rubin and Sylvia Greenspun in so far as their testimony relates to a meeting alleged to have been held in the summer of 1932, on 17th or 19th Street in Manhattan, and that on that occasion the defendant Buchalter used or attempted intimidation by threats against Rosen to force him from business, then Buchalter's act on that occasion constituted a violation of Sec-11826 tion 530 of the Penal Law, which was a misdemeanor, and it was outlawed by the Statute of Limitations after two years, and therefore the defendant Buchalter could not be prosecuted for this crime after the summer of 1934 and that he could not have been prosecuted for it by the Special Assistant to the District Attorney of New York County, Thomas E. Dewey, for the reason that Mr. Dewey did not become such Special Assistant District Attorney until sometime in July, 1935.

The Court: I decline to so charge.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully except.

11827

I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that evidence of mere association of the defendant Buchalter with alleged co-defendants, at a time before or after the commission of the crime, is not sufficient proof on which to predicate a verdict of guilty.

The Court: I so charge.

Mr. Climenko: On that same subject, may I respectfully request your Honor to read to the jury Section 530 of the Penal Law with respect to the one before the next preceding request?

11828

The Court: Declined.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that if the proof tendered against the defendant Buchalter is largely circumstantial and that if the jury find that such circumstantial proof is consistent with innocence, it must acquit the defendant Buchalter; and that if the proof is susceptible of more than one inference, the jury must draw that inference which is most favorable to the defendant Buchalter and that the jury may find that defendant guilty only of the circumstances are such as to exclude by a moral certainty every hypothesis except that of guilt.

11829

The Court: I will charge it in this form: that any evidence by way of circumstance must, in order to be applicable, point only to guilt. A person may do something which may have an innocent interpretation and may have a guilty interpretation. You may not be able to decide as to which interpretation applies, so I charge you, when the alleged circumstance is capable of interpretation on either a hypothesis of innocence or guilt, that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the hypothesis of innocence.

11830 Requests to Charge and Exceptions

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully except.

I respectfully ask your Honor to instruct the jury that mere association by the defendant Buchalter with alleged co-conspirators is not proof in any degree that the defendant entered into a conspiracy to commit the crime charged.

The Court: No, you cannot base a case on association alone. That is only just a part of 11831 a case. It just stands on its own bottom. It is evidence of association, that is all, to be applied in connection with other evidence as the common-sense requirements of the case indicate.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that the character of the defendant Buchalter's associates and the reputation of the defendant Buchalter are not issues in this case and that his association with persons of good or bad character is not proof in any degree that he committed any crime.

The Court: I so charge.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully request your 11832 Honor to charge the jury that the statement of the witness Magoon, even if believed, to the effect that the defendant Capone said, "We got to hit Rubin because he is hurting Lep," is in no way binding on the defendant Buchalter and the jury must completely disregard it as to him.

The Court: I have already so charged. I charge it again.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that evidence corroborating the testimony of an accomplice must tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime charged and not merely connect the defendant as an associate or an acquaintance of the person said to have committed the crime.

The Court: That is ordinary common sense. I so charge. If you convicted everybody of crime who happens to meet a confessed criminal, there would be very few people out of jail.

Mr. Climenko: I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that the failure of the District Attorney to call any representative of the Dewey office or of the Police Department 11834 to show the surveillance by those authorities of the defendant Buchalter on September 11, 1936, that there has been such a failure in this case, and that they may infer from that failure to call such witnesses that if they were called those persons would have given testimony favorable to the defendant Buchalter.

The Court: Oh, no. There is nothing to indicate that such witnesses should reasonably have been called. Declined.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that if the jury believe that Rubin 11835 told the truth to Assistant District Attorney McCarthy, it must acquit the defendant Buchalter.

The Court: Obviously, gentlemen, if you don't accept Rubin's testimony that he shied off on McCarthy because he had been shot and was afraid, if you really believe his answers to McCarthy, his statements to McCarthy, that impeaches his testimony. I won't charge you that you can go so far as to acquit. That only goes to his credibility. Unless counsel calls my attention to a specific part and lets me read it, I will have to let this specific charge stand just as it is.

Mr. Climenko: Your Honor, I do respectfully call your attention—

The Court: If you have the exhibit, pass it over and point out—

Mr. Climenko: We do not have the exhibit, but we do have the testimony.

The Court: What page?

11837 Mr. Climenko: Beginning at page 2282.

The Court: All I have in my notes is, in December he was questioned by McCarthy of Mr. Geoghan's staff but failed to disclose that he had been in flight and hiding because of the Rosen murder and failed to disclose any of Lepke's alleged connections with that crime. In these and in other ways the statement is inconsistent with his testimony here. He explains these inconsistencies by stating that they were due to fear because of having been shot following his secret testimony before the Dewey Grand Jury. Refer me to the page.

11838 Mr. Climenko: Page 2290 in the testimony of November 14th.

The Court: What question and answer?

Mr. Climenko: The first question from the top of the page, your Honor.

The Court: "Q. Is it not a fact that in that statement you, on the other hand, went out of your way to give assurance to the Assistant District Attorney then that if you could implicate Lepke you would? A. Where did you get that inference from?"

Mr. Climenko: The question is finally answered at the bottom of the page.

The Court: "A. I did."

I think "out of your way" is improper in form. What is the request in connection with that? All I can see in that is an attempted concealment, which is quite consistent with his explanation of fear.

Mr. Climenko: I except to that, if your Honor please.

The Court: I am trying to figure out how I am justified in charging as you request. Will you repeat that?

11840

Mr. Climenko: I will repeat the request which I have submitted to your Honor, that if the jury believe that Rubin told the truth to Assistant District Attorney McCarthy, it must acquit the defendant Buchalter.

The Court: No, I decline to so charge.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that in determining the truth of Rubin's story they must consider the date when Berger was arrested, which was June 5, 1941, and the date of Tannenbaum's arrest.

The Court: I don't understand it, frankly. 11841

Mr. Climenko: May I explain it to your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Climenko: Rubin said that he told the truth in March, 1940, to a police official by the name of McDermott and to Judge O'Dwyer. Berger was available at all times until the date of his arrest, but that did not happen until June 5, 1941. Tannenbaum was not questioned about this case.

The Court: No, no, I decline to so charge. That is quite out of place.

11842 Requests to Charge and Exceptions

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

I respectfully request your Honor to instruct the jury that if the jury believe that there is one or a single reasonable doubt arising out of the evidence as to the guilt of the defendant Buchalter, they must resolve that doubt in favor of the defendant Buchalter and acquit him.

The Court: I have already charged thoroughly on reasonable doubt. I don't see why I should keep on repeating.

11843 Mr. Climenko: I respectfully except.

Mr. Cuff: I have a few requests to make on behalf of the defendant Weiss. I ask your Honor to instruct the jury that the testimony of the People's witness Berger, cannot be considered as corroborating the testimony of the accomplice Bernstein.

The Court: That comes under the charge and also the request heretofore made. It may not be sufficiently corroborative. It is not sufficiently corroborative, standing by itself, to permit conviction. Both of them have to be sufficiently corroborated under the accomplice statute by one or 11844 more non-accomplice witnesses. One is enough, if you consider that sufficient, and the corroboration is required to go only to the extent that it tends to connect that defendant with the commission of the crime. It does not have to go into each and every detail. Otherwise denied.

Mr. Cuff: I respectfully except to your Honor's refusal to charge as requested and to the comment and charge as qualified by the Court.

I respectfully ask your Honor to instruct the jury that if, upon the considering the testimony of People's witness Bernstein, they have a reasonable doubt as to its truth, they must acquit the defendants.

The Court: That is too broad. He testified on many points. It all depends. If you have a reasonable doubt as to whether any of it is true, then you must acquit. Obviously, if you have a reasonable doubt as to whether any of it whatever is true, you have to throw it all out.

Mr. Cuff: May I respectfully except to your Honor's denial of the charge in the language requested and to the qualification made by your Honor? 11846

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Cuff: I ask your Honor to instruct the jury that if, upon considering carefully the testimony of People's witness Tannenbaum, they have a reasonable doubt as to its truth, they must acquit the defendant Weiss.

The Court: Not the truth of any one part. If they have a reasonable doubt as to the truth of all of it. If you distrust all of it, sensibly throw it all out.

Mr. Cuff: May I respectfully except to your Honor's refusal to charge in the language requested and to the qualification of the charge as made. 11847

I ask your Honor to instruct the jury that the defendant Weiss does not have the burden of proof as to the defense of alibi.

The Court: Oh, gentlemen, I knew there was something I forgot, and, really, I must apologize. This is in perfectly good faith. I think we are all so tired that I sort of faltered towards the end of the charge. Supposing I charge you as to alibi:

First, no defendant is obliged to prove an alibi, but when he undertakes to prove it, it is up to the jury to decide whether or not it is true. Obviously, if the alibi is true, then he was not where it is claimed he was but, if the alibi is untrue, it does not amount to anything. You are the judges of the facts and will say whether it is true or untrue. The evidence on that point runs into quite a large part of the record.

11849 Mr. Cuff: May I respectfully except to the charge which your Honor has just made and to the refusal to charge in the language requested. May I also ask your Honor to instruct the jury that if the proof as to the alibi, taken in connection with all the other proof, raises a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's presence at the place of the crime, the jury must acquit the defendant Weiss.

The Court: You mean even if the alibi is not believed? If the alibi is believed, you don't have to go any further. If you believe the alibi, you don't have to go any further, gentlemen;

11850 just throw out Weiss, let him go; but if you don't believe the alibi, that is a different story. I decline to charge in that form.

Mr. Cuff: May I except to your Honor's refusal to charge as requested and to the qualification of the charge as made?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Cuff: I ask your Honor to charge the jury that an alibi need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt, but that, when established to the satisfaction of the jury, it is as conclusive a defense as can possibly be interposed.

The Court: That is right, if it is true, if the witnesses told the truth. I so charge.

Mr. Cuff: I respectfully except to your Honor's refusal to charge in the language requested and to the comment and qualification made by your Honor.

I ask your Honor to instruct the jury that in passing upon the credibility of any witness they may take into consideration all the crimes which the witness admitted that he has committed, whether he was ever arrested or convicted for them or not. 11852

The Court: I have already so charged on that point, but I will charge it again.

Mr. Cuff: I ask your Honor to instruct the jury that the accomplices who have testified for the prosecution here, in connection with the testimony of the accomplices here, that the jury has the right to infer that they are incriminating the defendant or defendants in the hope of reward or consideration to be extended or that has already been extended to them.

The Court: That is already covered by the charge, but I will charge it again. 11853

When you get right down to the fine point, the question is whether or not, notwithstanding hope, promise, or payment of reward, they told the truth.

Mr. Cuff: May I respectfully except to your Honor's refusal to charge in the language requested and to the qualification of the charge as made.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Cuff: I think that is all.

11854 Requests to Charge and Exceptions

Mr. Talley: May I add just one or two requests?

The Court: Yes, Judge.

Mr. Talley: I ask your Honor to charge the jury that any denial of motions made by the Court, any rulings by the Court denying motions made by counsel for the defense, is not to be taken by the jury as carrying any inference of your Honor's belief as to the guilt or innocence of these defendants, or any of them.

11855 The Court: Gentlemen, that is so. When the Judge denies the motion to dismiss, all he passes upon is this: whether or not there is evidence to present to the jury which, if found true by the jury, will justify the jury to bring in a verdict of guilty.

Mr. Talley: I ask your Honor to charge that your reference to certain portions of the testimony is not to be regarded by them as a stressing on your part of one part as against any other part of the record.

The Court: I so charge. I tried to make that 11856 clear because if there is any one thing I am sensitive about in this trial it is to have my position understood as being fair. To that extent, at times, I even leaned backwards in my treatment of the Assistant District Attorney, rather than appear to show favoritism.

Mr. Talley: I ask your Honor to charge that with respect to Rubin, Tannenbaum, and Magoon that you leave to them the determination of whether they are accomplices or not, leave to the jury the determination as a matter of fact as to whether they are accomplices or not.

The Court: I decline. There is no evidence on which to submit that.

Mr. Talley: I except to your Honor's refusal to charge in the language requested.

The Court: You cannot decide any case on guesswork, and that applies to both sides.

Mr. Talley: I except to your Honor's comment in response to my request. Reserve the exceptions until after.

The Court: Have you checked those off, Mr. Rosenthal?

11858

Mr. Rosenthal: Yes, I did, your Honor.

The Court: How about No. 1?

Mr. Rosenthal: May I first make this statement, so that we can abbreviate it as much as possible? So many requests as your Honor has denied and exception taken by other counsel, may I have an exception to them? That will avoid the necessity of repeating the particular items which I may have incorporated in the requests which I handed up to your Honor.

The Court: Yes. Just tell me the first one you wish me to charge.

Mr. Rosenthal: As to No. 1, so that the jury may clearly understand the request which your Honor grants or says, "I so charge," that is merely to inform the jury that that is just as much a part of the law in this case as though your Honor had charged it in your original statement to this jury.

The Court: I so charge.

Mr. Rosenthal: No. 2 is out. It has been charged, but there was one thing that I omitted, thinking that your Honor would charge it. I know as soon as I state this to your Honor, you will, to inform the jury that an indictment—usually your Honor does state that in your charge, but in this particular charge you have not—has no meaning or probative value and must be dismissed from the minds of the jury in considering the guilt or innocence of any of the defendants.

The Court: I charge that an indictment is merely an accusation and is not evidence. It has no probative value.

11861 Mr. Rosenthal: 3 is out, has been sufficiently charged.

4 has been sufficiently charged.

5—shall I read it, Judge?

The Court: Do you want me to charge it?

Mr. Rosenthal: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Gentlemen, I charge that no presumption of law arises from the failure of a defendant to take the witness stand, nor can you draw any unfavorable inference because of such fact, and in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant you are precluded from in any wise discussing or considering on the question of 11862 his innocence or guilt the failure on his part so to do.

Mr. Rosenthal: And will your Honor charge 6?

The Court: I charge that at no time in a criminal case is it incumbent upon the defendant to prove his innocence, but that at all times it is incumbent upon the District Attorney, by competent proof, to prove the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt before the jury can convict.

Mr. Rosenthal: 7 has been charged.

11863

The Court: That is withdrawn?

Mr. Rosenthal: That is withdrawn. 8 has been requested by other counsel, and I except to your modification, unless your Honor desires to charge—

The Court: You are covered by your exception. I will just mark this "withdrawn".

Mr. Rosenthal: 9 has been covered by your Honor's charge.

Your Honor has partially covered 10, but I would like your Honor to charge in the language which I requested.

11864

The Court: Well, there are just a few words I do not agree with, the words "in such a way as may be."

Gentlemen, I charge you that the corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice becomes sufficient only if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime reasonably to satisfy the jury that the accomplices are telling the truth.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I except to the modification?

11865

11 I think is covered by your Honor's statement, so I withdraw that.

I ask your Honor to charge 12.

The Court: I will read that because I have a different ruling. It reads, "I ask your Honor to charge the jury that they may take into consideration close association of the principal witnesses at various times after their arrest and while in custody, to determine what, if any, opportunity they had to converse with one another regarding the subject-matter of this indictment, and the jury is not bound by the denials unless they believe them."

The only evidence I can recall is that they were under constant surveillance; that they were never at any time together without the police being there to see that they did not discuss the case. I decline to so charge.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I respectfully except?

The Court: I would so charge if there was any evidence that at any time they were left alone. There is no such evidence. I mean left alone in one another's company.

11867 Mr. Rosenthal: May I except and, in view of the fact of your Honor's statement, ask that the request be modified to the extent that the jury has a right to draw such reasonable inference from their testimony as is warranted by the facts as they see them.

The Court: I find that it is not. I find it is all guesswork.

Mr. Rosenthal: Then I respectfully except.

The Court: The jury is not permitted to guess.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I respectfully except.

The Court: You go by evidence, not by guess-
11868 work. I think the reason, possibly, Mr. Rosenthal, is clear enough. You cannot lock criminals together when they are waiting their turn to be called to testify, and let them put their heads together and maybe plot something behind the backs of the police.

Mr. Rosenthal: I don't want to enter into any discussion with your Honor, excepting that I have a different view and it is too late and I don't want to enter into a discussion as to the fact. I merely except.

The Court: That would be sloppy police work, to permit discussion.

Mr. Rosenthal: I could answer, but I don't want to reopen the case. May I ask that 13 be charged, on the burden of proof, which your Honor has not charged in your original charge.

The Court: I charge it so many times—

Mr. Rosenthal: But not in this case.

The Court: I charge it so many times I am ashamed to look at it again, but I will charge it again, even if it is No. 13.

I charge that in all criminal cases, including the case at bar, the burden of proof always remains the same and rests upon the prosecution. A defendant may be convicted only if the evidence, in accordance with the law laid down by this Court, satisfies the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt. 11870

Mr. Rosenthal: On the question of 14, that applies to the defendant Capone. I would ask that your Honor charge it.

The Court: You read the request.

Mr. Rosenthal: All right. I ask your Honor to charge the jury that if, after considering the evidence, they find it is susceptible of two constructions, one indicating the defendant Capone's guilt and the other his innocence, they must give the defendant Capone the benefit of the construction most favorable to him and must acquit him, and if the jury find that the two constructions are evenly balanced, then The People have not met the burden imposed upon them and the jury must acquit the defendant Capone. 11871

The Court: I take it, gentlemen, this goes to the question as to whether the language which is alleged by Magoon to have been used by Capone is susceptible of interpretation on the hypothesis of innocence. I have taken great care

11872 of Capone's end of the case because of the difference between the corroborative evidence as to him and as to the others. It is so limited in record content, I even went to the extent of quoting verbatim from the record, so there would be no mistake about it. You know the text. Of course, if you think that that is capable of interpretation on the hypothesis of innocence, why, follow that and acquit him. If you think it hooks him up and it is not capable of in-

11873 terpretation on the hypothesis of innocence, and you believe Magoon in that testimony, then you have a right to consider whether or not it corroborates sufficiently to tend to connect Capone with the commission of the crime, the details of which, as against Capone, were testified to by Bernstein and by Berger, which go into considerable detail. Of course, if this alleged corroborative testimony is found to be true and so tends, you are entitled to convict. Otherwise acquit.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I respectfully except to the modification.

11874 The Court: It is not a question of how many pages of record: it is a question of how many ramifications it goes into. It is a question of what it is worth. You are the judges of that.

Mr. Rosenthal: In line with that, may I ask your Honor to charge No. 15 in the language I request, that reasonable doubt is that state of mind that you cannot say that you have an absolute conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the accusation against the accused.

The Court: That reads to me like an obiter dictum. Can you quote the authority for that language?

Mr. Rosenthal: Right now, no, but it is followed by the Court of Appeals at almost every case that you want to read, without restriction, and also by—

The Court: That is only the language of the judge; it is not the language of the judge that counts, but what the decision holds.

Mr. Rosenthal: That is true, but if you take—

The Court: Different people express things in different ways. There have been millions of sermons preached on the same Biblical text by different preachers, all in different forms. No two are exactly alike. 11876

Mr. Rosenthal: That is true.

The Court: I cannot adopt the language. I decline to charge in that particular language.

Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except.

The Court: I can see something there that I differ with, with due respect to whoever wrote it. If you will only refer me to the authority, I will read it and then charge it. If you have a case—

Mr. Rosenthal: That was the reason why I handed this to your Honor beforehand, because if I thought there was any doubt, I would have had the authority. 11877

The Court: I think it is up to you not to hook me that way. I think it is up to you to be frank. If the Court of Appeals, where you appear so often, says that every time, please show me a case, and I will read it right now.

Mr. Rosenthal: I will do that when the jury retires.

The Court: Do it now. I have the authorities within a minute.

Mr. Rosenthal: I am not going to attempt to quote a page or a particular case.

The Court: The judge is not required to charge in the language of opinion, so held by the Court of Appeals.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I respectfully except, so that we can get ahead, sir.

No. 18: I ask your Honor to charge the jury that where a person testifies before a Grand Jury without executing a waiver of immunity, 11879 he gains immunity for all crimes and matter inquired into from him.

The Court: I think that request is incomplete in form. He gains immunity for all matters concerning which he is examined before the Grand Jury, but not matters inquired into from him in the District Attorney's office or before any other official.

Mr. Rosenthal: My request was only confined to what he testifies before the Grand Jury.

The Court: I thought that is what you meant, but it does not say so.

11880 Mr. Rosenthal: That is what I intended, but I accept your Honor's qualification of the statement.

The Court: I qualify it in accordance with your concession.

Mr. Rosenthal: That is right, so we both agree on it.

I ask your Honor to charge 19, that mere association, suspicious circumstance, or even opportunity to commit crime, are not of themselves sufficient ground upon which to base criminal responsibility.

The Court: That is true, but the crux of that request is "not of themselves". So charge.

Mr. Rosenthal: I ask your Honor to charge 20, that the jury, in weighing the credibility or probative value of the testimony of any witness, may take into consideration so much of that witness's testimony, either before the Grand Jury or on any prior trial in which they may have testified, as those witnesses were confronted with on this trial and which is deemed a part of the evidence in this case.

The Court: Only in so far as, in the other trial or at the hearing before the Grand Jury, 11882 questions were asked which called for those answers and, in that event, the answers given were contradictory of or otherwise at variance with testimony given at this trial. To that extent it is charged.

Mr. Rosenthal: On 21, Judge, I ask your Honor to charge the jury that mere association or acquaintanceship of the defendant with any of the accomplices in and of itself is not proof of guilt of the defendant on this charge.

The Court: That is so charged, but the crux of that is this part: "in and of itself."

11883

Mr. Rosenthal: I except to the modification of the request.

The Court: Gentlemen, don't misunderstand this: I don't say that in every case mere association or acquaintanceship of the defendant with any of the accomplices is proof of guilt. It may or it may not be. It all depends on the common sense application: it all depends on the specific case.

Mr. Rosenthal: 22. I ask your Honor to charge the jury that corroborative evidence must be evidence from an independent source of some material fact tending to show that the defendant was implicated in the crime. Therefore, corroborative evidence is insufficient if it tends only to establish the credibility of the accomplice.

The Court: I so charge.

Mr. Rosenthal: 38. I ask your Honor to charge the jury that in so far as the defendant Capone is concerned, even if they were to believe the testimony of Solomon Bernstein, if they disbelieve the testimony of Seymour Ma-11885 goon, they must acquit.

The Court: I have already charged that and, as the jury knows, I have gone particularly into that point. It is all up to the testimony of Seymour Magoon. Do you believe it? If you do believe it, it is one thing; if you do not believe it, it is another.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I have the converse of it in the next request?

I ask your Honor to charge the jury that in so far as the defendant Capone is concerned, even if they were to believe the testimony of Seymour Magoon, if they disbelieve the testimony of Solo-11886 mon Bernstein, in so far as it affects the defendant Capone, they must acquit.

The Court: I so charge. That is obvious. Wait a minute. I am a little puzzled about this language as being sufficiently definite as a confession in case Bernstein is not believed. The language is that when that witness was talking to Capone, Capone replied, "What are you worried about? I worked on the Rosen thing, which was right on Sutter Avenue, and I was not made." I think that is too indefinite. I will charge that unless they believe the testimony of Bernstein connecting Capone, that Capone must be acquitted.

Mr. Rosenthal: There are just a few more. In line with that, may I ask your Honor to read 395 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in so far as it affects the weight of an admission allegedly made by a defendant?

The Court: Yes. I know it by heart, but I will read it.

Mr. Rosenthal: I know your Honor knows it by heart. 11888

The Court: I charged it a thousand times, so much so that I have forgotten the number of the section.

Mr. Rosenthal: 395. That is all I remember, is the number.

The Court: "A confession of a defendant, whether in the course of judicial proceeding or to a private person, can be given in evidence against him"—I will omit what directly follows because it is not in this case—

Mr. Rosenthal: That is correct, sir.

The Court: —"but is not sufficient to warrant his conviction without additional proof that the crime charged has been committed." You note it does not say "committed by him". Committed by anybody, it means. If you get a confession that is sufficiently explicit, you do not need anything more, providing the crime is proved. 11889

Mr. Rosenthal: May I ask your Honor to charge these two last? First, before that, I will jump to 44 and leave out 43.

I ask your Honor to charge the jury that in determining what weight, if any, they will give to the witness Magoon's testimony, they have a right to take into consideration not only his previous convictions but the admissions which he made upon the witness stand of participation in or commission of other crimes, including murder, and if, after taking such convictions and admissions into consideration, they believe that such witness is incapable of or has failed to testify truthfully in this case, they have a right to disregard his entire testimony or so much thereof as they believe to be untrue.

The Court: I so charge.

11891 Mr. Rosenthal: I do not know whether your Honor wants me to read these. Those are questions of law which I contend apply to the defendant in this case.

The Court: Which are they?

Mr. Rosenthal: 40, 41, and 42. I don't want to read them in the presence of the jury. If you are going to deny them, I will merely take my exception.

The Court: 40, I had this penciled notation: There is also testimony of Magoon as to Capone being involved in preparation for intended assassination of Rubin.

11892 Mr. Rosenthal: I intend to except to that. I don't want—with your Honor's permission—

The Court: The way you frame this, if you want to read it, go ahead and read it.

Mr. Rosenthal: 40. I ask your Honor to charge the jury that the only alleged corroboration of the accomplice Solomon Bernstein's testimony in so far as the defendant Capone is concerned, is the alleged oral statement made by the defendant Capone to Seymour Magoon in the year 1939, at the home of the defendant, in which the defendant is alleged to have stated, "I worked on the Rosen thing right on Sutter Avenue, and I was not made. I hung around there too. What are you worrying about being made?"

The Court: Denied.

Mr. Rosenthal: Respectfully except.

I ask your Honor to charge the jury, in so far as the alleged statement which I have just read is concerned, that the jury has no right to speculate, surmise, or add to such alleged statement, but if they believe same must determine that in their opinion it is sufficient independent evidence tending to connect the defendant Capone with the crime charged, or they must acquit. 11894

The Court: I will have to think about that one. Now you are getting into a deep question of law.

Mr. Rosenthal: That is why I said to your Honor I did not want to read it out loud.

The Court: I will so charge, that the alleged preparation, if it occurred, in which Capone is alleged to have participated, for the second attempted assassination of Rubin, is of value only in connection with and in event of the declaration previously alleged to have been made by Capone being truthfully testified to by Magoon. 11895

Mr. Rosenthal: Thank you very much.

That is all, sir.

Mr. Turkus: Judge, there are just two corrections of testimony. Your Honor said that the letter to the Union was sent by Rubin's wife. Page 1275 of the record shows the letter was sent by Rubin himself, not his wife.

The Court: I correct it in that respect. Reasonable latitude for human error goes right through the trial of every case and applies to everybody. Nobody is infallible.

Mr. Rosenthal: Judge, may I correct a couple of statements which I think you made by oversight?

Mr. Turkus: There is another one I have.

The Court: The furthest I can go is, nothing intentional was misstated. The jury must be guided by its own recollection.

Mr. Turkus: At the foot of 544, your Honor stated that when Capone was on the other side of the railroad bridge at Junius Street with a car, that that was a stolen car. That is not the 11897 testimony.

The Court: I was mistaken about that. I was confused. It was Bernstein's car but I was under the impression when I charged it that it was the stolen car. The stolen car had been abandoned. I was so fatigued when I charged it that my mind was slowing up.

Mr. Rosenthal: There was another thing, Judge. I think it was an oversight. When you were charging the jury originally you made reference to the fact that as to the defendant Capone there were statements of two non-accomplice witnesses. Of course, you correct 11898 that now by stating to the jury that it is the testimony of Magoon, but I thought it was an error at that time.

The Court: It all depends on the testimony of Magoon.

Mr. Rosenthal: I thought in fairness I ought to tell your Honor so that you could correct it.

The Court: Pardon me. I charged as to what Berger had testified to. I charged what Bernstein had testified to. Then I crossed up to Magoon, looked over to Magoon's testimony for the corroboration of those two.

Mr. Rosenthal: But you made an error, and I wanted to correct your Honor. You said two non-accomplices. You probably meant the one, Magoon.

The Court: Yes, that was a slip of the tongue, purely. It is a wonder to me, with all the names that have been brought into this case, that the human mind is able to keep track of them separately.

Mr. Rosenthal: Your Honor also said Magoon said he saw Capone in Buchalter's company.

The Court: In Rubin's company. 11900

Mr. Rosenthal: I am only telling you.

The Court: Will you repeat that again?

Mr. Rosenthal: Your Honor, in addressing the jury, said Magoon said he saw Capone in Buchalter's company. I am only doing this to correct you. There is no such evidence.

Mr. Turkus: That was the wrong name.

The Court: That should be Rubin.

Mr. Rosenthal: I say this in order that your Honor may correct it.

The Court: That is just stenographic error in my notes.

I suggest this: When it comes to the discussion of exceptions, I wish to go conscientiously 11901 into exceptions with a view to revision, where necessary. I want to be perfectly free to discuss questions of evidence without the hearing of the jury, and my mind will operate better if I do that, but in sending the jury out during the taking of exceptions, I am letting a court officer stay in the room with the jury to see that the Court's instruction not to discuss the case until they are brought back, is followed, not that I distrust the jury but that I want a record in the case that cannot be questioned or raised on this case.

Mr. Talley: If your Honor please, I object to the dismissal of the jury while exceptions to your Honor's charge are being presented by counsel.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Talley: I ask that the jury be allowed to remain here while we are taking our exceptions to your Honor's charge.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

The Court (to the jury): Go out in the custody
11903 of the court officer, and I will bring you back as soon as possible.

(The jury retired from the court-room.)

Mr. Climenko: Your Honor may I state seriatim my exceptions?

The Court: Yes, slowly, because I want to follow.

Mr. Climenko: On behalf of the defendant Buchalter we respectfully except to so much of your Honor's charge—and I am now referring to the matter almost at the outset of the charge—in 11904 which your Honor said in substance—

The Court: Will you pardon me just a minute, if I may interrupt?

Mr. Climenko: Surely.

The Court: There is one point in the charge that there must have been something about that was wrong, because all of a sudden counsel all started to confer with one another. Can you point that out now and let us get that correct?

Mr. Climenko: I am not confident that I have that exact wording.

Mr. Turkus: We thought it was "dilemma".

You say, "When rogues fall out it is the wise man's delight."

Mr. Rosenthal: "When rogues fall out it becomes the wise man's delight" is what some counsel said they heard, and I thought you said "dilemma", and therefore the discussion between counsel. We did not know what your Honor said.

Mr. Climenko: There was no discussion; we just asked each other.

The Court: Suppose we pass it up and let your exception be there for what it is worth.

11906

Mr. Climenko: We except first to so much of your Honor's charge in which your Honor said, in substance, that there is another way to correct the Judge, if that is necessary. I assume, your Honor, you do not want me to assign the reasons for these exceptions?

The Court: No, I do not.

Mr. Climenko: Then I will go right ahead and state them.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Climenko: We except to so much of your Honor's charge in which your Honor said, in substance, to the jury: "I am charging you on the degrees"—referring to the degrees of homicide—"because the law says that I must. Don't compromise."

11907

We except to so much of your Honor's charge in which your Honor said that it was in the discretion of the Court to keep the jury out in order to avoid a disagreement, even though the jury might think that it ought not be required to stay out for so long a time.

We except respectfully to so much of your Honor's charge in which your Honor, in referring to the probative value of Rubin's testimony as to his own flight, made some explanation on that point to the jury without explaining to the jury the need for showing the identity of one who might have induced flight or as to whether there was a connection with the flight and this case.

We respectfully except to so much of your Honor's charge as is devoted to the question of reasonable doubt, and I now refer to that portion of your Honor's charge in which, as I understood it, your Honor set up an objective standard of 11909 sanity and reasonableness as being the definition for a reasonable doubt.

We respectfully except to so much of your Honor's charge as dealt with the abstract question of corroboration and that portion thereof which dealt with and gave to the jury, as I understood it, merely a series of negative definitions. I make this reference to it, your Honor, only so that it may be identified.

The Court: Yes. Go ahead.

Mr. Climenko: We except respectfully to so much of your Honor's charge in which your 11910 Honor instructed the jury, without further identifying or commenting on the character of the witness Tannenbaum, that it might believe Tannenbaum without corroboration if it saw fit.

The Court: Pardon me. May I inquire something right here?

Mr. Climenko: Yes, sir.

The Court: Didn't I make a blanket charge covering all witnesses on that point? Yes, I did, distinctly.

Mr. Climenko: At some point your Honor did.

The Court: Yes, I did, and that covers a multitude of sins. Go ahead.

11911

Mr. Climenko: We respectfully except to so much of the Court's charge on the question of spoliation in which the Court stated to the jury that spoliation was an act of destruction of evidence and was tantamount to an admission that the truth would have been unfavorable, and to so much of your Honor's charge as said, with respect to the topic of spoliation, that the jury might believe that the witness Rubin may have fled because he feared that he might be framed, and to the definition generally of spoliation as given by the Court's charge.

11912

The Court: I think you misunderstood what I was driving at.

Mr. Climenko: That may be, your Honor.

The Court: Because what I said was distinctly in your favor. I was pointing out that there may be a reason to flee which is entirely consistent with the flight, which has no relation to guilt or innocence.

Mr. Climenko: I had another construction on it, Judge, which I thought was possible, and that is the reason for the exception.

The Court: I read from the highest text that we have on the subject, but personally, I don't agree with the extent to which the text goes as to probative force. I think it is over-written and, in fairness to defendants, that the jury should be allowed more liberality or indulgence towards the defense on the question of flight and spoliation. I gave the defendants the benefit of that construction.

Mr. Climenko: I noted this exception, if I may say so respectfully, because I did not think as the language of the charge was cast it conveyed that thought to the jury.

The Court: There has been too much said in legal text that is copied from Biblical text, where Solomon said, "The wicked flee where no man pursueth." The converse is not so, that the wicked flee because they are wicked. You can flee for any number of other reasons. The real motivation of flight is fear. It is for the jury to find out what the fear is and whether or not it 11915 carries a consciousness of guilt. It all depends on the circumstances. I would hate to be convicted because I ran away from something. Boys in the old days lit bonfires and ran from the police, or played baseball and ran away from the police. They were not feeling a bit guilty. They thought they were a hundred per cent right, but they ran because they did not want to be hit with the thong of the night-stick across the calf of the legs. There are lots of reasons for flight.

Mr. Climenko: We respectfully except to so much of your Honor's charge in which your Honor said, in substance, perhaps more or less in 11916 these words, that it is an unholy thing to put on a witness the burden of remembering what he testified to in a trial long ago, and in which the Court substantially, by its charge, approved the repeated answer of some witness called by The People in the words "If it is in the book, it is so," and in which the Court, in this same connection, said that it was obviously necessary for counsel to obtain the minutes of the day's proceedings in order to fortify the memory of those professional gentlemen.

The Court: It has been necessary for me, while listening to these requests, to refresh my memory from the text, and that has not involved the necessity of remembering the specific language of the text.

Mr. Climenko: Well, it was only the connection of those thoughts.

The Court: The careful man carries a memorandum book, does not trust to memory.

Mr. Climenko: I was excepting, not to your Honor's present comment, but to the instruction given to the jury.

The Court: Purely philosophical. 11918

Mr. Climenko: We respectfully except to that portion of the Court's charge in which the Court stated, in substance, to the jury that the failure of a witness called in this trial to say something before the Grand Jury in the past which he had testified to here, was to be disregarded by this jury because that past failure was meaningless and that therefore the jury should disregard any argument founded by counsel on that circumstance.

The Court: You understand I am not called upon to argue the accuracy of what was stated in your exceptions. 11919

Mr. Climenko: That is right, your Honor.

The Court: I concede no accuracy.

Mr. Climenko: I am merely trying to identify. And in view of your Honor's last comment, generally, we respectfully except to your Honor's statements with respect to the housing of People's witnesses and your Honor's comment on that subject.

The Court: I could not possibly tell the jury the real reason, but the danger of assassination is the reason, as is well known. There would be no trial here had those witnesses been kept in the jail. So far as Bronx County Jail is concerned, that is a Bronx County matter, not subject to order here, and that is a thoroughly modern jail. There is no comparison between that and the Raymond Street Jail or the old Tombs where these witnesses had to be kept had they not been housed in hotels. An experience in another case shows it would be utter folly to send any material witness to Queens County 11921 Jail because of what happened in the Maione-Abbandando case, involving the bribery of the lone jailer at night.

Mr. Climenko: We except to so much of the Court's charge as said, in effect, "When rogues fall out it is a wise man's delight."

The Court: Do you want me to particularly withdraw that? Do you think it did any harm? I will be glad to withdraw it.

Mr. Climenko: I certainly don't want to be put in a position to ask your Honor to recall the jury for that purpose, but I don't know. It 11922 is one of those things which was unintelligible to me.

The Court: It is just one of those things that do not amount to anything.

Mr. Climenko: I do not know what was intended by it.

The Court: No harm done.

Mr. Climenko: If that is the only matter on which your Honor is disposed to rule—

The Court: I withdraw it.

Mr. Climenko: —I do not want to be placed in the position of asking the Court—

The Court: I withdraw it because, on second consideration, the word "rogues" might be considered as referring to the defendants on trial. That was not the intention of the quotation. It was general in its application. It has no specific application to these defendants.

Mr. Climenko: We respectfully except to the Court's charge in so far as the Court, in the charge, read for three times the provisions of Section 2 of the Penal Law.

We respectfully except to the form and the content and the emphasis in the Court's reference 11924 to the epitomization of the facts as the Court said it was giving such epitomization to the jury in the charge.

We respectfully except to so much of the Court's charge as contained a disparagement of the argument of counsel for the defense in his summation with respect to a point of discrepancy in time as between the narratives of two witnesses called by The People.

We respectfully except to so much of your Honor's charge in which your Honor said, in substance, that there was no evidence in this 11925 case as to the time when the defendant Buchalter asked to have the preparatory work done. That is the only one on which I want to make any reference, your Honor.

The Court: Do you know of any part of the record that shows what the time was?

Mr. Climenko: I go beyond that, your Honor.

The Court: Can you refer to the page?

Mr. Barshay: Immediately after lunch.

The Court: Can you refer to the page of the record? I will be glad to go into that.

Mr. Climenko: I wanted to bring another matter to your Honor's attention with respect to that same matter. There is an assumption implicit in that statement to the jury that there was an earlier communication between the defendant Buchalter and somebody else about preparatory work, and I know of none in this record.

The Court: I tried to make clear they could not speculate on that. They cannot assume there was none. That is the difference.

11927 Mr. Climenko: I take exception to that portion of the charge because under it the jury is asked to speculate that there was one

The Court: Counsellor, the whole argument of counsel—I think it was Mr. Rosenthal's argument, wasn't it?

Mr. Climenko: I think it was argument tendered by all summations.

The Court: Whoever did it, the whole argument was based upon an alleged presumption that there was no communication. There is no such presumption. Go ahead.

11928 Mr. Climenko: At page 1483 the time is fixed as one o'clock. That is in the cross-examination of the witness Rubin.

The Court: I am glad you called my attention to that.

Mr. Climenko: May I add another reference, your Honor, on the same subject?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Climenko: We also take exception in this connection to that portion of your Honor's charge in which your Honor said, in substance, that counsel assumed that Buchalter waited until after the fingering, referring apparently to the so-called preparatory work, and in which your Honor said in substance that the jury may assume that he gave such orders with respect to preparatory work.

The Court: They cannot assume one way or the other. The case is blind on that point. I will straighten that out.

Mr. Climenko: And your Honor also said the jury has the right to reconcile the testimony of Berger and Rubin and Bernstein as to time. All of that about reconciling the testimony of those 11930 witnesses as to time was immediately preceded, as I recall your Honor's charge, by these suggestions, that the jury might assume, in spite of argument of counsel, that Buchalter did some preliminary act, and I represent to your Honor on my recollection of this record that there is no such thing here.

The Court: Take your exception. I will straighten it out.

Mr. Climenko: Thank you. Shall I proceed, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Climenko: We respectfully except to so 11931 much of the Court's charge as included a reading of pages 1190 and 1192 of the testimony to the jury and in that connection we respectfully except to the Court's failure to remind the jury of the contradiction by the witness Rubin in his statements to Assistant District Attorney McCarthy on December 16, 1937, in the presence of then Assistant District Attorney Hogan, and also the failure of the Court to refer, in connection with that reading, to Rubin's apparent failure to mention Berger until June, 1941.

We respectfully except to so much of the Court's charge as referred to the alleged meeting between Buchalter and Weiss after the murder.

We respectfully except to so much of the charge as stated, without qualification, that the proof about Rubin's flight was admissible as against Buchalter and that it was competent as an implied admission and was admissible also under the law of spoliation.

The Court: Did I say "implied admission"?

11933 Mr. Climenko: That is my note, your Honor. The words that I copied were that your Honor said it was competent as an implied admission.

The Court: Go ahead.

Mr. Climenko: We respectfully except to the form of the charge in so far as it gave an example of the binding effect of certain testimony, upon the ground that in the giving of that example there was set forth before the jury by the charge only those facts which were apparently incriminatory of the defendant Buchalter.

The Court: I do not recall what it was. That is all right. Go ahead.

11934 Mr. Climenko: We respectfully except to the Court's remarks about the cross-examination of the witness Maguire.

The Court: The cross-examination of what?

Mr. Climenko: Cross-examination of the witness Maguire.

The Court: The only reason I mentioned it was because of the twist that was sought to be given, the twist of misconstruction. I want to straighten that out. It has no probative value whatever against the defendants, but it certainly does not discredit.

Mr. Barshay: Except that it was asked with a specific view in mind—

The Court: It was just one of those little things that lawyers do in the trial of cases, with which I am quite familiar. Suppose we go on to the next exception.

Mr. Climenko: We respectfully except to the instruction that the jury might hold against the defendant Buchalter his statement, "When witnesses disappear, investigations collapse," in connection with the testimony of flight of the 11936 witness Rubin.

We respectfully except to the Court's statement as to what might constitute a motive for the defendant Buchalter; and we except also to the Court's statement that as to the defendant Buchalter motive need not be shown.

We respectfully except to the method incorporated in the charge of showing specific items of evidence as binding only on specific defendants, because the effect of the method used was to specify every incriminating item of evidence seriatim against all the defendants.

We respectfully except to that portion of the 11937 recital of testimony, to the repetition of an alleged conversation between the defendant Buchalter and the defendant Weiss.

We respectfully except generally to the Court's charge in its entirety as being preponderantly devoted to a consideration of those matters and circumstances which might justify a conviction.

We respectfully except to that portion of the Court's charge which in effect reviewed matters incriminatory against the defendant by reason of the failure in that review to make any reference to matters elicited on cross-examination.

11938

Mr. Barshay: Is there any use in going back to that issue of the talk between Rubin and O'Dwyer?

The Court: I think you brought it on yourself. The trick was tried and it did not work out. I do not think any Appellate Court, in event of conviction, understanding that trick, will give you any advantage of it

Mr. Barshay: That is the exception. It was planned to show flight from Dewey and not from Brooklyn, and it was not a trick.

11939

The Court: Counsel, I know the way it is done.

Mr. Barshay: May I have the exception?

The Court: It is done among the best of lawyers.

Mr. Barshay: Except the jury, from the comment of the Court, may get a wrong view.

The Court: I saw to it the jury did not get the misconstruction.

Mr. Talley: On behalf of defendant Weiss, I except to so much of your Honor's charge as charged the jury as a matter of law that neither

11940

Rubin, Tannenbaum, nor Magoon was an accomplice.

I except to so much of your Honor's charge as, in substance and effect, advised the jury about the housing of witnesses in hotels and the recital of the Court as to what they can do or cannot do under those circumstances, as not being evidence in this case.

I except to so much of your Honor's charge as informed the jury that you did not dare tell the jury why witnesses of this type were put in hotels.

11941

The Court: Judge, I will be glad to modify that, the word "dare." That means lest it be erroneous. That is the meaning of the application of the word "dare."

Mr. Talley: I doubt very much if the jury took that interpretation of it.

The Court: If you think the jury may interpret that as meaning something terrible, that would mean a sort of a calamity to somebody, I will be glad to correct it.

Mr. Talley: I think that is what they understood. I except to that.

11942

The Court: I will try to straighten that out. I am not sure I used the word "dare." I am taking your word for it.

Mr. Talley: That is the word you used.

I except to so much of your Honor's charge as advised the jury not to take stock in the argument of defense counsel that witnesses in hotels who are kept in the manner indicated in testimony, might change or alter their testimony.

I except to so much of your Honor's charge as charged that the cross-examination is simply for the purpose of breaking down the testimony given on direct, and your failure to advise the jury that the real purpose of cross-examination is to ascertain the truth.

The Court: I always understood, when I was practicing law, that the purpose of cross-examination was to try to win my case.

Mr. Talley: I am quoting, as far as possible, your Honor's language. I say it was an erroneous instruction as to the purpose of cross-examination and highly prejudicial to the defendants in this case.

11944 I except to your Honor's reading of the record as extensively as your Honor did on the ground that in its effect it was an argument by the Court.

The Court: You mean on Capone?

Mr. Talley: No, on the three defendants, the reading of the record, portions of the record that you gave, under the statement that you were doing it merely for the purpose of advising them as to the segregation of the testimony as 11945 to one against the others.

The Court: The only place where I read from the record was an extract on page 1190

Mr. Talley: Oh, no, sir.

The Court: The rest, if I recall correctly, all had to do with Capone. You may have formed the impression I read from the record, but I did not, that I can recall.

Mr. Talley: You were quoting the record and gave the pages from which you were reading, as counsel understood it.

The Court: That was under Capone.

11946 Mr. Talley: No, sir, that was on defendant Weiss.

The Court: All right, let it go at that.

Mr. Talley: It applied to all of them. I will give you the pages your Honor said you read from.

The Court: All right. I was just a little puzzled. I do not want to get into an argument about it.

Mr. Talley: Shall I note the pages of my exception?

The Court: No, don't bother. It is too late.

Mr. Talley: I will just begin again, so that I get my exceptions straight.

The Court: You go ahead with the exceptions. I am sorry to interrupt.

Mr. Talley: I except to your Honor's reading of the record and citing the various pages from which you read, on the ground that it was, in fact, an argument by this Court and was intended by the Court to answer certain contentions of defendants' counsel and was highly prejudicial to the defendants and highly favorable to the contention of the prosecution in this 11948 case.

The Court: I recall now, in regard to Capone, in order to assure that there would be no confusion and that the paucity of evidence of corroborative nature against Capone would be correctly understood, I did read from the record at different pages a number of questions and answers with which Weiss was connected, but that was not in my charge in which the specific segregation as to Weiss was referred to.

Mr. Talley: I submit that had nothing to do 11949 with Weiss.

The Court: No harm done anyway; I had a right to, but you take an exception.

Mr. Talley: That is all. I want the record to note my exception.

The Court: I was a little puzzled.

Mr. Talley: I want the record to note my exception to your Honor's reading in the manner that you did.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: I except to so much of your Honor's charge as indicated to the jury that 11950 certain testimony which you read specifically from pages 2341, 2342, and 2344 was followed by the comment that that testimony connected the defendant Weiss—"connects up" was the language the Court used—the defendant Weiss, no matter what Strauss said, as indicated in those pages.

I except to so much of your Honor's charge as indicated to the jury, in substance, the fact that evidence as to the attempted murder, to 11951 use your Honor's language, of Rubin is applicable to the defendant Weiss.

I think that covers my exceptions and I join in the exceptions already presented by counsel for defendant Buchalter.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: I also join now in the exceptions to be noted by the counsel for the defendant Capone.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Barshay: Will the Court allow us to join in Judge Talley's exceptions already taken and Mr. Rosenthal's, which will be taken?
11952

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Rosenthal: I won't repeat any of the exceptions that have been taken by other counsel who preceded me.

I except to your Honor's definition of the meaning of a special jury and the purpose for which it is called. I think that you should advise them that once they have been called, irrespective of their intellect, that they then become the same as any ordinary jurymen, so that they don't get a sense of exaggerated ego about their actions.

I except to your Honor's charging the law of conspiracy, in so far as it affects the defendant Capone, in the manner in which you did, upon the ground that there is no competent evidence to show that the defendant Capone entered into any conspiracy.

I except to your Honor's statement—and I think it may have been an error on your part, and that is why I am calling it to your attention—in referring to the question of the Rubin episode your Honor stated in effect that in respect to the Rubin shooting, and then I quote, "That 11954 would come down to Weiss or Capone." The evidence here, even though I except to that portion in which you even leave that to the jury, is in respect to an episode which is supposed to have followed the Rubin shooting and has nothing to do with the Rubin shooting.

Mr. Turkus: "Attempted." Your Honor said, "shooting" and should have said "attempted."

The Court: Do you remember that?

Mr. Turkus: Yes. That was the shooting that did not—

Mr. Rosenthal: You are not summing up 11955 here.

Mr. Turkus: We want to keep the record straight.

Mr. Rosenthal: I am making it straight.

Mr. Turkus: All right.

Mr. Rosenthal: I except to your Honor's charge on the law of spoliation and your Honor's statement of the construction of such law in so far as it applies to any evidence.

I except to the Court's explanation of the value of questioning in respect to evidence given on a former trial and its meaning, as an invasion of the jury's province.

In this, I think your Honor was addressing yourself to me. I respectfully except to your Honor's characterization of the summation of counsel and your statement regarding wrangling at that particular time and then your wording, "Much has been said about a fool remark of a witness," and then regarding mockery, ridicule, childish trait, stupid answer, and so forth. That, 11957 I imagine, is an invasion of the jury's province, since it is up to them to determine whether or not a man who persists in the statement that he never told anything but a little white lie is not telling them a major lie which would warrant their disregarding his entire testimony and not a point for interpretation by the Court; so I respectfully except.

Then, again, your Honor's interpretation in your charge regarding the failure or non-failure of a witness to state things before a Grand Jury which had been stated here and your explanation 11958 as to the fact of the small amount of time necessary to be consumed in the Grand Jury room as analogous to the great amount of time which is spent in the court.

I also except to your Honor's invasion of the jury's province in interpreting for the jury the question as to whether or not an arrangement had been made at the, what you call, Brooklyn end prior to the time when the conversation was allegedly had between the defendant Buchalter and Rubin.

Then a statement which your Honor made in which you said that you were leaving to the jury the question of this attempted murder as applicable against Weiss and possibly against Capone. By virtue of your Honor's own statement, the matter should not have been left to the jury if there was a question in your Honor's mind as to its applicability to the defendant Capone.

Mr. Turkus: I think that was a bad choice of a word.

The Court: I would have to instruct the jury on that. I will withdraw the word "possibly," 11960 although I don't know why you object to it. It was simply a poor choice of diction.

Mr. Turkus: That is all.

Mr. Rosenthal: I have honestly stated to your Honor these things. It is not a question of objection. It is a question of apprising your Honor of any error in the choice of words, so that I may—

The Court: Go ahead. It is late. It is ten o'clock.

Mr. Rosenthal: I am going to finish right now, sir. In line with my objection throughout 11961 the trial, I except to your Honor's reference, in quoting the alleged conversation between Magoon and the defendant Capone, to the so-called Friedman matter. I have objected to that throughout the trial. We had that long dispute about its admissibility into the evidence, and to preserve that same objection, I except to your Honor's reference to the Friedman matter.

Mr. Turkus: I don't think your Honor referred to the Friedman matter in the charge.

Mr. Rosenthal: You did, and I am excepting to that portion.

11962 I except to the charge in which your Honor states that all defendants must be found guilty of the same degree. That question is before the Court of Appeals, and I am now excepting to it for what it is worth.

That is all

The Court: Bring back the jury.

May I ask this: Supposing the jury should, before the Court will accept an announcement of disagreement as to one defendant, be ready with 11963 a verdict as to one or two of the others, what shall I do?

Mr. Talley: I think the proper procedure, if I might suggest, would be to have whatever verdict is rendered, rendered together.

The Court: Do you know of any law on the subject?

Mr. Talley: I don't know; it is simply my practice, that is all. That is the custom, to have the jury render the verdict together and not render it in part. I am just instinctively against rendering verdicts in part.

The Court: It may be a moot question if not 11964 decided heretofore, and I am trying to get what another person's reaction would be.

Mr. Talley: My reaction would be it would be highly improper.

The Court: That is only a conclusion. Suppose a jury comes in here to render a verdict and the foreman stands up and says, "We agree on so and so," mentioning the first, then gives a verdict: "We find as to so and so," mentioning him by name, and then gives the verdict: "As to so and so we don't agree": hasn't the Court a right to say that the verdict is accepted as rendered as to the two but sends back for reconsideration as to the third?

Mr. Talley: I would not think it would be the best practice.

The Court: That is as far as you will go, it would not be the best practice. Logically, it seems proper to me, but never mind, bring the jury back; they want to get to work.

(The jury returned to the court-room.)

11966

The Court: Gentlemen, I will give you these few corrections, and then you may go to work.

At one place during the charge I quoted an old saw, "When rogues fal. out, wise men delight." That was intended o have general application. It was not intended as calling the defendants names, but, lest it be misunderstood as having specific application to the defendants as rogues, the Court withdraws and apologizes for it. It was not so meant. Just disregard it.

I charged, in reference to the time table on Friday before the Rosen alleged murder, that I did not recall any specific hour mentioned in the 11967 record unless it was in the cross-examination somewhere, as to Rubin testifying just when he called and found Buchalter in such a state in making these declarations that he alleges Buchalter made. My attention has been called to page 1483 of the cross-examination, in which the time is fixed as follows: "Sometime about one o'clock, I imagine, in the afternoon."

My attention has also been called to a possible confusion in my charge as to the possibility of a communication having been, even before that, given by Buchalter to somebody in Brooklyn to go ahead with the work of preparation. That would make it, of course, entirely consistent with the time table set up by Bernstein as to when he was given instructions to steal the car and get a drop. I want to correct any possible mischoice of language that might cause a misunderstanding. The case is blind as to whether or not Buchalter communicated. There is no way we know. You cannot presume that he did and you cannot presume that he did not, but I 11969 will say that the argument of one of the counsel for the defense in attacking the time tables as told by Bernstein as inconsistent with Rubin's testimony and Berger's testimony, is predicated upon an assumption on his part that there was no communication by Buchalter until after Rubin returned and gave word that Weinstein could not do anything. I charge you this—and I think this is accurate and will hold and will not be error—that there is no such presumption, and you are not justified in so presuming. If there is no such presumption, of course, then the argument attacking the time table fails. I am not 11970 afraid of that charge. There is an exception to all of the defendants on this modification.

My attention has been called to the use of the words "implied admission of guilt as inferable from Buchalter's alleged procurement of Rubin's flight." The law is so finely cut on the point of inference of guilt from flight, or evidence, I should say, of guilt from flight, that I think these two words are unsafe, and I withdraw them: I withdraw "implied admission," and leave to you the rest of the charge in connection with spoliation of evidence which I read from opinions in the United States Supreme Court and in the Court of Appeals of the State of New York. We will let it go at that. I do not think I have to review it. I think you remember what I read in that respect.

On Weiss, my attention is called to the fact I used the word "dare" in connection with "I would not dare to state to you the reason the Court had for housing witnesses in hotels." The word "dare" was not intended to mean that I was afraid, or that there was anything about it of such an appalling nature that you should 11972 feel it was something that would make you shudder if it was revealed. The word "dare" means that, under the rules of evidence, if I dared to tell you that, I believe it would be regarded or might be regarded by an appellate tribunal, in the contingent event of this case having to come up for review, as reversible error. To avoid that, I withdraw the word "dare."

In reference to Capone, in discussing his connection with the plan or scheme apparently started for the purpose of attempting a second assassination of Rubin, I used the words or expression, "the Rubin shooting." That would 11973 appear to make my remarks refer to Capone having a connection with the shooting of Rubin through the head. Capone's connection, according to the record, if true, applies only to what happened several months later, that is, sometime after he had been shot and came out, when it is alleged that Magoon went on the job, as you recall, with a view to making another attempt that would be more successful. That is what that referred to, and I trust that this straightens the record out.

Is that satisfactory, Counsel?

Mr. Talley: I have no comment to make, sir. I stand on my exceptions.

The Court: Gentlemen, the law requires that when the case is submitted for decision and the jurors go out to deliberate, the Court shall discharge the alternate jurors, so the alternate jurors have a "Good night" from the Court with thanks for their generous service.

(The alternates withdrew from the jury box.)

The Court: How about the exhibits. The exhibits cannot go to the jury room unless both sides agree.

11975

Mr. Turkus: So stipulated.

Mr. Talley: We have no objection as far as the defendant Weiss is concerned to the exhibits being sent for by the jury as the jury require. If they want any of them or want any of the record read—

Mr. Climenko: If they want them, of course, we will be glad to have them have them.

The Court: The reason for that ruling is sometimes they do not come back and sometimes they are mutilated. I have even known them to be torn up for ballot slips. Exhibits are sacred, and if they are brought to the jury room they must be accounted for with accuracy.

11976

Mr. Talley: Is it our understanding that the clerk retains possession of them and will send them in if requested?

The Court: Is it agreeable to all counsel?

Defendants' Counsel: Yes.

The Court: (to the jury) You may retire, gentlemen.

(At 10:15 p. m. the jury retired to deliberate.)

11977

Mr. Climenko: I would like to say for the record that we stand on our prior exceptions.

The Court: Of course you do.

Mr. Climenko: And I do want to note an exception to your Honor's additional reference to an appellate tribunal.

The Court: The defendants are remanded.

11978

(At 2:40 a. m. the jury returned to the courtroom and, through their foreman, rendered the following verdict:)

"We find the defendant Buchalter guilty, the defendant Weiss guilty, and the defendant Capone guilty."

The Court: Of what?

The Foreman: Of murder in the first degree in each case.

Mr. Barshay: With your Honor's permission, may we poll the jury?

The Court: Yes.

11979

(The Clerk asked each juror if that was his verdict, and each juror answered affirmatively.)

Mr. Barshay: May we reserve motions, your Honor, until the day of sentence?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Barshay: On behalf of all defendants.

The Court: I think you had better make your motions now.

Mr. Talley: This is Sunday morning.

The Court: Yes, you are right. I am glad you called my attention to it. It would not be legal.

11980 Motion on Behalf of Defendant Buchalter to Set Aside Verdict

(The pedigree of each defendant was taken by the Clerk.)

Mr. Rosenthal: I do not think your Honor is permitted to take pedigrees.

The Court: Well, if not permitted, we will take them over again later on.

Sentence on Tuesday, December 2, 1941.

Defendants remanded.

11981 ———

Brooklyn, N. Y., December 2, 1941.

(Defendants arraigned for sentence.)

(Louis Buchalter arraigned.)

Mr. Barshay: In behalf of the defendant Buchalter I move to set aside the verdict on the ground that it is contrary to law, contrary to the evidence, cont ary to the weight of evidence, and on all the grounds set forth in Section 465 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On the further 11982 ground that the Court erred in the rejection and admission of testimony during the trial. Upon the further ground that the Court erred in its charge. Upon all the exceptions taken during the trial. On the further ground that this Court did not duly acquire jurisdiction of the defendant Buchalter.

The Court: Motion denied.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

The Clerk: Louis Buchalter, have you any legal cause to show why the judgment of the Court should not be pronounced against you? If so, say it now, and address yourself to the Court.

Motion on Behalf of Defendant Weiss to Set Aside Verdict 11983

Mr. Barshay: Nothing to say.

The Court: Louis Buchalter, you are hereby sentenced to the punishment of death, and that within ten days from this date, subject to any legal impediments that may be in the way, naturally, the Sheriff of the County of Kings shall deliver you, together with a warrant of this court, to the agent and warden of the Sing Sing State Prison at Ossining, New York, where you shall be kept in solitary confinement until the week 11984 beginning with Sunday, January 4, 1942; that upon some day within the week so appointed, the agent and warden of the said Sing Sing State Prison as Ossining shall do execution upon you in the mode and manner prescribed by law.

(Emanuel Weiss arraigned for sentence.)

Mr. Talley: With respect to the defendant Weiss, I move to set aside the verdict on the ground it is against the law, contrary to the 11985 evidence, contrary to the weight of evidence, on all the exceptions taken by counsel during the course of the trial, and on the ground that the Court erred in the admission of testimony, to which objection was duly taken, and in the rejection of other evidence which was duly objected to in the course of the trial. On the further ground that the Court erred in its charge to the jury; that it charged them erroneously in matters of law and erroneously in matters of fact. I move that the verdict be set aside.

The Court: Motion denied.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

11986 Motion on Behalf of Defendant Capone to Set Aside Verdict

The Clerk: Emanuel Weiss, have you any legal cause to show why the judgment of the Court should not be pronounced against you? If so, say it now, and address yourself to the Court.

Emanuel Weiss: All I can say is, I am innocent—that is all I can say.

The Court: Emanuel Weiss, you are hereby sentenced to the punishment of death, and that within ten days from this date the Sheriff of the 11987 County of Kings shall deliver you, Emanuel Weiss, together with a warrant of this court, to the agent and warden of Sing Sing State Prison at Ossining, New York, where you shall be kept in solitary confinement until the week beginning with Sunday, January 4, 1942, and that upon some day in the week so appointed, the agent and warden of said Sing Sing State Prison at Ossining shall do execution upon you, the said Emanuel Weiss, in the mode and manner prescribed by law.

11988 The Court: Now as to Louis Capone.

Mr. Rosenberg: As to the defendant Louis Capone, I hereby move to set aside the verdict and for a new trial on the grounds set forth in Section 465 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. More particularly on the ground that the verdict is contrary to law and clearly against all of the evidence. I further move to set aside the verdict on all the exceptions taken throughout the trial and on the refusal to grant the defendant Louis Capone a severance of trial. On the rulings made with respect to the examination and excuse of talesmen and jurors, and to the denials of motions made at the close of The People's case and the defendants' case, on the ground that the evidence fails to warrant the submission of the case to the jury as a matter of law. On the inflammatory and prejudicial summation of the District Attorney, which was not based upon or borne out by the evidence. Upon the statements made by the Court throughout the trial and upon the exceptions taken to the charge of the Court and to the Court's refusal to charge the requests made.

11990

The Court: Motion denied.

Mr. Rosenberg: Exception.

(Louis Capone arraigned before the bar.)

The Clerk: Louis Capone, have you any legal cause to show why the judgment of the Court should not be pronounced against you? If so, say it now, and address yourself to the Court.

Mr. Rosenberg: Nothing to say.

The Court: Louis Capone, you are hereby sentenced to the punishment of death; that within ten days from this date the Sheriff of the County of Kings shall deliver you, Louis Capone, together with a warrant of this Court, to the agent and warden of Sing Sing State Prison at Ossining, New York, where you shall be kept in solitary confinement until the week beginning with Sunday, January 4, 1942, and that upon some day within the week so appointed, the agent and warden of the said Sing Sing State Prison at Ossining, New York, shall do execution upon you, Louis Capone, in the mode and manner prescribed by law.

Defendants' Exhibit 4

THIS AGREEMENT, made this 28th day of October, in the year of Our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred and thirty-one; BETWEEN MORRIS BLUESTEIN and NATHAN SOBLER, of the City of Passaic, County of Passaic and State of New Jersey, parties of the first part, AND MARTIN F. KELLY INC., a corp. of N. J. and JOSEPH ROSEN 11994 of the City of , County of and State of , parties of the second part,

WITNESSETH: That for and in consideration of the sum of One Dollar and other good and valuable considerations, each to the other in hand paid, receipt hereof is hereby acknowledged, the parties hereto agree as follows:

That whereas, the parties of the first part are all the holders of all the shares of stock of the New York and New Jersey Clothing Transportation Company Inc.,

Defendants' Exhibit 4

11995

That whereas, the parties of the first part are also the owners of four certain trucks which were used in the trucking business of the said New York and New Jersey Clothing Transportation Company Inc., which said trucks are known as follows;

Model #621—3 ton white truck; Model #61—2 ton white truck; Model #60—1½ ton white truck; Model #51—2½ ton white truck

11996

That whereas, there is still due on the said trucks certain notes which are payable monthly, and the said New York and New Jersey Clothing Transportation Company Inc., also have a certain amount of good will in their said trucking business.

That whereas, the parties of the first part are desirous of combining with the parties of the second part in the said trucking business under the name of NEW YORK and NEW JERSEY CLOTHING TRANSPORTATION COMPANY INC.

That whereas, the parties of the second part are also the owners of five trucks which have been used in the conduct of their trucking business, which said five trucks are as follows:

One—2 ton Brockway Truck; Two—2½ ton Garford Trucks; One—2 ton Auto Car; One—1 ton ford truck.

11998 Defendants' Exhibit 4

That whereas, there are still certain unpaid monthly notes due on some of the trucks hereinabove mentioned.

That whereas, Martin F. Kelly, Inc., has also the authority and use of a certain garage in the rear of premises known as #9 Catherine Street, Elizabeth, New Jersey, which he has used in the conduct of his said trucking business.

That whereas, the parties of the second part are desirous of joining in with the parties of 11999 the first part in the operation of the business heretofore conducted by the New York and New Jersey Clothing Transportation Company Inc.

Now, Therefore, in consideration of the mutual promises and agreements herein contained, the parties hereto agree to the following:

1. That the parties of the first part will surrender to the New York and New Jersey Clothing Transportation Company Inc., all its shares of stock and on November 2nd, 1931, reorganize the said corporation, so that new shares of stock
12000 will be issued to the following: Martin F. Kelly —50 shares; Joseph Rosen—50 shares; Nathan Sobler—50 shares; Morris Bluestein—50 shares, and these 200 shares will constitute all the outstanding shares of said corporation.

2. That the said corporation shall do business with $20,000.00 actual paid in, being the aggregate value of the combined assets of all the parties hereto.

3. That a meeting of the parties hereto will be held at the offices of Henry H. Eisenberg,

Defendants' Exhibit 4

#60 Broad Street, Elizabeth, N. J. on the 2nd day of November, 1931, at which time the by-laws governing the conducting of the said corporation business will be prepared and adopted and the election of officers will take place. It is herein mutually agreed that the officers of the corporation will be as follows:

Martin F. Kelly—President,
Joseph Rosen—Vice-President,
Nathan Sobler—Secretary,
Morris Bluestein—Treasurer.

4. That the corporation will do business with the BANK OF AMERICA, at its Broadway and 3rd Street Branch, and that the President, Martin F. Kelly and Secretary Nathan Sobler, shall be the only authorized signatures on the checks or other instruments in writing to be issued by the corporation, and that at the meeting of November 2nd, proper resolutions to that effect will be prepared.

5. That the corporation will hold monthly meetings on the second Saturday of each and every month and that dividends by the said corporation will be declared quarter annually.

6. The corporation shall also make contracts of hire with the parties hereto, which said contracts will be in full force and effect as long as the respective parties to said contracts shall retain control or ownership of their shares of stock in said corporation, said contracts will provide for payment of $75.00 weekly salary to each of the parties hereto and said contracts will contain a restrictive covenant, which will prevent the respective parties to the contract from directly or indirectly canvassing from the customers of the said New York and New Jersey Clothing Transportation Company Inc., should the parties of the respective contract quit their job or sell out their interest in the said corporation, for a period of five years, from date of quitting their job or disposing of their shares of stock.

12005

7. That the corporation shall not go into any enterprise or any undertaking whatsoever without a vote of all the shareholders as it is the intentions of the parties hereto that all the shareholders of the corporation must consent to any undertaking of the corporation involving the expenditure of any monies.

larger than that third parties bid, and should the corporation fail or refuse to make said purchase after the offer is made, then the shareholder shall have the privilege of selling to that third party and said third party will step into the shoes of the retired shareholder with the same rights and privileges as said retiring shareholder had in the corporation.

9. That the by-laws will also provide that should one of the parties hereto decease, then 12008 the widow of that party shall receive the salary of her husband out of which salary the widow is to pay for the services of a man who will substitute for and do the work of her husband in said corporation, providing such salary does not exceed the sum of $40.00 per week, on condition, however, that should one of the parties hereto prepare a will and designate some other person than his wife to receive that benefit, that person so designated will receive that benefit in accordance with the wishes of the deceased shareholder.

10. That the parties of the first part will lease without any expense to the corporation their four white trucks hereinabove enumerated until the 15th day of December, at which time a bill of sale will be issued by the parties of the first part direct to the corporation, for the said trucks.

11. That the parties of the first part will cause all unpaid notes on the trucks up to November to be paid so that the corporation will only assume the balance of the notes due on the trucks on or after November 2nd.

12. That the parties of the second part will lease without any expense to the corporation their five trucks hereinabove enumerated until the 15th day of December, at which time a bill of sale will be issued by the parties of the second part direct to the corporation for the said trucks.

12011 13. That Martin F. Kelly will give a lease to the corporation on his said garage for a period of one year at a rental of $50.00 per month, which said lease will contain a privilege in favor of the corporation for the renewal of the said lease for an additional period of one year at the same rental of $50.00 per month, said lease to commence on November 1, 1931.

14. That the parties of the second part will pay or cause to be paid all notes that may be due on their trucks prior to November 2nd, 1931, and the corporation will take over the obligations
12012 of the parties of the second part on said trucks, falling due on and after November 2nd, 1931.

15. That whereas, the parties hereto agree that after an adjustment of all equity of the respective interests of the parties of the first part and the parties of the second part, there is a balance in favor of the parties of the first part in the sum of One thousand Dollars which the parties of the second part agree to pay as follows: On May 1, 1932 $500.00 and on November 2nd, 1932, balance of $500.00.

16. The parties of the first part represent that the balance due on the trucks which were used in the conduct of the business of the New York and New Jersey Clothing Transportation Company Inc., is not in excess of $7000.00 and should there be an excess of that amount they as individuals agree to pay the same.

17. The respective parties to this agreement hereby agree that the obligations of this corporation that are to be assumed by the respective parties shall be only those pertaining to the unpaid balance due on trucks and for work done on the bodies of the said trucks, all other obligations, such as gas, oil, wages, garage rent, tires and etc., shall be paid by the respective parties hereto and not charged upon the corporation, and the parties of the first part represent, that the New York and New Jersey Clothing Transportation Company Inc., are not indebted in any amount whatsoever, except for balance due on the trucks and for balance that may be due for body work on the trucks.

THE FIFTH AVENUE BUILDING COMPANY

GENERAL MANAGER

4016

Landlord and Tenant

This Agreement, made this twenty-ninth - day of January - - - - - - -One thousand nine hundred and thirty-six - - -between THE FIFTH AVENUE BUILDING COMPANY, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, hereinafter referred to as the Landlord, and RALEIGH MANUFACTURERS INC. - a New York - - - - - - corporation hereinafter referred to as the Tenant.

Witnesseth, that the Landlord hereby lets and rents unto the Tenant, and the Tenant hereby hires and takes from the Landlord the room numbered 1011 - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

Default

1. The Tenant shall pay to the Landlord, or to its agents, the said specified rent, at the times and in the manner above provided, and in case of the non-payment of the said rent at the times and place above stated, or in case the said leased premises shall be deserted or vacated, this lease, at the option of the Landlord, shall become void, or, if the Landlord so elect, the Landlord shall have the right to enter the premises as the agent of the Tenant, either by force or otherwise, without being liable to any prosecution for entry, and to re-let the said premises as the agent of the Tenant, and to receive the rent therefor, and to apply the same to the payment of the rent due by this lease, holding the Tenant liable for any deficiency, and in case suit is brought to recover any rent due and in default, the Tenant agrees to pay, in addition to any statutory costs, an attorney's fee of ten per cent on the amount of rent in arrear.

Assignment or Sub-Letting

2. The Tenant shall not assign this lease nor let nor underlet the said premises, or any portion thereof, nor use nor occupy the same, nor permit the same to be used or occupied, for any other purpose than as above mentioned, without the written consent of the Landlord or its legal representatives first endorsed hereon, for each and every assignment, letting, underletting, or use; and if so assigned, let or underlet, used, or permitted to be used, without such written consent, the Landlord may re-enter said premises either by force or otherwise, without being liable to prosecution or any claim for entry, and re-let the said premises, this lease by such unauthorized act becoming void if the Landlord shall so elect and determine.

Fixtures

3. The Tenant shall take good care of the demised premises and fixtures, and make good any injury or breakage done by the Tenant, or any agent, clerk, servant or visitor of the Tenant, and all damages caused by the overflow or escape of water, steam or gas resulting from the negligence of the Tenant or any agent, clerk, servant or visitor of the Tenant, and at the expiration or other termination of the term, shall surrender the said premises and fixtures in as good condition as reasonable use thereof will permit; and the Tenant shall remove all its property from the premises, and leave them clean and free from rubbish and waste material. And the Tenant shall not make any alterations, additions or improvements to said premises without the written consent of the Landlord. All alterations, additions or improvements which may be made upon the demised premises, except movable office furniture and trade fixtures, put in at the expense of the Tenant, shall be the property of the Landlord and shall remain upon and be surrendered with the premises, as part thereof, at the termination of this lease, without disturbance, molestation, or injury.

Fire

4. The Tenant shall, in case of fire, give immediate notice thereof to the Landlord, and in case said premises hereby leased, or the building of which the same are a part, shall be partly damaged by fire or other element, without the fault or neglect of the Tenant or any agent, clerk, servant or visitor of the Tenant, the injury shall be repaired as speedily as possible at the expense of the Landlord. In case the damage shall be so extensive as to render the said premises wholly unfit for occupancy, the rent shall cease until such time as the premises hereby leased and the means of access to them shall be put in repair. In case of the total destruction, by fire or otherwise, of the said building containing said premises hereby leased, the rent shall be paid to the time of such destruction, and at that time this lease shall cease, provided, however, that such damage or destruction be not caused by the carelessness, negligence or improper conduct of said Tenant, or any agent, clerk, servant or visitor of the Tenant. The Landlord shall not be liable for any damage by reason of inconvenience, annoyance or injury to business of the Tenant arising from the necessity of making any alteration, reconstruction or repairs of any portion of the building, however the necessity may arise.

Damage

5. The Landlord shall not be liable for any damage to any property or person at any time in said premises or building from steam, gas or electricity, or from Croton or other water, rain or snow, which may leak into, issue or flow from any part of said building, of which the premises hereby leased are a part, or from the pipes, or plumbing works of the same, or from any other place or quarter. The Tenant shall give to the Landlord, or to its agent, prompt written notice of any accident to or defects in the water pipes, gas pipes, steam pipes, electric light or other fixtures or heating apparatus, and repairs thereto shall be made by the Landlord with due diligence, provided the necessity for such repairs shall not have been occasioned by the negligence of the Tenant, or any agent, clerk, servant or visitor of the Tenant.

Inspection of Premises

6. The Landlord and its agents and servants shall have the right to enter the leased premises at reasonable hours of the day to examine the same, or to make such alterations, repairs or redecoration as it may deem necessary without any liability to the Tenant by reason of the entry; and, during the three months next preceding the time of the expiration of this lease, shall have the right to exhibit said premises to applicants to hire, and to put on said premises the usual notice "To let" which notice shall not be removed by the Tenant, or by any officer, agent, clerk or servant of the Tenant, during said period; and in the event that the Tenant shall vacate the premises before the expiration of the term, the Landlord may, without constituting an eviction or releasing the Tenant from liability for rent, make such alterations in the premises as shall be required to prepare the same for a new tenant, or such as shall in the judgment of the Landlord render the premises more readily rentable.

Repairs

7. The Landlord covenants to keep such portions of said building as it may be necessary for the Tenant to use in the enjoyment of the demised premises, in good order and substantial repair, so far as the use of said building by the Tenant is concerned, but no liability of the Landlord to the Tenant shall accrue under this covenant unless or until the Tenant has given notice in writing to the Landlord, or its agent, of the specific repairs required to be made.

Rules and Regulations

8. The rules and regulations in regard to the said building, printed at the end of this lease, shall be taken and considered as a part of this instrument, and as such shall, during the said term, be in all respects observed and performed by the Tenant, and by the clerks, servants, agents and visitors of the Tenant. If for any reason the Tenant, by consent of the Landlord, shall temporarily occupy premises in said building other than the premises described in this lease, all the terms and conditions of said lease, including the rules and regulations forming part of same, shall be applicable to the Tenant's occupation of such temporary premises.

Additions

9. The Landlord shall have the right to build any additions to the Fifth Avenue Building and to erect any additional building or buildings upon any neighboring premises, and to erect and maintain such scaffolding or other temporary structures as may be necessary or convenient in connection with such building operations, without any liability to the Tenant therefor.

Defaults and remedies

10. The Tenant further agrees that all the covenants herein contained to be kept on the part of the Tenant shall be deemed conditions as well as covenants, and that, if default be made in the performance or observance of any of such covenants and conditions, this lease shall thereupon become null and void, if the Landlord so elect, and the Landlord shall have the right to re-enter the demised premises, either by force or otherwise, and dispossess and remove therefrom the Tenant and other occupants thereof and their property and effects, and to hold said premises as if this lease had not been made, without any liability either at law or in equity for any consequent damages; and the Tenant hereby expressly waives the service of notice of intention to re-enter or to institute any legal proceedings to that end. No right of redemption shall be exercised under any present or future law in case the Tenant shall be dispossessed for any cause, or if the Landlord shall in any other manner obtain possession of the premises in consequence of the violation of any covenant of the Tenant herein contained. The Landlord may restrain any threatened breach of the covenant to observe the conditions of this lease or of any other covenant herein contained, but the mention herein of any particular remedy shall not preclude the Landlord from any other remedy it might have either in law or equity; nor shall any consent or acquiescence, which may be equivalent to a waiver of redress for one violation of any covenant or condition, prevent a similar subsequent act from having all the force and effect of an original violation.

Re-entry

11. Whenever the right to re-enter is mentioned in this lease, it shall be deemed to include the right to enter and remove the Tenant, and those claiming under the Tenant, by means of summary proceedings, as prescribed in the Civil Practice Act, and the Landlord shall have the right to invoke any other remedy provided by law, in case of breach of any of the covenants of this lease by the Tenant, as if express consent to re-enter and to take summary proceedings were not given.

Special provisions

12. No shelving shall be erected in such a fashion as to obstruct the corridor lights. No mark, sign or device of any kind shall be placed on the window shades, nor shall any sign or advertisement be placed or exhibited so as to be visible through the windows. The door into the corridor shall not be left standing open. The Tenant agrees that at the request of the Landlord it will desist or refrain from any use of the name of the Fifth Avenue Building in advertising or otherwise which the Landlord may deem objectionable.

13. No stock of goods on sale shall be carried, and shipping shall be limited to samples in and out.

14. No reduction in rent shall be allowed on account of delay in completion of alterations or other construction work requested by the Tenant.

15. Interest at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum shall be charged against the Tenant on all sums of rent remaining unpaid for more than five (5) days, such interest to commence on the day such rent is due and payable, and the Tenant hereby agrees to pay said interest as additional rent for said premises.

16. In the event that the leasehold interest of the Tenant herein be levied on under execution, or if proceedings be begun in any court of competent jurisdiction to declare the Tenant bankrupt, or if an assignment for the benefit of creditors be made by the Tenant, or if a Receiver be appointed for the Tenant, then and in that case the Landlord may, at its option at any time thereafter, upon notice in writing addressed to the Tenant at said premises, terminate this lease.

17. Charges for electric current, and other service charges that may be called for by this lease, shall be deemed in addition to and collectible in like manner as rent for said premises.

18. The provisions hereof shall bind and benefit respectively the parties hereto, their executors, administrators, successors and assigns.

19. If proceedings be begun in any court of competent jurisdiction for the reorganization of the Tenant under any law, the Landlord may at its option at any time thereafter, upon notice in writing addressed to the Tenant at said premises, terminate this lease.

20. It is understood and agreed that upon the execution and delivery of this lease, the lease heretofore made to the tenant of room No. 911 in the Fifth Avenue Building, dated December 10th, 1935 is hereby terminated, and the sublease made by the tenant of said room No. 911 from Murray Knitwear Company, Inc., is terminated as of February 1st, 1936.

In Witness Whereof, The Fifth Avenue Building Company has caused its corporate seal to be hereunto affixed and this instrument to be signed by its proper officer, and the said Tenant has executed this instrument, the day and year first above written.

RULES AND REGULATIONS FORMING PART OF LEASE.

1. Except as specifically permitted, tenants are not allowed to occupy, or permit to be occupied, any portion of their premises as an office for a public stenographer or typewriter, or for the sale of liquors, tobacco or cigars, or as a barber-shop or manicure-shop or as an employment-bureau. Tenants shall not allow laborers on the demised premises, except those actually working on said premises for the tenant; nor engage nor pay help, except office help, on said premises; nor advertise for help giving an address in the building. No auction sale shall be conducted on the premises.

2. The sidewalk, stoops, areas, entry, vestibules, passages, corridors, halls, elevators and stairways shall not be encumbered nor obstructed by any of the tenants, their agents, clerks, servants or visitors, or be used by them for any other purpose than for ingress and egress to and from their respective premises.

3. All injuries to the building or fixtures caused by moving the property of the tenant in and out of the building shall be repaired by the tenant.

4. The doors, skylights, and windows that reflect or admit light into passageways or into any place in said building shall not be covered or obstructed by any tenant.

5. The water-closets, wash-closets, urinals and other water apparatus shall not be used for any purposes other than those for which they were constructed, and no sweepings, rubbish, rags, ashes, chemicals, refuse from electric batteries, or other substances shall be thrown therein. The expense of repairing any damage resulting from a violation of this rule shall be borne by the tenant by whom, or by whose agents, clerks, servants or visitors, the damage shall have been caused.

6. No tenant shall mark, paint, drill into, drive nails into, or in any way mutilate or deface, any walls, ceilings, partitions, floors, wood, stone or iron work of the building. Workmen employed or designated by the Landlord must be employed by the tenants for repairs and other similar work that may be done on any part of the building.

7. No sign, advertisement or notice shall be inscribed, painted or affixed on any of the windows or doors or on any other part of the outside or the inside of the said building, without the prior consent in writing of the Landlord or its agents. Directories will be at the expense of the Landlord. The Landlord will name painters who must be employed for all sign painting and other painting, at the expense of the tenant.

8. No tenant shall do anything or permit anything to be done, in said premises, or bring or keep anything therein, which will in any way increase the rate of fire insurance on said building, or on property kept therein, or obstruct or interfere with the rights of other tenants, or in any way injure or annoy them, or those having business with them, or conflict with the laws relating to fires, or with the regulations of the fire department, or of any fire or casualty insurance company, as regards said building or any part thereof, or in respect to any elevator or apparatus therein, or conflict with any of the rules and ordinances of the City of New York, or of the Board of Health, or of any of the departments of said city, or with any laws of the State of New York.

9. The Landlord shall in all cases have and retain the power to prescribe the weight and proper position of all safes, and they shall in all cases stand on plank strips, two inches thick, to distribute the weight; and all damages done to the building by taking in or putting out any safe, or other freight, or during the time it is in or on the premises, shall be repaired at the expense of the tenant.

The moving of safes shall occur at such times as the Landlord shall designate upon previous notice to the Chief Engineer; and the persons employed to move the safes in and out of the building must be acceptable to the Landlord. No freight, furniture, or bulky matter of any description will be received into the building, or carried up or down, except during hours designated by the Landlord.

Tenants shall not, on the first three floors of the building, place a load to exceed 150 pounds per square foot, nor, on any other floor, a load to exceed 75 pounds per square foot, evenly distributed.

10. Each tenant must, upon the termination of the tenancy, restore to the Landlord all the keys of offices, rooms and toilet-rooms which shall have been furnished the tenant or which the tenant shall have had made, and in the event of loss of any keys so furnished, shall pay the Landlord therefor. Tenants shall not obtain or use any keys for any doors in the building except the keys which are provided by the Landlord.

11. The tenant shall keep the premises occupied by him in a proper condition of cleanliness, and no tenant shall permit any person or persons other than persons employed by the janitor of the Landlord to clean or take charge of such premises; but it is understood and agreed that the Landlord shall be in nowise responsible to any tenant for any loss of property from the leased premises, however occurring, or for any damage done to the furniture or other effects of any tenant by the janitor or any of his employees, or others.

12. The passenger elevators shall be run during the ordinary business hours of the day, from 8 A. M. to 6:30 P. M., except on legal holidays, Sundays and at night, when one elevator will be subject to call as the convenience of the tenants may require.

The Landlord shall use due diligence in operating the elevators and furnishing heat and light, but shall not be responsible for interrupted elevator service, or interrupted heat or light supply, nor for any accident in the operation of the elevators, or heating or lighting apparatus, from any cause whatsoever.

13. Tenants, their agents, clerks, servants or visitors, shall not make or cause any improper noises in the building, or interfere in any way with other tenants or those having business with them, and the Landlord may exclude from the building any tenant or any employee of, or visitor to a tenant, who is intoxicated or disorderly, so as to be obnoxious to other tenants.

14. Nothing shall be swept or thrown by the tenants or by their agents, clerks, servants or visitors, out of the windows or doors into the corridors, halls, stairways, elevators or light-shafts, or upon the skylights of the building, or into or upon any heating or ventilating registers, or plumbing apparatus in said building, or upon the street. Nor shall carpets, rugs or other articles be hung or shaken out of any window of said building.

15. No animals or birds shall be kept in or about the premises.

16. Tenants shall not be permitted to use or keep in the said building any kerosene, camphene, burning fluid, or other illuminating material, except candles. No cooking is permitted.

17. All awnings and their fixtures are to be supplied by the tenants at their own expense, but of the quality, design and color which shall first be approved by the Landlord. Such awnings and fixtures may be obtained by the tenants of the Landlord, at cost price thereof, if the tenants so desire. Tenants shall not obtain any towel supply service or ice service except from persons designated by the Landlord, nor obtain drinking water for delivery on the premises from any source not approved by the Landlord.

18. Telegraph, telephone and other wires and instruments shall not be introduced by the tenant without previous notice to the Landlord and with its approval. The electric current shall not be used for power, unless written permission for such use shall first have been obtained from the Landlord.

19. In case it shall become necessary or proper at any time, by reason of accident, or for the purpose of improving the condition or operation of any elevator, heating or lighting apparatus, boiler or machinery, or any appurtenance thereof, to suspend the operation of the same until all necessary repairs or improvements thereto shall have been made and completed, the Landlord shall be at liberty to do so without in any manner or respect affecting or modifying the obligations or covenants of the Tenant herein contained, but, in such case the Landlord shall use due expedition and diligence to make and complete the repairs, improvements or reconstructions.

20. The rent of any space above the first floor shall include janitor's services, and heat from October 10th to May 1st each year, and shall also include, unless otherwise provided in the lease, electric light not to exceed one ordinary sixteen candle power incandescent lamp or its equivalent, for each five hundred cubic feet of space occupied. The janitor's services shall include the general care and cleaning of the offices, halls and toilet rooms.

21. The rent of any space on the first floor shall include heat from October 10th to May 1st each year. The Landlord does not furnish as part of the lease, electric light for any such space, but will provide such light upon terms to be agreed upon with the tenant.

22. During Sundays and holidays, and on other days outside of ordinary business hours, the supply of heat shall only be to such extent as shall, in the judgment of the Landlord, be sufficient to prevent damage to the building. Should a supply of heat to a further extent than as above provided be required by a tenant at any time outside of ordinary business hours, or on Sundays or holidays, the Landlord will, if practicable, furnish the same, at a charge based upon the additional expense involved.

23. Tenants should see that all lights are out and all windows and transoms closed, and that all corridor doors are closed and locked, when leaving their offices each evening.

24. The Landlord shall not be responsible to any tenant for the non-observance or violation of these rules and regulations by any other tenant.

25. The Landlord reserves the right to rescind any of these rules and regulations and to make such other and further rules and regulations, as in its judgment may from time to time be needful for the safety, care and cleanliness of the premises, and for the preservation of good order therein, except that the Landlord shall at all times furnish such light, heat and elevator and janitor service as is hereinbefore provided for, subject to the right to make necessary repairs and improvements as herein provided.

[fol. 4030] PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Respondent, v.

LOUIS BUCHALTER, EMANUEL WEISS and LOUIS CAPONE, Appellants

(Decided October 30, 1942)

APPEALS from judgments of the Kings County Court (HAYLOR, J.) rendered December 2, 1941, upon verdicts convicting each of the defendants of the crime of murder in the first degree.

I. Maurice Wormser and Jesse Climenko, for appellant Louis Buchalter.

Alfred J. Talley, James I. Cuff, M. M. Kreindler, Harry G. Anderson and Samuel Bader for Emanuel Weiss, appellant.

Sydney Rosenthal, Benjamin J. Jacobson, Leon Fischbein and Emanuel Rosenberg for Louis Capone, appellant.

Thomas Craddock Hughes, Acting District Attorney (Solomon A. Klein, Burton B. Turkus, Henry J. Walsh and Edward H. Levine of counsel), for respondent.

CONWAY, J.:

The defendants were indicted with three others for the crime of murder in the first degree. They were represented by able counsel during a trial which lasted about eleven weeks. The record of the trial consists of more than four thousand pages in addition to the twenty-seven hundred pages containing the examination of talesmen.

The questions of law presented by defendants' counsel may best be examined against the background of the facts as found by the jury and the facts are therefore set forth with reasonable fullness as a preface.

The deceased Joseph Rosen was present in his small candy store on Sutter avenue in Brooklyn on Sunday morning September 13, 1936. An automobile was driven up to the door of his store. The occupants riddled the body of Rosen with bullets. There were ten wounds of entrance. One Stamler, a tailor, at the sound of the shooting, looked through his window across the street, saw the automobile pull away and took the license number. A few minutes later an automobile turned the corner of Livonia and Van Sinderen avenues so quickly that the brakes or tires screeched somewhat and attracted the attention of Merlis who had a newspaper stand there. The automobile came to a stop about forty feet from the corner and four men emerged. They walked toward the newspaper stand and up over the trestle which crossed the L. I. R. R. track at that point and which led down into Junius street. The automobile thus abandoned,—a black two-door, Chevrolet coach,—had the license number which had been taken by Stamler.

The theory of the prosecution's case was that the defendant Weiss was one of the slayers; that the defendant Capone was one of those who had arranged for the murder, who had laid out the route to be taken by the automobile used in it and that he and others were waiting with two cars at the other side of the trestle on Junius street, to assist in the escape of the slayers; that the defendant, [fol. 4031] Buchalter, referred to as Lepke by the witnesses throughout the trial, had ordered the death of Rosen through fear that he would testify against him in the so-called Dewey investigation, involving racketeering and extortion. There were three others named in the indictment: Harry Strauss, who had been executed prior to the trial (see People v. Goldstein, 285 N. Y. 376), James Ferraco, who had not been apprehended, and Philip (Farvel) Cohen as to whom a separate trial had been granted by consent.

All of the defendants were represented by experienced counsel. Lepke and Weiss were each represented by two attorneys, each of whom was permitted by the court to participate actively in the trial. It is important, for the purpose of discussing one of the law points affecting the charge of the court, and for no other purpose, to indicate and comment upon the defenses interposed by each of the three defendants on trial. The defendant Capone did not testify and called no witnesses. The defendant Weiss did not testify but called witnesses. He called his mother, his two brothers, his wife and a family friend to testify to an alibi covering the period prior to and at the time of the murder. He also called another witness to impeach the credibility of a prosecution witness, Bernstein. The defendant Lepke did not testify but called witnesses for the purpose generally of establishing that the deceased was a person of no importance financially or in the business world; that the testimony of the wife, daughter and son of the deceased as to the business venture of the deceased and its financial condition was unbelievtable, whereas the position of the defendant Lepke was so important that it was incredible that there was any reason for the defendant Lepke to order or direct Rosen's death. This was more clearly shown from the language of counsel for the defendant Lepke in his summation as follows: "I said I did not represent an angel, I meant just this: I condemn the defendant Buchalter's past life with as great vehemence as I possess. I am not in sympathy with his activities in the past—I condemn the vicious circle which contrived those people to domineer unions—the racketeers Weinstein and Katz. I condemn them with all the strength I have. It is they who prey upon innocent workmen in this city. I condemn the manufacturers and employers who did not complain to the authorities so that they could put an end to this vicious practice of preying upon labor. But they did not complain—not because they were afraid—because some of them hoped, by yielding to the racketeers of the industry, that they would gain an economic or financial advantage over their competitors. I condemn every act of the defendant Buchalter's past life.

. . . . . .

So, gentlemen do you get my point—that Buchalter, who was being looked for by Dewey as king of the flour racket and king of the crime racket—he was looked for by the Government—he had so many charges hurled against him that everybody in this universe was searching for him, that he would worry about a possible misdemeanor? I say, "Possible misdemeanor" at the hands of Rosen. What [fol. 4032] proof is there in this case by anyone that Rosen was roaming the streets of Brownsville threatening to go to Dewey? What could he tell Dewey? Nothing. Because, in telling Dewey that four years ago Buchalter drove him out of business, I take it he would also have to tell Dewey the good traits of Buchalter—that he got him a job—that he tried to get him another job—that he effectuated transfers and that he got $100 and $125 a week. What was there that Buchalter had to fear at the hands of Rosen with thousands of complaints running to Dewey in extortion totaling a half a million dollars? Would he worry about Rosen, an ordinary poor truck driver?

At least one of the witnesses called by Lepke corroborated in important details the testimony of Rubin, the principal prosecution witness (see post).

The defendant Lepke also called witnesses for the purpose of showing that conversations testified to by some of the witnesses for the prosecution could not have been held, with the accompanying anger and excitement to which testimony was given, because the office in which they were held was small and because others were present therein or in adjoining offices at the times mentioned who would have heard the conversations if they had occurred. Such were the defenses. No time limit was placed by the court upon counsel for the defendants for their summations and the presentation of those defenses.

Facts

On Max Rubin became an executive board member and one of the finance committee of Local No. 4 of the Cutters Union of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America (hereinafter called Amalgamated). Murray Weinstein was business agent and later manager of the local and executive board member of Amalgamated. As an official of the Amalgamated, Rubin came to know the defendant and was with him almost daily. He also worked for Lepke in connection with Local 138 of the Flour Truckmen's Union and the Greater New York Tailors Expressmen's Association. Later Rubin became business agent of Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers and Helpers Union, which was also affiliated with Amalgamated. In 1931 a dispute arose between two groups in Local No. 4 of Amalgamated. Lepke supported one group, which gained control. Rubin arranged a meeting between the leader of the opposing group and Lepke, and certain officials were given a year's pay and withdrew from the union. Rubin, however, was continued by Lepke as business agent of Local 240. Rubin was present at the meeting, at which it was arranged by a general organizer for Amalgamated, that one Danny Fields and Paul Berger (the "finger man" in the Rosen murder) should be the intermediaries between the Amalgamated and Lepke.

In 1932 Lepke told Rubin that the union wished a stoppage on a specific date of all the trucks which carted clothing in and out of New York city. Rubin told Lepke that he believed he could stop all the trucks except those of three concerns: Garfield Express Co., Branch Storage and New York and New Jersey Transportation Company (the com-[fol. 4033] pany of Rosen), (hereafter called N. Y. and N. J. Co.), which handled both union and non-union work. The Garfield Express, hereinafter called Garfield, owned by Louis Cooper, was located at Passaic, New Jersey, was non-union, and operated in competition with N. Y. and N. J. Co. in Passaic. N. Y. and N. J. Co. did business in New York, New Jersey and had a little business in Pennsylvania. Lepke said that the Pennsylvania business had to be abandoned. Rubin visited the N. Y. and N. J. Co. officers and then returned and advised Lepke that when he told Rosen that he would have to give up the Pennsylvania business Rosen said that that was the only thing he had in the business; that he had no money investments but that he had brought in the Pennsylvania business; that Rosen's two associates also objected.

Lepke told Rubin he wished to see Rosen and they met in the office of one Weiner, a former business associate of Lepke. Rubin, Danny Fields and one Gurrah were present. Rosen told Lepke that the Pennsylvania business was the only thing he had in the N. Y. and N. J. Co., and that if that were lost that he would lose everything. Lepke then said he wished to see Rosen's books. In response to a telephone message, they were brought by Rosen's daughter, Sylvia, who was a witness upon the trial. Lepke and Gurrah then went over the books and told Rosen what business he could not take. Rosen said he would be ruined. Rubin told him "not to hit his head against a stone wall." Lepke then promised that they would do something for him and Rosen left.

As to Louis Cooper, of Garfield, Rubin testified that when Lepke ordered him to stop his trucks, Cooper refused, saying that he had been double-crossed by the Amalgamated once and did not intend to be double-crossed again. Lepke said "you have nothing to do about worrying now, I am the Amalgamated, they will not double-cross you this time;" that then Cooper agreed to stop if Lepke would become his partner in Garfield to which the latter agreed.

The stoppage occurred and Rosen was forced out of N. Y. and N. J. Co. The Garfield Express Co. profited materially as a result. Later Rubin had a talk with Rosen in which the latter complained that everyone else had returned to work after the stoppage but that he was "on the street." When this was reported to Lepke he asked what could be done and Rubin suggested that Rosen had once worked for Louis Cooper as a foreman and they might get him back there. That Lepke arranged. About eight months to a year later Cooper discharged Rosen and refused requests both of Rubin and Lepke to take him back. Rosen was then out of work for sixteen months during which period he complained to Rubin that he was a married man with a family and that they had nothing to eat.

After the appointment of Mr. Dewey as Special Prosecutor, Rubin had a talk with Rosen. Rubin then told Lepke [fol. 4034] that they had a desperate man on their hands; that they had to get him a job; that he was doing much talking and that they were likely to get into a lot of trouble but that Rosen was willing to work for anything. Lepke then arranged to obtain another job for him.

In the spring of 1936 Rosen opened a candy store on Sutter avenue. In June of 1936 Lepke told Rubin that Rosen was going around Brownsville (in which Sutter avenue is located) "shooting off his mouth that he is going down to Dewey's office." Rubin told Lepke that he would get the members of Local 240 to patronize Rosen's candy store. Lepke said he did not care what he did so long as Rosen kept quiet. Rubin called a meeting of the executive board and arranged for the spending of money in Rosen's store.

In July of 1936 Lepke again told Rubin that Rosen was threatening, in Brownsville, that he was going to Mr. Dewey's office and was going to testify about Lepke. Rubin told Lepke that there was nothing to worry about; that Rosen must be up against it. Thereafter, Sylvia Rosen Greenspan asked Rubin to visit her father. Rubin told Lepke that he thought it was a good opportunity to straighten Rosen out; Lepke told him to take two hundred dollars to Rosen and to tell him to stay out of town until he was told to return. Rubin gave Rosen the two hundred dollars and the latter said he would go to his son's place at Reading, Pennsylvania.

The next time Lepke spoke to Rubin about Rosen was on Friday, September 11, 1936. Lepke complained that Rosen had stayed at Reading, Pennsylvania, only for a few days and had double-crossed them. He said that Rosen was going around Brownsville threatening to go down to Mr. Dewey. Lepke said: "Well he is not going down to Dewey or any other place. He and nobody else are going down any place or do any more talking or any talking at all." Rubin begged Lepke not to be rash, to remember that he (Rubin) had visited Rosen's store in July and to permit him to handle it, saying that he would go over to see Murray Weinstein. Lepke said he did not care where Rubin went but to straighten Rosen out. Rubin rushed over to Weinstein and asked him to do something about Rosen but Weinstein said he could not do anything. Rubin returned and told that to Lepke. Lepke then directed Rubin to get Paul Berger and send him to him right away. Rubin found Berger and told him that Lepke wanted him. Rubin then left to attend a ball game of the union at Vineland, New Jersey, and stayed at Atlantic City until Sunday noon.

Within forty-eight hours after Lepke sent for Berger, Rosen was murdered.

Rubin read about the murder on the Monday morning after its commission. He talked with Lepke about it, pointing out that he had visited Rosen in July and was therefore worried. Lepke reassured him telling him that he had nothing to worry about so far as Brooklyn was concerned since Brooklyn was all right. In September, Rubin called Lepke's attention to an article in a New York news-[fol. 4035] paper, stressing the fact that it did everything but mention Rubin's name and that in effect it made him a principal in the murder. Again Lepke told him that he had nothing to worry about because the police were looking for Farvel Cohen (the defendant Philip Cohen, named in the indictment), Shimmy Salles and the defendant Weiss and that, when he was ready, he would send in the first two mentioned for identification purposes, but would not send in Weiss.

In early October, Lepke told Rubin that an Assistant District Attorney named McCarthy "was going around saying that he is going to make one of the best pinches he has ever made; he is going to collar Lepke and Gurrah for the Rosen murder." He told Rubin to leave town as things were "very hot in Brooklyn;" to go to Glens Falls and to stay with Danny Fields who was hiding there; to take Paul Berger around and to introduce him to the business concerns from whom he was collecting. Rubin returned after a week and saw Lepke at a hotel in Manhattan. Lepke told Rubin that he would have to go away again, but in the meantime to stay out of sight of everyone in the clothing industry; that Brooklyn was not yet straightened out and that the Dewey investigation was closing in on everyone. Shortly thereafter Lepke told Rubin to go to Salt Lake city. Rubin then consulted the lawyer for Local Union 240, Mr. Edward C. Maguire, and thereafter told Lepke that Mr. Maguire wished to see him.

Rubin and Lepke visited the offices of Mr. Maguire who was the attorney for the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. Mr. Maguire told them that it was unwise for any man to become a fugitive while an investigation was pending and that it would be ridiculous for a married man with a child to go off as a fugitive indefinitely; that Rubin was a representative of a union and that no union would stand for its representative being off in some unknown place and that the membership would oust him. Mr. Maguire testified that Lepke interrupted during the early part of the talk and said "If witnesses are not available, investigations collapse." At the conclusion of the talk Lepke said "I will see about it" and he and Rubin departed.

After they left Mr. Maguire's office, Lepke told Rubin that he had not wished to say it in the office but the case in Brooklyn would be thrown out; that Assistant District Attorney McCarthy would not handle it any more and that another Assistant District Attorney would be put on it and then pushed on to something else in another building and that the case would die. Rubin then agreed to go to Salt Lake city. He left on October thirtieth and stayed there at the Carlton Hotel. During the month while he was there he received four fifty-dollar money orders through Western Union. He then returned to New York city and told Lepke that he was too lonesome to stay longer; Lepke told him he should not have returned as Brooklyn was not straightened out and investigations were getting very serious. Rubin stayed in New York until early in December when he was told by Lepke to go to New [fol. 4036] Orleans and that he would send him money there. Rubin went to New Orleans but returned in a week without telling Lepke. Then he telephoned Paul Berger and later received a visit from him. Berger told the witness that Lepke wished to see him, waited while he dressed and then drove him to a place where Lepke was waiting under an awning. Rubin told Lepke that he could not stay in New Orleans. Lepke then asked Rubin how old he was and, being told, said, "It was a ripe age." He was then told to go to Philadelphia to meet one Zenreith, alias Bartfield. The latter and Rubin took an automobile trip which lasted seven weeks during each of which the witness received fifty dollars in cash from New York.

Rubin next saw Lepke in Washington and told him he was anxious to get back to New York. Lepke told him he could not come back. After further conversation Lepke told the witness to go to a Brooklyn hotel where Rubin registered under an assumed name. He was paid fifty dollars a week by Berger during that period. He then took an apartment in Brooklyn. He stayed in that apartment until August. He again talked with Mr. Maguire and then went down to the office of Mr. Dewey at 120 Broadway where he talked with Mr. Hogan (now District Attorney of New York county) and Mr. Ten Eyck, two of Mr. Dewey's assistants. That interview was arranged by Mr. Maguire. Following the interview he went back to work as business agent of Local 240. By that time Lepke had fled from the State.

Toward the end of September, 1937, Rubin testified before a grand jury in New York county in the Dewey investigation. On October first, four days later, as he was walking toward his home he was shot through the head.

On December 16, 1937, Rubin was examined by Assistant District Attorney McCarthy in the presence of Assistant District Attorney (now District Attorney) Hogan of New York county. He then testified that he never told Rosen to leave town, never gave him any money to go away and that he knew nothing about the Rosen murder.

In amplification and extension of the testimony of this confidant, as well as intermediary and messenger, of Lepke, of the testimony of those who heard the murder shots, who saw the car driven from the scene and who later saw it abandoned on Van Sinderen avenue by the four perpetrators of the deed and of the testimony of the lawyer for the labor group to whom Lepke revealed his method of conduct in circumventing the law—"when a witness is not around there cannot be a case"—there was the testimony of some of those actively concerned in the murder.

I shall take first that of Paul Berger for whom Lepke sent when he finally lost patience both with Rubin and Rosen. Berger was employed by Local No. 4. He acted as a go-between for Lepke and Weinstein. On the Friday before the murder Rubin gave him Lepke's message that the latter wished to see him. Berger went to No. 200 Fifth avenue to see Lepke. Lepke said "Do you know that Joe Rosen." Upon receiving an affirmative reply he said "I [fol. 4037] want you to point him out." He and Lepke then took a cab to Suffolk and Grand streets. Lepke walked along Suffolk to Broome street and told a man he met there to tell the defendant Mendy Weiss that he wished to see him. Weiss came and Lepke talked to Weiss for five or ten minutes apart from Berger. Then Lepke brought Weiss over and told Berger to point Rosen out to Weiss. Berger took Weiss to Brownsville in Brooklyn and, after Weiss had spoken to the defendant Capone, Berger pointed out Rosen to Weiss at the candy store. The murder occurred approximately thirty-six hours later.

Berger read of the murder in the newspaper and later talked with Lepke about it. Lepke told him that it would be advisable for Rubin to leave town until things cleared up in Brooklyn. Still later, after Rubin's return from New Orleans, Rubin telephoned and Berger told Lepke that Rubin was at his home in the Bronx. That was the night that Rubin and Lepke talked under the awning near Amsterdam avenue. Later Lepke and Rubin came back to the automobile and he heard Rubin say: "Listen, Lep, I got to be around somewheres where I can be near my wife and kid." It was then arranged for Rubin to go downtown to stay at a hotel. Berger then drove Rubin home, waited until he obtained his clothes and then drove him downtown where Rubin checked in at a mid-town hotel. Subsequently Berger saw Rubin while the latter was living in Brooklyn disguised by a moustache and glasses. He told Lepke how funny Rubin looked and was directed to keep "pepping him up." In June, 1937, Lepke told the witness that "things were getting too hot, he will have to lamm," and then fled.

In the fall of 1937 the defendant Weiss talked with Berger about the fact that Rubin was "squealing" and asked Berger to point him out to one Schlermer and to work with the latter. Berger then took Rubin to lunch in order that Schlermer might see him. Schlermer reported that he had trailed Rubin to a down-town building. Schlermer also said "that he has got to pick him up again tomorrow around the clothing market and when he goes in to the subway to go home he has got to get in touch with somebody in the Bronx." Then Rubin was shot as he walked toward his home in the Bronx.

Six or seven months later Berger drove with defendant Weiss to Livonia avenue, Brooklyn. Weiss said that he wished Berger to point out Rubin to Magoon. "This time the s of a b ain't going to be so lucky." The following morning Berger met Magoon and pointed out Rubin. There was delay in shooting Rubin a second time because he was under police protection and it was desired to shoot him without shooting the policeman. Magoon watched in the vicinity of Rubin's house, dressed as a laborer. A policeman questioned him and no further attack on Rubin was made.

In May, 1940, the defendant Weiss fled from the State because of his belief that one of Lepke's men named Tan- [fol. 4038] nenbaum (a witness at the trial) was talking. Weiss was arrested by federal narcotis agents in Kansas City, Mo., on April 6, 1941. He was living under the name of James W. Bell and had cards printed under that name purporting to indicate that he was vice-president of a mining company. He told the agents that he did not mind going back to New York except that he hated "to sit between O'Dwyer and Dewey." He also said he: "had intended to surrender himself at a later date when O'Dwyer would be out of office." He had with him some diamonds and twenty-seven hundred odd dollars in cash. Berger was arrested in June of 1941 and charged with the murder of Rosen.

The witness Tannenbaum went to work for Lepke in 1931 at thirty-five dollars a week. He took orders from Lepke and was told by the latter to obey the directions of Gurrah and the defendant Weiss. Tannenbaum's salary was increased from thirty-five dollars to one hundred and twenty-five dollars a week between 1931 and 1936. Two days before Rosen's death Lepke told Rubin in Tannenbaum's presence that Rosen was one "who will never go down to talk to Dewey about me." He heard Rubin tell Lepke that he would see Murray Weinstein to see if the matter could not be straightened out. Three or four days later Tannenbaum was in Lepke's office when the defendant Weiss reported on the Rosen murder. Weiss related that everything had proceeded properly except for the fact that the defendant Harry Strauss to whom Weiss had given strict orders not to do any shooting, began shooting at Rosen as he lay on the floor after having been shot by Weiss. Lepke said: "All right, what's the difference as long as everyone is clean and you got away all right?" and patted Weiss on the back. Over coffee, shortly afterward, in response to a question Weiss explained that Rosen was "some fellow used to be in the trucking business and that he was threatening to go to Dewey and talk about Lep."

While Tannenbaum had never been convicted of a crime he admitted he had engaged in crimes such as robbery with a gun, sluggings, strike-breaking, throwing stink bombs and in six murders.

Seymour Magoon was a witness who testified that he was employed by Harry Strauss, Buggsy Goldstein (both executed, see People v. Goldstein, 285 N. Y. 376), the defendant Louis Capone and one Abe Reles (now dead). While he had received his first conviction in 1940, and that for vagrancy, he had stolen fifty or more automobiles and participated as the "wheel-man" in two murders, had shot several persons and committed several assaults. In the fall of 1938 the defendant Weiss in the presence of the defendant Capone, Strauss and Reles asked him to go to meet Paul Berger and another man on the following morning. Weiss said that Berger would point out Rubin and for him to follow Rubin, to find out his habits and to see if he had a police bodyguard with him. On the following day Berger pointed out Rubin and after following him and his bodyguard during that day Magoon talked that evening to the defendants Strauss, Weiss, Capone and Reles. The defend- [fol. 4039] ant Weiss told him to put on old clothes and to watch Rubin's house in the Bronx. On the following night the defendant Capone, said "that Rubin is hurting Lep and we got to hit him in the head and get rid of him." Magoon followed Rubin for the next three days during which on one occasion he was questioned by a police officer while watching Rubin's house. Magoon reported that incident and the continued presence of Rubin's body-guard. Weiss said "then we will have to ... hack him and the cop." That was in connection with the preparation for the second projected assassination of Rubin.

One Sholem Bernstein worked for the defendant Capone. On the Friday [redacted] the Rosen murder the witness was in his automobile talking with defendant Harry Strauss. The defendants Capone and Weiss and one Philip (Farvel) Choen (a defendant also named in the indictment but as to whom there has been a severance, talking with defendant Harry Strauss. The defendants Capone and Weiss and one Philip (Farvel) Cohen (a defendant also named in the indictment but as to whom there has been a severance, (supra), approached. They called Strauss from the car. About three-quarters of an hour later they returned and Strauss said "steal a car and get a drop"—a "drop" is a garage in which to place a stolen car. Strauss also told Bernstein, after he had stolen the car and had arranged for the "drop" to meet him at four o'clock on the following afternoon. Without going into details, Bernstein rented a "drop" and with the aid of one Muggsy Cohen, stole a black two-door Chevrolet. On the following day at four o'clock he kept his appointment. The defendant, Capone, complained of the fact that a two-door instead of a four-door car had been stolen but nevertheless showed the witness the route to be followed from Rosen's candy store, where, as Capone said, "here is where somebody is going to be killed." He showed the route through the various streets to Van Sinderen and Livonia avenues where the car was to be abandoned. Capone went over it seven or eight cars. Then the defendant Capone told the witness to steal plates from a car that would not be missed and after the plates had been put on, to return with the car at ten-thirty o'clock that night. When he returned that night Strauss brought a package with pistols in it and that was put in the compartment of the car. After watching Rosen's store for a period of time it was decided that it would be safer to murder him in the morning when he opened his store. The witness, after putting the car away, went to the home of Farvel Cohen on Eastern parkway. He was told to get some sleep because he would have to be up at five in the morning. The defendant Weiss awakened him and told him to get the automobile and the guns. All then went to the hallway of an apartment house about a block from Sutter avenue. The witness, curiously enough, did not know that it was Rosen to be killed. He had never heard his name. After an hour's wait the witness was instructed by the defendant Weiss to get the car and to stop it in front of [fol. 4040] Rosen's store and to make certain that the motor was running. Before he drove over he saw the defendants Weiss, Strauss and Ferraco (not apprehended) walk toward the store. Then Weiss and Strauss walked in. Ferraco stayed outside. He heard a number of shots and Weiss and Strauss came running out and with Ferraco entered the car. He followed the route as outlined to Van Sinderen avenue and Livonia avenue. He took the key out of the car and all four got out and walked over the bridge down into Junius street. There Capone had the witness Bernstein's car and Philip (Farvel) Cohen had his own car. Weiss gave the witness his gun and told him to break it and throw it away. Capone told him to take Ferraco and drop him off. Then the defendants Capone, Weiss and Strauss drove away in Cohen's car.

After District Attorney O'Dwyer took office and in February, 1940, this witness fled the State. He stayed for a few weeks at Miami Beach, came back to Brooklyn and then left for Los Angeles. Curiously, Bernstein came to Brooklyn from Miami in March, 1940, in order to see a lawyer. He went to the lawyer's home. There he saw also another lawyer who had been the witness' "regular" lawyer for many years. Those two lawyers are two of the three who represented the defendant Capone upon this trial. Then in turn he went to San Francisco, Dallas, St. Louis and Chicago. He then returned to Brooklyn and surrendered himself to District Attorney O'Dwyer. After he talked with Mr. O'Dwyer he testified before the grand jury in Brooklyn. He also testified before a grand jury in Sullivan county against one Gangy Cohen and on the latter's trial.

He was not cross-examined by counsel for Lepke whose name he had not mentioned in his testimony. On cross-examination by counsel for the other defendants, he said that the Rosen murder was the only one in which he took part. He testified that he had helped dispose of a dead body by burial but had not been present when the deceased, one Yuran, had been killed. He testified that at the trial of Gangy Cohen in Sullivan county for the murder of one

Walter Sage he had testified truthfully to what Gangy Cohen had told him in Los Angeles, Calif., but admitted that he had testified falsely as to some matters because he did not wish to give information to the "mob" all of whom had not as yet been arrested; that someone in the District Attorney's office, he could not recall whether in Kings county or Sullivan county, had told him not to tell everything for that reason. Apparently the matters about which he did not tell the truth were those involved in the Yuran murder case and the instant case. The indictment in the Yuran case had not been tried at the time Bernstein was cross-examined in the Gangy Cohen case.

It is of moment that the attorney for Gangy Cohen who cross-examined Bernstein in Sullivan county was the attorney for Philip (Farvel) Cohen, one of the defendants in this case, who has not yet been tried and whose name has been mentioned from time to time (supra). At the time of the cross-examination in Sullivan county there were many [fol. 4041] witnesses who were not under the protection of the District Attorney and many fugitives at large. Bernstein's direct examination in Sullivan county in the Gangy Cohen case as to the conversation which he had had with the latter in California took from three to five minutes. His cross-examination by counsel for Gangy Cohen and Philip (Farvel) Cohen took three or four hours. These facts were elicited in the instant case by the District Attorney undoubtedly for the purpose of arguing to the jury that the cross-examination during the Gangy Cohen trial as to facts affecting the Yuran murder and the Rosen murder, which apparently involved members of the so-called "mob," was to learn about other cases for future use and that there was some justification for Bernstein's concealment of facts. That of course could be no excuse. Be that as it may the facts involving Bernstein's concealment in this regard were placed squarely before the jury. It was for them to weigh the question of whether Bernstein testified truthfully as to being the driver of the murder car in this case and as to the others whom he named. The trial court charged before taking up the facts: "Let me say at the outset of this, please, scrutinize with suspicion and accept with caution and in a degree which accords with the character and extent of the impeachment, the testimony of each witness, and give due weight to all believable evidence put in by the other side which tends to contradict or discredit it. Then decide if you can, is the witness telling the truth now. Put your brains to work on that, because you will need them." We are not the jury and we cannot say that this testimony was unbelievable as a matter of law.

There was another instance of falsification in Bernstein's testimony to which I shall refer. He was kept in a hotel and he said that no communication was permitted among those who were kept there or with the outside world. It was shown that he wrote three or four letters threatening his former partner that unless Mrs. Bernstein received the sum of $200 he would inform against him. Bernstein then admitted that he had written the letters. They were not received in evidence after that admission. The court took the position that having admitted his untruthfulness, his credibility was impeached and the letters were irrelevant. The court said the witness had "-lied." This ruling was correct but even if incorrect did not constitute reversible error.

The defendant Buchalter called several witnesses to testify to the financial condition of the deceased, and of the N. Y. and N. J. Co. Among those witnesses was one Nat Sobler, an associate of Rosen and secretary of that company. Rosen had been vice-president. He testified that Rosen put no money into the company but brought in the Pennsylvania accounts; that when the stoppage occurred in 1932, to which reference has already been made, Max Rubin told him that he (Sobler) and one Bluestein were to have the New Jersey knee pants business and the New York accounts; that Rubin said that that was what the witness was going to get and that he would have to take it; Sobler [fol. 4042] said that when he heard that, he fainted; that Rubin told him "That you are going to get and no more." Sobler testified that the stoppage began about Monday and that Rosen quit N. Y. and N. J. Co. on Saturday; that on that day Rosen said he was getting a job with the Garfield Express at $100 to $125 a week; that Rosen said "Louis Buchalter, or Lepke, got in as a partner there and he told Louis Cooper to take me back to work." It will be remembered that this was a witness called by Lepke who, to the extent indicated corroborated Rubin, the chief witness for the prosecution.

LAW

It is urged that the court committed error in its charge that the jury could reconcile the testimony of Rubin, Bernstein and Berger in connection with the conduct of Lepke and the so-termed preparatory work on September eleventh. The point is this. The witness Rubin testified that on that day he saw Lepke at No. 200 Fifth avenue at about one o'clock in the afternoon. Lepke then complained that Rosen was again talking. Rubin said that he would see Weinstein. That he did and later reported to Lepke that Weinstein could do nothing. Rubin testified that that report was in the early part of the afternoon and that then Lepke told him to send Berger to him. Rubin said he gave Berger the message at a time which may have been about two hours after his talk with Lepke and thus well on in the afternoon. Berger testified that he saw Rubin at Union Square at about five P. M. and then walked uptown to Lepke's office; then that he and Lepke went downtown where they met the defendant Weiss at about six or six-fifteen P. M. and Lepke then told Berger to point out Rosen to Weiss. So much of Berger and Weiss. Now the defendants turn, in support of their argument, to the testimony of Bernstein. He testified that he was in his automobile at Sackman street and Lavonia avenue with Strauss at a time between twelve forty-five and one-fifteen P. M., when the defendants Weiss and Capone and Philip (Farvel) Cohen came up and called Strauss from the car; that they left him (Bernstein) seated in his car and returned three-fourths of an hour later. Strauss then told Bernstein, in the presence of the others, to "steal a car and get a drop." That would be about two P. M. The complaint of the defendants is that the court charged, after referring to the argument of one of the counsel that the testimony did not "hitch," as follows:

"Gentlemen, I refer you to the record because I don't want you to get twisted up on that. There is not a particle of evidence in the case as to when, if at all, Buchalter communicated in reference to the preparation work. The case is blank on that. There is no way of knowing. We do not know whether he did so, or, if he did, whether it was in the morning or the afternoon or the evening; but you have the testimony of Bernstein about when he received the alleged instructions to steal car and hire a drop, which was earlier in the day. Taken in connection with the other [fol.4043] facts, or alleged facts, concerning the alleged preparation work, and putting this and that together, you have a right to draw such inference as you see fit. Apparently, in the argument that was offered, counsel assumed that Buchalter waited until after the fingering before he gave the instruction; but under the record I charge you you are entitled to consider whether or not, at the time of the alleged excited statements by Buchalter during the day, that may be taken as evidence connecting him with either previous instructions or instructions immediately thereafter in connection with the hiring of the drop and the stealing of the car. I don't say you have a right to draw an inference that he sent such an instruction over the telephone, but I do say you have a right, if you see fit, to reconcile the testimony by Rubin and by Bernstein and by Paul Berger on the various points of evidence they have testified to in connection with Buchalter and the preparation work on that day, and that the definite hook-up if true, is the fingering plus the declaration by Buchalter. I feel that for accuracy I should refer to the record on this, so that you won't be misled." (11717-20.)

The court then read questions and answers from the testimony and then said: "Now, gentlemen, in going over the text, those are the only questions and answers that I can find covering that point in the direct. It is possible that I have overlooked something that is in the cross. I will be glad to instruct you on that by a quote if my attention is called to it, but, so far as the time element is concerned, you will note there is nothing there to indicate whether or not Buchalter had contacted in preparation, with the Brooklyn end, for the proposed murder before or after Rubin ran in on him and found him in that state and making those declarations, if that testimony be true—and please remember what the Court said to you about that—no speculation."

Exception was taken to that portion of the charge upon the ground that there was an assumption implicit in the statement that there was an earlier communication between the defendant Buchalter, and somebody else about preparatory work. Further exception was taken because under it the jury had been asked to speculate. The court then said he would straighten the matter out recalled the jury and charged as follows: "My attention has also been called to a possible co ofusion in my charge as to the possibility of a communication having been, even before that, given by Buchalter to somebody in Brooklyn to go ahead with the work of preparation. That would make it, of course, entirely consistent with the time table set up by Bernstein as to when he was given instructions to steal the car and get a drop. I want to correct any possible mischoice of language that might cause a misunderstanding. The case is blind as to whether or not Buchalter communicated. There is no way we know. You cannot presume that he did and you cannot presume that he did not, but I will say that the argument of one of the counsel for the defense in attacking the time tables as told by Bernstein as incon- [fol. 4044] sistent with Rubin's testimony and Berger's testimony is predicated upon an assumption on his part that there was no communication by Buchalter until after Rubin returned and gave word that Weinstein could not do anything. I charge you this—and I think this is accurate and will not be error that there is no such presumption, and you are not justified in so presuming. If there is no such presumption, of course, then the argument attacking the time table fails. I am not afraid of that charge. There is an exception to all of the defendants on this modification."

That which the court said failed was the "argument (of counsel) attacking the time-table." In effect what the court said was that there was no presumption either way. That was correct.

Both the charge and portion "straightening it out" were correct. "It is elementary that, in all cases of conflicting testimony, the first step in the process of inquiry should be to ascertain whether the apparent inconsistencies it presents may not, without violence, be reconciled." (2 Moore on Facts, § 1142, p. 1280.) Accordingly, "Juries are constantly instructed to reconcile evidence, where they can do so, without the imputation of perjury of any witness." (Savannah etc., R. R. Co. v. Gray, 85 Ga. 825, 829, per Chief Justice BLECKLEY.) We have said that it is the duty of the jury "to reconcile, if possible, conflicting statements as to material facts." (Smith v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 170 N. Y. 394, 400-401.) Here the statements were reconcilable, and if reconciled, were consistent with the testimony.

Surely, the court properly charged that the jury should endeavor to reconcile the testimony of Rubin, Berger and Bernstein. It may very well be that Lepke, due to the anger in which Rubin found him at about one P. M. on September 11, 1936, had already sent word to Weiss and Capone that Rosen was to be silenced. It may be that Strauss and Capone and Weiss had their own reasons for telling Bernstein to steal a car and get a "drop" and that those reasons had nothing to do with the slaying of Rosen. Later on that day, when Berger and Weiss had their instructions from Buchalter as to the slaying of Rosen, the previous order to Bernstein to steal a car and get a "drop" may have been made to fit into the new plan. A jury could have so found. In that event or in the event the jury found that Buchalter had set the machinery in motion before Berger was sent to him, or even before talking with Rubin, the testimony was reconcilable.

That Bernstein did not know that the automobile he was told to steal was to be used for a murder is made evident by his answers that if he had so known he would not have permitted Muggsy Cohen to take the radio out of the car. After the murder he searched out Cohen, obtained the radio, broke it into pieces and disposed of it. For the same reason he said he would not have taken the handle off the door of the car and had a key made for it. He said he though- the automobile was to be used in a "schlamming" (striking on the head with a lead pipe).

[fol. 4045] It is urged that it was error to permit Rubin on re-direct examination to give an affirmative answer to the question, "Did you give untruthful answers to Mr. McCarthy due to fear of Lepke on your part because of the fact of having been shot, following your testimony before the Dewey Grand Jury?"

Here was a witness who had made untruthful answers to an Assistant District Attorney's questions. He had been shot through the head four days after his testimony before the grand jury either because, as the defendant Weiss stated to Berger, "We got some information that Max Rubin is squealing and he has got to be hit" or as the defendant Capone told Magoon, "Rubin is hurting Lep and we got to hit him in the head and get rid of him." He had been one of the intermediaries between Lepke and Rosen. There had been a scene in the court while the jury was absent in which Rubin had lost control of himself when asked for the reason for his untruthful answers to the Assistant District Attorney. The court felt that counsel was seeking to provoke an outbreak in order to move for a mistrial. It was to prevent a further outbreak that the court framed the leading question which the District Attorney was to ask. There was nothing objectionable in that question. It was necessary and proper for the District Attorney to elicit the reason in the witness' mind for his conduct. The "impeached witness may always endeavor to explain away the effect of the supposed inconsistency by relating whatever circumstances would naturally remove it." (3 Wigmore on Evidence [3rd ed.], § 1044, p. 737.) As the court said in People v. Chapleau (121 N. Y. 266, 277): "Here the witnesses, in testifying to facts, of which upon the preliminary examination they had denied knowledge, or which they had suppressed, may have been moved or deterred as they swore they were by motives of fright; and they appear to have been perfectly free from improper instigation, or motives to swear falsely. At any rate, it was for the jury to decide whether they were to be believed or not." See also, People v. Weldon (111 N. Y. 569, 576).

The important factor was the reason which operated upon Rubin's mind. That reason might be a good one or a poor one. It might have a foundation in fact or no foundation at all. The fact that it was in Rubin's mind was no proof that it had any foundation. All it was offered to prove was that that reason, good or bad, motivated the conduct of the witness. In this instance he had testified before the grand jury and had been promptly shot through the head. He believed that Rosen had been killed because he had not kept quiet. He believed that that killing had occurred pursuant to the orders of Lepke. Lepke had told him that the Rosen case was to be taken away from the Assistant District Attorney who was even then examining him and given to another and that the latter was to be given other work and sent to another building; that the Rosen case would die. It was Rubin's state of mind that was being inquired into. That state of mind was no proof that Lepke had anything to do with the shooting of Rubin. [fol. 4046] No one claimed it was proof of that fact. But that belief did enter into the mind of Rubin and that was the reason he did not tell the truth to Assistant District Attorney McCarthy. The question was a proper one.

It is said in the dissenting opinion: "On request of counsel for Capone, the trial judge said to the jury: 'I will charge that unless they believe the testimony of Bernstein connecting Capone, that Capone must be acquitted.' The gist of such connecting testimony was the ungarnished word of Bernstein that the getaway route over which he drove the murder car had been taught to him by Capone the day before the killing of Rosen."

We think that there was more than that and that it is unfortunate that error must be predicated upon one sentence occurring at the end of two interdependent paragraphs contained among the requests to charge and having application to but one defendant. The context containing the one sentence which is said to be error is found in full on page 22. Especially is this so when this sentence was uttered by the trial judge in order to be fairer to the defendant Capone than his counsel requested. If the court had stopped with the words "I so charge" the defendant Capone would have no complaint to make.

First as to the facts. Bernstein's testimony in brief was as follows: On the Friday before the Rosen murder he was at Sackman street and Livonia avenue in his automobile talking with Harry Strauss. Along came Louis Capone, Mendy Weiss and Philip (Farvel) Cohen (a defendant as to whom there was a severance). Harry Strauss was in the car with him. They called Strauss out of the car. Mendy Weiss spoke to Strauss. Before Strauss stepped out he told the witness to wait around and not to go away. Capone had introduced him to Cohen and Weiss a year before. In about three-quarters of an hour they all came back and Strauss said "Steal a car and get a drop." Strauss asked if he could get one and when he answered "Yes" Strauss said "After you get that, come over tomorrow afternoon at four o'clock on Sackman Street and Livonia Avenue, I want to see you." He went away and rented a "drop" at Lincoln place and Ralph avenue at eight dollars per month.

About one o'clock the following morning he stole an automobile in the East Flatbush section with Muggsy Cohen, a car and radio thief. They stole a black, two-door chevrolet. They drove it to the "drop" and Muggsy took the radio out. On Saturday morning he took the handle off the door and had a key made. He then had an appointment at four p. m. on Saturday at Sackman street and Livonia avenue with defendant Capone and Strauss which he kept. Capone asked if he had the automobile in the drop and then what kind of car and complained of the fact that it was a two-door car. Then Capone said "Come on, I will show you the job you have to do." Then Capone showed him the route; Capone said: "Now watch—this is going to be your job, what to do." As they drove, he showed the witness [fol. 4047] the candy store (Rosen's) and said: "Here is where somebody is going to be killed." He showed the route through the various streets to Van Sinderen and Livonia avenues. Capone went over the route seven or eight times. Capone said "This is the place where you drop the car off." Then they went back to Sackman street and Livonia avenue. Strauss came over and Capone told him to steal plates—to make sure to take plates at a place where the car would not be missed and after the plates were on to bring the car at ten-thirty o'clock that night to Sackman street and Livonia avenue. He left his automobile with Capone after taking out a flashlight, a screwdriver, a pair of pliers and a pair of gloves. He broke into a garage and stole plates. He put the plates on the car he had stolen, broke up the old plates and disposed of them. He waited around and then drove the stolen car to Sackman street and Livonia avenue. He parked it a few doors away and it was inspected by Weiss, Strauss and Capone. Weiss started complaining: "What the hell is the matter with you? Why did you get a two door car for?" "You know for a job like this you need a four door car."

After Rosen had been shot Weiss and Strauss came running from the store and with Ferraco jumped into Bernstein's car. He drove along the route to Van Sinderen and Livonia avenues. He took the key out of the car and all four stepped out and walked over the bridge down into Junius street. There Capone was waiting with Bernstein's car and Cohen had his own car. Weiss gave the witness his gun and told him to break it and throw it away. Capone told him to take Ferraco and drop him off and Capone, Weiss and Strauss went away in Cohen's car.

The portion of the charge containing the sentence quoted is as follows: "Counsel for Capone: I ask your Honor to charge the jury that in so far as the defendant Capone is concerned, even if they were to believe the testimony of Solomon Bernstein, if they disbelieve the testimony of Seymour Magoon, they must acquit. The Court: I have already charged that and, as the jury knows, I have gone particularly into that point. It is all up to the testimony of Seymour Magoon. Do you believe it? If you do believe it, it is one thing; if you do not believe it, it is another. Counsel for Capone: May I have the converse of it in the next request? I ask your Honor to charge the jury that in so far as the defendant Capone is concerned, even if they were to believe the testimony of Seymour Magoon, if they disbelieve the testimony of Solomon Bernstein, in so far as it affects the defendant Capone, they must acquit. The Court: I so charge. That is obvious. Wait a minute. I am a little puzzled about this language as being sufficiently definite as a confession in case Bernstein is not believed. The language is that when that witness was talking to Capone, Capone replied, 'What are you worried about? I worked on the Rosen thing, which was right on Sutter Avenue, and I was not made.' I think that is too indefinite. I will charge that unless they believe the testimony of Bernstein connecting Capone, that Capone must be acquitted. Counsel for Capone: There are just a few more. * * *" The charge was correct.

[fol. 4048] It is next urged as error requiring reversal that the court failed to analyze the evidence in the case so as to present to the jury fairly the conflicting claims of the People and the defendants but on the contrary expressly disavowed that duty. The case cited is People v. Montesanto (236 N. Y. 396). The last paragraph is no doubt the reason for the citation. We do not think it is justified by the paragraph in question which reads as follows: "In our opinion, in view of these two matters, taken in connection with the failure of the court generally to analyze the evidence in the case so as to present to the jury fairly the conflicting claims of the People and the defendant, the latter was not accorded a fair trial." (p. 407.) That is as far as we have ever gone. Surely it must depend on all the circumstances of the particular case.

We shall now quote the language of the charge upon which defendants must rely in support of this contention:

"Questions of law are for the Court. It is not the purpose of the Court, in making any allusions to evidence, to do so for the purpose of refreshing recollection or particularizing in order to emphasize one point as against another.

You heard the witnesses. You heard the evidence exhaustively discussed by counsel. The Court placed no time limitation upon the discussion, simply tried to preserve order and dignity, two qualities which are inherent in the administration of justice, and which it is the duty of the Judge to do.

It is the record of the evidence that counts, and that is left to your memory, to be refreshed in such particulars, if any, as you may desire, by a re-reading of minutes on any particular point, should that be necessary."

* * * * * * *

"These three defendants are tried together because that is provided for by a statute of this State. We cannot question the wisdom of that statute. It was passed by the Legislature and signed by the Governor. It is the law. But that does not lessen your responsibility in seeing that the evidence as against each is properly segregated and applied only as to him.

"I shall have to later come back, and in a sort of away which I hope will be fair, attempt to point out certain parts, possibly the bulk, possibly all of the points of evidence in connection with the defendant or defendants to whom they apply. I will do that as a safeguard against your own confusion, but when I do it, remember it is your own recollection of the record that counts. Try as hard as I may to be fair in epitomizing for the purpose of segregation from, as I said, approximately a million words of record, I do not guarantee it to be true, because I cannot give assurance against the human frailty of making mistakes."

* * * * * * *

"Now, gentlemen, I don't like to review testimony in a long record. I don't think it is humanly possible, with this enormous amount of text, for a judge to do this, no matter how fairly he tries to do so, without being accused of trying to color it.

[fol. 4049] Just as with an anthology, any epitomization of record is terribly personal with the person who prepares the epitomization. I know it has to be done in some cases. I will do it if counsel for the defense request it. This has been a long trial. Witnesses have been put on in certain order. I don't know how much of the record you remember and how much you don't. A lot of it has been discussed in the summations from the viewpoint of counsel who argued. However there are certain points of the evidence to which I feel under the necessity of calling your attention, first, because where more than one defendant is tried for a crime and the evidence is different as against the different defendants in its applicability, there should be some sort of an attempt at segregation by the Court as an aid to you otherwise you might apply evidence against one defendant as against the others, and that would be unfair. That is the purpose of this epitomization. Please do not gain any impression that it is warranted to be perfect. It is simply intended as a fair summary, and, I hope, a substantially accurate one.

"Also, I express no opinion as to the believability of any of the witnesses on any of the points mentioned.

"Also, this particular summary is not a general one, it is merely a segregation of evidence to keep you from misapplying it as against certain defendants.

"The believability of any witness on any of the points mentioned is your job to decide, and I do not go into details of cross-examination because that likewise is your job. These are references purely. Cross-examination is almost impossible to correctly state in such a manner that two people can agree on its fairness because, while direct examination goes right to the point, cross-examination, being for the purpose of breaking down the direct, is largely hit or miss; it is blank cartridge shooting. Once in a while you find it shown that a bullet had hit, but whether there is a hit or not may be a matter of dispute.

"Unless, there be an outstanding point come out on cross-examination, the Court would only tend to confuse and mislead the jury if it attempted to discuss it.

"Let me say at the outset of this, please scrutinize with suspicion and accept with caution and in a degree which accords with the character and extent of the impeachment, the testimony of each witness, and give due weight to all believable evidence put in by the other side which tends to contradict or discredit it. Then decide, if you can, is the witness telling the truth now. Put your brains to work on that because you will need them."

* * * * * * *

"So far as the People's case is concerned, the furthest you can go in figuring out motive on Buchalter's part for wanting Rosen out of the way is that because of a business grudge carried by Rosen against Buchalter, having to do in some manner with the trucking company affairs in relation to the Pennsylvania business apparently, and the grudge relating particularly to Rosen's severance with the business, and apparently blaming Buchalter for it, Buch- [fol. 4050] alter feared that Rosen would reprise by giving information to Mr. Dewey which would get him, Buchalter, in trouble with the authorities. That is enough as motive evidence, if you find these facts to be established to your satisfaction reasonably, but I charge you that motive need not be shown if the case is otherwise sufficient. When I mentioned Weiss and Capone, please bear strictly in mind what I said at the start, that this is purely a segregation to guide you against misapplication of evidence as against defendants to whom it does not apply. It is not a discussion of evidentiary values; it is not an expression of belief by the Court as to whether or not you shall accept such testimony as true. For that reason there is no review of cross-examination or of any of the evidence on the several defendants' side of the case. It is strictly and only a segregation."

* * * * * * *

"Now as to Capone—and please pay strict attention, gentlemen on this point; it is quite important. In mentioning the points of evidence applicable to this defendant, Capone, I particularly wish to impress upon you the comparative paucity of the corroboration from non-accomplice witnesses so that you won't confuse the evidence applicable to the others and use it against Capone. Most of the evidence as against his defendant came from the accomplices Berger and Bernstein."

"Those two items, as I have said, are the only evidence from non-accomplice witnesses which can be submitted on the question of corroboration. You will have to ask yourselves, 'Is it true?' Possibly it would be better in view of the great importance of this feature of the case, if, instead of depending on what I have just said, I use just a few minutes more and refer to the exact text of the record, because this must not be carelessly decided; it must be intelligently decided."

Then the court read questions and answers from the record, giving the page numbers at which they occurred. The questions and answers so read take approximately five pages of the charge. Then the court continued:

"Gentlemen, I think that is the text applicable thereto, unless there was something on cross-examination applying to it. You see how it is limited down. It is limited down on corroborative points to what Magoon, the non-accomplice witness, said was his conversation with Capone in which he alleges Capone made reference to the Rosen matter and that he had not been made, and then you have the alleged complicity, according to the testimony I have just read, testified to by Magoon, who is a non-accomplice witness. These are two non-accomplice witnesses."

. . . . . .

"If, under the strain of this trial, there has been any evidence of nervousness or strain on the part of counsel or Court, if there have been interchanges which may have shaken the decorum of the court-room, if there have been argument and recriminations which may seem unnecessary, please overlook and disregard them in coming to your ver- [fol. 4051] dict. This includes the Court. The Court is human. It has to be strict, in accordance with the responsibility of its job, whether it likes to be strict or not, but if I have spoken sharply at any time, just forget it. The Court is trying to be fair. It is trying not to express any opinion or to give any impression as to what its own notion is concerning the guilt or innocence of any of these defendants. It is trying to see that the case is kept within reasonable bounds, although it has given a great deal of latitude in this trial. It is trying to see that the jury has it fairly and fully presented as a case so that it may properly decide it.

I charge you that the law presumes every defendant innocent unless proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, the language of the statute being: 'A defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent until the contrary be proved; and in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal.'"

I referred (supra), to the defense interposed by the defendants and to the witnesses called by them in order that I might refer thereto at this point.

This claim of error comes to this: there should be a reversal in this lengthy trial where the guilt, at least of Lepke and Weiss was clearly established, because after eleven weeks of trial the court did not analyze the evidence so as to present the conflicting claims of the defendants and the People. We have never before said that that was indispensable or constituted reversible error. However, we shall now examine the conflicting claims.

As to the defendant Capone the court told the jury of the "paucity of the corroboration from non-accomplice witnesses" (supra), and read the questions and answers relating thereto from the record. Capone had not testified and had called no witnesses. What were the conflicting claims of the People and Capone which should have been analyzed? The defendant claimed to be not guilty and the prosecution witnesses to be untruthful and those claims were surely known to the jury.

As to the defendant Weiss, his defense in substance was an alibi. The court properly charged as to that defense.

As to Lepke his defense was that he was not guilty, that the deceased was of too little importance for him to direct or order his death and that certain conversations testified to by prosecution witnesses had not occurred. I have quoted from his counsel's argument to the jury to indicate that the jury understood that Lepke claimed to be innocent and that Rosen was so unimportant that there was no reason or motive for Lepke to direct his death. His counsel argued at length upon the fact that the prosecution witnesses who testified to conversations in the rooms at No. 200 Fifth avenue were unworthy of belief. His counsel's summation covers one hundred and three pages of the record. The claims of Lepke were before the jury during the whole of the long trial. Of the facts presented here we do not find any error affecting the substantial rights of defendant Lepke in the failure of the court to analyze his claims after [fol. 4052] they had been presented at such length by his counsel prior to the charge. On the contrary, so weak was his defense that great harm might have been occasioned to Lepke if the court had attempted to analyze the testimony of the witnesses called by him.

We shall now examine the corroborative evidence as to Capone which is discussed in the dissenting opinion.

Magoon testified that in April, 1939, Capone spoke to him with reference to one Friedman. A few days later Magoon saw Capone at the latter's home and asked him "if he thought it was advisable that I work on the Friedman thing because I hung out about a block away and I thought I would be recognized" to which Capone replied: "I worked on the Rosen thing and it was right on Sutter Avenue and I was not made" (identified).

Cross-examination developed little on this phase. After detailed questioning of Magoon on matters affecting credibility the court said that the witness "has already admitted previous crimes, a number of murder combinations and various crimes, it looks to the Court as if it comes down to a flat foot proposition whether or not the jury will, notwithstanding the facts just mentioned, believe he is telling the truth in this particular occasion concerning this particular crime. That is all. The jury requires no further persuasion he is a criminal or that he is a murderer."

Counsel for Capone argues that that could not be considered as corroboration, and I shall take that up later, but assuming for the moment that it could be so considered, he says that that was the only item in Magoon's testimony which could be so considered. Therefore, he argues, that the court erred when it submitted the item which may be referred to as the participation of Capone in the "tailing" of Rubin by Magoon in preparation for another attack on him and Capone's statement on an occasion when Magoon was reporting thereon, "That Rubin is hurting Lep. We have got to hit him in the head and get rid of him." Originally the court submitted those two items, saying: "Those two items, as I have said, are the only evidence from non-accomplice witnesses which can be submitted on the question of corroboration."

As to the complicity of Capone in the "tailing" of Rubin for what the court referred to as the second attempted assassination, I think, it could well be argued that that was corroboration of the testimony of Bernstein and Berger because it evinced consciousness of guilt of Capone in that, knowing that he, Buchalter and Weiss were all implicated in the murder of Rosen, it was necessary for Capone to become concerned in the spoliation of evidence against anyone of those three because what might become harmful to Buchalter might lead thereafter to the apprehension and conviction of Capone. A jury might find that when Capone put it upon the ground that the witness was to be destroyed because he was hurting "Lep," Capone was thinking of himself but using the name of one of the other guilty men rather than his own name.

I do not think that is necessary so to argue here because of that which occurred during the requests to charge and [fol. 4053] which, I think, disposes of this item of the "tailing" of Rubin for the purpose of having him killed. The following I quote: "The Court: 40, I had this penciled notation: There is also testimony of Magoon as to Capone being involved in preparation for intended assassination of Rubin. Counsel for Capone: I intend to except to that. I don't want—with your Honor's permission—The Court: The way you frame this, if you want to read it, go ahead and read it. Counsel for Capone: 40. I ask your Honor to charge the jury that the only alleged corroboration of the accomplice Solomon Bernstein's testimony in so far as the defendant Capone is concerned, is the alleged oral statement made by the defendant Capone to Seymour Magoon in the year 1939, at the home of the defendant, in which the defendant is alleged to have stated, 'I worked on the Rosen thing right on Sutter Avenue, and I was not made. I hung around there too. What are you worrying about being made?' The Court: Denied. Counsel for Capone: Respectfully except. I ask your Honor to charge the jury, in so far as the alleged statement which I have just read is concerned, that the jury has no right to speculate, surmise, or add to such alleged statement, but if they believe same must determine that in their opinion it is sufficient independent evidence tending to connect the defendant Capone with the crime charged, or they must acquit. The Court: I will have to think about that one. Now you are getting into a deep question of law. Counsel for Capone: That is why I said to your Honor I did not want to read it out loud. The Court: I will so charge; that the alleged preparation, if it occurred, in which Capone is alleged to have participated, for the second attempted assassination of Rubin, is of value only in connection with and in event of the declaration previously alleged to have been made by Capone being truthfully testified to by Magoon. Counsel for Capone: Thank you very much."

That, it seems to bring the corroboration, under the charge down to the one item of conversation in which Capone said that he had worked on the "Rosen thing" and had not been "made" and thus that Magoon need not worry about the "Friedman thing."

Counsel for Capone argues that in order to have that corroboration of the story of the accomplices, the jury must have found that the words "on the" means "implicated in" and that the "Rosen thing" mean the "Rosen murder."

We shall assume that to be correct. That was for the jury. The sentence must be read in the light of its setting. Murder is a harsh word. No doubt murderers prefer to use another word. "Implicate" is a lawyer's or a judge's word and not that of a Magoon or a Capone. It was well said in Weathered v. State (129 Tex. Cr. 514), which was in turn quoted in Wigmore on Evidence ([3rd Ed.] Vol. VII, § 2094, p. 473): "We cannot agree that it is proper to so mutilate a statement made. The setting of a word or words gives character to them, and may wholly change their apparent meaning." In Towne v. Eisner (245 U. S. 418, 425), HOLMES, J. said: "A word is not a crystal, trans- [fol. 4054] parent and unchanged; it is the skin of a living thought and may vary greatly in color and content according to the circumstances and the time in which it is used."

Let us examine the circumstances and time: (1) Capone, on the day before the murder took Bernstein in an automobile, passed Rosen's candy store on Sutter avenue and said "Here is where somebody is going to be killed;" (2) he showed Bernstein the route to be taken after the murder seven or eight times; (3) in making the quoted statement, Magoon was talking of "work on the Friedman thing" which was to take place "sort of off Sutter Avenue" and Magoon "hung out about a block away;" (4) Capone then said "What are you worried about? I worked on the Rosen thing and it was right on Sutter Avenue and I was not made;" (5) Rosen had been shot and killed on Sutter avenue.

It was for the jury to say under section 399 of the Code of Criminal Procedure whether Capone's statement to Magoon tended to connect him with the commission of the crime. Counsel argues that it would not and says: "The conversation could only be admitted as a circumstance to be considered in determining whether the defendant was implicated in the crime, and would, like other circumstantial evidence, have to lead irresistably to a conclusion of guilt, to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis to the contrary to a moral certainty. (Wharton's on Criminal Evidence, [10th ed.] § 622-b; People v. Bennett, 49 N. Y. 105.) Otherwise, it would not constitute corroboration." That is not the rule as to corroboration. (People v. Reddy, 261 N. Y. 479, 484; People v. Kress, 284 N. Y. 452, 460;

People v. Cohen, 223 N. Y. 406, 426; People v. Elliot, 106 N. Y. 288, 292; People v. Hooglikerk, 149 N. Y. 162; People v. Everhardt, 104 N. Y. 591, 594.)

Although that is not the rule, nevertheless, the court was asked to charge and did charge as follows: "Counsel for Capone: All right. I ask your Honor to charge the jury that if, after considering the evidence, they find it is susceptible of two constructions, one indicating the defendant Capone's guilt and the other his innocence, they must give the defendant Capone the benefit of the construction most favorable to him and must acquit him, and if the jury find that the two constructions are evenly balanced, then the People have not met the burden imposed upon them and the jury must acquit the defendant Capone. The Court: I take it, gentlemen, this goes to the question as to whether the language which is alleged by Magoon to have been used by Capone is susceptible of interpretation on the hypothesis of innocence. I have taken great care of Capone's end of the case because of the difference between the corroborative evidence as to him and as to the others. It is so limited in record content, I even went to the extent of quoting verbatim from the record, so there would be no mistake about it. You know the text. Of course, if you think that is capable of interpretation on the hypothesis of innocence, why, follow that and acquit him. If you think it hooks him up and it is not capable of interpretation on the hypothesis of innocence, and you believe Magoon in that [fol. 4055] testimony, then you have a right to consider whether or not it corroborates sufficiently to tend to connect Capone with the commission of the crime, the details of which, as against Capone, were testified to by Bernstein and by Berger, which go into considerable detail. Of course, if this alleged corroborative testimony is found to be true and so tends, you are entitled to convict. Otherwise acquit."

Let us return now for a moment to the quoted portion of the examination about the "Rosen thing". In People v. Feolo (284 N. Y. 381) the following was said by the defendant Brabson, "On a murder charge that happened about six years ago in New York City. I thought it blew over, but finally I am going back to New York on that charge." We were unanimously of the opinion that that statement was a sufficient corroboration of the accomplice, if believed by a jury, and was sufficient to take the case to the jury.

Now we go back to the meaning of the "Friedman thing". The counsel in the case knew what working on the "Friedman thing" was. Counsel for Capone argued at one point in the trial, as follows: "May I add just one more thing before the jury comes back. I understand from other counsel, which I did not know, that this man (Magoon) is charged with the Friedman killing and they are going to bring it out on cross-examination, which would make the error still more harmful." Thereafter counsel for Weiss, asked Magoon the following questions and received the following replies: "Q. You helped to kill a man named Whitey Friedman, did you not? A. I drove the car on that occasion as well. Q. And you knew that Whitey Friedman was to be killed? A. Yes, sir. Q. When you drove the car? A. Yes, sir. Q. You knew what the job was that night, didn't you? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you drove the men who did kill Whitey Friedman to where Whitey Friedman was? A. The man who killed him. Q. The man who did it. And then you drove that man away, did you, after Whitey Friedman was killed? A. Yes, sir. Q. How was he killed? Was he shot? A. Shot."

In addition, Tannenbaum had already testified: "Q. In the Whitey Friedman murder, what part did you play? A. I fingered him."

Counsel for Capone argues in his brief that if the District Attorney should contend that Magoon in his question to Capone regarding the "Friedman thing" referred to a "Friedman murder": "Then Magoon's question would constitute proof of another crime, and the admission of this testimony would be error. (People v. Molineaux, 168 N. Y. 264; People v. Dolan, 186 N. Y. 4; People v. Katz, 209 N. Y. 311.)" The question of Magoon to Capone as to whether he (Magoon) should "work on" the murder of a man named Friedman, would certainly be no proof of another crime by Capone and the mere statement of the proposition is its refutation.

The defendant Weiss also urges that it was reversible error to receive the testimony concerning the alleged attempts of Weiss to have Rubin killed.

[fol. 4056] It appears that after the murder of Rosen, defendant Weiss stated, according to the testimony of People's witness Berger, that "We got some information that Max Rubin is squealing and he has got to be hit." Magoon testified that after the Rosen murder defendant Capone stated "that Rubin is hurting Lep and we got to hi*m* him in the head and get rid of him." These statements by defendants Weiss and Capone are some evidence that they feared the "squealing" of Rubin and that they feared they would be implicated if Rubin continued to "squeal" or to hurt Lepke. I have already indicated that Rubin was a key witness in the trial of the instant case, because of his position as a go-between Lepke and those who were affected by Lepke's union activities, Rosen for example. Rubin's past conduct in that capacity had been such that when Lepke thought it was best for Rubin to get out of town after the Rosen killing, he told Rubin to introduce Berger to the men from whom Rubin was collecting money for Lepke, evidently intending to use Berger as a go-between successor of Rubin. Defendant Lepke's efforts to keep the witness Rubin out of town, as indicated in Rubin's testimony, indicate that Lepke as well as Weiss and Capone realized the key position and importance of Rubin in case of the trial of any charge growing out of the Rosen murder, or any charge which might lead the District Attorney to the uncovering of those responsible for the Rosen murder. There was, therefore, clearly some evidence to indicate not only that all the defendants here were implicated in the shooting of the witness Rubin, but that that attempted murder was made necessary in their eyes by the murder of Rosen and the threats and grand jury testimony of Rubin. From their standpoint it was necessary to remove Rubin and so prevent him from testifying against them. This was in line with Lepke's statement to Mr. Maguire that, "If witnesses are not available, investigations collapse." It is true that the court charged that the shooting of Rubin and the subsequent "tailing" of him by Magoon was not to be considered against Lepke but might be considered, if believed, only against Weiss and Capone but that was a ruling favoring Lepke.

In People v. Place (157 N. Y. 584), the defendant was accused of killing her step-daughter and the prosecution was allowed to prove an assault by the defendant upon her husband, the father of the murdered girl. This court said, at page 598: "The prosecution was allowed to prove an assault by the defendant upon her husband when he returned home, and when the death of Ida could no longer be concealed unless he was removed or his life destroyed. The demeanor, conduct and acts of a person charged with crime, such as attempted flight, a desire to elude discovery, an anxiety to conceal the crime, or the evidence of it, are always proper subjects of consideration, as indicative of a guilty mind, and in determining the question of the guilt or innocence of the person charged. (Citing cases)." In People v. Thau (219 N. Y. 39, 42), this court said, quoting with approval from an opinion of Mr. Justice BREWER (afterward an associate justice of the Supreme Court of [fol. 4057] the United States) in State v. Adams (20 Kans. 311, 319): "And, on the other hand, it is equally clear that whatever testimony tends directly to show the defendant guilty of the crime charged is competent, although it also tends to show him guilty of another and distinct offense. A party cannot by multiplying his crimes diminish the volume of competent testimony against him. A man may commit half a dozen distinct crimes and the same facts or some of them, may tend directly to prove his guilt of all; and on the trial for any one of such crimes it is no objection to the competency of such facts as testimony that they also tend to prove his guilt of the others." (Emphasis supplied.) See also, People v. Peckens (153 N. Y. 576, 594; People v. Katz, 209 N. Y. 311, 328-329). In People v. Peckens (supra), at page 594 this court said: "The contention of the appellant, that the evidence of other transactions by the defendant and his confederates was inadmissible, because it tended to prove that they were guilty of other crimes, cannot be sustained. It is well settled by the decisions of this court that while evidence of the commission of one crime is not admissible to establish a party's guilt of another, yet, that is not inadmissible because it tends to prove another crime if it is otherwise material and relevant. That such evidence is admissible where its purpose is to show intent or guilty knowledge, or where the transaction proved had some relation to or connection with the transaction upon which the indictment was based, or where it formed a link in the chain of circumstances or facts which led up to the transaction involved, we think there can be no doubt under the authorities as they exist in this state. (People v. McLaughlin, 150 N. Y. 386).

This case clearly falls within the exceptions to the general rule, and as the evidence was relevant to the issue it was not inadmissible simply because it tended to prove the defendant and his confederates guilty of other crimes."

In addition, we may say that the rule of People v. Molineaux (168 N. Y. 264, 291), is primarily applicable to a wholly independent crime when there is no connection between the two crimes. (People v. Katz, 202 N. Y. 311, 327).

Clearly Weiss' attempts to have Rubin killed were directly relevant to the issue on trial. In People v. Spaulding (309 Ill. 292, 302-306), it was said: "Evidence that the accused has attempted to destroy evidence against himself is always admissible for the purpose of showing consciousness of guilt, (People v. Fox, 269 Ill. 300) as is also evidence tending to show an attempt to bribe witnesses. (Citing cases). In People v. Roberts, 306 Ill. 240, evidence showing that the defendant arranged for a conveyance out of the state of the prosecuting witness and gave her money to remain away from the county during the trial was considered admissible for the purpose of showing consciousness of guilt. State v. Keith, 47 Minn. 559, 50 N. W. 691, and Blair v. State, 72 Neb. 501, 101 N. W. 17 are similar cases and the holdings are the same. In Bowman v. United States (267 Fed. 648), the defendant was convicted of murder. It was held proper to prove that he [fol. 4058] threatened to kill the only eye-witness to the murder and that he had assaulted the witness with intent to kill." When Rubin returned to the city in violation of Lepke's instructions Weiss told Berger "we got some information that Max Rubin is squealing and he has got to be hit. I want you to point him out to Schlermer and work with Schlermer." When Weiss was arranging for a second attempt to eliminate Rubin he said "Look how lucky the s of a b is. He gets hit in the head and he is still alive. But we will catch up with him yet." Finally when arrested after flight Weiss said "I don't mind going back to New York except that I hate to sit between O'Dwyer and Dewey" and that "I had intentions of surrendering at a later date when O'Dwyer would leave office." He feared the squealing of Rubin because conscious of his guilt in the slaying of Rosen and desired to have Rubin destroyed.

It is urged that it was error for the court to charge: "The believability of any witness on any of the points mentioned is your job to decide, and I do not go into details of cross-examination because that likewise is your job. These are references purely. Cross-examination is almost impossible to correctly state in such a manner that two people can agree on its fairness because, while direct examination goes right to the point, cross-examination, being for the purpose of breaking down the direct is largely hit or miss: it is blank cartridge shooting. Once in a while you find it shown that a bullet had hit, but whether there is a hit or not may be a matter of dispute. Unless there be an outstanding point come out on cross-examination, the Court would only tend to confuse and mislead the jury if it attempted to discuss it."

We find no error in that charge. The cross-examination of the witness Bernstein, for instance, covered approximately five hundred pages. One cannot set out cross-examination as one can set out direct examination.

It is then urged that the following charge was incorrect: "There is nothing disreputable in a prosecuting attorney putting on the stand a witness who turns state's evidence. It is a proper method of prosecution and enforcement of the law. When rogues fall out, it is a wise man's delight; so while the court submits to you consideration of the testimony of witnesses who, by their own admissions and otherwise are impeached as professional criminals, murderers, thieves, perjurers, in the long run it comes down to this: Are they telling the truth now? If you are not reasonably satisfied that they are telling the truth now, you may not accept and be guided by their testimony, but if you are reasonably satisfied, having viewed with suspicion and accepted with caution their testimony, taking into consideration its impeachment, then you will be guided by it."

When exception was taken the court offered to withdraw it but counsel said he did not wish to be put in the position of asking the court to recall the jury for that purpose and that it was one of those things that was unintelligible to [fol. 4059] him. Nevertheless, after the jury was recalled the court said: "At one place during the charge I quoted an old saw, 'When rogues fall out, wise men delight.' That was intended to have general application. It was not intended as calling the defendants names, but, lest it be misunderstood as having specific application to the defendants as rogues, the Court withdraws and apologizes for it. It was not so meant. Just disregard it."

Counsel for defendants confronted the People's witnesses with their testimony upon other trials. Many or all of them said in substance "if it is in the book it is so" or something similar (the word 'book' referring to the record on the cross-examination). In the charge the court referred to that as a normal response and used the sentence, "Well, of course, if a man is asked whether he made an admission a long time ago, he may remember that, but to put a burden upon him of remembering the exact text of question and answer is an unholy thing. We have a court reporter here to supply daily minutes in this case because counsel forget overnight the questions and answers in text form of the day before, * * *." What the court said was helpful to the jury.

Defendants urge that they are entitled to a reversal because the court directed that the issues be tried before a special jury. The answer to that is that it is recited in the order granting the motion for a special jury that the District Attorney appeared in support of the motion and that each attorney for each defendant consented to the granting of the motion.

Defendants urge that they are entitled to a reversal of the judgment of conviction as matter of law because of the denial of their motion for change of venue to another county of the State, made pursuant to subdivision 2 of section 344 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In our judgment there is no merit in defendants claim for a number of reasons.

In the first place, the defendants were tried before a special jury drawn pursuant to article 18-B of the Judiciary Law (Cons. Laws, ch. 30). Each of the defendants consented to be tried before such special jury. The statute (Judiciary Law, § 749-aa, subd. 2) provides, "No person shall be selected as such special juror * * * who doubts his ability to lay aside an opinion or impression formed from newspaper reading or otherwise, or to render an impartial verdict upon the evidence, uninfluenced by any such opinion or impression * * * or who avows that he cannot in all cases give to a defendant who fails to testify as a witness in his own behalf the full benefit of the statutory provision that such defendant's neglect or refusal to testify as a witness in his behalf shall not create any presumption against him." A similar provision was incorporated in Laws of 1886, chapter 378, and in Laws of 1901, chapter 602. The statute is constitutional (People v. Dunn, 157 N. Y. 528) and was properly applicable upon proof that the defendants had been indicted for the crime of murder in the first degree. (People v. Hall 139 N. Y. 184). The statute further provides, in subdivision 7, "The rulings of the trial court, how-[fol. 4060] ever, in admitting or excluding evidence upon the trial of any challenge for actual bias shall not be the subject of exception. Such rulings and the allowance or disallowance of the challenge shall be final." Those provisions have been pronounced constitutional by this court. (People v. Dunn, supra; People v. Wolter, 203 N. Y. 484.)

The motion was addressed to the sound discretion of the court. We are not prepared to say on this record that its denial was an abuse of discretion. (People v. Hyde, 75 Misc. 407 [opinion by Mr. Justice LEHMAN, now Chief Judge of this court]; affd., 149 App. Div. 131; People v. Brindell, 194 App. Div. 776, 781; People v. Hines, 168 Misc. 453, 470; People v. Sarvis, 69 App. Div. 604.) This may also be said with reference to the motions of the defendants Weiss and Capone for a change of venue and for a severance.

The guilt of the defendants Buchalter and Weiss was clearly established. The guilt of the defendant Capone depended upon whether the jurors believed the testimony of a witness who corroborated the accomplices. That witness was a criminal. The court properly left to the jury the question whether they would believe or disbelieve him. That was peculiarly a jury question. We cannot say that the jury was bound as a matter of law to disbelieve him.

The judgments of conviction should be affirmed.

LEHMAN, Ch. J. (concurring). Joseph Rosen was killed on September 15, 1936, in circumstances which leave little room for doubt that he was shot by a gang of criminals to promote the nefarious purposes of the gang. Almost four years later these defendants were indicted for the murder. The trial took place five years after the murder.

At the trial, witnesses, produced by the District Attorney, testified that they were members of a criminal combination, or gang, or, at least, had friendly and intimate relations with members of a criminal combination or gang which preyed upon the public and which without hesitation and without questioning obeyed the orders of its leaders. According to their testimony violence and murder were ordinary methods of carrying out their criminal purposes. Some of these witnesses, confessed members of this hideously criminal gang, testified that they actually took part in the murder of Rosen in 1936. Others testified that though they were members of the gang and had callously taken part in other murders, they had no criminal connection with the particular murder of which the defendants have been found guilty. Still others, though denying criminal connection with the gang, claimed, or at least admitted, intimate business and social relations with the leader of the gang. Witnesses who had no relations of any kind with the gang or its leader, and whose credibility has not been impeached, showed the manner in which the killing was perpetrated and the circumstances surrounding it. Their testimony is not challenged, but it throws little, if any, light upon the identity of the killers, nor does it in any manner tend to connect the defendants with the crime or to corroborate the testimony of the witnesses who admit that they are professional [fol. 4061] criminals. The only testimony which might serve to cast upon these defendants even serious suspicion of complicity in the crime was given by witnesses who, as matter of law, were, according to their own admission, accomplices in this killing, or men who, according to their admissions were accomplices in other killings by the same gang or, at least, had intimate relations—guilty or otherwise—with its leaders. There can be no question that the only proof against these defendants comes from witnesses who in their testimony against these defendants proved their own guilt of the murder of Rosen and from other witnesses who, though denying guilty complicity in the Rosen murder admitted guilty complicity in other murders and hideous crimes.

The facts which the People claim were established by the testimony of these witnesses are exhaustively stated in the opinion of Judge Conway. It would serve no purpose to repeat them or, at this point, to analzye in detail their effect. I point out here only that in any discussion of the questions presented upon this appeal we should bear in mind that all the essential facts which the People claim demonstrate beyond reasonable doubt the guilt of these defendants are proven, if at all, only by the testimony of degraded criminals whose credibility is impeached, if not completely destroyed, by a cross-examination in which they admitted a callous disregard of every law, human and divine—including the provisions of both the penal law and of the divine commands against bearing false witness against their neighbors.

The jury is the arbiter of the credibility of the witnesses and of the weight of the evidence produced by the People. It must determine whether that evidence proves the guilt of an accused beyond a reasonable doubt. Whether that evidence is sufficient to overcome the presumption of innocence and to remove all reasonable doubt of guilt is, nonetheless, a question of law which this court may, in all cases, review (People v. Glurk, 188 N. Y. 167), and when the judgment is one of death this court must also pass upon the question whether the verdict is against the weight of evidence and whether justice requires a new trial. (Code Crim. Proc., §529.) "While no one doubts that in the great majority of cases the character and credibility of witnesses and the believeability of testimony should be left to the final determination of a jury, yet the fact that the statute imposes upon us the absolute duty of deciding whether a verdict in a murder case is against the weight of evidence would seem to make it equally plain that the law contemplates the possibility that a jury may be swayed or led into giving an unjust and unwarranted verdict and requires us to correct the error when it does occur." (People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274.)

An accused, however degraded, is entitled to a fair trial before an impartial jury to whom all competent and material evidence relevant to the charge has been presented and from whom all irrelevant evidence, tending to prejudice it against the defendant, has been withheld. The accused is entitled to demand that the issues of fact be submitted to the jury in a charge which correctly defines the questions [fol. 4062] upon which the jury is the arbiter and the rules of law which bind the jury and is calculated to assist the jury in its deliberations. These are fundamental rights of all accused, guaranteed by the Constitution and part of the freedom which this country is now desperately fighting to defend. To the extent that the trial court errs either in its rulings or in its charge or fails to safeguard the rights of the accused to a fair trial or intrudes upon the field reserved to the jury and withdraws from the jury questians upon which the jury is the sole arbiter, the verdict of the jury is tainted and is not a conclusive finding of guilt.

We are admonished by the Legislature to disregard technical errors or defects or exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties. All of us heed that admonition and recognize wholeheartedly its wisdom. Sometimes, perhaps, we need more an admonition to remember that it is the jury, not the court which weighs the guilt or innocence of the accused, and that errors or defects which taint the finding of guilt by a jury indubitably affect the substantial rights of the accused even though the judges of an appellate court may be of the opinion that guilt has been clearly established. The trial of the defendants has been long. They have been zealously—even hotly accused by an experienced prosecutor, and they have been zealously—even hotly—defended by experienced council. Sometimes zeal greatly exceeded discretion. In such a trial it is not easy for the presiding judge to maintain decorum and to rule correctly at all times. Some lapses and errors are almost inevitable and such indiscretion of speech or conduct, though regretable, are entirely venial. It is not the duty or function of this court to pardon or to censure; it is its duty to determine whether errors or defects, if any, have tainted the jury's verdict and may have deprived the accused of his right to a judgment of a jury of his peers, arrived at after a fair trial conducted in accordance with the law. After the court has determined that errors or defects are present, it must appraise their effect in their setting at the trial.

Errors and defects must be viewed and weighed as an incident of the trial and in relation to all the other incidents of the trial including all the rulings of the trial court. In weighing them the judges of the appellate court must, so far as they can, form a picture of the whole trial. They must endeavor to see that picture as the jurors saw it. Errors which loom large to a judge, learned in the law and trained to administer justice in strict accordance with the law, may be scarcely visible to the lay juror. On the other hand, some errors or defects and perhaps especially, those due to excess of zeal of court or prosecuting attorney may be too easily disregarded by an appellate judge who knows from experience the difficulty of restraining speech and ruling correctly on all questions of law in the heat and hurry of a criminal trial.

The possible effect of error or defect upon the substantial rights of a defendant cannot be measured by any rule of [fol. 4063] thumb—determination there depends upon the judgment of each appellate judge, and often there is room for difference of opinion.

The errors and defects in this case are, it seems clear to me, many. Judge LOUGHRAN has set forth some which in his opinion cannot be disregarded. I agree with him that these errors and defects are present and these errors and defects and others shown by the record cannot be disregarded without hesitation lest in our anxiety that the guilty should not escape punishment we affirm a judgment tainted with errors obtained through violation of fundamental rights. Only careful, I might almost say prayerful, consideration can remove that hesitation.

Upon such consideration I have found it impossible to accept the contention that the record presents few, if any, errors, and that any errors or defects that might conceivably be found should be disregarded as trifles, when weighed in the balance against the mass of evidence produced to establish the defendants' guilt though that evidence comes from a polluted source. With characteristic self-restraint, Judge LOUGHRAN has understated the fact that the proof against the defendants comes from the lips of witnesses of such "low, moral caliber" that "uncertainty concerning the guilt of the defendants is produced to such an extent as to render substantial and reversible an error of law which, under other circumstances, might be regarded as harmless." I shall refer briefly to that "uncertainty" hereafter. I content myself now with the statement that even if the proof were far stronger it would still remain true that "the question of substantial right is not the abstract question of guilt or innocence. A guilty man is entitled to a fair trial and a trial is not fair if the verdict may be related to errors in the judge's charge. Error is substantial when we can say that it tended to influence the jury." (People v. Sobieskodo, 235 N. Y. 411; opinion by POUND, J.) On the other hand, after consideration of the record I feel constrained to appraise the effect of the errors committed at the trial differently from Judge LOUGHRAN, and I shall state as briefly as I can the reasons for my conclusions.

I take up first the failure of the trial judge to analyze the evidence so as to present to the jury fairly the conflicting claims of the People and the defendants, and the complete omission by the trial judge of any "review of cross-examination or of any of the evidence on the several defendants' side of the case." The issue of the guilt of the defendants depends, as I have already indicated, almost entirely upon the credibility of the witnesses of the People. If Bernstein, Berger and Rubin honestly tried to tell the truth there could be no doubt of the guilt of Buchalter and Weiss and perhaps no substantial doubt of the guilt of Capone. I do not think that it is possible that the jury was misled into the belief that any substantial question was involved other than the credibility of these witnesses. True the defendant Weiss produced some witnesses to sustain his claimed alibi, but it is impossible, I think, to read this long record without reaching the conclusion that the [fol. 4064] jury undoubtedly understood that, in final analysis, the vital question which they were called upon to decide was whether the People's witnesses were truthfully fastening upon these defendants a guilty share in the murder of Rosen, or whether they were testifying falsely for the purpose of avoiding, in whole or in part, the penalty which they richly deserved for their own participation in that murder or in other murders. Some of the judges of this court may think that in the exercise of a wide discretion the trial judge should have pointed out to the jury those considerations which might tend to justify reliance upon the testimony of confessedly degraded witnesses, and those considerations which might lead to the conclusion that there is no truth in such witnesses. It is the function and duty of the trial judge to explain to the jury the questions of fact which the jury must decide and the rules of law which the jury must accept and apply. He must be accorded a broad discretion in the selection of testimony which might support the contention advanced by the parties and also the emphasis he should place in his charge upon the contentions of either party in order to make the issues clear to the jury so that it may not be misled after a long trial. A charge which refers to the evidence produced and the arguments advanced by one side alone may tend to mislead the jury into the belief that little can be said for the other side. That would at times constitute an abuse of discretion so serious as to require a new trial in a capital case. I do not find that in this case the failure of the trial judge to review the cross-examination of the People's witnesses, or to review the evidence produced by the defendants could have such effect.

Argument not without weight might, indeed, be made that any attempt to present in the charge a statement or summary of the testimony of the witnesses produced by the defendants would inevitably disclose the lack of substance of such testimony. Nor is it clear that any review of the cross-examination of the People's witnesses would have been helpful to the defendants. The cross-examination of the important witnesses continued for days and no summary could be entirely satisfactory. The omission, even so, would be serious if in contrast the trial judge in his charge has referred to the claims of the People, and the evidence produced by the People in manner which would tend to impress upon the jury the strength of the People's case. I do not find in the charge such contrast. The trial judge was bound to refer to evidence of the People tending to show an admission of guilt or, at least, consciousness of guilt upon the part of individual defendants, in order to warn the jury that such evidence could not be considered against the other defendants. He attempted little more. At the same time, the trial judge explained why he did not review the cross-examination of the People's witnesses or refer to testimony which might be favorable to the defendants. I might wish that the charge had been different. I have concluded nevertheless, that the defect here, if any, could not have misled the jury and does not affect the substantial rights of the defendants.

[fol. 4065] There are some errors and defects which cause me far more concern. As Judge Loughran has, in my opinion, completely demonstrated, the trial judge erred at times in ruling on evidence and at times usurped the function of the jury to draw inferences from the evidence and to determine the facts. I shall refer in this opinion only to those errors and defects which are perhaps the most serious. (1) The exclusion by the trial judge of the letter which the witness Bernstein wrote while in custody with other witnesses, and (2) the charge of the trial judge concerning the "argument attacking the time-table fable." Though I do not refer to each of the other errors and defects set forth in Judge Loughran's opinion because I consider them less serious, they are not to be cast aside completely. As Judge Loughran has pointed out, the ultimate question which we must decide is not whether any error or defect standing alone be sufficient to justify the conclusion that it affected a substantial right of the defendant, but rather whether the cumulative effect of the combination of errors and defects resulted in depriving the defendants of a fair trial.

An inordinately long trial was followed by long summation of counsel and the prosecuting attorney had the last word. The District Attorney admitted in his summation that the principal witnesses for the People were men of evil character and counsel for the defense did not attempt to picture the defendants as honest, law abiding citizens. The accusing witnesses and the defendants were, as I have said, members of a gang or, at least, had close relations with leaders of a gang engaged in criminal practices nefarious even beyond the imagination of any fiction writer unless he had the genius of a Balzac. Counsel for the defense, of course, did not fail to point out to the jury that the witnesses for the People were, on their own admission, at least as bad as the defendants on trial and that the jury might infer that the reward offered to them for testifying as they did was a promise that they would escape the penalty for their admitted crimes. The prosecuting attorney was justified in attempting to argue in answer that such criminal gangs cannot be destroyed unless through fear of punishment and hope to escape extreme punishment, some members of the gang could be induced to confess in order to save their own worthless lives and to give testimony against other members of the gang. It is difficult, however, to justify the statement of the District Attorney in his summation: "Don't let anybody fool you with Christmas present nonsense. Gentlemen, the courts have confidence in the integrity and common sense of juries and jurors. Have a little faith in the integrity of the courts and the prosecutor as to what will happen to witnesses. Right now they are too valuable pieces of bric-a-brac to be dealt with as Lepke, Weiss and Capone would want." In those words there is implicit a promise which the prosecuting attorney could not properly or truthfully make that in due time the witnesses would receive their just deserts.

Conscious as I am that there can be no certainty of the guilty of these defendants since the credibility of the wit- [fol. 4066] nesses against them is so seriously impeached, and recognizing as I do that errors and defects at the trial are many, I still reach the conclusion that the verdict of the jury was not influenced by these errors and defects and should not be set aside because of them. The rulings of the trial judge in the admission and exclusion of evidence may have kept from the jury some evidence which would demonstrate the evil character of the witnesses, but the evil character of the witnesses was so clearly demonstrated by other evidence that additional impeachment could, I think, have had no possible effect upon the jury. Nor could any ruling or statement of the trial judge in regard to the bad character of the defendants make the jury more certain of the evil character of the defendants, for that had been overwhelmingly proven by other evidence. The verdict of the jury rests, it is plain, or the conclusion that the story of the People's witnesses is credible and furnishes proof of the defendants' guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, in spite of the pollution of the source of the proof. Some support for that conclusion may be found in testimony which is not seriously challenged concerning the previous relations of these defendants with the members of the gang and, in the case of Buchalter to a lesser degree with the murdered man. That testimony is far from sufficient to prove the defendants' guilt. It does not even tend to connect the defendants with the crime, but it is a circumstance which fits into the picture of the crime as drawn by these witnesses whose credibility has been irretrivably impeached. It justifies at least strong suspicion and jurors, quite naturally, are more prone to base a finding upon evidence otherwise lacking in force, but which tends to support a strong suspicion than are judges trained to decide questions of fact solely upon competent and relevant evidence. The jury has appraised the evidence and in my opinion it cannot reasonably be said that any ruling of the trial judge which is challenged on this appeal may have affected that appraisal.

True, as I have said earlier, the court in the charge instructed the jury as matter of law upon some questions of fact which only the jury had the right to determine, and I may add parenthetically that I doubt whether I would agree with the inferences drawn by the trial judge even if he had been the trier of the facts. I recognize that no intrusion by the trial judge upon the field reserved for the jury may be lightly disregarded. Even so, I conclude that in this case the errors viewed as part of a long trial could not have affected the verdict. It is difficult, perhaps impossible to avoid all error upon such a trial, but the vital question involved was so plain and the meaning of the challenged parts of the charge so obscure that I cannot believe that the jury was misled. It has found the defendants guilty, and though I might have been unwilling, if I had been a member of the jury, to concur in the verdict, I cannot as a judge say that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence.

I cannot refrain from repeating in conclusion that I find the errors and defects numerous and I have hesitated long in reaching the conclusion that they may be disregarded, [fol. 4067] especially since three of my associates are convinced and have argued persuasively that they affect the substantial rights of the defendants. I regret many incidents that occurred at the trial. I regret the summation of the prosecuting attorney and his remarks in the course of the trial. I regret some of the rulings of the trial judge. Evidence coming from a polluted source has failed to remove reasonable doubt of the defendants' guilt from my mind. All that is immaterial if the jury is convinced of guilt on sufficient evidence and no errors and defects affected the verdict. Even if I were entirely convinced of the defendants' guilt I should vote to reverse if I found room for doubt that the jury would have reached the same conclusion if all error had been avoided. Because I have no doubt that the errors did not affect the verdict I am constrained to vote to affirm.

LOUGHRAN, J. (dissenting):

Early on the morning of Sunday, September 13, 1936, Joseph Rosen was shot to death in a store kept by him at 725 Sutter avenue, Brooklyn. A jury have found that the homicide was the result of a conspiracy among the three defendants—Buchalter, Weiss and Capone—and that the crime was murder in the first degree.

Buchalter was said to have feared lest Rosen make complaint against him to the District Attorney of the county of New York. For that reason—as the People asserted—Buchalter had commanded Weiss to have Rosen done away with. There is evidence that Weiss killed Rosen with the aid of Capone, Harry Strauss, James Ferraco, Farvel Cohen, Paul Berger and Sholem Bernstein. Strauss, Ferraco and Cohen do not appear in this record either as parties defendant or witnesses. Berger and Bernstein testified for the People.

(1) The testimony of Bernstein is all-important. He was the chief of the prosecution witnesses. Put into direct discourse, his story in substance was this: In the early afternoon of Friday, September 11, 1936, Strauss, who was then accompanied by Cohen and Capone, met me on a street in Brooklyn where Strauss told me to steal an automobile and find a drop [garage] for it. I did this on that same day. On the next day—Saturday September 12—Capone pointed out Rosen's store to me as a place where someone was to be killed and then taught me a getaway route. Early the next day—Sunday, September 13—I drove the stolen car to the vicinity of Rosen's store, as Weiss had told me to do. I saw Weiss, Strauss and Ferraco walk toward the store. I stayed behind the wheel of the stolen car with the motor running. I heard a lot of shots. Weiss, Strauss and Ferraco ran from the store into the car. I started on the route Capone had shown me. I drove to Van Sinderen and Livonia avenues where we abandoned the stolen car. Capone and Cohen met us there with other cars.

These judgments of conviction necessarily rest upon the finding that the above-stated recital by Bernstein was credible evidence. At his own word, Bernstein is a long-time professional criminal. As we shall see in a moment, he is a former perjurer who perversely and flagrantly lied [fol. 4068] again to the jury on this present trial. By the doubtful testimony of a witness of such low moral fibre, uncertainty concerning the guilt of the defendants is produced to such an extent as to render substantial and reversible an error of law which, under other circumstances, might be regarded as harmless. (People v. Pignataro, 263 N. Y. 229. See People v. Cashin, 259 N. Y. 434.) From that point of view, we take up the exceptions of the defendants.

(2) In his testimony, Bernstein did not mention Buchalter. Two other witnesses for the People (Rubin and the accomplice Berger) swore that Buchalter had ordered Weiss to bring about the death of Rosen. Rubin and Berger fixed the time when that order was given as well along in the afternoon of Friday, September 11, 1936, after Rubin (as he said) had reported to Buchalter, "that I went to Murray Weinstein to do something for me about Joe Rosen and that Murray Weinstein said he can't do anything." On the other hand, Bernstein swore it was earlier in the afternoon of that day when Strauss had requested him to steal the murder car. As to this surface inconsistency in the proof of the People, the trial judge in his charge said to the jury: "There is not a particle of evidence in the case as to when, if at all, Buchalter communicated in reference to the preparation work. The case is blank on that. There is no way of knowing. We do not know whether he did so, or, if he did, whether it was in the morning or the afternoon or the evening; but you have the testimony of Bernstein about when he received the alleged instructions to steal a car and hire a drop, which was earlier in the day. Taken in connection with the other facts, concerning the alleged preparation work, and putting this and that together, you have a right to draw such inference as you see fit."

After the jury had retired, the judge recalled them and further charged upon the same subject in this manner: "The case is blind as to whether or not Buchalter communicated. There is no way we know. You cannot presume that he did and you cannot presume that he did not, but I will say that the argument of one of the counsel for the defense in attacking the time tables as told by Bernstein as inconsistent with Rubin's testimony and Berger's testimony, is predicated upon an assumption on his part that there was no communication by Buchalter until after Rubin returned and gave word that Weinstein could not do anything. I charge you this—and I think this is accurate and will hold and will not be error—that there is no such presumption, and you are not justified in so presuming. If there is no such presumption, of course, then the argument attacking the time table fails."

Thus the last word of the judge withdrew from the jury a vital issue of fact and disposed of it in favor of the People as matter of law. This was obvious error. "What the evidence is—also what it proves—what credit a witness is entitled to and all like things, are [in criminal cases] exclusively for the jury; and any charge is ill which takes this from them, or in any degree obstructs their free action thereon" (2 Bishop's New Criminal Procedure, [2d ed.], pp. 819-820.)

[fol. 4069] (3) For more than a year prior to this trial, Bernstein had been kept in custody at a hotel as one of a group described by him as members of "the mob." The main contention of the defense was that Bernstein's testimony against the defendants had been there fabricated by this group in an endeavor to shift the incidence of the death penalty for the killing of Rosen. This contention went to the heart of the People's case. (People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, 308-309.) As an answer, Bernstein testified that during his confinement in the hotel he was under surveillance day and night by the police. Though that testimony was uncorroborated, the trial judge refused to let the jury pass upon its credibility. More than that, the judge certified to the trustworthiness of that testimony in this way: "You cannot lock criminals together when they are waiting their turn to be called to testify and let them put their heads together and maybe plot something behind the backs of the police. That would be sloppy police work, to permit discussion." The judge was without power so to invade the province of the jury.

(4) On cross-examination, Bernstein denied any letter had been written or sent by him while he was in custody at the hotel. Confronted then with three letters written in his own hand upon the hotel stationery, he owned he had lied. The quality of these documents is exhibited by the following excerpt: "Do you know how many guys are pinched just for conversation. Why do you make me write like this. I don't want to hurt you. Again I want t know did I do you any harm the way you are defying me. Well there is no sence of me trying to threaten you if you want it that away. So Cherry you are making me do this that I don't want all for $200 dollars. I just want to remind you years don't mean anything to me." (The emphasis was first hand.)

The trial judge refused to receive these letters in evidence. Here again there is need to remember how the case for the People hangs on the credibility of Bernstein as a witness. Once more there is need also to keep in mind the theory of the People that at the hotel Bernstein was never free to concert with others in respect of his role upon this trial. In both aspects, these letters were proximately relevant evidence on the side of the defendants. We think the text thereof should have been put before the jury. (See People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, 298.)

(5) After Rosen had been killed but before the trial of the present case, Bernstein was a prosecution witness on a trial held at Monticello, Sullivan county. On that trial, he tried to swear away the life of one Gangy Cohen who was there accused of another murder. As regards his former testimony in the Cohen case, Bernstein was examined on the present trial as follows: "Q. Did you testify in the trial of Gangy Cohen to anything that was not true? A. Yes, sir, I knew I was doing wrong. Q. Did you fail to testify to some things that were true? A. Yes, sir, I knew I was doing wrong. * * * Q. Were you asked these questions and did you give these answers? A. My mind is very clear. Go ahead. * * * 'Question: And you had nothing [fol. 4070] to do with any murder on any occasion? Answer: That is right.' Q. Were you asked that question and did you give that answer? A. Yes, sir."

It was manifestly the duty of the trial judge to warn the jury specifically of the necessity of wariness on their part in consequence of this confession by Bernstein that where another life depended on his oath he had corruptly suppressed his participation in the murder here ascribed by him to two of these defendants. (Cf. Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y. 523.) The judge said: "The answer given to the question you have just read in the other trial could be viewed as being meant to be true if the witness considered it referred to the actual shooting. It would be untrue in relation t his being a principal under section 2 of the Penal Law, in the other work than killing." This animadversion was very much in the nature of a charge to the jury. (People v. Wood, 126 N. Y. 249, 269.) In our judgment, the exception taken thereto is valid.

(6) The sole support for Bernstein's accomplice-story against Capone was the People's witness Magoon. It was said by Magoon that Capone had made to him an oral utterance in these words: "I worked on the Rosen thing and it was right on Sutter Avenue and I was not made." In the declared opinion of the trial judge, the statement so reported by Magoon was "too indefinite" to be used as a confession of guilt on the part of Capone. At the same time, however, the judge directed the jury that Magoon's testimony (if credited) could be taken as corroborative evidence tending to connect Capone with the burden of Rosen. This was a controlling ruling. Belief in the actuality of Capone's oral admission as reported by Magoon was an indispensable condition of the finding of Capone's guilt. Hence the affirmance of these judgments of conviction must bespeak the conclusion of this court that the testimony of Magoon is not an altogether insufficient ground for the signing of the death warrant of Capone. (See People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348.) On this angle of the case we have felt—and still feel—no little concern.

A testimonial report of an oral admission of a party-litigant is generally the most dangerous evidence that can be received in a court of justice, and the most liable to abuse. (Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend. 268, 277.) Even when the admission is reported by a reputable witness, the testimony is often the weakest and most unsatisfactory of all the kinds of evidence. (See the authorities set forth in 7 Wigmore on Evidence, [3rd ed.] § 2094, p. 468.) Magoon was not a reputable witness. He is a self-confessed murderer. His appearance on the witness stand had no object but the saving of his own skin. There is thus grave question whether the above word of Magoon standing alone can in good conscience be accepted as a sufficient prop for what (as we are about to see) was a revision by Bernstein of his original evidence against Capone. For the purpose of this opinion only, we shall assume that the finding of Capone's guilt is not against the weight of the evidence; but we stress this phase of the record as a strong contradiction of any as-[fol. 4071] sertion of the conclusive quality of the proof for the People.

(7) On request of counsel for Capone, the trial judge said to the jury: "I will charge that unless they believe the testimony of Bernstein connecting Capone, that Capone must be acquitted." The gist of such connecting testimony was the ungarnished word of Bernstein that the getaway route over which he drove the murder car had been taught to him by Capone the day before the killing of Rosen.

During Bernstein's cross-examination on that critical issue, the trial judge made rulings as follows: "Mr. Rosen- thal [Capone's counsel]: Q. You turned where on Pennsylvania Avenue, what turn left or right? A. Left. Q. How many blocks did you go then? A. One block, sir, to Dumont, made a right turn on Dumont. Q. And then you went straight down Dumont, didn't you? A. Yes, sir. Q. For six blocks? A. I don't know how many blocks. I went to Snediker Avenue, sir. Q. You knew Snediker Avenue— A. Yes, couldn't miss that because it was a one way street. Q. Will you please wait until I finish the question. You knew where Snediker Avenue lay from Pennsylvania, didn't you? Mr. Turkus [the trial prosecutor]: Objected to. Just answered it was a one way street • • • Mr. Rosenthal: Q. Did you know where Snediker Avenue lay from Pennsylvania Avenue, going down on Dumont Street? Mr. Turkus: Objected to as repetitious. Mr. Rosenthal: I have not asked it yet. The Court: Sustained. Mr. Rosenthal: Exception. • • • Q. Did you go slowly over the route? A. What do you mean slowly? I came from the store and the turns, that's where I had to watch myself, sir, them turns—the only thing I really had to know, sir, them turns. Q. As you were coming from the store, on this Saturday, did you slow up at each turn? A. Yes, sir. Louis Capone drove the car, sir. He drove my car all the time, sir. Q. Did he drive slowly over the route? Mr. Turkus: Objected to as repetitious. The Court: Sustained. Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except, sir. • • • Q. After you had come to a stop at Van Sinderen Avenue, was there any talk between you and Capone? A. While riding in the car, he told me, 'watch' • • • He says, 'This is the route you are going to take.' • • • Q. Is that all he said? A. Then he went over the route again and showed me, to make sure. Q. I first asked you is that all he said while you were at that point. Is that all he said? A. I didn't have a book and wrote down everything what he said to me, sir. Q. Is that all you remember he said? Mr. Turkus: Objected to as repetitious. The Court: Sustained. Mr. Rosenthal: Exception."

We think these exceptions are not without merit. Mr. Wigmore says: "Repeating precisely the same allowable question on cross-examination, in order by sheer moral force to compel a witness to admit the truth, after an original false answer or refusal to answer, is a process which not only savors of intimidation and browbeating, but also tends to waste time. Nevertheless, when used sparingly [fol. 4072] and against a witness who in the cross-examiner's belief is falsifying, there ought to be no judicial interference * * *. Simple as the expedient seems, it rests on a sound psychology; and the annals of our trials demonstrate its power." (3 Wigmore on Evidence, [3d ed.] § 782, p. 146. See, also, 1 Chamberlayne, The Modern Law of Evidence, § 553.)

The cogency of this view was here proved again when the testimony of Bernstein before the grand jury came to light. He had there sworn it was he—Bernstein—who drove the car in which he learned the getaway route. Faced with that self-contradiction, Bernstein said: "That is a mistake, sir. I made the mistake, sir." This was not the only particular in which Bernstein's evidence before the grand jury was at variance with his recital on this trial of the part played by Capone in the murder of Rosen. The case against Capone, we repeat, had no foundation other than the testimony of Bernstein to which the foregoing cross-examination was directed. No one can be sure the verdict against Capone was not the result of an undue restriction of his essential right so to test the credibility of that testimony.

(8) Early in his summation, the Assistant District Attorney posed these queries to the jury: "To begin with did anybody here tell you that Sholem Bernstein did not steal the murder car? Did anybody do that? Did anybody show you that he did not steal the plates? Did anybody say to you that he did not chauffeur the murder car when Rosen was killed?" Since none of the defendants was a witness, the whole point of that argumentation was its erroneous accent upon the assertion by them of their constitutional privilege against compulsory self-incrimination. In our judgment the exception taken thereto is valid. (See People v. Watson, 216 N. Y. 565.)

As the opinion of the chief judge shows, the trial prosecutor in his summation gave to the jury an unfounded pledge as to the future of the accomplice witnesses. This pledge was buttressed by the trial prosecutor in these words: "Whatever my lot in life may be, whether I go out of office or stay in, whatever the future holds for me, I say to you with all due solemnity, that nothing I have ever learned as a public prosecutor, no talent that I now enjoy, would ever be used in any way with any of you to make you feel that I had discredited you or myself or any member of the public. And that is just for me alone. And one more thought—if I could spend the rest of my life fighting this type of situation, I would like it. And that ends it." When objection was made to this plea, the trial judge said: "We will have no further interruption." A majority of this court is gravely apprehensive that such diffuse departures by the trial prosecutor from legitimate argument may have unduly prejudiced the jury against the defendants. (See People v. Mull, 167 N. Y. 247; State v. Clark, 114 Minn. 342.)

(9) Numerous exceptions to the charge of the trial judge are pressed upon us. For instance: the cross-examination of the People's witnesses concerning prior contradictory [fol. 4073] statements made by them was not ineffective, as we have seen. In that connection, the trial judge said to the jury: "Well, of course, if a man is asked whether he made an admission a long time ago, he may remember that, but to put a burden upon him of remembering the exact text of question and answer is an unholy thing."

Again: The trial judge said this to the jury: "There is nothing disreputable in a prosecuting attorney putting on the stand a witness who turns State's evidence. It is a proper method of prosecution and enforcement of the law. When rogues fall out it is a wise man's delight." Although the jury were brought back from their deliberations and advised to disregard the epigram last quoted from the charge, we are still left with the vexed question whether the belated admonition of the court sufficed to remove the obvious intimation which was conveyed to the jury by so pithy a dictum from the bench. (Cf. People v. Robinson, 273 N. Y. 438.) But we pass the exceptions to these matters, because in any event the charge as a whole fell below the requisite standard.

The trial judge at least was bound generally to analyze the evidence in the case so as to present to the jury fairly the conflicting claims of the People and the defendants. (People v. Montesanto, 236 N. Y. 396.) He expressly disavowed that duty. In defining the scope of his instructions to the jury, he said therein: "This is purely a segregation to guide you against misapplication of the evidence as against defendants to whom it does not apply. It is not a discussion of evidentiary values; it is not an expression of belief by the Court as to whether you shall accept such testimony as true. For that reason there is no review of cross-examination or of any of the evidence on the several defendants' side of the case."

In keeping with that announced purpose, the charge made no reference whatever to any one of the above-stated impeaching facts that were brought out during the cross-examination of witnesses for the People. That aspect of the case was dismissed by the judge in this fashion: "cross-examination is almost impossible to correctly state in such a manner that two people will agree on its fairness because, while direct examination goes right to the point, cross-examination, being for the purpose of breaking down the direct, it is largely hit or miss; it is blank cartridge shooting. Once in a while you find that a bullet had hit, but whether there is a hit or not may be a matter of dispute. Unless there be an outstanding point come out on cross-examination, the Court would only tend to confuse and mislead the jury if it attempted to discuss it."

As an inevitable consequence of these conceptions of his function, the judge's treatment of the proofs took on the character of a summation for the People. We will not say such a charge was right. (See People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, 307.)

(10) Nor do we think the one-sidedness thereof was corrected when counsel for the defendants requested further instructions in respect of specific items of the self-impeachment of witnesses for the People. In response thereto, the judge in some instances made this oblique remark to the [fol. 4074] jury: "You may consider that for what, if anything, it is worth." In other instances, the request brought forth a commentary which aided the People by toning down the contradictory statements of their witnesses. For example—

The main proof against Buchalter came from the witness Rubin whose testimony makes up a large part of "the facts" which Judge Conway has marshalled in his opinion. On cross-examination, Rubin he was confronted with a statement made by him in December, 1937, to Mr. McCarthy (then an assistant district attorney) covering this Rosen case. Conceding the verbal correctness thereof, Rubin acknowledged that this statement "did not implicate the defendant Buchalter, or Lepke, in any respect whatever."

When counsel for Buchalter requested that the jury be directed to take notice of Rubin's contradictory statement to Mr. McCarthy, the trial judge said: "On the second point of that request, he [Rubin] did not testify before McCarthy at all. He was not under oath. That is not perjury. That is a contradiction and he has explained it. He says he had been shot through the head because of testifying before the Dewey grand jury, and he was afraid to give McCarthy any information about the Rosen case. I charge the jury that they can consider the explanation in connection with the apparent evasion on that point before Mr. McCarthy. If it was on the basis of fear, they can consider the extent, if any, to which it ameliorates the contradiction and whether or not the contradiction, admittedly so before McCarthy, really amounts to anything at all. He was under no obligation to give any evidence; it was not sworn to before any official, so far as legal procedure is concerned; it was not compulsory." This argument in support of Rubin's credibility was inadmissible. Evidence of a prior self-contradiction by a witness, "is founded on the obvious consideration that both accounts cannot be true, and tends to prove a defect of intelligence or memory on the subject testified of, or, what is worse, a want of moral honesty and regard to truth; and so, in either case, that the witness is less worthy of belief." (SHAW, C. J., in Commonwealth v. Starkweather, 10 Cush. [Mass.] 59, 60.) Hence the fact that Rubin had not sworn to his contradictory statement to Mr. McCarthy was immaterial. (3 Wigmore on Evidence, [3rd ed.] § 1044, p. 727.)

(11) Rubin's testimony was offered to show the alleged motive for this crime,—fear lest Rosen vent a business grievance by instigating a criminal prosecution of Buchalter. To the same end, members of the family of Rosen endeavored by their testimony to show his prominence in the commercial field in which Buchalter was active in labor affairs; but the trial judge struck out that testimony as being "too sketchy to have any value as evidence." As a result there was no contradiction of witnesses for Buchalter who testified to the indifference of Rosen's success as a man of business. In that state of the case, Buchalter at least was entitled to have the jury consider whether he was right in his claim of the absence of any compelling reason [fol. 4075] why he should have been greatly afraid of the enmity of so inconspicuious a person as Rosen. (People v. Becker, 215 N. Y. 126, 135.)

On this issue, the trial judge in his charge said to the jury: "So far as the People's case is concerned, the furthest you can go in figuring out motive on Buchalter's part for wanting Rosen out of the way is that because of a business grudge carried by Rosen against Buchalter, having to do in some manner with the trucking company affairs in relation to the Pennsylvania business, and apparently blaming Buchalter for it, Buchalter feared that Rosen would reprise by giving information to Mr. Dewey which would get him, Buchalter, in trouble with the authorities." But the next phrase of the judge was this: "That is enough as motive evidence, if you find these facts to be established to your satisfaction, reasonably." The judge was without power so to deal with the effect of evidence as proving the case against Buchalter. At this point again, there should have been a presentation of both sides of the issue,—and the question of the weight of the evidence also should have been submitted to the jury.

In the preceding subdivision 2 of this opinion, we indicated another important issue of fact which was even more strongly ruled against Buchalter by the trial judge. On the whole, we find ourselves unable to perceive how the basic finding of Buchalter's distant connection with the actual shooting of Rosen can be taken to have been made by the jury alone.

(12) For a final word: We believe the foregoing combination of errors cannot rightly be looked upon as a technical defect. Of course this crime was an atrocious thing and the defendants apparently were men of past bad moral disposition. But these considerations are nothing to our purpose: it is for us to keep to the question whether the trial was fair. This last, as has so often been said, is the great requirement of this court's own function in all capital cases,—even when, as in this instance, the evil life of an accused may be an influence to warp the less responsible judgment of others. (People v. Marwig, 227 N. Y. 382, 389.)

Through many generations, common law practice in criminal cases has been governed by certain fundamental rules, namely: "The jury is the final arbiter of every question of fact." (People v. Pignataro, 263 N. Y. 229, 240.) "The court's charge is of supreme importance to the accused. It should be the safeguard of fairness and impartiality and the guarantee of judicial indifference to individuals." (People v. Odell, 230 N. Y. 481, 487.) On the present trial this historic practice was virtually declared away. We do not see how the conviction of the defendants can be affirmed, without annulling the statute which makes the jury in a criminal case the exclusive judges of questions of fact. Nor do we see how an affirmance is possible without deciding that in a criminal case the trial judge in his charge may entirely ignore the evidence and the contentions of the accused unless in the end some request is made for a different handling of the issues.

Since there is abundant reason for doubt of the guilt of any of the defendants, we cannot assume that no doubt thereof existed in the jury room. A long sequence of faulty rulings had materially strengthened the case for the People. With the sanction of the court, the People's representative had urged his personal integrity as a factor against the defendants. It is not for us to say that such substantial errors had no influence on the jury, for this is beyond our finding out. (See Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 184; People v. Bonier, 179 N. Y. 315.)

[fol. 4076] We believe the judgments of conviction should be reversed so that the defendants may have a fair chance to defend their lives before another jury.

Rippey, J. (dissenting). I agree with all that Judge Loughran has said concerning the errors committed during the progress of the trial, that such errors were prejudicial and cannot be overlooked. Reference might have been made to other errors. Among those was the charge substantially to the effect that the burden rested upon Weiss to establish his innocence on the basis of his alibi defense. (People v. Vaccaro, 288 N. Y. 170.) I also agree with Judge Loughran that the trial was unfair. In my opinion, the conduct of the trial throughout was so grossly unfair as to leave the defendants without even a remote outside chance of any free consideration by the jury of their defenses, so unfair in fact as to render utterly without force the presumption of innocence to which every person charged with a criminal offense is entitled until his guilt is established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. It does not follow that a new trial should be ordered. There was insufficient legal evidence at the close of the People's case upon which to base a conviction of Capone and the indictment against him should have been dismissed. In spite of the summary of the contentions of the People contained in one of the opinions for affirmance, an analysis of the whole record persuades me that the evidence was insufficient as matter of law to sustain the conviction of any of the defendants of murder in the first degree beyond a reasonable doubt.

The judgments of conviction should be reversed as to all of the defendants and the indictments dismissed.

FINCH and LEWIS, JJ., concur with CONWAY, J., LEHMAN, Ch. J., concurs in result in separate opinion; LOUGHRAN, J., dissents in opinion in which DESMOND, J., concurs; RIPPEY, J., dissents in separate opinion.

Judgments of conviction affirmed.

LOUIS CAPONE, Appellant

Be It Remembered, That on the 16th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and forty-two, Louis Capone, the appellant in this action, came here unto the Court of Appeals, by Leon Fischbein, Emanuel Rosenberg and Sydney Rosenthal, his attorneys, and filed in the said Court a Notice of Appeal and return thereto from the judgment of conviction of the County Court of the County of Kings, And The People of the State of New York, the respondent in said action, afterward appeared in said Court of Appeals by William O'Dwyer, District Attorney.

Which said Notice of Appeal and the return thereto, filed as aforesaid, are hereunto annexed.

[fol. 4087] Whereupon, The siad Court of Appeals having heard this cause argued by Mr. Sydney Rosenthal of counsel for the appellant, and by Mr. Solomon A. Klein of counsel for the respondent, and after due deliberation had thereon, did order and adjudge that the judgment of conviction of the County Court of the County of Kings appealed from in this action, be and is hereby in all things Affirmed.

Appellant, in his brief and argument raised the point that he had been denied his constitutional rights under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and this point was considered and necessarily decided by this Court.

And it was also further ordered, that the record aforesaid, and the proceedings thereon in this Court, be remitted to the said County Court.

Therefore, it is considered that the said original judgment of conviction be and is hereby in all things Affirmed as aforesaid, and stand in full force, strength and effect.

And hereupon, as well the Notice of Appeal and return thereto aforesaid as the judgment of the Court of Appeals aforesaid, by it given in the premises, are by the said Court of Appeals remitted into the County Court of the County of Kings, before the Judges thereof, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

(Signed) John Ludden, Clerk of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York.

Court of Appeals, Clerk's Office, Albany, October 30, 1942.

I Hereby Certify, that the preceding record contains a correct transcript of the proceedings in said action in the Court of Appeals, with the papers originally filed therein, attached thereto.

COURT OF APPEALS, STATE OF NEW YORK

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Plaintiffs-Respondents,

against

LOUIS BUCHALTER, et al., Defendants-Appellants

SIR:

Please take notice that upon the record and briefs herein, filed and submitted to the Court upon the argument of the appeal, upon the notice of motion herewith, and upon the decision and opinions of the Court dated the 30th day of October, 1942, affirming the conviction of defendant Buchalter, and upon the brief hereto annexed, a motion will be made in the Court of Appeals at its Court House, in the City of Albany, on the 23rd day of November, 1942, at 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon of that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, for a re-argument of said appeal upon the following grounds:

1. The Court misapprehended the facts and the law concerning the errors assigned by appellants to the rulings below denying the motions for a change of venue and the motions for an adjournment of the time of the trial.

[fol. 4093] 2. The Court misapprehended the facts and the law concerning the errors assigned to the rulings of the trial Court upon the challenges to prospective jurors and to jurors impaneled, and the remarks of the trial Court during and in the course of the impaneling of the jury; and particularly that the Court misapprehended the law in holding that the rulings of the trial Court upon the challenges to prospective jurors and to jurors impaneled were not subject to review in a capital case by the Court of Appeals.

3. The Court misapprehended the facts and the law concerning the errors assigned, or overlooked the errors assigned, to the refusal of the trial Court to make available to the defendants and to permit the use by them of certain official records of the Police Department of the City of New York.

4. The Court misapprehended the facts and the law concerning the errors assigned to the rulings and comments of the trial Court upon and during the cross-examination of the People's witnesses Rubin and Berger.

5. The Court misapprehended the facts and the law concerning the errors assigned to the rulings, comments, charge and conduct of the trial Court, as more specifically set forth in the brief attached hereto.

6. The Court misapprehended the facts and the law concerning the errors assigned to the refusal of the trial Court to rebuke and repress improper and prejudicial statements by the prosecutor in his summation to the jury whereby the jury was misled.

[fol. 4094] 7. The Court misapprehended the facts and the law concerning the errors assigned to the conduct and the course of the proceedings in the trial Court, which resulted in a denial and a disregard of the rights of the defendants to a fair and impartial trial and to due process of law, as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

And upon such other and further grounds as are set forth in the attached brief.

And for such other and further relief as may seem just and proper.

Dated, New York, November 12th, 1942.

Yours, etc., Wegman & Climenko, Attorneys for Appellant Buchalter, 60 Wall Street, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York.

[fol. 4095] COURT OF APPEALS, STATE OF NEW YORK

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Plaintiff, Respondents,

against

LOUIS BUCHALTER, et al., Defendants-Appellants

Brief for Appellant Buchalter in Support of Motion for Re-Argument

STATEMENT

This is a motion by appellant, Louis Buchalter, for a re-argument of the appeal from the judgment of the County Court of Kings County, dated December 2, 1941, convicting appellant of the crime of Murder in the First Degree.

On the 30th day of October, 1942, this Court handed down its decision of the said appeal, affirming the judgment of conviction.

This motion is made upon the ground that this Court overlooked and misapprehended certain material and important facts and principles of law decisive of the case.

The procedure adopted herein follows the precise precedent of the motion for re-argument by the District Attorney of Kings County in Peo. v. Nitzberg, which motion was entertained by this Court and decided January 15, 1942 (287 N. Y. 754).

[fol. 4096]

Point I

This Court misapprehended the rule regarding a review of the denial of a motion for change of venue, overlooked the facts thereon, and disregarded the error in denying the application for adjournment of the trial.

Forcing the defendant to trial at a place where and a time when a fair trial was impossible, violated due process of law.

The only reference in the opinions of the Judges who voted for affirmance of the judgment of conviction, concerning appellant's argument that it was error to deny the motions for a change of venue, is to be found in the opinion of Judge Conway concurred in by Judges Lewis and Finch. It was said there was no merit in appellant's argument because (1) the trial was by a "special jury" and (2) the motion was addressed to the discretion of the Court below, and the Judges of this Court were not prepared to say that the denial was an abuse of discretion.

With all due respect, it is submitted that this Court thereby misapprehended the true situation. That there was a "special jury" ordered for this trial is no answer to the argument that no jury, special or otherwise, could be obtained in the County of Kings, uninfluenced by the widespread local prejudicial publicity, newspaper articles (some of them obviously inspired) charging the defendant with guilt of this and countless other crimes, and assuming that his conviction in this case was a foregone conclusion, and the striking coincidence of the local election campaign in which both the trial judge and the District Attorney were party candidates. While ordinarily it is true that subse- [fol. 4097] quent events may not be used as an argument in support of an earlier application, here it is clear from the subsequent events that the application was well founded. Even this special panel of jurors, supposedly above the average in intelligence, was found to have been influenced to such an extent by the newspaper publicity that five weeks were consumed in an effort to obtain a jury, and even then an impartial jury was not impaneled. And even the trial judge said that the newspaper articles played havoc with the talesmen.

The error became the more glaring when, over the objection and exceptions of the defendants, the trial court insisted upon the trial proceeding at a time when both the trial judge and the District Attorney were candidates for public office, and in the very midst of their campaign for such offices. Of the fact that it was a heated campaign this Court may take judicial notice. Of these facts no mention is made in the prevailing opinions, and they appear to have been overlooked.

In a capital case such as this, the review by this Court is not restricted to a mere determination of whether there was an abuse of discretion. By direction of the New York State Constitution, in a capital case this Court is required to consider the facts as well as the law and to determine whether justice was done. By the requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, this Court is enjoined to ascertain whether "due process of law" was observed. Surely the fundamental law demands at least this much (cases cited post).

It is of the essence of "due process of law" that defendants be accorded a fair and impartial trial by fair and impartial jurors free of influences extraneous to the evi- [fol. 4098] dence adduced. It is the duty of this Court to inquire not merely whether "due process of law" was denied in express terms, but also whether it was denied in substance and effect. Norris v. Alabama, 294 U. S. 587; Whitney v. California, 274 U. S. 357.

It is not enough therefore for this Court to say that the motions for a change of venue were addressed to the discretion of the court below. It is the bounden and definite duty of this Court to say whether, upon the facts pr ented, the motion should have been granted.

Here there were submitted as exhibits a series of violent, sensational newspaper articles, limited in circulation to the County of Kings, denunciatory of this appellant, widely distributed throughout that County at a time immediately before, and up to, and even after, the commencement of the trial,—the vicious effect of which was fully demonstrated in the course of examination on voir dire of prospective jurors.

It was a grave and substantial error to require the trial to proceed in the County of Kings at that time under those circumstances as well as a denial of "due process of law".

Point II

This Court erroneously refused to consider the rulings of the trial court upon challenges to the jurors, which should have been reviewed. Due process of law was denied both by the rulings of the trial court and by such refusal to review them.

The majority of this Court cast aside the argument of appellant that a fair and impartial jury was not impaneled [fol. 4099] and that there was error in the overruling by the trial court of challenges to prospective jurors, with the statement in the opinion of Judge Conway, that, by statute, such rulings of the trial court were final, and that such statute, in so providing, had been pronounced constitutional, citing Peo. v. Dunn, 157 N. Y. 528. The majority of this Court (with great deference and respect) misapprehended the law on this subject. In a capital case at least, that provision of the statute is not constitutional, nor is it consistent with "due process of law". The majority of this Court overlooked the fact that the reason given for the decision in Peo. v. Dunn (supra), was that there is no constitutional guaranty of the right of appeal, and that such right may be abrogated or modified by the legislature. But, in capital cases, the legislature may not interfere with the right of appeal. In a capital case that right is fully guaranteed, both as to the law and as to the facts, by the provisions of the Constitution of the State of New York, Article VI, Section 7 (People v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348).

Thus this Court should have examined and passed upon the rulings of the trial court upon the challenges.

Furthermore "due process of law" encompasses the impaneling of a fair and impartial jury, and it is the duty of this Court to inquire whether the jury here impaneled was in fact fair and impartial, and whether the substantial and constitutional rights of the defendant were observed in that impaneling. If, as is the fact here, challenges for cause were improperly and erroneously overruled, whereby the defendants' peremptory challenges were exhausted before a jury was selected, so that the defendants were [fol. 4100] denied the right of peremptory challenge to jurors impaneled, "due process of law" has not been observed.

Since the jury that was chosen was obtained as a result of erroneous rulings by the trial court, and since at least as to two of the jurors sworn, positive doubt existed as to their impartiality and lack of bias, "the doom of mere sterility was on the trial from the beginning" (Cardozo, J., In Clark v. U. S., 289 U. S. 1, 11).

The castigation by the trial judge of prospective jurors who expressed doubt that their impressions adverse to the defendants could be laid aside, necessarily resulted in a reluctance by others to reveal such mental bias because of their justified fear of the consequential denunciation by the trial judge. The remarks of the trial judge during the impaneling of the jury must necessarily have tended to suppress a free expression on the part of the talesmen being examined. Hence, this Court can never be sure that any of the talesmen approached his duty with a free, open and unbiased mind, and in the case of at least two of the jurors that doubt affirmatively appears.

Point III

This Court misapprehended and overlooked the fact that this jury was improperly influenced and misled throughout the proceedings below, and the verdict undoubtedly was influenced thereby. This misleading of the jury per se requires reversal.

The learned Chief Judge, in his opinion, frankly expresses his own reasonable doubt of guilt, but because he states that he believes the jury had the right to reach the conclusion that it did, he has voted to affirm.

[fol. 4101] It is respectfully submitted that the Chief Judge has misapprehended the fact that the jury was misled and unduly influenced from the very inception of the trial,—and, indeed, were predisposed to convict by impressions derived dehors the record even before they were sworn (Point I, ante).

These were supposedly intelligent jurors, a "special panel", chosen for their greater capacity of understanding and appreciation They were presumably qualified to examine, appraise and evaluate evidence under proper instructions, and doubtless would have been burdened with the very same doubts which have assailed the mind of the learned Chief Judge, had this trial been fair and had they been properly instructed, and had they approached the evaluation of evidence with free minds. The difference is that the Chief Judge has applied his mind to the evidence untrammeled by the poisonous atmosphere engendered in the trial court, and divorced from the influence of the regrettable rulings of the trial judge and the regrettable and unprofessional excesses of the prosecuting attorney, which, in at least one instance, overstepped the boundary line of truth.

Our point is that the jury would have had the same doubt as remains with the learned Chief Judge after considering the record, if those other extraneous elements had not intervened prejudicially to prevent calm and dispassionate consideration and deliberation.

Considering, then, that these jurors were not "trained to decide questions of fact solely upon competent and relevant evidence" and that, as all know, a jury generally tends to accept unquestionably the expressed opinions of the judge who presides, how can it be said that the appraisal of the [fol. 4102] evidence by the jury was not affected by the numerous incidents, remarks and rulings at the trial which should never have intervened? The Chief Judge regrets these, but the jury was misled by them!

A review of some of these is submitted to emphasize the argument, and because such a review will demonstrate the invidious influences which indubitably led the jury to a verdict of guilt where reasonable doubt in fact existed.

(1) The "time table".

It is said in the opinion of Judge Conway that the statements of Bernstein were reconcilable with the statements of Rubin and Berger. But if reconcilable at all, it is only by pure speculation; there is no such evidence. In a capital case the jury has no right to speculate. Here they were not only invited to speculate, they were instructed by the trial judge that the defendant's argument was unworthy of any consideration whatever. They were not permitted to exercise their intelligence in appraising the testimony and whether or not the statement could be reconciled; the simple fact is that they were instructed in such a manner as to require them to assume that the seeming contradictions were no contradictions at all, were not inconsistencies and were entitled to no consideration in their deliberations. Thus, there was effectively ruled out from their consideration a matter which, in and of itself, may have caused them to have a reasonable doubt of the verity of the testimony.

(2) Rubin's prior inconsistent statement.

It was demonstrated that the witness Rubin had stated, upon an earlier examination, that the defendant Buchalter [fol. 4103] had nothing to do with the murder of Rosen. Here the trial court not only failed to permit the jury to consider that statement as affecting the credibility of Rubin,—substantial error though that is,—his error was much more grievous. He assumed, and he impressed upon the jury, that this earlier statement of Rubin's was untrue. The vice here is not merely that the jury should have been permitted to consider whether Rubin's prior statement was untrue but excusable because engendered by a putative fear, not merely that the trial court palliated the assumed falsity by suggesting "Les Miserables" as a parallel—but, much more, the jury should have been instructed that they were entitled to credit that prior statement as a truthful statement, and if they believed it to have been true, then Buchalter was entitled to an acquittal.

Can it be reasonably said that this grievous error did not influence the verdict? The whole case of the People against Buchalter depended upon the testimony of Rubin. Was not the jury misled, and their verdict thereby influenced, by the shrewdly calculated attitude and instructions of the trial court that this prior exculpatory statement was not alone untrue but a venial untruth? Had the jury been told that they had a right, if they so wished, to credit this prior inconsistent statement of Rubin as the truth, the jury thereby would have been given the right to disregard Rubin's testimony implicating Buchalter in the murder. It should not have been submitted merely as a matter bearing upon Rubin's credibility,—and yet it was not even submitted in that limited form; it should have been submitted to the jury, as a question for their decision, whether Rubin in fact told the truth to Mr. Hogan and to Assistant Dis- [fol. 4104] trict Attorney McCarthy, so that (in that event) his whole testimony implicating Buchalter on this trial was false and unworthy of credence. Cf. Hull v. Littauer, 162 N. Y. 569. Even here, this Court apparently assumed (quite erroneously) that this prior statement was untrue, and considered only whether the jury was properly instructed concerning the effect of its untruth upon Rubin's testimony in the case at bar.

(3) Rubin's flight.

In appraising the truth of Rubin's testimony concerning the participation by Buchalter in the Rosen murder, the jury was permitted to consider the fact that Rubin had, at Buchalter's alleged instance, fled the jurisdiction. If the jury entertained a reasonable doubt that Rubin's flight was engendered by fear of the investigation of the Rosen murder, they should not have considered that flight as an element bearing upon guilt. Since the fact of Rubin's flight was undisputed, the jury was misled in its consideration of the probative force of that flight by the instruction that Rubin's testimony as to flight was binding on the defendant unless the jury affirmatively found that fear of the Rosen case was not the motive. Thus, in effect, the jury was erroneously instructed that Buchalter bore the burden of disproving the connection between that flight and the Rosen case, whereas the true rule is that that flight should not have been considered against Buchalter if the jury reasonably doubted the connection.

(4) Bernstein and Tannenbaum.

The jury was in effect instructed by the court to assume that the People's witnesses had not conferred in advance of [fol. 4105] the trial. This was a matter which should have been left to the jury, particularly in the light of the cross-examination of Bernstein. Had the jury been permitted to consider whether or not this story had been concocted by the People's witnesses in conference, they might have been unwilling to place credence in it. But they were told by the court that there were no such conferences among the witnesses and were misled to believe that the testimony was not the result of collaborative effort. The vice of this instruction is obvious.

(5) The summation of the prosecutor.

Whether the testimony of the debased characters which made up the People's case,—so polluted a source that the evidence therefrom failed to remove from the mind of the Chief Judge a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt,—was induced by hope of reward or indulgence from the District Attorney was a proper matter for the consideration of the jury. Yet the jury was falsely misled to believe that there was no such inducement for the testimony, and the trial court apparently sanctioned that deception. The Chief Judge, in his opinion, has frankly deplored the statement of the prosecuting attorney ("which the prosecuting attorney could not properly or truthfully make") putting in issue his own integrity. It was improper for him so to make the promise even if true; it was the gravest wrong for him to dissemble. And time has demonstrated how false was the assertion that these witnesses were uninspired by hope, and how false the promise that, in due time, they would receive their just desserts, for each of them,—Bernstein, Tannenbaum and Berger,—has been given his freedom, wholly unpunished for his confessed crimes. There is only one way to justly characterize such testimonial transactions: [fol. 4106] bought and paid for: (Cf. Peo. v. Nitzberg, 287 N. Y. 183). Is it conceivable that the jury would have entertained no doubt of their veracity had that expectation of "consideration" not been denied? A jury has, and is entitled to have, full confidencee in the honesty and good faith of the prosecuting attorney. The jury was bound to be influenced by his glib assurances. "In these circumstances (says the highest court of our country) prejudice to the cause of the accused is so highly probable that we are not justified in assuming its non-existence." Berger v. U. S., 295 U. S. 78.

(6) The omission of the trial judge to review the cross-examination.

With facile plausibility, the trial judge sought to excuse his review of all of the supposedly incriminating evidence, without any reference to what was developed on cross-examination, by ascribing to himself a purpose merely to "segregate" the testimony (sic) so that it might not be misapplied by the jury. The majority of this Court has held that this either was no error or that it was not error which misled the jury. Perhaps that might be so, if all that had been done was to omit reference to the cross-examination. But this Court has misapprehended or overlooked the fact that there was far more than a mere omission to refer to the cross-examination. There was a deliberate and illegal belittling of that cross-examination; it was nonchalantly waved aside as of neither moment, nor consequence, nor effect. Inevitably this cavalier treatment of the cross-examination must have misled the jury into attaching little, if any, weight to what was developed thereon. This was the grave vice of the Court's device. The cross-examina-[fol. 4197] tion was not merely omitted from his discussion, —it was deprecated and depreciated. Thus did he invade the province of the jury and thus did he mislead it. Neither fair, nor square, nor "due process of law".

Point IV

The learned Chief Judge, whose vote was decisive of the appeal herein, overlooked the rule that his own reasonable doubt of guilt necessarily required a reversal of the conviction.

The learned Chief Judge, in his opinion, concurring in the affirmance, with characteristic fairness, has unmistakably expressed his own reasonable doubt of guilt. With the utmost deference, it is respectfully suggested that the Chief Judge inadvertently has misapprehended the law governing consideration of an appeal in a capital case, in limiting his review to the question of whether the jury heard enough evidence (even though truly it was unworthy of credence) to justify a verdict of guilt. Where the evidence leaves a reasonable doubt in the mind of this Court, the rule is that the conviction in a capital case should be reversed and a new trial granted. Peo. v. Crum, 272 N. Y. 348, 350.

This Court must find the evidence of such weight and credibility as to convince the court, before it may be said that the jury was justified in finding a verdict of guilty.

If that is the law, as it was said by this Court to be in Peo. v. Crum, the persisting reasonable doubt, which the People's evidence from such polluted sources has failed to remove from the mind of the Chief Judge, requires a reversal here.

[fol. 4108] Point V

This Court overlooked the error in the refusal of the trial court to accord defendant access to the official records of the Police Department of the City of New York.

Ordinarily, perhaps, the omission of this Court to discuss in its opinion an error assigned is no indication that consideration was not given to the point. Yet here the opinions are so extensive and exhaustive—and the point is of such importance—that such omission of discussion apparently indicates an omission to consider it.

This particular error is fully discussed in the brief submitted by appellant Buchalter upon the appeal, in Point V extending from pages 106 to 117, and citing authorities in point.

In a case where the judgment of conviction rests upon the testimony of such disreputable characters as Berger and Tannenbaum, it is a denial of "due process of law" to deprive the defendants of an opportunity to demonstrate conclusively, by the official, regularly kept records of the New York City Police Department, that neither of these men saw (or could have seen) Buchalter at 200 Fifth Avenue, on Friday, September 11, 1936, thus corroborating defendant's ss Shapiro; or, at the very least, to demonstrate that is little or no likelihood that these men could have th re as they falsely testified. With their credibility ch at issue, the defendant was entitled to the benefit idence bearing upon so vital a point. Here he was l the right to the record itself, admissible as a record rly kept in the course of official business, and as well l the opportunity to identify the police officers who those records so that those officers might have been [109] summoned by us as witnesses to tell what they ved or did not observe.

s conceded that Buchalter was kept under constant surveillance during the time in question. Is it not us, therefore, that what was observed in the course of lay by the officers who had him under surveillance, l have weighed largely with the jury in determining redibility of the prosecution witnesses?

s Court has misapprehended or overlooked the fact he refusal to make available to the defendant those l records which were concededly in the possession of rosecution, was a denial of "due process of law".

Conclusion

e process of law is no mere form of words. Therein is npassed the whole of those priceless liberties for the rvation of which we are now engaged in mortal strug- "Thus all fundamental rights comprised within the 'liberty' are protected by the Federal Constitution invasion by the states" (Brandeis, J., in Whitney v. 274 U. S. 357, 373).

s not "due process of law" that the form be preserved the substance is denied.

re the Court has misapprehended the essential vices en' in the proceedings below. It has overlooked the hat the defendant was brought to trial at a time and dace when and where existed a public clamor from the of which no jury could have been immunized, and ury was not. The attitude of the trial judge displayed nimus against defendants and their counsel and a 'olent tenderness toward the prosecution and its wit- s which created an atmosphere so hostile to the de- as to preclude the possibility of fair consideration by the jury. In such an unwholesome atmosphere, the [fol. 4110] jury was directly misled—and in fact invited—into giving exaggerated importance to the prosecution's direct evidence, and to minimize, if not disregard, the evidence adduced upon cross-examination and by the defendant's witnesses.

In denial of due process of law, the value of the evidence was distorted so that the bias of the trial court was communicated to a jury already conditioned to convict.

"Whether a guilty man goes free or not is a small matter compared with the maintenance of principles which still safeguard a person accused of crime" (Pound, J., later Chief Judge, in Peo. v. Barbato, 254 N. Y. 170, at 178).

Those great principles, this Court has said, "must protect all who come within its sphere, whether the person who invokes its protection seems to be sorely pressed by the weight of the inculpatory evidence in the case or not. It cannot alter, for the purpose of securing the conviction of one who may be called or regarded as a great criminal, and yet be invoked for the purpose of sheltering an innocent man. In the eye of the law all are innocent until convicted in accordance with the forms of the law and by a close adherence to its rules" (Peckham, J., Peo. v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, at 476-477).

The motion for re-argument should be granted in the interest of sound law and public policy.

Respectfully submitted, I. Maurice Wormser, J. Bertram Wegman, Jesse Climenko, Of Counsel for Appellant, Louis Buchalter.

Clerk's Office

I, John Ludden, Clerk of the Court of Appeals of the said State of New York, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of The Respondents' Brief in Opposition to Motion for Reargument submitted by the District Attorney of Kings County in The People of the State of New York, Plaintiffs-Respondents, against Louis Buchalter, et al., Defendants-Appellants, with the original on file in this office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole of said original.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said Court of Appeals, at the City of Albany, this eighteenth day of December, A. D. 1942.

Respondents' Brief in Opposition to Motion for Reargument

Statement

On October 30, 1942, this Court affirmed the judgment of the County Court of Kings County, dated December 2, 1941, convicting the appellants of the crime of Murder in the First Degree.

This motion for reargument of the appeal is made only by the appellant Buchalter. His motion is made upon the alleged ground "that this Court overlooked and misapprehended certain material and important facts and principles of law decisive of the case".

[fol. 4113] Point First

The motion for reargument is devoid of any merit.

In arriving at decision, this Court wrote exhaustive majority and dissenting opinions, which clearly show a most careful and conscientious consideration of the points raised by the appellants. The briefs on the appeal presented every conceivable point that could be made in their behalf. Buchalter's brief was 166 pages in length; Weiss' brief was 78 pages; Capone's main and supplemental briefs covered 284 pages. The oral argument of the appeal consumed approximately six hours. In both the briefs and the oral arguments the appellants were represented by exceptionally capable and highly experienced counsel, who made a very forceful and thorough presentation of the facts and the legal principles involved in the case.

A reading of the notice of motion and the brief now submitted by the appellant Buchalter in support of his motion for reargument shows that he is merely reiterating, in different form, the arguments previously submitted. The moving papers and the brief contain nothing new, nor do they show that any point decisive of the case was ignored, misapprehended or overlooked.

1. Buckhalter's first point, concerning his motions for a change of venue, was exhaustively discussed and argued at pages 7 to 12 and 52 to 88 of his brief. The answer to his arguments was presented at pages 45 to 49 of the people's brief. And the point was specifically discussed in the opinion of Judge Conway.

2. The same is true as to the second point. The argument now presented is a reiteration of the discussion ap- [fol. 4114] pearing at pages 154 to 161 of Buchalter's brief and at pages 1 to 66 of Capone's brief. Here again the contentions were specifically discussed in the opinion of Judge Conway.

3. Buchalter's third point is likewise a reiteration of the arguments made on the original appeal. Those arguments were exhaustively developed at pages 97 to 153 of Buchalter's brief, at pages 55 to 64 of Weiss' brief, and at pages 84 to 87 and 99 to 107 of Capone's brief. The majority and dissenting opinions of this Court show that the points raised and the law applicable thereto were neither misapprehended nor overlooked.

4. Buchalter's fourth point is that Chief Judge Lehman "overlooked the rule that his own reasonable doubt of guilt necessarily required a reversal of the conviction". This is, indeed, a very amazing assertion. Chief Judge Lehman, in his concurring opinion, as set forth in the "unrevised and uncorrected" report, said:

"The verdict of the jury rests, it is plain, on the conclusion that the story of the people's witnesses is credible and furnished proof of the defendants' guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, in spite of the pollution of the source of the proof. * * * It has found the defendants guilty, and though I might have been unwilling, if I had been a member of the jury, to concur in the verdict, I cannot as a judge say that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence. * * * Evidence coming from a polluted source has failed to remove reasonable doubt of the defendants' guilt from my mind. All that is immaterial if the jury is convinced of guilt on sufficient evidence and no errors and defects [fol. 4115] affect the verdict. * * * Because I have no doubt that the errors did not affect the verdict I am constrained to vote to affirm."

The decision of Chief Judge Lehman is in accord with the settled law applicable to capital cases. In People v. Cignarale (110 N. Y. 23) this Court, per Andrews, J., said at page 27:

"It is a cardinal principle in our jurisprudence that the jury is the ultimate tribunal for the investigation and determination of questions of fact. It is no more the province of an appellate court than of the court of original instance to determine controverted questions of fact arising upon conflicting evidence. Neither can lawfully usurp the appropriate function of the jury, and neither can substitute its own judgment for that of the jury where the facts are reasonably capable of diverse or opposing inferences."

Similarly, in People v. Seidenschner (210 N. Y. 341) this Court said at pages 358 to 359:

"Notwithstanding the testimony was somewhat unsatisfactory, and in some particulars contradictory, the conclusion had to be reached by determining the credibility of the witnesses produced, and as to which of two sets of witnesses were to be believed. The jury was required to make a determination upon the testimony before it. It is the province of the jury and not of the court to determine the truth from conflicting testimony, and within well-defined bounds to determine the relative weight of testimony.
[fol. 4116] "This court in People v. Taylor (138 N. Y. 398, 406) say: 'Under our system of criminal jurisprudence, it becomes the exclusive province of the jury to determine whether the evidence pointing to the guilt of the accused is so lacking in convincing force as to leave an intelligent and discriminating mind in doubt as to the truth of the charge contained in the indictment. When the jury, by their verdict, have declared that no such condition of mental uncertainty has arisen from a contemplation of the evidence, the prisoner has had the full benefit of the rule of law which protects him from punishment, unless his crime is established beyond a reasonable doubt, and the question is not open for review in this court, unless the case is so weak that the verdict should be set aside because against the weight of evidence, or for other sufficient cause.' (See People v. Katz, 154 App. Div. 44-47; affd., 209 N. Y. 311; People v. Egnor, 175 N. Y. 419-425; People v. Rodawald, 177 N. Y. 408-419; People v. Decker, 157 N. Y. 186-195.)

"In People v. Ferraro (161 N. Y. 365, 377) this court, referring to a determination of a question of fact, say: 'It would be hazardous for seven judges of the law * * * to say that the twelve judges of the fact were wrong * * *. It is impossible for us to say, and the nearest approach to justice that can be made is to leave such questions to the jury.'

"In People v. Sanducci (195 N. Y. 361, 367) this court say: 'The credibility of witnesses is necessarily for the twelve jurors who looked into their faces and heard them testify rather than for the seven judges who simply read the printed record of what they said'."

[fol. 4117] In People v. Katz (154 App. Div. 44; affd., 209 N. Y. 311), cited with approval in the Seidenschner case, supra, the rule is clearly stated as follows:

"It is not our duty to usurp the functions of the jury and to examine the evidence de novo, with a view to determining whether or not, on the same evidence, we should have arrived at the same result as that at which the jury arrived. So long as the verdict is not clearly against the evidence, as we think it is not in this case, * * * we cannot feel that it is our duty to reverse the conviction because, perchance, if we had been sitting as jurors we might have decided differently."

We say, therefore, that the appellant's fourth point is thoroughly lacking in merit.

5. Buchalter's final point was also previously argued and fully discussed in the original appeal. The discussion appears at pages 106 to 117 of Buchalter's brief and at pages 73 to 74 of Weiss' brief.

It is submitted that the motion papers and brief in support thereof are obviously insufficient. There is no showing "that some question, decisive of the case, and duly submitted by counsel, has been overlooked by the Court, or, that the decision is in conflict with an express statute, or, with a controlling decision, to which the attention of the court was not drawn, through the neglect or inadvertence of counsel". (Mount v. Mitchell, 32 N. Y. 702; Marine National Bank v. National City Bank, 59 N. Y. 67, 73; Fosdick v. Town of Hempstead, 126 N. Y. 651, 652.)

On the subject matter under consideration, this Court in O'Brien v. Mayor, etc., of the City of New York (142 [fol. 4118] N. Y. 671) declared, with striking applicability to the pending motion, as follows:

"The appellants upon this motion for a reargument have availed themselves of the opportunity to in effect reargue their whole case. In their ground for their application they have stated several reasons why such motion should be granted, but in truth they have failed to show any reasons exist for a reargument other than the claim that the court has plainly erred in its construction of the contract in question. We might, therefore, deny the motion on the ground that no reason recognized by the court has been shown for granting the motion (Fosdick v. Town of Hempstead, 126 N. Y. 651) * * *. The arguments contained in them, however, are nothing more than a reiteration and amplification of those which were addressed to us upon the original argument."

No inference that a point was overlooked, as contended by the appellant, can be drawn from the fact that it was not discussed in detail in the opinion. In Terry v. Waitt (56 N. Y. 91, 94) this Court emphasized that a reargument will not be granted because it failed to notice in its opinion every point urged, saying at page 94:

"Counsel are very apt to fall into the error of supposing that every point and suggestion in cases which they argue, is overlooked by the court when not specifically discussed and answered in a written opinion, and this error has, in several instances, led to applications like the present. They should reflect that before a case is decided, the court is in [fol. 4119] the habit of deliberately considering it in all its hearings, and that when sanctioning a former decision the mere omission to notice and discuss in the opinion, supposed distinctions, if not sufficient to warrant the supposition that they have escaped observation."

Point Second

The motion for reargument should be denied.

Dated, Brooklyn, N. Y., November, 1942.

Respectfully submitted, Thomas Cradock Hughes, Acting District Attorney, Kings County. Solomon A. Klein, Henry J. Walsh, Assistant District Attorneys, of Counsel.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Respondents,

v.

LOUIS BUCHALTER et al., Appellants

(Decided November 25, 1942.)

Motions by Appellants Louis Buchalter, Emanuel Weiss and Louis Capone for reargument and motion by Appellant Louis Capone for a stay.

Per CURIAM:

This court considered the refusal of the trial court to accord the defendant access to the records of the Police Department of the City of New York. The records in question were deposited with this court at the time of the argument of the appeal and were examined. The so-called surveillance amounted to very little. It was of the entrance and lobby of the office building and not of the floor upon which defendant Buchalter had his office. The reports established that the defendant could and did elude the police at will. The ruling of the trial court was correct. (See People ex rel. Lemon v. Supreme Court, 245 N. Y. 24.)

This court did not restrict its review to a mere determination that there was no abuse of discretion as a matter of law by the County Judge in denying the motion for a change of venue. A majority of the court is of the opinion that the discretion was properly exercised.

This court examined and found no error in the rulings of the trial court upon the challenges for implied bias. On the motion for a special jury under the statute (Judiciary Law, Cons. Laws, ch. 30 art. 18-B;) the defendant appeared by attorney and consented to be tried before such special jury, a majority of this court is of the opinion that he thereby consented also to the statutory provision that rulings of the trial court upon challenges for actual bias are final and not appealable.

Motions denied.

State of New York,
County of New York, ss:

James I. Cuff, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am attorney for Emanuel Weiss, named as a defendant in the indictment, a copy of which is annexed hereto and marked Exhibit "A" hereof.

This affidavit is made in support of a motion for an order removing the above entitled action from the County Court of Kings County for trial in a county outside the City of New York on the ground that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in Kings County.

I respectfully submit that a fair and impartial trial cannot be accorded the defendant Weiss, named in this case as a co-defendant of Louis Buchalter, and who is accused with that defendant and others of having participated in the murder of one Joseph Rosen.

This application is for a change of venue and is made coincidentally with the making of an identical application on behalf of the defendant Buchalter.

[fol. 4127] I have read the affidavits of Hyman Barshay and Benjamin D. Fernbach, both sworn to the — day of July 1941 and the exhibits annexed thereto, to be submitted in support of the motion for change of venue on behalf of the defendant Buchalter. I believe, after reading the facts set forth in those affidavits and from my knowledge of local opinion, that a fair trial cannot be accorded the defendant Buchalter in this jurisdiction at this time. I believe also that any person who like the defendant Weiss whom I represent, must proceed to trial as a co-defendant of the defendant Buchalter, cannot obtain a fair trial in this jurisdiction at this time.

I believe that the defendant Weiss will be prejudiced by the mere assertion embodied in the indictment that he acted in concert with the defendant Buchalter.

I believe that the public generally has been taught that the defendant Buchalter is an arch criminal and that anyone who is alleged to have acted in complicity with him must therefore be regarded as presumptively guilty.

I believe, that if the defendant Weiss is required to stand trial in Kings County in the month of August, 1941, and this case is now set for trial on August 4th, 1941, that a jury would regard him as presumptively guilty rather than presumptively innocent. I believe that the doctrine of the presumption of innocence would be no more than an empty doctrine were this trial to be held at that time and place.

[fol. 4128] I believe that a defendant is not accorded a fair trial if local conditions are such as to require him to demonstrate his innocence. I believe that the tenor of public opinion in Kings County at this time is such that unless a defendant, like the defendant Weiss, who must stand trial as an alleged associate of the defendant Buchalter proves his innocence, he will be found guilty. In such circumstances, the fundamental principle that a defendant is presumed innocent unless proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, has no practical value.

For these reasons I respectfully submit that a fair trial cannot be accorded my client in Kings County at this time, ese reasons I respectfully submit this affidavit of the application for a change of venue.

the giving of the ordinary notice of motion for that the trial of this action is now scheduled

[fols. 1-2] COUNTY COURT, KINGS COUNTY

PART I

Indictment Number 23855

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

against

LOUIS BUCHALTER, alias LEPKE, Defendant
Murder, First Degree

Brooklyn, New York.
May 9, 1941.

Before Hon. George W. Martin, County Judge

Appearances:

For the People: Burton Turkus, Esq., Assistant District Attorney.

Julia A. McGowan, Official Stenographer.

[fol. 3] The Defendant: I would like to talk to the Judge, first.

The Court: Yes?

The Defendant: I do not know what this is all about. I would like permission to see my family about getting counsel.

The Court: It won't make any difference this morning. You are not going to be tried. You won't take any plea but Not Guilty.

The Defendant: I would like to have permission to see my people about having counsel.

The Court: You are entitled to have counsel, but I do not think you need them on your arraignment.

(To Mr. Turkus) Isn't he entitled to that?

Mr. Turkus: I take the position that he is entitled to have counsel at all stages of the proceedings.

The Court: What day do you want?

Mr. Turkus: Will your Honor permit him in a safe place, pursuant to the jurisdiction vested in you by the United States Government and the law enforcement agencies in whose custody he is, to see his people to the end that he may secure counsel as speedily as possible for a prompt arraignment?

[fol. 4] The Court: That is all right. I think the opportunity, Mr. Turkus, for him to see his counsel over there is such that it is pretty hard to talk with him and it is pretty hard to get to them. I had some experience with what they do over there and I know it is pretty hard to sit down and discuss matters. I am going to allow him and his family to go into this room, with one or two officers, to talk.

(To defendant) Whom do you want to talk to?

The Defendant: My wife and brother.

The Court: Are the wife and brother of this man here?

(A man and woman stand in the court-room.)

The Court: Come up here. Take them into this room * * * I do not know how a man can talk to his family with ten men there listening to every word he says. He is not going to jump through a window. Let a couple of men——

Mr. Turkus: Your Honor, may I say this? Louis Buchalter, alias Lepke, is in the custody of the United States Marshal. He is brought here in cooperation with the law enforcement agencies of the United States Government and the District Attorney of this county.

The Court: That is all right.

[fol. 5] Mr. Turkus: Pursuant to a writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum. His custody at all times when he is not on trial in this court-room is vested in the United States Marshal and the United States law enforcement agencies. Under the circumstances, you can appreciate that there must be a heavy guard over this man.

The Court: A heavy guard would be all right. Two or three men in there with pistols and a few other things ought to be able to take care of him. How can a man talk to his family and have any conference with ten men standing around?

Mr. Turkus: You see, under the writ of habeas corpus ad prosequendum which brings him here, we are not responsible for the set-up in that room. He is in the custody of the United States Government and what efforts they deem fit and proper to safeguard him while he is in this court-room are theirs.

The Court: Mr. District Attorney, there is nobody who wants him to be safeguarded more than I do. I do not want him to get away, but that is ridiculous. There are ten men in there. How can he talk to his wife and his brother about [fol. 6] getting a lawyer with ten people standing around?

Anybody who can do that is marvellous. I do not want them to let him walk around the room.

Mr. Turkus: You see the attitude that the District Attorney of this county took the minute this man said he wanted to consult his family——

The Court: I am with you on this proposition. I know you want to be fair about it. How can he talk in there with ten people standing around? I could not talk and I am a pretty good talker.

Mr. Turkus: I think all he wants to discuss at this point is the obtaining of counsel. It is a large room. They can get them into a corner.

The Court: It is just big enough for about twelve people. I do not want to give him any different treatment than anybody else. As far as I am concerned, he is a bad man, and he has a bad record, and he is a dangerous man, but at the same time he is entitled to a fair opportunity to talk to his people; he is entitled to an opportunity to get counsel; he is entitled to a fair and just trial, which I know you will give him. It does not make any difference to me, but why we should make such a great hullabaloo I do not know. He is [fol. 7] just another man who walks through the door. I am not afraid anybody is going to take him out of the courtroom. If they take him out, they will have to take me with him. How they are going to go in there and talk, I do not know. I know you are not responsible for it, but maybe I am.

Mr. Turkus: The District Attorney is.

The Court: I am not directing any of my remarks toward you, regarding getting a fair deal and all that. That is ridiculous. I know you too long and I know you too well and I know you will give it to him, but what I am interested in is giving him an opportunity to talk to his wife.

Mr. Turkus: That is what regulates the procedure.

The Court: It does not regulate me in my courtroom, as to who should be with him. United States courts may have authority to take care of him but they certainly have no right to tell me where I shall let him stand or where I shall let him sit, because I won't let them tell me anything of that kind.

(Defendant's brother speaks to Mr. Turkus.)

Mr. Turkus: May we bring him out?

The Court: Yes, bring him out.

Mr. Turkus: Pursuant to the conversation which your [fol. 8] Honor permitted in the ante-room of the court-room, the defendant has sent word to the District Attorney that he desires one week within which to get counsel to appear for him on the arraignment. That is satisfactory to the District Attorney, subject to the approval of the Court.

The Court: Give him a week.

The Defendant: Thank you, your Honor.

The Court: And I return him to the custody of the United States authorities.

[fol. 9] PEOPLE vs.

LOUIS BUCHALTER alias LEPKE

Brooklyn, N. Y. May 16, 1941.

Hearing on Arraignment

George Rea, Official Stenographer.

[fol. 10] Before Judge Brancato

(The defendant is arraigned for pleading to indictment charging murder, first degree)

The Clerk: What is your name?

Mr. Wegman: The defendant stands mute.

The Clerk: What is your name?

(No response)

The Clerk: Have you a lawyer?

Mr. Wegman: I am his lawyer.

The Court: Have you filed a notice of appearance, has notice of appearance been filed?

Mr. Wegman: With the District Attorney.

The Court: With the court?

Mr. Wegman: Not with this court.

The Court: File it now with the court before I take the plea.

Mr. Wegman: We are not going to enter any plea, your Honor.

The Court: You are going to talk for this defendant, aren't you?

Mr. Wegman: Yes.

[fol. 11] The Court: File notice of appearance in this court first.

Mr. Chemiski: May I be heard? I would like to have the record note——

The Court: The record will note nothing until you first file notice of appearance and say you are appearing for the defendant.

Mr. Chemiski: This is not on behalf of the defendant, but for myself.

The Court: Then I have nothing to say to you or you to me. I have called the case of People vs. Buchalter. He either speaks for himself or through counsel. If he speaks through counsel, counsel must first identify himself. You file notice of appearance, otherwise I will not listen to you. That is the ruling, sir; no argument about it.

Mr. Wegman: May I ask if the stenographer is making a record of that ruling?

The Court: You have heard what I said. We will have no argument about it. If you are attorney for the defendant you have to appear, and appear in this court.

Mr. Wegman: Does your Honor doubt that I am the attorney?

The Court: I doubt your word until you file notice of appearance. I want no argument from you or I will put you out of this court in about two seconds, because you are becoming impudent. The rule is elementary that there must be notice of appearance filed in court by counsel. It is very simple. I don't know why you want to evade doing it.

[fol. 12] Mr. Wegman: There is no question of evasion.

The Court: You have heard it, that's all, that is the ruling of the Court. File your notice of appearance and then speak for the defendant; otherwise you cannot.

Mr. Wegman: I am surprised at your Honor's statement. I have a very distinct recollection of a time when your Honor came to me and asked me to take your word for something, and I took your word.

The Court: Counsel, will you claim that you are not within the jurisdiction of this court?

Mr. Wegman: I don't know, your Honor. That question has not been determined. We have not been able to determine for ourselves whether we want to raise that question. It may be that we will want to raise it.

The Court: I don't see how your notice of appearance in this court is going to in any way prejudice your client's rights. You appear for the defendant, and if the Court has no jurisdiction in the premises you certainly cannot be hurt by an appearance, not in a criminal court.

The Clerk: Notice of appearance filed. (The clerk reads the indictment)

Mr. Wegman: I ask your Honor to adjourn the hearing under this indictment until the twenty-ninth of May. I ask for the twenty-ninth, I cannot ask for two weeks because [fol. 13] two weeks would bring it on a holiday. The reason for that is that until yesterday I had never seen or talked with or met this defendant. Until a week ago my partner had never met nor seen the defendant. This as your Honor probably can realize from the nature of the proceedings is a very complicated matter and there are many angles and many questions involved. Our presence in the case has been entirely too brief for us to attempt to assimilate all that may be involved and we require that additional time before we feel we can competently advise this defendant whether he ought to raise the question of law before a plea is entered or whether he ought to enter his plea and then proceed from that point on. It is a very serious question and a matter for careful consideration.

The Court: It should not take much time for you with your experience in the practice of federal law.

Mr. Turkus: Your Honor, this is a mile stone in law enforcement. After fifteen months of investigation by Judge O'Dwyer we have succeeded in bringing before your Honor at this bar of justice Louis Lepke on a charge of murder in the first degree, the man who pulled the strings. The district attorney of this county will zealously safeguard every constitutional right of this defendant in order that when there shall be final judgment it will be conclusive. Since counsel is in a dilemma as to his rights and remedies in the [fol. 14] situation, in order that even Lepke may have every constitutional right safeguarded, the district attorney will interpose no objection to the adjournment on arraignment to the time requested.

The Court: Well, I don't know that Louis Lepke to me means anything more than another murder case, that is all it means so far as I am concerned, who he is, what he is, or anything else. If counsel wants until May twenty-ninth I will give him a little more time to think it over. He can't plead guilty to murder in the first degree; he has to plead not guilty.

Mr. Turkus: It is not the province of the district attorney to advise in the premises, but if there is no jurisdiction, then not even an adjournment would be valid.

Mr. Wegman: That is exactly what I have in mind, so that your Honor will not think that the application for an adjournment is a whim or fancy. Once this defendant enters a plea of not guilty, which is the only plea that can even be considered as being entered, but once he has entered that plea, he has surrendered to this court to try him. So far as the jurisdiction of the crime, there is no question about this court's jurisdiction, but if this defendant voluntarily pleads, he has surrendered his person to this court; that is the point: it is a question of his surrender.

[fol. 15] The Court: It does not make any difference how he gets in the jurisdiction; he could be kidnapped and brought here, and once he is here he is in the jurisdiction of this court and can be tried. We are not going to discuss that.

Mr. Wegman: If this court took custody of him that would be true; but this court is not taking custody of him. He is being kept by the federal authorities and until yesterday he was kept incommunicado for all practical purposes.

The Court: Once he is here, he is here under our jurisdiction and we have all rights.

Mr. Turkus: In justice to the federal authorities, the system under which counsel was permitted to confer was the same system used at all federal prisons, and when the situation was called to the attention of the authorities at the federal detention pen by counsel for Lepke, that the facilities were not suitable for proper conference, appropriate and satisfactory arrangements were made for interviewing of counsel in an interview room, so that that point is settled. I merely say that to preserve the state of the record.

Mr. Wegman: That is correct, and I want to say that so far as Mr. Turkus and Judge O'Dwyer are concerned, they have been very careful and very fair in their attitude towards this matter; but unfortunately, and without reflection in any way on them, the rules of the federal detention head[fol. 16] quarters were such that it was impossible for counsel to confer with the defendant.

The Court: May twenty-ninth. Go ahead.

Mr. Wegman: May I ask your Honor to permit this defendant to consult with his wife and brother.

The Court: He will be taken upstairs to the pen first. Captain Gannon is over there and he has charge of prisoners. If he says it is O. K. with him, it is O. K. with me. That is his province, not mine.

[fols. 17-18] County Court, Kings County, Part I

Indictment Number 23855

The People of the State of New York

against

Louis Buchalter, Alias Lepke, Defendant

Murder, First Degree

Brooklyn, New York, May 29, 1941.

Before Hon. George W. Martin, County Judge

Appearances:

For the People: Burton Turkus, Esq., Assistant District Attorney.

For the Defendant: J. Bertram Wegman, Esq., Jesse Clemenko, Esq. and Hyman Barshay, Esq.

[fol. 19] (The defendant was arraigned, the Court Clerk reading the indictment to him.)

Mr. Wegman: If your Honor pleases, with all due deference to this Court and a full measure of respect, defendant stands mute. I would like to explain the reason for that to your Honor, so that you will know it is not intended in any way as a reflection on this Court. We seriously doubt that this Court has any jurisdiction to try this defendant for this offense under the present conditions of his incarceration. He is not here in the custody of this Court or in the custody of the power of the State of New York. He is here, brought in by Deputy Marshals as a prisoner of the United States Government. It is perfectly true that when a defendant is before the Bar of this Court, it makes no difference how he got here or by what means he was brought here, even though he were kidnapped or anything else, but that means he is in the custody of this Court, and this Court has power of jurisdiction over his person. This defendant lacks that. We intend to preserve that.

The Court: Isn't the answer to that, he is produced here on my order in court?

Mr. Wegman: If your Honor pleases, he is produced by [fol. 20] virtue of the kindness or the voluntary act of the Federal Government.

The Court: Supposing he is produced here under an order of this Court, he is here. There might be some question in my mind—maybe I would like to argue with you the proposition—maybe they could bring him here, but he got here. In other words, taking him from Alcatraz, for instance, to bring him in here, that might be debatable ground, but once having appeared in the court, the method of his transportation here to the Court while in the City of New York, what difference does it make?

Mr. Turkus: May the District Attorney be heard?

The Court: Yes. Hear him first.

Mr. Wegman: The essential difference is this, if your Honor pleases, the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the office, the executive offices, of the Federal Government have no right to recognize a writ of habeas corpus issued by a State Court as against a Federal prisoner. If the Attorney General of the United States delivered this prisoner into the custody of this Court——

The Court: He waives the right. Can he waive it?

[fol. 21] Mr. Wegman: He cannot waive it, and that is the constitutional question that we propose to raise, and that we are raising by these motions, and this is the only means by which we can presently raise it. If this defendant were now to enter a plea on this indictment he might, by that act——

The Court: Probably submit himself to the jurisdiction of the Court.

Mr. Wegman: That we do not do. That is what we propose to reserve.

The Court: You have a perfect right to use any defense, any means, or any action that you think will protect the interests of this man. What have you got to say?

Mr. Turkus: The business of the day is to arraign this defendant, join issue, and fix a date for trial. I may make this observation, that if there is a point of jurisdiction, there is nothing for them to be alarmed about; in fact, Lepke should be elated, because even if convicted, he would cheat the electric chair. The People have no qualms as to the propriety of his appearance, and we are here to join issue, to have a plea entered, so we may fix a trial date before a [fol. 22] jury.

Mr. Wegman: The People have no qualms about lots of things; for instance, the prejudicial statement made by Mr. Turkus. The defendant's name is Buchalter, though he is referred to as Lepke and we have no offense at the use of that name, but when the District Attorney speaks of him in court and on the record he is entitled to be called by his legal name. Beyond that, however, it seems to me that it is a gross abuse of the power of the District Attorney for him to stand here and tell this Court that this defendant is going to cheat the electric chair. There is no case against this defendant; he is not guilty in any sense of this crime, and I think nobody knows that better than the District Attorney, and the statements that have been made in the newspapers, and the accounts that appeared in the Press are highly prejudicial; they indicate something which is definitely not the fact.

Mr. Turkus: The name Lepke is the name that he adopted. The expression used was that "if he was convicted."

The Court: Do not exercise yourself much about that. [fol. 23] Mr. Turkus: I am not. That is the name he used——

The Court: Do not exercise yourself about that. It is all right for the attorney to take that attitude, but I would not exercise myself about it, if I were you. There is no question about that. The only difficulty about this case, as I see it, they raise a question. How can I compel him to submit to the jurisdiction of the Court, to enter a plea or join?

Mr. Turkus: He is properly before the Court on your own order. He is brought here for arraignment. The position that he can take is that he stands mute, as he did in New York County, the same position urged there, and the Court entered the plea.

Mr. Wegman: There was an essential difference there.

The Court: At that time he was a United States prisoner, arraigned in a United States Court.

Mr. Wegman: But he had not been committed on his sentence of the United States Court. That was a substantial difference.

Mr. Turkus: Your Honor signed the order that brought him here. He is before the Court on a charge of murder [fol. 24] in the first degree. He is here on arraignment. The arraignment has been adjourned now three weeks. It is about time that issue was joined to the end that a trial date may be fixed. If this Court has no jurisdiction, as I pointed out in the manner in which he took offense, but which would give his client the "break," as the expression goes, if he were convicted, and the Court had no jurisdiction, he would cheat, as I said, the electric chair. If the Court has no jurisdiction, all proceedings are a nullity. We are satisfied the Court has jurisdiction, satisfied to bring him to trial.

The Court: All the proceedings, counselor, would be void ab initio, from the start, if I should enter his plea and he should be tried, and your contention is correct, wouldn't it?

Mr. Wegman: That is correct.

The Court: The proceeding would be entirely of no value because the Court has not jurisdiction. Not having been able to acquire jurisdiction, the judgment of the Court could not be enforced.

Mr. Wegman: That is the reason we raise the point.

[fol. 25] The Court: But at the same time that is true, isn't is?

Mr. Wegman: Yes.

The Court: Where will he suffer then, if I enter a plea for him of not guilty? Where does he suffer in the event it shall be determined you are right in your theory, and, if you are right, you can stop this man from trying him. If you raise the constitutional question you can stop him, because the United States Courts are superior in their jurisdiction with their prisoners to the State Courts. You can stop his trial and I am not so sure on your motion before the United States Court, whether or not that would not act as a stay.

Mr. Wegman: I think your Honor is correct. I agree with everything that your Honor has said. There is no doubt about that.

The Court: How can he be hurt? He is here. He has been here three weeks, and it is essential and necessary that some kind of a plea or some disposition of this case. If this plea that he was going terfere with you in going ahead with what , I would not take it. I will say that. I do is, or what he is, he is entitled to a fair and deal He is going to get that with me, but e, I still think if I enter a plea myself, if I ve and enter a plea of not guilty and set that if you go through with the proceedings already brought or are going to bring, I say lf acts, first, as a stay of this case; second, are right in your contention—and I am not or you are not; I have not looked into it, e thought about it sometimes—if you are ontention then the whole proceeding is of Court not having acquired jurisdiction, the ne; the judgment of the Court is invalidated.

: May I say this, your Honor? So far as ncerned, I must object to your Honor enter- I think that if your Honor enters a plea, the erved. The point I raise is that if I consent a plea—— do not ask you to consent. I say if you do waive it.

: That is right.

Court: If he submits himself to take this plea the jurisdictional question involved in the

: That is right.

ow, while I enter a plea for him of not guilty,

: That is right.

I have the right, where he stands mute, to hether it is right or wrong. Suppose every I should say, "I refuse to enter a plea," right or ridiculous, or absurd; I still would have t. Under the theory of the case that you not quarrel with that; there may be some it in my mind—the responsibility, after all, District Attorney and not with me. That is ases where the responsibility rests with the ey and not with me, so therefore that respon- rs, not mine; so under the circumstances I think I am bound to enter a plea of not guilty and set the case down for trial. What date do you want?

Mr. Turkus: Judge O'Dwyer directed me a few days ago [fol. 28] to set the date of July 14th for trial.

Mr. Wegman: May I be heard on that?

The Court: Yes. If he consents to a date for trial, or he picks out a date for trial, then he is submitting himself practically to the jurisdiction of the Court.

Mr. Wegman: May I suggest, your Honor, that in order that this constitutional question may be raised, and because of the fact that today is May 29th and the question is one which will necessarily have to go to the Supreme Court of the United States for ultimate decision, without consenting to a date for trial and without waiving the objection to the jurisdiction, I suggest that the case ought to go over until September at the earliest.

The Court: What do you say to that? Suppose I do this: I am not going to try this case, so consequently I am not in any position to argue about the date. Suppose I do this: Suppose I set this case down for trial before Mr. Justice Taylor, who I understand from the District Attorney's Office is going to try it—is that correct?

[fol. 29] Mr. Turkus: That is my information, too. May I say this, that the trial date will be set upon the application for a special panel. The reason I mentioned the date of July 14th is that this defendant and his counsel may be apprised of the fact that Judge O'Dwyer has directed me to try this case on that date, so they will have ample time to get themselves ready.

The Court: I am going to set it down for July 14th. Of course, as I said before, the mere fact that I set the case down for July 14th does not hinder you, because the trial judge before whom it comes on July 14th will have to pass on it as to whether he shall go on or not. All the questions are just as valuable before him as they are before me.

Mr. Wegman: May I have an order from your Honor on the minutes of this proceeding that further action taken by counsel for this defendant in connection with the proceedings in this Court shall be without prejudice to the right of the defendant to question the jurisdiction of this Court in the manner that I have specified?

[fol. 30] The Court: You have not taken any part in the proceedings. I do not see that you are entitled to an order.

Mr. Turkus: As a matter of fact, even his appearance was well worded.

The Court: Mr. Turkus, you have to expect that when men are employed as lawyers to defend men, no matter who they are or what they are, or what they are charged with, they must exercise every legal technicality.

Mr. Turkus: I did the same thing.

The Court: Some day you and I will do that. You did.

Mr. Turkus: You did too, and very capably.

The Court: And I know you did, and very capably, so it is all right. It cannot do any harm. I will give it to you. I will have the stenographer write out what you ask to have written out, and I will give it to you.

Mr. Wegman: The suggestion has been made by my associate, Mr. Barshay, that we note on the record the fact that we presently object to July 14th, that we know that that will not give us an adequate opportunity to prepare for [fol. 31] the defense if the case is to be tried; that it is very much too soon.

The Court: I should think you would be in a much better position if you did not do anything. Now you are taking part in the proceedings.

Mr. Wegman: No, I am not.

The Court: You are saying, "We won't be ready on that day." That is an indication that you are not going to be ready. I will give you what you want. You may have it.

Mr. Wegman: Thank you.

The Court: I will have it noted on the record, just what you said.

Mr. Wegman: Now, may I ask your Honor for one thing more, not having to do with this arraignment. May I ask your Honor to direct that this defendant's wife and brother may be permitted to see him while he is in this Court?

The Court: Certainly.

Mr Wegman: Together with counsel.

[fol. 32] County Court, Kings County, Part II

Indictment No. 23855, Murder, First Degree

The People of the State of New York

against

Louis Buchalter, alias "Lepke", Emanuel Weiss, alias "Mendy Weiss", Philip Cohen, alias "Little Farvel" and Louis Capone, Defendants

Brooklyn, N. Y., August 4th et seq., 1941.
Thomas F. Darcy, Julia A. McGowan, Official Stenographers.

[fol. 33] Before: Hon. Franklin Taylor, County, Judge, and a Special Jury

Appearances:

For the People: Hon. William O'Dwyer, District Attorney, by Burton B. Turkus, Esq., Solomon A. Klein, Esq., Lewis Joseph, Esq., Assistant District Attorneys.
For the Defendant Buchalter: Hyman Barshay, Esq., Bertram Wegman, Esq., Jesse Climenko, Esq.
For the Defendant Weiss: Alfred J. Talley, Esq., James J. Cuff, Esq., M. M. Kriendler, Esq.
For the Defendant Cohen: Saul Price, Esq.
[fol. 34] For the Defendant Capone: Leon Fischbein, Esq., Emanuel Rosenberg, Esq., William Murphy, Esq.
Julia A. McGowan, Thomas F. Darcy, Official Stenographers.

Mr. Turkus: The District Attorney, sir, is ready.
Mr. Talley: Defendant Weiss is ready.
Mr. Barshay: I have a statement to make for the record which I would like to make not within the hearing of the jury. I can read it directly to Miss McGowan.
The Court: Step up—all counsel.

(The following occurred at the bench, not within the hearing of the jury.)

Mr. Barshay: The defendant Buchalter objects to the jurisdiction of this Court. He has never acceded to this Court's jurisdiction and maintains that this Court did not and could not acquire jurisdiction over this defendant. This defendant, by an order and judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, is incarcerated in the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas, for a term now of fourteen years before [fol. 35] the commencement of this trial. While serving the said term in the said penitentiary this defendant, against his will and without his consent, was removed therefrom by a United States Marshal on or about May 7, 1941, and was deposited in the Federal House of Detention on West Street in the Borough of Manhattan, City and State of New York. He has been and still is confined there. This Federal House of Detention is not a United States penitentiary. Upon the arraignment of this defendant on the charge of murder in the first degree as set forth in this indictment, counsel for defendant in open court challenged the jurisdiction of this Court and refused to submit to this Court's jurisdiction over him. He refused to plead to the indictment and over his protest and against his will and against the will of his counsel there was entered on the record of this court a plea of not guilty to this indictment. This defendant has not been pardoned by the President of the United States nor has his sentence been commuted by the President of the United States.

This defendant refuses to answer ready, because he has not been afforded a reasonable opportunity to properly prepare his defense. He, by virtue of that, maintains that he cannot receive a fair trial.

Counsel for this defendant and this defendant, after a thorough investigation, have deemed it necessary, in order [fol. 36] to prepare properly for the trial here, to interview one Jacob Shapiro, a former business associate of this defendant, now a federal prisoner. Counsel have applied for permission to interview the said Jacob Shapiro to the Director of the Bureau of Prisons in Washington. Jacob Shapiro, in the opinion of counsel, could and would give information vital and essential to the defendant's defense. Said permission was arbitrarily refused. By virtue of such refusal the defendant has been deprived of a fair opportunity to prepare his case.

We may further add, sir, that we obtained a petition and writ of habeas corpus which was argued before a judge of the Federal Court, and he denied our application and an appeal was made to the Circuit Court and the learned judge there advised us that all the rights and all the points to protect our rights that we raised there were a matter for the State courts and should be raised here. Whether it is right or wrong, we are not passing upon. We raise those points here now, sir, and we ask permission to offer in evidence here a copy of the petition and writ of habeas corpus, which we have already printed and which will be here very shortly.

The Court: You may consider it marked. Where is Shapiro?

Mr. Barshay: Shapiro is in the Federal penitentiary [fol. 37] out West.

The Court: Where?

Mr. Barshay: Springfield, Missouri.

Mr. Turkus: Is that an institution for mental defectives?

Mr. Barshay: No, sir, not to my knowledge.

Mr. Climenko: If an answer to Mr. Turkus's question is appropriate, I may say this, if your Honor please: I understand that the institution in which Shapiro is presently incarcerated is in the nature of a hospital prison, but there is no basis for any inference or intimation that Shapiro is not thoroughly mentally competent.

Mr. Turkus: How long has he been in that institution?

Mr. Wegman: The writ of habeas corpus was sued out in Atlanta, Georgia, for Shapiro, who was at that time incarcerated in the Federal penitentiary in Atlanta. The United States District Court expressed the opinion that the incarceration of Shapiro in the Federal penitentiary was improper, his sentence was such that his incarceration should have been in a jail and not in a penitentiary, so before an order was made on the writ, the Director of Prisons transferred Shapiro from the penitentiary at Atlanta to the Federal Prison at Springfield, Missouri, which [fol. 38] is not a penitentiary, and where his incarceration would have been proper under the sentence which was imposed. It has never been suggested otherwise, and there can be no question about it, Shapiro is mentally competent. It has never been intimated otherwise.

The Court: If that is a hospital prison, do you know for what he was hospitalized?

Mr. Wegman: If your Honor wants an expression of our opinion, it was because the writ of habeas corpus would have required his transfer out of the penitentiary, and he was put in there as a device to avoid such an order on the writ. He is perfectly competent mentally, and from the conference I had in Washington with the representative of the Attorney General, there was no suggestion whatsoever that there was any reason other than the fact that they said that they did not believe that they were required to grant it, and unless an order of the court required them to, they would not. No suggestion was ever made that it was because of his condition, because other prisoners have seen him.

The Court: He is held incommunicado?

Mr. Wegman: Incommunicado.

The Court: Has anybody attempted, on behalf of this defense, to interview him at the prison?

Mr. Wegman: We have asked permission for such an [fol. 39] interview and have been refused that permission specifically, flatly, bluntly.

The Court: In writing?

Mr. Wegman: In writing as well as orally.

The Court: Are there any regular visiting days?

Mr. Wegman: Only to those who have been granted permission. One cannot visit a Federal prisoner without permission, unless it is a member of the immediate family, and even members of his immediate family have been required to obtain permission in advance.

The Court: Have you made formal application to be advised as to the pathology?

Mr. Wegman: No question about pathology.

The Court: But it is a hospital prison.

Mr. Wegman: It is a prison and also used as a hospital.

The Court: There must be a clinical record if he is a patient.

Mr. Wegman: When I spoke to Mr. Bennett he told me there was absolutely nothing wrong with him.

The Court: To whom?

Mr. Wegman: Mr. Bennett, Federal Director of Prisons.

The Court: Have you made application in writing to be advised if there is a pathology?

[fol. 40] Mr. Wegman: We made application in writing for permission to visit him, and we were told they could not see why that privilege should be afforded. I will be glad to offer that letter in evidence.

The Court: That is all right, of course, but what I am trying to get at is whether what you state as to your opinion concerning the reason for the transfer is with some sound basis or whether it is merely a suspicion. The question is, have you checked up on any clinical record that there may be in the files of the institution?

Mr. Wegman: When the statement was made in the answer to the writ of habeas corpus in the Federal Court, that Jacob Shapiro was incarcerated in a hospital for mental defectives, I challenged that statement, and there was prompt assurance given by the United States Attorney that it was not intended to intimate that there was anything whatever wrong with Jacob Shapiro.

The Court: But you do not know whether there has been any Binet-Simon test, and if so, what the intelligence quotient is?

Mr. Wegman: I do not know whether there has been any clinical record whatsoever. I cannot answer your Honor on that.

The Court: Is that all on behalf of this defendant?

Mr. Barshay: One more thing, sir: We have also applied [fol. 41] for permission for the defendant Buchalter to interview his co-defendant Weiss, who was incarcerated in the same Federal house of detention. That permission was applied for in Washington, and that permission was denied.

Mr. Turkus: But I understand that was mandatory.

Mr. Barshay: It was denied. No permission was ever given to defendant Buchalter to interview the defendant Weiss, and to this day they have not had any opportunity to consult and properly prepare their defense. We did not ask for permission to see Mr. Weiss. That was an answer by way of compromise that the Director of Prisons gave to us. He said, "You will be permitted to interview Weiss." We did not want to, nor did we seek to interview Weiss. We wanted defendant Buchalter, who was there in the identical building and who had an interest in properly preparing his defense, to interview the defendant Weiss. That permission was denied.

The Court: You mean, in addition to the right of the defendant to confer with his own counsel, that he is entitled to interview witnesses or co-defendants?

Mr. Barshay: Co-defendants.

The Court: That that is an inherent right?

Mr. Barshay: We press that, sir.

Mr. Climenko: I think we might examine witnesses too, [fol. 42] unless there was some reason having to do with the safety of the prisoner, or the manner of his incarceration might be endangered by such an interview. Unless some such reason should intervene, I think that a prisoner charged with murder in the first degree ought to be allowed to interview prospective witnesses on his behalf.

Mr. Barshay: Those two things, your Honor, were specifically sought and were specifically refused. We say that was an arbitrary refusal.

The Court: You do not concede, then, that it is possible that the defendant's right in regard to interviewing of co-defendants and witnesses is properly reposed in counsel?

Mr. Climenko: There are some things that counsel cannot do.

The Court: You mean defendant is entitled to directly interview co-defendants and witnesses?

Mr. Climenko: The charge is that this murder was committed just about five years ago. We feel that since that time many things fade out as the years go by. Counsel knows nothing about them. In a review of anything connected with the life of each of the defendants at and about the time, all that counsel can do is listen to the defendant's recollection, but one defendant talking to another defendant with whom he was associated at the time, or defendant [fol. 43] brought to a witness with whom he was closely associated at the time, may have his recollection refreshed, and that may work the other way, too, as to events which transpired which may be of vital importance to the defendants. We are not talking about a crime that was committed last week or last month.

The Court: Is that all that you desire to state for the purpose of the record?

Mr. Barshay: That is correct.

The Court: To see that Buchalter's rights are fully protected?

Mr. Barshay: That is correct.

The Court: As to Weiss?

Mr. Talley: I answered ready on Weiss, but I join in the application that has been just made on behalf of defendant Buchalter on the ground of jurisdiction.

The Court: That is for any collateral benefit?

Mr. Talley: For any benefit of any kind, direct or collateral. We have not been permitted to confer one with the other, that is, Buchalter has not been permitted to confer with Weiss and vice versa, in the detention pen in which they have been confined since their arrest.

Mr. Turkus: That does not include the Shapiro——

Mr. Talley: On the general ground on which the applica-[fol. 44] tion is made, for defendant Weiss, I join in the application.

The Court: Philip Cohen?

Mr. Price: Ready, subject to a motion for a severance, which I intend to make as we go along.

Mr. Talley: The answer of "ready" on behalf of Weiss is dependent upon the same motion, with the Court's permission. A motion for severance shall be made at the proper time.

Mr. Price: The defendant Cohen also joins in the Buchalter motion in so far as jurisdiction is concerned, so far as the matter may in any way collaterally adhere to his advantage or otherwise.

The Court: Louis Capone?

Mr. Fischbein: Defendant Capone joins in that motion made by defendant Buchalter with the same force and effect that the others have indicated. I also move at this time for a severance of the indictment as against Louis Capone, and for a separate trial.

The defendant made a motion some time ago before Judge Brancato, who heard the application, and he also heard the application of opposing counsel—I believe it was Mr. Turkus who appeared in opposition. That motion was denied, with leave to renew before the trial. Judge, there was an [fol. 45] order entered to that effect. I am renewing that application.

The Court: Have you a copy of that order?

Mr. Fischbein: No, I have not. It is already on file with the Court.

The Court: With leave to renew?

Mr. Fischbein: With leave to renew without prejudice, and I am submitting another affidavit in support of that motion besides the affidavits and the exhibits that have been originally submitted on behalf of that motion.

The Court: But other than the jurisdictional objection, in which you join, and the motion for severance, you are otherwise ready?

Mr. Fischbein: I am otherwise ready, except that I am joining generally in the motions made by other counsel as they apply to the defendant Louis Capone.

The Court: Very well. I take it in regard to Buchalter that apart from the jurisdictional objection the defendant is ready?

Mr. Climenko: Preserving our record.

The Court: The same applies to Philip Cohen?

Mr. Price: Ready subject to the motion that I intend to make for a severance.

The Court: Very well. Suppose we first take the motion for severance by Philip Cohen.

Mr. Price: I have discussed the matter with the District [fol. 46] Attorney in great detail. It was my opinion that the interests of justice as far as two defendants are concerned, and particularly the defendant Cohen, could best be served by consenting to a separate trial as far as Philip Cohen is concerned. I therefore, without stating any further reasons at this time, make the motion on behalf of Philip Cohen for a separate trial and a severance as to him.

Mr. Turkus: May the District Attorney state his position?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Turkus: I am reading over a paper that Mr. Barshay read from.

Mr. Barshay: I did not follow word for word.

Mr. Turkus: May I inquire through the Court of counsel for the defendant Buchalter whether or not any application was made to this Court for an interview with the alleged witness Jacob Shapiro on behalf of Buchalter?

Mr. Wegman: If your Honor pleases, the answer to that is no, and the reason for that is manifest. The reason is that both the defendant Buchalter and the witness Shapiro are persons who are prisoners at this time. Then, the defendant Buchalter is in the custody of the United States Government, and they are subject to the control of Mr. Bennett, the Director of Federal Jails, and if I understand the [fol. 47] position of Mr. Turkus's office, they have stated that their office and that the State authorities generally could not intervene in that situation. With the greatest respect to your Honor's court, I do not see how this Court could control that situation, so no application has been made. As we understand it, there would have been no possible efficacy in making such application.

Mr. Barshay: We also had a parallel, sir. When I was first retained in this case and filed my notice of appearance in this court, I was refused permission for a period of three weeks to see my own client. I did not get permission from this Court, nor could I seek it. I had to get permission from Washington, and I did get it only after the argument before Judge Conger, who suggested to the United States Assistant District Attorney in charge of the argument that forthwith I be given permission, and then it was given. This Court could not and did not give permission to counsel.

The Court: The question, of course, is an interesting one and maybe I can state a hypothetical case, Counselor, and get your reaction to it. Supposing a man, having committed a capital crime and fearing detection, indictment, and conviction, commits a crime for which a term of imprison- [fol. 48] ment may be imposed, for the purpose of procuring his incarceration until such time as, by reason of the death or other possibility, of witnesses, a conviction may be impossible of the major crime, that is the capital crime, would it be the policy of the law, should it be the policy of the law, to permit such manipulation?

Mr. Wegman: With the State there is no question. I assume that your Honor's question was based on a prisoner or a person who committed an offense so as to be incarcerated in a Federal penitentiary in order to avoid a trial in a State court on a capital charge, because if they were both State courts there would be no question about it, both State offenses, that the State court could try him for the capital offense.

In the case of Ponzi v. Fessenden it is ruled specifically that the Attorney General of the United States has the authority and the discretion and the power to turn a Federal prisoner over to a State court for trial in the State court of an indictment there pending, but the Supreme Court of the United States said that he could do so only upon condition that he provide the prisoner with the full opportunity to prepare and present his defense, that subject to that limitation he could turn him over for trial.

The Court: But he cannot give him absolute freedom. [fol. 49] Mr. Wegman: Oh, no, but he has to give him a full opportunity to prepare his defense. Our contention here is that in this instance, in the case of this defendant, the Attorney General has not acted within the limitation of the ruling of the Supreme Court in the Ponzi case; that he has turned him over to this Court for trial, but that he has deprived him of the opportunity to prepare and present his defense.

The Court: Well, the question concededly is one as to what is meant by "opportunity to prepare and present his defense." There are certain restrictions placed upon prisoners, and the Court cannot go into the reason for those penal restrictions. May it not be fairly assumed that reasonable restrications are permissible and that so far as a defendant is concerned who is presently under incarceration, serving a sentence, he cannot be heard to complain if the restrictions are reasonable, because he himself is estopped as a matter of law by his own conduct in committing the crime that is the subject of the restriction, because of the restriction?

Mr. Wegman: May I answer your Honor on that?

The Court: Yes, I am only asking a question.

Mr. Wegman: Yes, and I would like to suggest my answer to that question, and that is that the Attorney General can take his choice: either he can refuse to deliver the [fol. 50] prisoner over for trial on the other indictment because he wants to subject him to restrictions having to do with his then present incarceration, or he can waive those restrictions to the extent that such a waiver is necessary in order to permit that prisoner to prepare his defense against the other indictment. The Attorney General cannot, with the one hand, hand the prisoner over to the State court and say, "Here, try him," and with the other hand prevent that prisoner from an opportunity to prepare his defense, as it necessarily would have to be prepared if he is to have a fair trial. I suggest, your Honor, that it is of the essence of a fair trial that proper opportunity for preparation be given and if that proper opportunity be not given, there cannot be a fair trial, no matter how impartial the presiding judge may be; no matter how eminently fair his rulings may be, no matter how perfect his conduct of the trial may be, there cannot be a fair trial without a proper opportunity to prepare a defense to present.

Mr. Talley: I want to make my motion for severance when your Honor is prepared.

Mr. Klein: There have been several statements made that might be misleading. I would, with your Honor's permission, like to state the proceedings that have taken place, and state them briefly, on these very questions be- [fol. 51] fore today.

When the Attorney General of the United States turned over Buchalter to the New York City detention headquarters for the purpose of trial on this murder indictment in Kings County, two lawyers appeared for him, Mr. Wegman and Mr. Climenko. The regulations of the Federal jail require that only two lawyers be permitted to visit the defendant. Thereafter, Mr. Barshay became a third counsel, and for a temporary period of time he was not permitted to interview Buchalter. Now, the next step, your Honor, that was taken was this: A writ of habeas corpus was sued out in the Federal District Court in which writ it was argued that Buchalter could not be tried in Kings County on the ground that we could not acquire jurisdiction over him. It was also contended that he was denied the right to a fair trial because Mr. Barshay was not permitted to interview Buchalter. Now, the writ of habeas corpus was dismissed, and the opinion was written by District Judge Conger.

Parenthetically, I may suggest that if any papers have been filed in the Federal proceedings, that opinion be included in the papers.

Mr. Wegman: I have no objection to your filing it, Mr. Klein.

Mr. Klein: In that opinion Judge Conger in substance [fol. 52] stated that we do have jurisdiction, and the authority on which the decision was based was Ponzi v. Fessenden, which was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Incidentally, the argument of Mr. Wegman, counsel for Buchalter, on the ground that there was no jurisdiction, was based upon the contention that Buchalter is to be kept in the penitentiary and that New York City had no penitentiary, therefore he could not be transferred here.

After the decision of Judge Conger dismissing the writ, Mr. Barshay was permitted to interview Buchalter together with his co-counsel, the privilege being granted to them despite the jail regulations.

Thereafter they sued out an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States Circuit, and on that appeal, your Honor, they included additional arguments why the trial should not proceed in Kings County. In addition to the point that this Court had no jurisdiction, they then, for the first time, on appeal, added the ground that they could not interview Jacob Shapiro. I was present at the e point very clear in the argument at the by everybody, presumably, except Mr. Klein, that that point was being raised only because of the fact that technically it appeared to be sound, and therefore ought to be put in the record, but it would be waived if we could get this permission to interview Jacob Shapiro, if the defendant [fol. 55] Buchalter could have permission to interview witnesses.

Mr. Klein says that I put that in the application to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the first time. Mr. Klein is mistaken. Let him read the papers. Let him read the petition for the writ, and he will find it is there very definitely. He may have overlooked it, but it is there. There was nothing that was set forth in the application to the Circuit Court of Appeals that was not contained in the writ, and, what is more, we did not ask the Circuit Court of Appeals to stay this trial. That was not our application. I should like to have that understood. We asked there, in the alternative, either a stay of the delivery of the prisoner or the immediate argument of the appeal on the merits, and I had then in court, two days after Judge Conger's order was signed, the papers on appeal, ready to submit to the Court.

The Court: Isn't this somewhat academic?

Mr. Wegman: It is.

The Court: Because I am not interested——

Mr. Wegman: That is correct.

The Court: —in that writ.

Mr. Wegman: I state it only because Mr. Klein has misstated and perverted those facts and has attempted to create an atmosphere and an inference which is unwar- [fol. 56] ranted.

The Court: It means nothing.

Mr. Wegman: Very well, your Honor.

Mr. Climenko: I want your Honor to understand there has been no appeal on the merits in the Circuit Court from the order of Judge Conger dismissing the writ and one part of the application that we did make to Judge Learned Hand was for an immediate hearing, and that application was denied. I know this is really in general academic, but I did not want your Honor——

The Court: There has been no application for writ of error?

Mr. Wegman: There cannot be.

The Court: I did not think there could be.

Mr. Clmenko: There has been no hearing on the merits in the Circuit Court.

The Court: Has everybody been heard? I want you all to have every opportunity to get in the record everything you want to get in. When you are through let me know.

Mr. Talley: Will your Honor hear my motion for severance?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: On behalf of defendant Weiss I now do move that indictment be severed from that of the others [fol. 57] that have been called for trial, and a separate trial be granted the defendant Weiss, upon the ground that it would not comport with the administration of justice to have Weiss, the client whom I represent, tried together with Louis Buchalter, generally known as Lepke, who is hailed throughout the press of not only this county but of the city, and I dare say the country at large, as the leader of a band that has been designated and is being designated today and for the past months as what has been known in newspaper parlance as "Murder, Incorporated." The publicity that has been given to the defendant Buchalter is such that it would undoubtedly prejudice the rights of the defendant Weiss if put upon trial with him. I therefore and upon that ground move that there be a severance of the Weiss indictment from that of the Buchalter indictment.

The Court: As to one person it has not registered, because I have not even read the indictment. I do not know just what this charge is yet. So far as the jury is concerned, of course, it may be fairly anticipated that there will be a great many challenges for cause which will have to be sustained, but in the weeding-out process of jurors it may be fairly assumed that twelve men will qualify if we work long enough in the selection of the jurors. If everything has been said—— [fol. 58] Mr. Fischbein: The affidavit that I submitted to the Court, may I have that made part of the record in this case?

The Court: Yes, it will be filed now with the clerk and entered on the clerk's minutes, but I want to read it. If everything has been orally stated——

Mr. Moe Levy: This is academic, but the indictment contains the name of Harry Strauss——

The Court: That is not academic.

Mr. Levy: In this trial, and I, having been assigned by your Honor, want to make an application that the indictment be severed and presumably dismissed.

The Court: Personally I know nothing about it. I think I know why you make that motion.

Mr. Levy: There will be no application made, Judge.

Mr. Talley: Will your Honor pass upon my motion, or are you reserving decision?

The Court: I did not want to hold counsel here before making an announcement because I want nothing said.

Is everybody through?

Mr. Barshay: Yes.

Mr. Klein: On the motions for severence, as your Honor knows, Judge Brancato denied Cohen's motion with leave to renew. There is no authority for granting a separate trial upon the grounds urged by defendants' [fol. 59] counsel. I submit the motion should be denied.

Mr. Talley: There is ample ground for the Judge to grant a severance whenever in his judgment justice requires.

The Court: You have no papers?

Mr. Talley: Mine is an oral motion.

The Court: Then, if counsel will be seated, I will read this affidavit.

(All counsel returned to the counsel table.)

The Court: Are there any answering affidavits?

Mr. Klein: No, your Honor.

Mr. Barshay: It was just served at the time they were handed to the Court, and the District Attorney had no opportunity to respond.

Mr. Fischbein: Your Honor, I had intended to make this orally, but this morning, because of the time I had, I prepared this affidavit.

The Court: Is there any objection to reasonable opportunity for answering affidavit?

Mr. Fischbein: No objection to that.

The Court: Submit today.

The jurisdictional objection is overruled as to each defendant.

All motions for severance are denied.

Mr. Talley: May I note an exception to both your [fol. 60] Honor's rulings?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Talley: In both cases on behalf of defendant Weiss.

Mr. Wegman: If your Honor pleases, may we on behalf of defendant Buchalter note exception to your Honor's ruling?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Fischbein: On behalf of defendant Capone may I note an exception to your Honor's ruling?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Price: I should like to step up to the bench for a moment with the District Attorney.

The Court: No, you do not have to. This is only exception.

Mr. Price: I note my objection to your Honor's ruling and also note my exception.

The Court: Are the defendants seated in the order in which the names appear upon the indictment?

The Clerk of the Court: Yes.

The Court: How many jurors have answered?

The Clerk of the Court: 224.

The Court: The case is marked ready as to all defendants who are here.

In calling for excuses of jurymen we must avoid [fol. 61] confusion. For that reason, no juror will be permitted within the rail to present his excuse until the Court so announces, and then only one at a time.

First the Court calls for those who have legal excuses to stand and remain standing until counted by a court attendant. Will the court attendant please count those who are standing? Be sure to be accurate.

The Court Attendant: 84.

The Court: Please be seated.

Now will the clerk ask those who have not been able to get into the room because of overcrowding, who have excuses, to please step into the room?

The Court Attendant: 3 from the other room.

The Court: One thing more, the Court asks that those whose excuses are based solely upon vacations will now stand, solely by reason of summer vacation.

Now will the clerk count those?

The Court Attendant: 22.

The Court: Then according to the Court's figures, of the 250 talesmen, 224 have appeared, 26 have not appeared and no reason is given for their non-appearance. Added to those 26 we have 87, making 113 have not appeared or, appearing, offered excuses. This constitutes a 44 per cent of the panel. In regard to those whose excuses are for summer vacation only, the Court sympathizes with [fol. 62] those who want vacations, because the average man takes only a summer vacation, and that is the mecca to which he looks during eleven months of work per year, but the Court cannot grant that indulgence except in individual cases, much as the Court would like to grant those excuses. One at a time those offering excuses will step within the rail at the end indicated by the jury box, one at a time. All others will remain seated.

To avoid confusion, the Court will hand back to each juror his notice and note the excuse. I am reserving decision on all.

(Excuses of talesmen were then offered to the Court.)

The Court: A recess will be taken to two o'clock. The defendants are remanded.

(A recess was thereupon taken until two o'clock.)

[fol. 63] Afternoon Session (Trial resumed)

Mr. Fischbein: During this proceeding of listening to excuses of jurors, I want to know whether the defendant Louis Capone can be excused; he is being treated for a cardiac condition at the present time.

The Court: How can I excuse him when the defendants are on trial?

Mr. Fischbein: This is not part of the trial.

The Court: I am taking no chances on an objection being made and an exception taken on that point.

(From 2:10 p. m. to 4:20 p. m. excuses from the panel were heard.)

The Court: State on the record that on each application the ground therefor has been noted by the Court. At the present time there are 16 denials, 18 excuses, reserved decision on 95; total 129. Did not answer, 26. Grand total 155. This leaves only 95 present and agreeing to serve out of a panel of 250. On those where decision has been reserved, the reasons will have to be classified and an announcement made after proper consideration has been had. This cannot be done this afternoon. The Court can, this afternoon, start the trial by calling one juror, and then the case can go over until tomorrow morning for announce-[fol. 64] ments in matters where decision was reserved, but the juror will not be examined this afternoon. Call one juror.

(Clerk Childs calls Woolsey W. Conlin—2576.)

The Court: The examination of this juror will proceed in the morning after the Court shall have made announcements on those applications which are yet undecided. Those who have presented excuses meritoriously—and many of them are meritorious—the Court sympathizes with them, but thinks that many of the excuses that were offered are because people do not want to work in August. Defendants remanded.

Mr. Talley: May I make application, if your Honor please, with respect to the defendant Weiss? May I have your Honor's permission that he be interviewed very briefly by a brother and another who are here who would like to confer with him? May they confer with him before he is taken out of the building? I refer to the defendant Weiss, whom I represent.

The Court: Is he kept in Raymond Street Jail?

Mr. Talley: No, he is in the Federal House of Detention, in Manhattan.

The Court: Have they been able to confer with him there?

Mr. Talley: Yes, sir, once a week.

The Court: How long will this conference take?

[fol. 65] Mr. Talley: I would say fifteen or twenty minutes, probably.

The Court: It will have to be under guard, you know that?

Mr. Talley: Yes, I know that.

Mr. Turkus: We have no objection.

The Court: Speaking about arrangements, there is a private pen upstairs that is used for women. Weiss can be taken in there so as to be segregated.

Mr. Talley: Will your Honor so instruct the clerk or officer?

The Court: Yes, the conference not to exceed half an hour.

Mr. Talley: Yes.

Mr. Barshay: I would like to make a similar application as to Buchalter. You can limit it to fifteen minutes, if you want to.

The Court: Can you wait until tomorrow?

Mr. Barshay: She has been waiting in the hall all day.

Mr. Turkus: We will consent to it, your Honor.

The Court: I am trying to accommodate, as far as physically possible, but of course precautions will have to be taken so there will be a proper distance between them, the [fol. 66] same as at the jail, where there is a fine screen. Consultation to be held at a certain distance, so there will be no passing of anything, and under guard, in the women's pen.

Mr. Turkus: Will you state the names on the record, please?

Mr. Talley: Sidney Weiss and Blanche Weiss, the wife.

The Court: Everybody else will return at ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

(A recess was thereupon taken until Tuesday, August 5, 1941.)

[fol. 67] Brooklyn, N. Y., August 5, 1941.

Trial Continued

Mr. Turkus: There are several applications that the District Attorney would like to make without the hearing of the panel and at the bench and I ask that your Honor ask counsel to group at the bench as they did yesterday when defense motions were made.

The Court: All right.

(The following took place at the bench, not within the hearing of the jury).

Mr. Turkus: It might reasonably be expected when the case was set down for a summer session there might be some reasonable difficulty in selecting the jury. The situation that developed yesterday was unprecedented. More than half the panel desired to be excused. Under the circumstances I think the interest of justice is conducive to an adjournment of the case until after Labor Day. In addition, there was an application made to your Honor and an exception taken to a ruling in connection with one Jacob Shapiro, alias Gurrah, at one time an associate of the defendant Louis Buchalter, alias Lepke. In that connection it was stated here that the Attorney General of the United States arbitrarily refused to permit counsel for the defendant Buchalter to interview Gurrah or Shapiro.

Mr. Wegman: It would be much easier to call him Jacob Shapiro.

[fol. 68] Mr. Turkus: I cannot understand the sensitivity on the alias. The District Attorney is addressing the Court.

The Court: There is no jury here.

Mr. Turkus: Nobody can be biased.

Mr. Talley: Do not start off so early in the case.

Mr. Wegman: Reserve that for later on.

The Court: What is the point?

Mr. Turkus: The point is this: I ascertained from inquiry that no application had been made to this Court for a permissive order to interview Gurrah or Shapiro. If that application is made in good faith, and if the defense, that is the defense in so far as the defendant Buchalter is concerned, are making a bona fide attempt to interview this man Shapiro on the theory that he may be a witness and is a vital and necessary and material witness for the defense, then by all means the District Attorney will consent to the granting of a permissive order of this Court, not a mandatory order because as it was pointed out this Court has no power to grant a mandatory order. The situation may be entirely different with a permissive order of the Court consented to by the District Attorney and I do not want the record here to stand with an exception to the defendant Buchalter which may jeojardize the record of the case in the event that there is a conviction.

The Court: But the man is out in the far West. That [fol. 69] adds to the difficulty of counsel. Why cannot he be brought to Lewisburg which is only a few hours away by automobile?

Mr. Turkus: That is something that can be arranged by the Attorney General.

The Court: It will be arranged if you request it.

Mr. Turkus: We are willing to do everything on our part to expedite the interviewing of this man who they say is a material witness, if in fact this is a bona fide contention.

The Court: What kind of a record would there be, should there be a conviction, that would go up with the statement that witnesses were held incommunicado so far as the defense is concerned? He should be aivailabie as a witness.

Mr. Turkus: The record may not indicate that.

The Court: It should be avoided.

Mr. Turkus: The Attorney General, as I understand, has exclusive jurisdiction over his prisoners.

The Court: You will make a request, will you not?

Mr. Turkus: If the application is made here for a permissive order to interview Shapiro, the District Attorney will consent to it.

The Court: Will you request to have him brought to the nearest available place of Federal confinement?

Mr. Turkus: We will certainly make that request.

Mr. Climenko: It is right in the Borough of Manhattan.

The Court: That is better still.

[fol. 70] Mr. Turkus: We will make any request of the Attorney General which will make it less difficult for defense counsel to interview a man who they say is a material witness, if that is a bona fide request.

Mr. Climenko: May I ask Mr. Turkus to call the Attorney General this morning? We have made many telephone calls and trips to Washington.

Mr. Turkus: The District Attorney has not so much as made an application for a permissive order.

The Court: If the application is made, it will be granted.

Mr. Turkus: And it will be consented to by the District Attorney.

Mr. Wegman: May I ask what is before your Honor at this time?

The Court: What is that?

Mr. Wegman: Is Mr. Turkus discussing Shapiro?

Mr. Turkus: Yes, discussing both matters.

Mr. Wegman: We will submit such an order and one of defense counsel will go to Springfield, Missouri, if that is necessary, or the prisoner may be brought to New York. It will take at least three or four days to impanel a jury. Mr. Klein made a statement in the Supreme Court, in open court, in which he accused us of seeking delay.

The Court: Who had it set down for August?

Mr. Wegman: The District Attorney insisted on July [fol. 71] 14th. I asked to have it go over because that was an inadequate time. We were then charged with using the process of the court in order to get an adjournment. When we made our motion for a change of venue, Mr. Klein in the Supreme Court charged us with making the motion not in good faith but wholly because we wanted delay. Every time we have been in court, that speech has been made for the benefit of the press and it has appeared in the press repeatedly. We have now decided we will not be accused any further. We are as ready as we will ever be and if we can get permission to interview Jacob Shapiro, we will not delay the trial one minute.

Mr. Talley: I cannot quite appreciate the Shapiro application as a ground for adjourning this case in behalf of the District Attorney. That can readily be taken care of, possibly before the case goes into trial at all.

The Court: I do not understand it as a ground. That is supplementary.

Mr. Talley: As to the application for the adjournment, I respectfully submit in the greatest seriousness, it has given me much concern. If this case is adjourned at all, if it does not go on delay—there is a juror in the box; he is there; the District Attorney has been responsible for setting this case at this time in the month of August—I submit this to your Honor, if this case goes over at all, I ask that it go over until the November term and my reason for [fol. 72] making that request is this, that it is very much against the interests of justice, the substantial fundamental interests of justice, that this case be tried at this time for the reason that the distinguished District Attorney of this county, primarily because of the publicity that has come to his office through cases that would be claimed to be allied with this, has been nominated for the office of Mayor of the City of New York and from now on, from today up to Election Day, will be necessarily and properly engaged in a campaign for successful election to the high office for which he has been nominated.

I object to this case, in behalf of my client, being made a football of a political situation here in this county and city. I do not think your Honor with your innate sense of fitness should be made to go on. Even this morning, as I did yesterday morning, I bought the New York American and there I find the glorification of Mr. O'Dwyer as the man who broke up Murder Incpor-orated, which will be claimed in the very opening of this case to be identified with the defendants that are now on trial. If the case goes over until September, it certainly can skip one term thereafter and go over until November. I will be ready the day after Election. I will be ready to proceed to trial.

Of the talesmen here called in this room, many of them if not most of the citizens of Brooklyn, read these stories, [fol. 73] rather lurid, in the American which has been running them for the past four or five weeks, and in yesterday's edition and in Saturday's edition the names of persons who will be called or identified in this case have been mentioned, and I say it is too great a risk to take, for your Honor to take, and certainly too great a risk for us to take with our responsibility representing the defendants. The minds of jurors will be influenced by the fact that the prosecutor in this case is a candidate for Mayor, that all of the matters that will be sought to be developed by his able assistants in this trial have been published in a lurid fashion in one of the New York papers. Undoubtedly, and whether they admit it or not, they have read or heard about this case.

Going out of this courtroom yesterday afternoon I saw in a shop near the court large placards of the theatrical type advertising this particular paper, for which I have the highest regard and for its management I have the highest regard, truly, advertising the life of Bill O'Dwyer, in the language of the poster; and I find tacked on telegraph poles throughout the city and on the sides of trucks, in very large lettering, the story that is identified with this trial, published daily in the newspaper with no doubt the exaggeration that we might assume newspapers give about this case. I say it is too important when men are indicted by the District Attorney of this or any other county for murder [fol. 74] in the first degree, it is too important to the fundamentals of American justice as you see it and as I see it to have the possibility of any inference where four men are on trial on a charge of murder in the first degree.

Let us get down to fundamentals. The District Attorney insisted upon this trial going on in August. All of us have been discommoded more or less. Our summer plans are all prepared for this particular month. This question about the jurors, with all due respect to my friend Mr. Turkus, we can go ahead and pick a jury. I am satisfied. I did not want to try this case in the month of August. My experience has been it is extremely difficult for the attorneys and jurors and for the Court himself to try cases in the month of August. I once tried it in the Court of General Sessions in New York. We thought we would clear up a prison calendar by sitting in August. The result was almost nil. You could not get the witnesses, or policemen were on vacations; everybody was hot and tired. Whatever is said about that, both weather and jurors, may apply in the month of September which is a summer month just as much as the month of August.

I think your Honor must give consideration to this. If the case goes on, we are ready. If the case goes off, by all means have the District Attorney put it off until November.

Then there is another matter which I submit with the greatest deference, and I do not have to add that last clause [fol. 75] to your Honor: Your Honor is a candidate and I am very much delighted to know that you are, but you are a candidate for reelection and you should not have anybody suggest that you are presiding in a case with any thought or likelihood of its effect upon you.

Mr. Turkus: Is there any other objection?

Mr. Talley: I am serious. That is a bad situation and I say that if the case goes over at all, it should go over until after Election and we can proceed without any consideration of its effect on the political fortune of the District Attorney.

The Court: Mr. Barshay.

Mr. Barshay: The counsel for defendant Buchalter join in the comments of Judge Talley and adopt his reason for requesting an adjournment as our own. In addition I may briefly relate to your Honor that even before the notice of motion for a blue ribbon jury was served upon counsel for defendants, before they were drawn, Mr. Climenko and I appeared at the office of Judge O'Dwyer. I believe Mr. Turkus was present too. We begged for a later date and we learned that July 14th was supposed to be the date upon which the trial was to commence. We even wanted to waive certain rights which we had, certain technicalities which we subsequently raised, if the trial would be adjourned. Of course it goes without saying our request was refused. There- [fol. 76] after, on a motion for a blue ribbon jury we strenuously opposed July 14th as the date.

Mr. Turkus: And urged September.

Mr. Barshay: There we were accused of seeking delay. That has been said. On a motion for a change of venue, both orally and subsequently under oath we were again accused of using dilatory tactics in seeking delay.

I have had experience as Mr. Turkus has had and we anticipated the difficulty of getting a fair jury in the summer time; we anticipated the difficulty of even getting any kind of a jury in the summer time and we anticipated and we should have anticipated the plans of the prospective jurors in making their business arrangements for their employees' and their own vacations. All those things were known to the prosecution and we opposed them strenuously at every turn. Now it is apparent to me that an adjournment is wanted by the District Attorney for more reasons than are being said here. However, we will go along, Judge, providing this matter is adjourned subsequent to the Election. It is difficult enough to try a case where the person who sponsors the prosecution is a candidate for District Attorney but when he is a candidate for Mayor—and there may be a time in this case when even the District Attorney may be a witness. You can understand the difficulties under which we shall labor.

[fol. 77] The Court: May be a witness?

Mr. Barshay: Yes, may be a witness. I do not know but there are lots of ways I can think of.

The Court: Fantastic.

Mr. Barshay: It is not fantastic. They may be caused to call him in rebuttal if we raise certain issues which we have in mind. I do not say it is fantastic. It is part of our plan.

The Court: Do you intend to call him?

Mr. Barshay: I did not say that. I say it may be necessary for them to call him in rebuttal.

The Court: Naturally he would take the stand.

Mr. Barshay: I do not say he would not but I do say this, there comes a time when credibility from any person involved may present itself in the trial but Judge O'Dwyer being a candidate for Mayor, we do not want to be faced with that additional burden if he should have to take the stand in this case.

Yesterday it was called to my attention that some of the jurors came to the court with O'Dwyer buttons. That is all right.

The Court: Who told you that?

Mr. Barshay: People. I did not see it myself.

The Court: I have not seen an O'Dwyer button yet.

Mr. Barshay: Judge, the entire county is full of O'Dwyer [fol. 78] buttons, but that is proper, that is all right. Some of us have them concealed in the inside anyway, but you can just understand the difficulties which we shall face in the interest of justice and you should adjourn this case until after Election.

The Court: Counsel for defendant Cohen.

Mr. Turkus: May we have the other lawyers?

The Court: Counsel for Cohen.

Mr. Price: Judge, I am primarily concerned and I intend to renew my application before a jury is sworn for a separate trial on behalf of my client. I therefore take the position that it is immaterial as far as Philip Cohen is concerned when he is tried so long as he can get a separate trial. If the District Attorney wants to try him today, tomorrow, I am ready.

The Court: You do not care?

Mr. Price: I do not care so long as I can get a separate trial for him which I believe he is entitled to.

Mr. Talley: May I call your Honor's attention to this day's issue of the New York American? The name in the headline is the name we expect to be probably the principal witness for the prosecution. His name is in the headline of that paper, and yesterday some of these defendants were named and Saturday the same way.

The Court: Isn't this about the Maione and Abbandando [fol. 79] trial?

Mr. Turkus: Whatever that paper is and whatever it says——

The Court: Judge, let me ask you something. Of course you know that when the jury is in custody, which will be from the outset of the trial, that newspapers are not permitted. You know that?

Mr. Talley: I know that but this has been going on for the last, I think, eight or ten days.

The Court: They will remember this after Election just as much as before.

Mr. Talley: I do not think so. They will not be influenced. The District Attorney is a candidate for Mayor of the city which has five boroughs, is a resident and a favorite son as he should be of the Borough of Brooklyn, and these jurors are all citizens of the Borough of Brooklyn.

Mr. Turkus: May I say this to your Honor——

Mr. Talley: There is the complete answer.

Mr. Turkus: Your Honor has heard several counsel for each defendant with the exception of the counsel for Capone. May he be heard?

Mr. Fischbein: With respect to the defendant Louis Capone, of course I join in the remarks that were made by Mr. Barshay and by Judge Talley. I hardly believe, however, that Judge O'Dwyer or even your Honor would in any way use this trial as a means of bolstering up a campaign [fol. 80] which is being waged at the present time. I am more or less concerned with one thing and that is a fair and impartial trial, with jurors who can really weight the evidence in this case with a view towards doing substantial justice. Because of the heat and because of the weather conditions of this month, especially this month, I hardly believe that these jurors would be in a frame of mind where they could be in a receptive mood to evidence which is of a highly technical nature. I believe that the law on the subject is highly technical and in order for them to be able to follow your Honor in his charge to the jury I believe they should be not only in a good frame of mind but in a good frame of body as well.

The Court: No question about that.

Mr. Fischbein: They will be held in custody unquestionably.

The Court: Counsel, of course, have the hardest work because they have to work after hours every night.

Mr. Fischbein: That is true, Judge, and I believe for the convenience of the jurors as well as the convenience of the Court and the lawyers this case should go over until some time after Election Day.

The Court: There is just a little matter referred to by Judge Talley and that is in relation to this present panel being influenced by these newspapers. I take it that you mean that on account of being on the panel their attention, their interest, will be particularly directed?

[fol. 81] Mr. Talley: It undoubtedly has been directed.

The Court: I submit this for consideration. In the event of the case being continued until after the extremely hot weather and until bearable trial weather, regardless of when it is, that if all counsel for the defense agree, then the Court would be agreeable to drawing of additional talesmen and upon those talesmen coming here the Court will then, the counsel for all defendants agreeing, discharge the present talesmen, but those talesmen will not have to be drawn right away and their attention would not therefore be particularly directed, their interest would not be particularly directed, by being drawn as talesmen, to the stories now being carried in the New York American. You don't have to commit yourselves. That is only food for thought.

Mr. Talley: The same thing would apply to any talesmen drawn at this time, proximity to the publication of those articles which shall go on, I take it, for another week or ten days and they have been going on for the past week.

The Court: I would not entertain any application for the drawing of additional talesmen as long as these articles are published.

Mr. Talley: They are articles that are likely to be remembered.

The Court: They will be remembered after Election, Judge. They will be remembered a year from now. Those [fol. 82] stories stick like the story of Dick Whittington, Lord Mayor of London.

Mr. Talley: It is the Election influence now.

The Court: You think it grips the panel?

Mr. Talley: More or less, yes.

Mr. Fischbein: Suppose these articles appear up to the day of Election? There is a possibility of that happening, too.

The Court: There is not enough material.

Mr. Fischbein: With Judge O'Dwyer I believe there is a lot of material.

Mr. Turkus: Your Honor, may I continue?

The Court: Yes, Mr. Turkus.

Mr. Turkus: May we have one counsel for each defendant address the Court so that we can have an orderly discussion?

The Court: We have gotten along nicely.

Mr. Barshay: One more point, Judge. If your Honor sets this case down for some time in September, the best selling point for Judge O'Dwyer as a candidate for Mayor will be his successful prosecution of the murder. Every street corner speaker, every radio speaker, every platform speaker, will urge that as the best point in his behalf.

The Court: How will that get to the jury?

Mr. Barshay: The radio especially will be used every single day and night of the week.

The Court: There are no radios permitted in the jury rooms.

[fol. 83] Mr. Barshay: Just a second. I did not say that the radio will be on in the jury room but I do say this, that in the picking of a jury, during the trial your Honor cannot at night, if they are locked up in the Knights of Columbus, or any other place, stop the radio from going on and they may listen just as well if they have not already before they are locked up.

The Court: There would not be even telephones in their rooms. They would not be permitted to have contact with one another. They will have separate accommodations.

Mr. Barshay: Your Honor, they can go into a restaurant. As they go through the building——

The Court: They cannot. They are not permitted. The rule of segregation is rigidly enforced. There is nothing to which exception can be taken in that respect. They are not even permitted to take a swim without everybody else being ruled out of the pool.

Mr. Barshay: Your Honor, I have seen blue ribbon jurors watching a basketball game.

The Court: It could not be done here because they will be segregated. There would not be an opportunity for conversation unless with members of the panel.

Mr. Barshay: Judge, the fact remains there will be some opportunity before the trial and during the choosing of the jury, at the heat of the campaign. If it will take one week [fol. 84] to choose a jury, why they shall have been filled with all this glorious publicity about the candidate for Mayor, which they have a right to listen to. He will be in court as a spectator or a witness. They shall be and they must be influenced by all that they hear and read.

Mr. Talley: You cannot dissociate this case with this campaign. We all know that Judge O'Dwyer came forward as a candidate for Mayor primarily because it was identification with this type of case.

Mr. Turkus: May I be heard, your Honor? There is not a reasonably minded person in this courtroom who is not aware of this important fact, it would be in the interest of justice where there are 129 jurors out of 226 who are unwilling and recalcitrant——

The Court: Haven't we been over that, Mr. Turkus?

Mr. Turkus: I think the whole thing simmers down to the adjourned date.

The Court: Pardon me. I think you fully covered it. I do not want to have a repetition. Any more counsel for defense?

(No response.)

The Court: Then I would like to cogitate.

Mr. Talley. Will your Honor take that publication and have the stenographer mark it?

The Court: Yes, mark that for identification.

[fol. 85] ("New York Journal-American" of August 5, 1941, marked Defendants' Exhibit A for identification.)

Mr. Talley: I offer it as part of this motion. In support of my motion I offer today's copy of the Journal-American with particular reference to the page which is headed "Bill O'Dwyer—Life Story of the Man Who Smashed Murder, Inc."

Mr. Turkus: Referring to the New York Journal-American of Tuesday, August 5, 1941.

The Court: Personally I am against any delay because I came here to work and am fully prepared to work and I have omitted work that I should have performed during the month of July in anticipation of being tied up here in this case. If there is going to be any adjournment, it is not going to be for a resurrection of the case in hot weather.

Mr. Turkus: That is true and no one else wants it. It would be inimical to the interests of justice to have a balky jury.

The Court: Counsel will be seated.

(His Honor retired from the bench and upon his return stated):

The Court: This jury situation is unprecedented. It is practically a run-out. The reason for it may be reluctance to give protracted service during the hottest month of the year. There is merit in that position. To arbitrarily combat it would smack of coercion and would tend to undermine [fol. 86] that quality of jury service which is essential for a fair trial of this case. Both sides have expressed themselves as being agreeable to putting the case over for that reason. The question becomes apparently one of date. The Court will grant the motion for a continuance of the trial until after Labor Day but it cannot go over until after Election as that would subordinate the trial to the exigencies of a political campaign, which is unthinkable. Any delay of trial in any case involves hazards in relation to witnesses, in relation to evidence. Therefore any delay of any trial must be weighed against those hazards. No prejudice can come from trying the case before Election because, sensibly, no juror will be influenced by his political views in deciding the question of guilt or innocence in a capital case.

The trial is continued until September 15, 1941. By that time the hot weather should be over.

The August term of Part 2 of this court is continued for that and for all other purposes of this trial.

Decision is reserved on all pending applications for excuse from jury service. All members of the jury panel are directed to return on September 15, 1941, in this part, at 10 a. m.

The prisoners are remanded.

This action has no relation to the personal convenience of the Court as the Court will remain in session for the trial of other cases throughout the summer. The jurors [fol. 87] are urged to withdraw their objections and to serve willingly on the date fixed. Should a new panel be desired, counsel for all of the defendants should agree on that. Defendants are remanded.

Mr. Talley: Will your Honor hear me for a moment?

The Court: Not any further argument.

Mr. Talley: No further argument, no, sir. I wish to note my exception on behalf of the defendant Weiss to your Honor's refusal to put the case over until after Election for the reasons urged in our application, and I further wish to correct an erroneous impression, conveyed by your Honor's remarks, that defendants' counsel all consented that this case go over. For myself I did not consent that this case go over except upon condition that it go over after Election. My objection is specifically based upon that statement that if the case was to go over or not to go on today, and we were ready to go on, I have no objection to it going over if it went over until after Election, and that is the condition which I stated to the Court.

The Court: That will make the record clear on that point. I did not accurately understand that your consent was conditional.

Mr. Talley: Yes, sir, correct, and my exception to your Honor's ruling I trust the Court has noted.

The Court: Yes.

[fol. 88] Mr. Wegman: If your Honor pleases, on behalf of the defendant Buchalter we should like the record to show that we take exception to your Honor's granting of the motion for the continuance and we take exception to the adjournment of this trial until the date set by your Honor, and, if your Honor pleases, we should like to have noted upon the record that we did not consent to any adjournment and that if any adjournment were ordered it is our request to your Honor that the adjournment be set for a day past Election.

The Court: Let me understand, because I have not yet fully memorized the representations by various counsel. Whom do you represent?

Mr. Wegman: I speak for the defendant Buchalter, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: I thought that you all agreed. I think the record speaks for itself. Miss McGowan took it even though it was not audible to the courtroom. All right, you take an exception.

Mr. Fischbein: Your Honor, on behalf of the defendant Louis Capone may I note my exception to your Honor's ruling in regard to the adjourned date, that the defendant Capone did not consent to the case being adjourned except that it be adjourned until after Election Day.

The Court: None of you made that clear, that it was conditional. I thought it was only an argument as to the [fol. 89] date to be fixed. You had all agreed on the desirability of not trying it now. However, the record speaks for itself.

Mr. Price: No comment.

The Court: The defendants are remanded.

(Adjourned until September 15, 1941, at 10 a. m.)

[fol. 90] Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 15, 1941.

Trial Resumed

(Sidney Rosenthal, Esq., appears as associate counsel with Leon Fischbein, Esq., and Emanuel Rosenberg, Esq., for the defendant Louis Capone.)

Mr. Rosenthal: The defendant Capone, if the Court please, has an application to make.

The Court: Is the defendant Buchalter ready?

Mr. Barshay: Subject to your Honor's hearing the application of Mr. Rosenthal.

The Court: Is the defendant Weiss ready?

Mr. Cuff: Ready.

The Court: Is the defendant Cohen ready?

Mr. Price: Ready, subjejct to a motion for severance. For the reasons heretofore stated, the defendant Cohen renews his motion for a separate trial.

The Court: Is that motion opposed?

Mr. Turkus: In the interests of justice, the District Attorney consents to the application for a severance with respect to the defendant Philip Cohen, alias "Little Farvel".

Mr. Barshay: I object to the phraseology of the District Attorney. I objejct to the motion being made in the pres-[fol. 91] ence of this jury.

The Court: On what ground?

Mr. Barshay: On the ground of prejudice to the defendant Buchalter.

The Court: That objection is overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

The Court: Severance granted as to Cohen.

Mr. Turkus: May I at the same time, with respect to the defendant James Ferraco, move for a severance? He is a defendant who has not as yet been apprehended.

The Court: Motion granted.

Mr. Rosenthal: Before making an application, which I do, for an adjournment, I want to supplement a motion which was heretofore made by Mr. Fischbein on behalf of the defendant for a severance, with these additional papers which I have here and which I intend to hand up to the Court, and which I wish to have marked in evidence and deemed part of the motion which I am now renewing for a severance, which your Honor has denied.

The Court: These are all "Mirror" articles?

Mr. Rosenthal: Yes.

The Court: Mark them.

(Received and marked Defendants' Exhibit B for identification.)

The Court: Do you wish to say anything else?

[fol. 92] Mr. Rosenthal: I do not wish to press the argument on that particular motion any further other than to submit the papers to your Honor. Your Honor is familiar with the record made before you.

The Court: Motion denied.

Mr. Rosenthal: The papers which I submit are now marked as part of the record, I take it.

On behalf of the defendant at this time I am going to ask for an adjournment, for two reasons:—one may not be as forceful as the other. The first reason is I have recently been retained to defend and have not had time to thoroughly familiarize myself with the facts and circumstances, and to consult with other counsel representing the other defendants. The second is a more important reason: If this trial commences right now there must be three delays in the trial. Tomorrow is Primary Day, and the most religious holidays in the Jewish faith are approaching now, which will necessitate the incarceration of the jury and a delay in the trial on three separate occasions; that will unnecessarily prolong the trial. Now, most of the people engaged in this particular trial are of the Jewish faith, your Honor.

The Court: I am prepared to rule on that now in your favor as far as the Jewish holy days are concerned. Counsel and members of the panel are informed that the Court [fol. 93] will not sit on Jewish holy days and that provisions will be made for attendance at religious services by members of the jury according to their religious convictions. This is to safeguard against racial discrimination in the make-up of the jury.

Mr. Rosenthal: The only fault with that proposition is that men of Jewish faith, if they are called, on these particular holidays they are not supposed to ride or do a number of things.

The Court: The Court, having ruled on that point, will not permit argument on it. Any further argument seeks to embarrass the Judge.

Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except to that remark. There is no such intention on counsel's part.

I ask that this case be adjourned over past the Jewish holidays so as to provide for the convenience not only of the jury——

The Court: The motion is denied.

Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

The Court: This Court always respects Jewish holy days. My family has two Jewish intermarriages in it. My secretary is a Jew. When I practiced law all of my partners were Jewish. I have no discrimination, no prejudice.

Proceed.

[fol. 94] Mr. Rosenthal: That is my motion for an adjournment.

The Court: Motion denied.

Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

The Court: Are there any other motions?

(No response.)

The Court: The defendant Cohen is remanded.

Mr. Barshay: Your Honor, in view of the series of prejudicial articles which have appeared daily in the New York "Daily Mirror" concerning the defendant Buchalter, I ask your Honor to adjourn this case at least until a reasonable time passes, so that if any of the prospective jurors have read or been influenced, or have been spoken to about the contents of those articles, a reasonable time should pass to have them overcome it. And I think, your Honor, in the interests of justice, should postpone the case for a reasonable time to overcome any effect these articles may have had.

The Court: Do any other counsel wish to be heard?

(No response.)

The Court: This trial was commenced on August 4th. Prior to its commencement a motion was made and denied for a change of venue and transfer to the Supreme Court. On the first morning of the trial preliminary motions were made and ruled upon. The Court then took excuses of jurors and ruled upon some and reserved decision as to [fol. 95] others. The following day, August 5th, because of difficulty in the jury situation due to warm weather and a great multitude of applications for excuses, the trial was, upon motion by the District Attorney—there being no opposition other than as to date—set down to be continued today. The trial is now on.

In the meantime these further publications have appeared, and, as the Court is informed, have been made the subject of another motion in the interim in the Supreme Court for a transfer of the indictment and a change of venue. That motion was denied last week.

Under the circumstances, this Court has no alternative other than to deny the motion, but I will add this: The longer the delay the greater is the publicity hazard. When the human mind registers, it is not likely to readily forget its impression. It will be difficult to select a jury in this case. There is no doubt about that. The Court will allow abundant latitude to all counsel to make searching examination of every member of the panel who is drawn, for the purpose of determining whether such member has any prejudice that will prevent a fair and impartial trial of these defendants. The motion is denied.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Will your Honor permit us to mark for identification [fol. 96] these various articles as they appear daily since the denial of the motion?

The Court: Mr. Rosenthal has already put those in.

Mr. Rosenthal: Those are in already.

Mr. Barshay: I am talking about those that shall continue while the trial is in progress. If it is merely a duplication, I am sure your Honor will not mind it.

The Court: I cannot rule on that now because I cannot anticipate what will be done. Application was made to the Court informally by counsel to consider the question of taking action in regard to publications which might embarrass the trial, but upon consulting the law on the subject I think we all are agreed that the law in this state is inadequate to enable dealing with such a situation.

Mr. Barshay: Then you will not foreclose us from renewing our motion?

The Court: You may renew the motion if you wish, if occasion so indicates. Of course, the jurors who are selected will be safeguarded against reading any publications, and all members of the panel will be admonished not to read during the process of selection of the jury.

On application for excuses heretofore made, the Court will call the numbers of certain jury notices. As each number is called, the juryman having the corresponding notice may step forward.

[fol. 97] (Disposition was then made by the Court of excuses heretofore made.)

The Court: The Court will new entertain applications from those who have not heretofore applied, providing only that the ground of application is something that has come into being since August 4, 1941.

(At 1:00 P. M., all of the requests not having been acted upon, a recess was taken until 2:00 P. M., at which time the panel of jurors was ordered to return.)

(Defendants are remanded.)

[fol. 98] Afternoon Session—Trial Resumed

(From 2:10 P. M. to 4:20 P. M. excuses from the panel were heard.)

(Woolsey W. Conlin takes seat No. 1 in the jury box.)

The Court: Only this juror will be examined this afternoon. I am starting the examination of jurors so as to be absolutely sure that no more applications will be made.

Mr. Turkus: May we limit it to the name and address, your Honor? This has been a very wearisome day.

The Court: For whom?

Mr. Turkus: Not only for the Court but for counsel. We have endeavored to follow this. In addition, there are many jurors who are not in the room who should hear some of the questions. I think it extremely inadvisable to go on at this time.

The Court: We can start in. I don't intend to overwork counsel. I am not pushing you. You can start in. Bring the other jurors in now.

(Woolsey W. Conlin was then examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Conlin, do you reside at 711 East 24th Street?

A. I do.

Q. Is that in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn?

A. That is right.

[fol. 99] Q. Are you, sir, familiar with the nature of the charge in this case. Do you understand that this is a charge of murder in the first degree wherein these defendants at the bar, Louis Buchalter, Emanuel Weiss, and Louis Capone are charged with killing Joseph Rosen on the 13th day of September, 1936, in this county by willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought shooting and killing Joseph Rosen with revolvers? Do you understand the nature of the charge?

A. I do.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge that would prevent or hinder you from being a fair and impartial juror, fair both to The People of the State of New York and to these defendants on trial?

A. I have read considerable about the case, but I am quite sure that while I could not help but form an opinion on it, I am quite sure that I could dismiss that from my mind if selected as a juror.

Q. In other words then, Mr. Conlin, do I understand you correctly when you say that you have formed some impression from reading articles in various newspapers; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. By the same token, that you can banish that impression and decide the case on the merits?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you satisfied, if the evidence convinces you beyond a reasonable doubt that these three defendants, Buchalter, [fol. 100] Weiss, and Capone, are guilty of murder in the first degree, are you satisfied to vote that way knowing what the punishment is?

A. If I am satisfied, yes.

Q. So then you have no reluctance, no scruple, or no principle against capital punishment, do you understand that?

A. I have reluctance that would not——

Mr. Talley: We do not hear you.

A. I say I have reluctance, but that would not prevent me from trying to decide the case on the evidence.

Q. Would that interfere with your judgment of the case on the facts?

A. No, sir.

Q. In other words, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants are guilty, you will vote that way; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On this trestle board you are listed as a C. P. A. I take it that means Certified Public Accountant.

A. That is correct.

Q. Have you been in that line of endeavor for a number of years?

A. I have.

Q. Is your practice of your profession in Manhattan or in Brooklyn?

A. Manhattan, Long Island. We go all over.

Q. May I inquire, sir, are you in business for yourself or with a firm?

A. I am with a firm.

Q. Does your business bring you into any contact, directly or indirectly, with the Brownsville-East New York section of Brooklyn?

A. No.

[fol. 101] Q. None at all? Do you have any connection, directly or indirectly, by way of business with the garment district in Manhattan?

A. No.

Q. Or the clothing district?

A. No.

Q. Does business bring you in contact directly or indirectly with anybody on the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No.

Q. Or on the Manhattan waterfront?

A. No.

Q. None of the accounts that you are an accountant for have any such business connection to your knowledge; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Do you know anyone in the clothing trucking business or have you any contact, directly or indirectly, in business with clothing truckers?

A. No.

Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror in any court of record?

A. I have.

Q. Has it been in this county?

A. It has been in this county, but always in civil cases.

Q. You have never had any experience, then, as a juror in a criminal case?

A. That is correct.

Q. In those civil cases where you sat as a juror, did you have the benefit of receiving the Judge's instructions on the law?

A. I did.

Q. The case went to a conclusion?

A. Yes.

Q. Does your business bring you into any contact, directly or indirectly, with any officials of the Amalgamated Cloth-

[fol. 102] ing Workers of America?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Jacob Potofsky, secretary or treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. Is the name Murray Weinstein, manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local 4, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. The name of Sam or Samuel Katz, the business agent of Local 4 of the Clothing Cutters Union of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, is that familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Bruno Belia, an organizer of the home office of that Amalgamated, familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Salvatore Marizano familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. Or the name of Abe Beckerman?

A. No.

The Court: I think that will be enough. We have definitely started so there cannot be any argument about it.

(To Mr. Conlin). Please be in your place at ten o'clock [fol. 163] tomorrow morning. Let nobody talk to you about the case; keep your mind open. Do not talk to anybody about it and, above all, do not listen to the radio and do not read any newspaper about it. Do you understand?

Mr. Conlin: Yes, sir.

The Court: You won't talk to any member of your family?

Mr. Conlin: They will know that I have to come back tomorrow.

The Court: Do not talk about this case.

Mr. Conlin: I won't discuss it.

Mr. Talley: May I renew the application I made, and I make it now, that I might have permission to have the brother of the defendant I represent see him now a few minutes before he leaves the building?

The Court: I will do that in just a moment.

(To talesman). You may go now and be back tomorrow at ten o'clock. Before the defendants are remanded, all other members of the panel are admonished not to read anything in any paper or magazine about this case and not to discuss it with anybody, not allow anybody to talk about it to them, and not to listen to anything about it over the radio. You may return tomorrow morning at ten o'clock and the names on whom decision was reserved will be announced at that time for definite decision. The jurors may [fol. 104] pass out.

Mr. Talley: Defendant Weiss, I want him to see his brother who has just come up from camp.

The Court: It is purely personal?

Mr. Talley: Yes.

The Court: Who else?

Mr. Talley: There were two of the brothers here at recess. I do not know if they are here now.

The Court: Weiss' brothers may see him under supervision, of course.

Mr. Rosenthal: I had a similar application as to Capone's wife for permission of the Court to see him for a few moments.

The Court: That does not want to get confused with this other.

Mr. Rosenthal: No, I just wanted, before your Honor left the bench——

The Court: If there is no woman in the women's pen, he can be put in the women's pen for the purpose of that interview. The other, Weiss, will be in the men's pen. Where is the U. S. marshal? (To marshal) Weiss is under your jurisdiction. His brother wants to greet him personally, not discuss the case.

The Marshal: He can see him until our wagon comes.

The Court: Whereabouts, in the pen?

[fol. 105] The Marshal: Yes.

The Court: You go up there with him. The defendants are remanded.

(A recess was thereupon taken until Tuesday, September 16, 1941, at 10:00 A. M.)

[fol. 106] Brooklyn, N. Y., September 16, 1941.

Trial Resumed

The Court: I have a communication from the Department of Justice which counsel may see, and if they desire it may be put on the record (handing counsel a paper).

Defendants' Counsel: May it please your Honor, with respect to the communication, may counsel have an opportunity during the recess to confer with each other about it before they make any request of the Court?

The Court: Have it marked for identification and hand it to the Clerk.

Mr. Climenko: I think a copy of your Honor's communication to which this is a reply should accompany it if it should go on the record at all. If it should go on the record at all I think it should go with your Honor's communication.

Mr. Talley: I join in counsel's request that we be allowed to reserve determination on that question.

The Court: All right, let me know at two o'clock. I think the law requires, this being Primary Day, the court shall recess at three o'clock; that means a short day.

[fol. 107] Mr. Cuff: May I request that a recess be declared at one o'clock on account of Primary Day?

The Court: I will think it over.

(Letter from Department of Justice dated September 6, 1941, addressed to the Honorable Franklin Taylor, marked as Exhibit 1 for identification by the Court.)

(Woolsey W. Conlin, talesman, was then examined as to his qualifications.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I think we got to a place yesterday when you told me you had no contact, directly or indirectly, with anybody in the Brownsville or East New York section of Brooklyn, the Brooklyn waterfront, the clothing and garment districts in Manhattan and the Clothing Truckers; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Did your business at any time in the past bring you in contact with any place, either residing in or having any business in those particular lines, that is, in the clothing and trucking, garment or cloak and suit business?

A. Not as I recall.

Q. Since you received your notice that you were a prospective juror, did anybody speak to you about this case?

A. Well, a friend who had seen my name in the paper had mentioned it.

Q. Has that comment been limited only to the fact that your name was seen in the paper by a mutual friend?

A. Yes sir.

Q. No discussion whatever as to the merits or any con-[fol. 108] nection with anybody at all in the case?

A. That is correct.

Q. I take it you are in sympathy with the enforcement of the Penal Law of the State of New York?

A. Yes, I am, in sympathy with the enforcement of the law.

Q. By such sympathy, such state of mind, you would not permit a guilty man to escape?

Mr. Talley: I object to that as an improper form of examination.

The Court: Objection sustained. He will have to be proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

Q. Is your state of mind such that if you were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt the defendants were guilty, with the law enforcement always with you, would you permit such a guilty individual to escape?

The Court: That should be further qualified by being limited to his hearing the evidence.

Q. Based upon the evidence in the case and pursuant to the instructions of law given by the trial judge, you have reached a conclusion and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants and each of them are guilty of murder in the first degree, as charged, is your state of mind such that by sympathy with law enforcement you mean you would not permit such guilty defendants to escape?

A. I would.

Mr. Talley: Furthermore, that is objectionable, it is not up to the juror to determine whether a man escapes or not. [fol. 109] The province of the jury is to determine beyond a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of a defendant and to bring in a verdict accordingly. I object specifically to the expression of "allowing a guilty man to escape." That is no part of the juror's business at all.

The Court: The word "escape" may be objectionable. I would not use the word "escape." The word "escape" implies flight or may imply flight. The juror can be asked whether, if a case is proven to his satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt, he would bring in a verdict of guilty—provided it is so proven against the defendants on trial.

Q. Inquiring particularly as to your state of mind with respect to law enforcement, is it such that if a defendant and each of these defendants on trial are established to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt upon credible evidence and pursuant to the Judge's charge, you will render your verdict in consonance with guilt?

A. I will.

Q. Did you know the district attorney who went out of office December 31, 1939, or any member of his staff?

A. No.

Q. Do you recall whether or not you knew any member of the staff of that District Attorney?

A. I did not know any as I recall.

Q. The defendant Louis Buchalter, who is seated first of the defendants, the third man to the left, is represented by Hyman Barshay, a former Assistant District Attorney. [fol. 110] Do you know Mr. Barshay or any member of his office staff?

A. I do not.

Q. Another counsel for Louis Buchalter is Mr. Wegman, a former Assistant United States Attorney. Do you know Mr. Wegman?

A. No.

Q. A third lawyer for Louis Buchalter is Mr. Jesse Climenko. Do you know him?

A. No, sir.

Q. The defendant, Emanuel Weiss, who is seated alongside of Buchalter, who has his fingers up to his face, is represented by former Special Sessions Judge Talley. Do you know Judge Talley?

A. No, sir.

Q. Another counsel for Emanuel Weiss is James I. Cuff, at one time an Assistant District Attorney in the County of Kings. Do you know Mr. Cuff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. Murray Kriendler, the third lawyer for Weiss, do you know him?

A. No, sir.

Q. I believe he was a former Assistant United States Attorney. The defendant Capone, who is seated in the rear directly behind Buchalter, is represented by Mr. Sidney Rosenthal; do you know him?

A. No, sir.

Q. The second lawyer for Capone is Mr. Leon Fischbein: he is seated right alongside the officer (indicating). Do you know him?

A. No, sir.

Q. The third lawyer is Emanuel Rosenberg, a partner of Mr. Fischbein. Do you know him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar who practices [fol. 111] criminal law as a specialty?

A. I cannot think of any.

Q. Do you know an attorney named William W. Kleinman?

A. No.

Q. Or his associate, David Price?

A. No.

Q. Do you know a lawyer named Sol Price at one time a former Assistant District Attorney of Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will you, as directed by the Court, follow the instructions of the Court with respect to the law, implicitly and without qualification?

A. Yes.

Q. That is, you will take the law entirely from the Judge?

A. Yes.

Q. If you are instructed to give the defendant the benefit of the presumption of innocence, will you follow that instruction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you are told the law of reasonable doubt, that is charged to you by the Judge, you will follow the Judge's instructions as to the law of reasonable doubt?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you give the defendants everything that the Judge says that they should have from the standpoint of the benefits given to them by law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you have any bias or prejudice against the prosecution if it avails itself of the use of accomplice testimony?

A. State that again.

Q. Is the word "accomplice" troublesome?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any bias or prejudice against the use of accomplice testimony by the State against the defendants [fol. 112] on trial?

A. I have no bias.

Q. Is your state of mind such that by "accomplice" you understand it to be one who committed the crime, who participated with others in the commission of the crime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So then——

Mr. Talley: I object to the definition.

The Court: It is a question of law. Objection sustained. The talesman has to sit sidewise. I think he would be more at ease in the witness chair.

(Talesman takes the witness chair.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. The District Attorney of this County will call, on the trial of this indictment, an individual who will testify he was a participant with these defendants in the commission of the crime charged. Will you close your mind to the testimony of such an individual solely because he was an accomplice or participant in the crime?

A. I would not close my mind to it, no sir; I would consider it.

Q. In other words, may I assume that you have no inherent bias or prejudice against the prosecution for availing itself of accomplice testimony?

A. No.

Q. Now, with respect to the weight to be given such testimony, namely, the testimony of an accomplice, and the nature of the corroboration required, will you follow the instructions of law as given to you by the Court implicitly?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 113] Q. Have you any bias or prejudice against testimony of experts, be they medical, handwriting, or otherwise?

A. I have testified myself as to that.

Q. Do you know District Attorney O'Dwyer or any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it you do not know the gentleman who is addressing you, Mr. Turkus?

A. That is correct.

Q. Or my associate, Mr. Joseph, or Assistant District Attorney Klein?

A. No, sir.

Q. I do not recall whether we got to the point yesterday where I spoke to you about any possible familiarity with the names of officials who were connected with Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union.

A. I don't know of any of them.

Q. Is the name of Max Silverman of Local 138 of the Flour Truckmen's Union familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Wolfie Goldis familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Willie or William Alpert, a bondsman, familiar to you in any respect?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Phillie Buchalter or Phillie Karwar in any wise familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Peter Monat of the Joint Board of Control familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any person named Belianca, or Tosco, are those familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 114] Q. Is the name of Mendel Yudelowitz, a man in the kneepants business, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. If you are selected as a juror, and thus automatically become foreman of the jury, will you be guided solely by the evidence developed during the course of the trial and by the law as his Honor will instruct you on it?

A. I will, but I hope I am not selected.

Q. If you are selected as a juror in the case, will you approach the issue in the case with common sense and understanding?

A. I will.

Q. Will you endeavor——

Mr. Turkus: Comments are out of order; whether they are pleasant or not to the defense is no concern of mine. I ask your Honor to admonish counsel.

Mr. Bashay: There was no comment made at this table.

Mr. Turkus: There was an audible snicker that emanated from Mr. Cuff's lips.

Mr. Cuff: I made comment about the question because I think the question is improper.

Mr. Turkus: Then your province is to get up and say so to the Judge, and not to endeavor to district the District Attorney by side remarks.

Mr. Cuff: I object to the word "snicker" because I did not make any snicker, and it is not my practice to do so, much as Mr. Turkus may think so.

[fol. 115] The Court: Let us try to get along without friction.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. If you are selected as a juror, will you endeavor to put forth every conscientious effort to arrive at a true verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if selected as a juror, will you listen to fair and reasonable argument by other jurors when the case is deliberated in the jury room?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if you are sworn as a juror and accepted in this case, after you have heard all of the testimony completely from the witnesses in the case, and you have had the benefit of the Judge's instructions on the law, and you have deliberated with your fellow jurors, and you are satisfied that these three defendants, Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone are guilty of murder in the first degree, and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: No challenge for cause.

By Mr. Bashay:

Q. You were asked whether or not you had any knowledge of any men who practice criminal law as a specialty, and you said you did not. Now, have you at any time had any business dealings with any member of Judge O'Dwyer's staff before they became members of his staff?

A. Not as I recollect.

Q. At any time, sir, did you come in contact with Mr. Turkus or Mr. Klein, now in charge of the prosecution, who [fol. 116] before they became Assistants, were specialists in the practice of criminal law?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of them lecturing before audiences in clubs or societies?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see some slide lectures given by any Assistant in Judge O'Dwyer's office?

Mr. Turkus: I object. I doubt if there has been any such thing done; in fact, I know it has not.

By the Court:

Q. Do you know anything about it?

A. I have seen slides years ago. I don't know who was the District Attorney at the time.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. At any rate, did you ever come in contact with any police officers of the Police Department of the City of New York?

A. I have been very well acquainted with a former Police Commissioner.

Q. May I know his name?

A. George McLoughlin.

Q. Did you ever discuss investigation or prosecution of cases with the Commissioner?

A. I have not seen him in recent years.

Q. Do you know anybody else connected with the Police Department in a high or low position?

A. I cannot think of any.

Q. Were you ever a member of any Grand Jury?

A. No.

Q. Were you ever a member of any law enforcement society?

[fol. 117] A. No.

Q. Were you ever a member of any society for the prevention of crime?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever testify for the prosecution in any case?

A. No.

Q. Were you ever the victim of any crime?

A. No.

Q. Was any member of your family at any time the victim of any crime?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever been called by a special panel before?

A. I was called years ago on what was known as a struck jury before Judge Cropsey.

Q. Were you ever called to serve as a Grand Juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Federal or State?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, sir, this murder is alleged to have occurred in 1936. Did you read about it then?

A. No, sir, not as I can recall; I probably saw it or something about it, in the paper.

Q. Nothing of that remains in your mind?

A. Not from 1936.

Q. Do you know that the Grand Jury in 1936 investigated this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did any member of the Police Department or the Grand Jury Association or the District Attorney's office ever discuss this case with you at that time?

A. No.

Q. Have you retained any recollection of any of the facts that may have appeared in the press at that time?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, since this indictment in this case, have you read [fol. 118] about the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Particularly in what paper?

A. I think there was an article in the Journal and there have been articles in the Mirror; I have seen them, I think, in the Brooklyn Eagle and in the Sun.

Q. Without prying into your personal business, are you a reader of the Daily Mirror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has it come to your attention at times?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does any member of your household read the Daily Mirror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever discuss the contents of the articles in the Daily Mirror?

A. General articles?

Q. No, with respect to this case and any of the defendants involved in this case.

A. Since I received my notification to come here as a juror, I have made it a point not to discuss the merits of the case with anyone.

Q. But before that, sir, had you read about this case or any of the defendants allegedly involved?

A. I read about it but have no particular interest in it.

Q. Did you say yesterday you formed some opinion with respect to this case?

A. From the articles that I have read I could not help but feel influenced.

Q. I take it your influence is not in favor of the defendants but against them?

A. That is the way the articles read.

Q. I take it that some of them made a real impression [fol. 119] upon you to the detriment of the defendants.

A. They did while I read them.

Q. Now you have been questioned about them, your memory has been refreshed as to the contents of some of these articles, isn't that a fact?

A. I don't recall the details; I recall the general impression I got.

Q. Now, you would require, wouldn't you, the defendants or any of them, to furnish some evidence here to dissipate the impression you formed by reading those articles?

A. I would try not to carry the impression with me.

Q. It would be an effort, wouldn't it?

A. Yes, it would be an effort, but honestly, I think I could put it aside.

Q. Would you require the defendant whom we represent to furnish some evidence with respect to his innocence in this case?

A. Well, I would try to weigh the evidence. I don't know just how to answer that question.

Q. I am trying to find out whether or not you are absolutely able to dissipate from your mind an impression you obtained by reading those articles, whether it is possible for you to do so.

A. I would try to do so.

Q. That is a fair answer; you do not know whether you could succeed?

A. I would try.

Q. And if there came a question of testimony from what you heard on the witness stand, and there was some doubt about it, you could not stop subconsciously from your con[fol. 120] sideration something you read in the paper?

A. I think I could.

Q. In other words, the defendants start off with some handicap with respect to what you read in the newspaper?

A. I don't think so, no, sir; I would try to be absolutely fair on the evidence.

Q. I think you would make an honest effort, but I am trying to find out whether or not there might creep into your mind at any time any of the things you read which you would use, subconsciously or otherwise, in determining the evidence in this case.

A. I feel I can divorce those from my mind.

Q. Well, the impression you formed, was that one of guilt in this case?

The Court: Do you really want an answer to that before this panel?

Mr. Barshay: All right.

Q. Now, have you read about "Murder, Incorporated," in general?

A. I have not read much about it, no, sir; I have seen it casually in the papers.

Mr. Rosenthal: On behalf of the defendant Capone I object to that question.

Q. Have you been influenced, to the prejudice of the defendant Buchalter, by reading those articles?

A. No, sir.

Q. You know, of course, that the District Attorney of this county is a candidate for public office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a member of any committee for his election?
[fol. 121] A. No, sir.

Q. Have you contributed to the compaign, or do you intend to contribute to the campaign?

A. I have not been contributing; I have not been approached.

Q. Is it your intention to do so?

A. I do not expect to.

Q. Would that fact influence you in the prosecution of this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would not take that into consideration at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that every defendant charged with crime is presumed innocent under the law?

A. I do.

Q. Do you know it is a substantial presumption and a substantial right given to every defendant by the law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know the burden of proof in every case is solely and strictly and only upon the prosecution?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that it never shifts?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Turkus: I object to the form of the question. The juror is being put through a legal test; he is not expected to be a lawyer.

The Court: Yes.

Q. I will reframe the question. If the Court should charge you that the burden is strictly and solely and only on the prosecution and never shifts to the defendant, will you follow that law which the Court shall so charge you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Even if you think the law is otherwise, you will follow [fol. 122] the instructions of His Honor?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On that or on any other subject?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know that the defendant, if the Court shall charge you, need not prove his innocence; you will take that law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the Court shall charge you that the defendant need not explain a single accusation against him or disprove a single fact against him, you will follow that law too?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the Court shall tell you that if the defendant sits silently and makes no answer other than his plea of not guilty, already entered, because of that fact you shall draw no unfavorable inference against him, will you follow that law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When the law is, as his Honor shall tell you, that the defendant Buchalter is presumed innocent of this charge against him, as any person in this court-room, will you follow that law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Even during your deliberations?

A. I will follow the Judge's instructions to the best of my ability.

Q. To every end?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The District Attorney has said that he shall offer testimony of people who claim to be accomplices. Will you evaluate with caution and care such testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will weigh very carefully what each person in that category says before you shall accept it?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 123] Q. If the Court shall charge you on the question of corroboration, you will follow that law, irrespective of any opinion you may have with respect to it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that if there is any testimony of accomplices and there is any other testimony in the case tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, or any of them, you will have the courage to acquit if the Court shall tell you that is the law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will take into consideration the motive of each person; this applies whether he admits he has a motive or not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will take into consideration the hope of reward any witness has for giving the testimony he gives?

A. Repeat that.

Q. You will take into consideration the hope of reward that any witness may have in giving his testimony? Do you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The District Attorney has read to you some names which you said you did not know; I may call upon the District Attorney for the purpose only of finding out whether the jury knows any of the witnesses who may be called, to present to the jury a list of those names, and for that purpose only, to see whether or not he knows any of them. I now make a demand on Mr. Turkus through the Court.

Mr. Turkus: The demand has been made through the Court that the District Attorney present to the prospective [fol. 124] juror a list of witnesses; that is the proof of persons whom he intends to establish the guilt of the defendants beyond a reasonable doubt—to a prospective juror?

Mr. Barshay: That is right—to see whether or not he knows them.

The Court: The law does not so require.

Mr. Barshay: May we have the position of the District Attorney? Does he want to give it to the juror?

The Court: The District Attorney is not required to answer, because the law protects him on that. That is the reason why the law was changed. Witnesses for the prosecution are no longer on the back of an indictment.

Mr. Barshay: Perhaps, your Honor, the District Attorney mistakes my position. I do not want to see them. He read a list of names to find out whether or not the prospective juror knew any of them—I guess, on the theory that he might be influenced by their testimony. Now, I would like to have the juror see—I don't want to see them—any of the names of the witnesses he intends to call, for the purpose of knowing whether this juror knows or had any dealings with those witnesses.

The Court: Counselor, you yourself may ask similar questions of this prospective juror, but that does not limit you as to what witness you see fit to put on the stand at any time during the trial. You are not required, as you well [fol. 125] know, to give a list of your witnesses to the District Attorney. That has never been required. Just take your exception and don't argue it.

Mr. Barshay: I take an exception.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. There are three men on trial. Under the law, as the Court shall tell you, each one is entitled to a separate verdict; you understand that?

A. If you say so. I don't know.

Q. If the Court shall charge you, will you follow it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, a conclusion with respect to the defendant need not be the same; you understand that, if the Court so charges you?

A. If the Court so charges.

Q. You have no objection to such law?

A. I have no objection. I would not know.

Q. Will you consider the evidence separately as against each defendant in accordance with his Honor's instructions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Unless the Court tells you you can do so, you will not borrow from the evidence of one defendant and use it against the other?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you any prejudice at all in this case against any defendant?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any prejudice at all in this case against Mr. Buchalter?

A. No, only I said I read the articles in the paper, which [fol. 126] I said I would try to divorce from my mind.

Q. Those are things you told us you would try to dismiss from your mind if you are chosen as a juror?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the present they have not been dismissed, as yet?

A. I have to weigh—If I was a juror and had to weigh the evidence in the case, I would try to shut my mind to all of those things.

Q. In other words, first you will have to see the evidence, weigh it carefully, then you will try to dismiss what you read from your mind, isn't that so?

A. Well, I will put it this way: I will try to dismiss it at the start.

Q. Up to this very second you have not dismissed it from your mind as yet; isn't that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were here yesterday, you are here this morning, you gave the matter some thought last night, as you knew you were going to be questioned this morning, and up to this second you have not dismissed the things you read prejudicial to the defendant Buchalter from your mind?

Mr. Turkus: I object.

The Court: Objection overruled.

A. I have not dismissed them, but I do not believe I have been required to; I do not think the case is started.

Q. In other words, until you are sworn as a juror, you feel that you are not required to dismiss that prejudice from [fol. 127] your mind, which has formed in your mind before coming here?

A. I have not thought of it in just that way.

Mr. Barshay: I think, your Honor, it is time to move to challenge this juror for cause.

Mr. Talley: I join in the challenge on behalf of the defendant Weiss.

The Court: I will hear counsel for all defendants when they complete their examination before any challenge is tried.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. You told us very frankly yesterday that something you had read about this case had created in your mind an impression about the guilt or innocence of these defendants; is that correct?

A. About the guilt or innocence? I would say a general impression in the various articles of the activities of the defendants as mentioned in the paper. I have no particular case in mind.

Q. But as a result of what you read in the paper, you have formed an impression about this case?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you were sworn in as Juror No. 1 in this case, you would still have that impression, would you, at the opening of the case?

A. I would try to dismiss it from my mind.

Q. I did not ask you that; I am not questioning your good faith in the matter at all. The fact is, however, you would, when you became Juror No. 1 in this case, you would [fol. 128] have an impression in your mind about these defendants, wouldn't you?

A. I would dismiss it at that time.

Q. You would dismiss it?

A. I would try to be open-minded.

Q. But you would have the impression?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Five minutes from now, if you are accepted, as a juror, you would have the same impression you had about this case yesterday morning?

A. That is right.

Q. And it would require something to remove that impression, wouldn't it, it would not just disappear in thin air—it would require something to remove it, wouldn't it?

A. I would remove it through my efforts to decide the case on the testimony and the instructions given in the court-room, and in the court-room only.

Q. But you could not do that until you heard some testimony, could you?

A. I would try to start off with a clean slate.

Q. But the impression in your mind, until you heard the testimony in this case, you could not remove that impression, could you?

A. I would say I would start at the commencement of the trial, and I would try to put that to one side.

Q. But you are not so sure you could unless you heard testimony that would remove it, isn't that a fact?

A. No.

Q. You mean by your answer what?

A. I mean you would not have to prove anything to have me divorce it from my mind.

Q. What would cause its dismissal from your mind unless [fol. 129] there were some testimony offered on behalf of the defendants?

A. I would try to dismiss it in an effort to be fair and honest.

Q. But in order to assist you in being fair and honest and removing that impression, you would have to hear some testimony, wouldn't you?

A. I don't think so, no, sir.

Q. You think that impression you formed by reading the newspaper account of this case you could remove before you became a juror, without hearing any evidence in the case at all?

A. I would try to disregard it, to put it aside.

Q. Are you quite sure you would succeed in putting it aside without effort—you are a little doubtful about that, aren't you?

A. I can only say I would try to do it.

Q. That is as far as you will go?

A. I cannot do any more than try.

Q. What I mean is, you are not so sure, despite your effort to remove it, you are not so sure you could get it out of your mind?

A. I am quite sure I could.

Q. Then, have you got an impression or haven't you got it?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to as already answered.

The Court: He says he has an impression, but so far he has not said anything about having an opinion.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Have you any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of these defendants from what you read in the newspaper?

A. I would not put it as strong as that.

[fol. 130] Q. That is the word the Judge suggested that I use. I am following his suggestion. How strong would you put it?

A. I don't know enough about it to have a definite opinion.

Q. Of course you don't, but you did form an opinion from what you read in the newspaper, didn't you?

Mr. Turkus: I object.

The Court: Impression and opinion are two different things. Even though we, as practical men of mature experience, know that we must take everything we read in the newspapers with a grain of salt, nevertheless, for the practical purposes of life we are compelled to be guided by impressions. When it comes to responsibility, that is a different thing. We may or may not say it is an opinion—there has to be an impression. An impression, being tentative and not being definite, of specific purpose, that is why I mentionel that the witness up to the present moment has said nothing about an opinion. He has spoken only of impression.

Mr. Talley: The word used was impression. That is the term that the witness used when he was interrogated.

The Court: His impression may be based upon fragmatic assumption of newspaper accuracy.

Mr. Talley: Whether he makes any presumption as to accuracy or not, the important thing is——

The Court: I said fragmatic.

[fol. 131] Mr. Talley: Even so, he has formed an impression about this case; and what counsel is endeavoring to find out is whether or not it would require some evidence to remove that impression. It is quite apparent to me it would.

The Court: The Court has expressed no opinion.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. From what you read in the newspaper did you form an opinion about the guilt or innocence of any of these defendants?

A. No.

Q. What did you mean when you said you had formed an impression about this case from your reading about it in the newspaper?

A. I was influenced by the articles, but I would not say I had formed an opinion, because I don't think I know enough about it to form an opinion at this time.

Q. What do you mean when you say you were influenced by what you read?

A. I was impressed.

Q. Impressed by what?

A. By the articles I read.

Q. And as a result of that impression you did form an opinion about the guilt or innocence of these defendants, didn't you?

A. I would not say I formed an opinion.

Q. What did you form an impression of; it must have been of something? Did you understand the question?

A. State it again.

Q. What did you form an impression of?

[fol. 132] A. Well, that is rather difficult. It created an unfavorable impression. It generated an unfavorable impression in the reading of the articles, but I did not try to form an opinion on each part of the evidence that was stated in the paper.

Q. You just regarded it generally?

A. A general impression.

Q. That general impression about these defendants was an unfavorable impression?

A. That is correct.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You read certain articles; that is correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The purpose of getting a jury, as you understand, is to get men who, in their opinion, consider they can be fair and impartial to both sides. That is clear?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those articles, you say, made an impression with you?

A. That is right.

Q. You qualified that statement by saying it does not go as far as an opinion, but it is an impression that was made on you?

A. That is right.

Q. And the impression was very unfavorable to certain of the defendants; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now then, the question that raises itself is this: The impression which you formed remains with you right now; is that correct?

A. Nothing has happened to change it.

Q. And you said it would remain with you even until you got in the jury box and were sworn as a juryman, because you did not see any reason why you should change [fol. 133] that impression until then; isn't that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then it is that you would first try to remove from your mind merely because you were accepted as a juryman, the impression which now is with you as you are sitting as a prospective juror, isn't that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that then the position which you would try to assume would be to try to be fair?

A. That is right.

Q. The most you could go in any of the answers that you gave, either to Mr. Barshay or Judge Talley, is that from the time you were actually accepted you would try then to remove the impression which remained with you and has remained with you during the entire time that you have read the articles, and even during the time that you were called as a juryman, during the time you were called in the box in August, and up to the present minute; that is a correct statement?

A. I will ask you to repeat it.

Q. I will withdraw the question and put it this way: You were called as a prospective juryman in the box away back in August?

A. That is right.

Q. You were called as a prospective juryman in this case how long before that—July, was it?

A. Approximately July.

Q. You knew from the articles you read in the paper that the case involved certain of the defendants that you were being called to sit as a prospective juror on?

A. That is right.

Q. And notwithstanding that fact, in July, when you [fol. 134] received that notice, you had an impression unfavorable to some of the defendants?

A. That is right.

Q. And in August, when you were called as a prospective juryman, you still retained that unfavorable impression?

A. That is right, and for that particular reason I have not discussed the case with anybody since.

Q. I am not finding fault with you.

A. I only want to say I realized that and for that reason I have not discussed the case or committed myself in any way.

Q. In other words, any discussion you had after you read the newspaper articles and prior to the time you were called as a juror?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did have a discussion prior to that time, which you had a right to have, which helped form an impression you had which was unfavorable to some of the defendants?

A. I don't recall I had any discussion of any case; I may have had, but I was not particularly interested; it was just general news in the paper.

Q. That refraining, as you did, from discussion, that being from the time you were called, you still entertain an unfavorable impression, and you do so retain that impression even as you are sitting here now being questioned by the lawyers?

A. If you put it that way, yes; I heard the charge, but I can dismiss it.

Q. Did you add anything to the answer you gave me?

A. Yes.

[fol. 135] Q. What was the answer you made, that you would try to dismiss it?

A. That is what I make now.

Q. Not before Mr. Turkus told you, did you say you would try to dismiss it; isn't that right?

A. I don't remember the exact word I used, but that is what I had in mind; I don't remember the exact word.

Q. So what you had in mind, after you answered my question, was that although you have divorced the impression right now against these defendants, if you are called and when you are called and after you are sworn, you would try to dismiss that impression?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Rosenthal: I join in the challenge.

Mr. Barshay: On behalf of all the defendants, I challenge this juror for cause. In this challenge all counsel join.

Mr. Turkus: May I try the challenge?

The Court: Swear the juror. The Court simply wants to call attention to the fact that in all the questioning by counsel up to the present time the witness has not been asked as to whether he formed an opinion as to the truth and accuracy of the newspaper report which he read.

Mr. Barshay: He was not asked that question in that particular form, but he volunteered the answer, so he obviated the necessity of asking it.

The Court: I am simply calling attention for counsel [fol. 136] to consider in trying the challenge. Try the challenge.

Woolsey W. Conlin, residing at 77 East 24th Street in the Borough of Brooklyn, City and State of New York, being sworn on the challenge, testified:

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Did I understand your responses correctly to the defense lawyers when you said you had read some newspaper articles, some general newspaper articles, in which the names of the defendants in this case were mentioned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that impression did not reach the stage of being an opinion; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Am I correct in saying that the tenor of your responses to defense lawyers was that you had no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants on trial; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Am I also correct in understanding the tenor of your responses to mean that if selected here as a juror you would endeavor to lay aside impressions and decide this case upon the merits, that is, upon the evidence you hear in the courtroom and the charge given by the Judge on the law?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, am I further correct in understanding the tenor of your responses to defense lawyers to mean that as soon as you received your notice as a juror you engaged in no specific conversation in connection with the merits of the case?

[fol. 137] A. That is true.

Q. Did you, in reading the articles, pay any particular heed to the accuracy of the events set forth in the articles, and by that I mean did you analyze and look over the articles with any view of determining the truth or falsity of the articles?

Mr. Talley: I object to the form of the question; I don't see how it would be possible for anybody to look over any paper and determine whether the articles were true or false, without knowing what the real facts were.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

By the Court:

Q. Did you form any opinion as to whether the articles were true or false?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you understand that the District Attorney of the State is required by law to establish the guilt of the defendants beyond a reasonable doubt upon testimony adduced in the court-room and not upon any newspaper articles?

A. I do.

Q. If selected as a juror in this case can you lay aside whatever impression you have and decide the case simply upon the evidence adduced in the court-room, in consonance with the Judge's charge on the law?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

[fol. 138] Q. You have not in any wise changed from the position you took when you answered the question of defense counsel in which you said you would endeavor or try to dismiss from your mind when you were deciding this case, the guilt or innocence of these defendants?

A. I said, if I recall, I thought I could do it, and I still think I can.

Q. Let me interrupt you there. That implies a doubt. Isn't that what you meant when you said you thought you could do it? That you were in doubt as to whether you would be able to do it; isn't that what "thought" means?

A. It probably does, yes.

Q. I am trying to figure your mind. You said you "thought" you could do it. That implies there is a doubt in your mind as to your ability to carry out your "thought."

A. I feel quite certain I could dismiss it.

Q. Now, you say you feel quite certain. That implies a doubt also in your mind, doesn't it, as to your ability to carry out what you honestly would try to carry out? Let me put it this way:—I withdraw the question. Isn't it true that when you read those papers, even though you did not analyze them, you assumed the truth of the statements in order to form an impression?

A. I assume that some of them—I probably assumed that some of it was true.

Q. And in order to form the impression, as you read the paper you assumed what you were reading was true about some of these matters?

A. Yes.

[fol. 139] Q. Now then, is it not a fact that, having read and having assumed the truth of the statements which you read in the paper, and having formed an impression, that even if you were called as a juryman it would require a greater amount of evidence on the part of these defendants, or a lesser amount of credible evidence on the part of The People than would otherwise be necessary had you not formed an impression as to the guilt or innocence of these men; isn't that true?

A. No.

Q. In other words, although in your answers to my questions you now say that you can only try to dismiss what you read, is that true?

A. I feel—I think I can dismiss that.

Q. Now you say you "think," you use that word, and you say you will try to dismiss it.

A. I say I am quite sure.

Q. That you are "quite sure" and that you "think," all of these expressions of yours imply a doubt in your mind as to your ability to carry out what you would honestly attempt to do in the jury room; isn't that true? They imply a doubt, don't they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were conscious of your answers when you made them in three different ways to me—"quite sure," "try to think," when you made them in answer to my questions you were deliberating in your mind the answers you were giving when you used those three expressions?

A. I am trying to make a fair statement; I am not quibbling.

By the Court:

[fol. 140] Q. Those words are lacking in substance as to your ability to dismiss any impression.

A. Those words are, yes, sir.

Mr. Rosenthal: I urge the challenge, in which all of the defendants join.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you confident of your ability to lay aside your impression and decide the guilt or innocence of these defendants on the evidence you hear in the court-room and on the Judge's charge of the law?

Mr. Rosenthal: I object.

The Court: It is a legal question and if the answer to the question is "Yes," it would contradict his other answer. The challenge is sustained.

(Edward A. Anderson, residing at 339—73rd Street, in the Borough of Brooklyn, City and State of New York, examined as to his qualifications.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You reside in the Bay Ridge section?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have lived in that section for how many years?

A. Since 1908; for a few years I lived in Long Island.

Q. As you sat out there with prospective jurors, did you hear the nature of the charge that these defendants, Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone are charged with, Murder in the First Degree?

A. I did.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge which [fol. 141] would hinder or impair your service as a juryman?

A. I am more or less opposed to this type of defendants. I am prejudiced against these kind of people.

Mr. Rosenthal: On the statement of the juror I challenge for cause.

The Court: The challenge cannot be tried until the questioning is completed by all sides.

Mr. Rosenthal: We have no further questions.

Edward A. Anderson, was then sworn on the challenge.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You have just made a statement——

Mr. Talley: Your Honor takes the position you will not permit counsel to consent to a juror being excused?

The Court: If we do that we will get in trouble.

Mr. Talley: Why?

The Court: That is my experience.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Does your business bring you into the Brownsville and East New York section of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or in the garment district in Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does your business bring you in contact with the clothing trucking industry in Manhattan?

A. No, sir, it does not.

Q. Have you any contact, directly or indirectly, with any of those sections or industries I have mentioned?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 142] Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the Penal Law of the State of New York?

A. I am.

Q. Do you know any of the lawyers in the case who represent these defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. You heard the names mentioned to the other jurymen?

A. I did.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer or any member of the District Attorney's staff, specifically, do you know Mr. Turkus, Mr. Klein, or Mr. Joseph?

A. No, sir.

Q. If selected as a juror will you take the law in the case exclusively from Judge Taylor?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from nobody else in the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. If selected as a juror will you listen to fair argument and discussion by the other jurors in deliberating?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If Judge Taylor charges you on the law of reasonable doubt and the presumption of innocence, will you accord all of these points of law in favor of the defendant in consonance with the Judge's charge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since your name appeared on this list did anybody speak to you about the case?

A. No, sir

Q. There was something you said at the outset; I do not want a repetition of it, but is it something that affects your state of mind with respect to these defendants—yes or no?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 143] Q. Is that state of mind of yours reduced to an opinion—is it that strong—in the point of an opinion or an impression?

The Court: On what? You cannot express an opinion here as to what you think of the accused, but you may say whether or not you have an opinion.

The Witness: I was not exactly referring to these defendants when I made that statement. It was general.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is it an opinion or an impression?

A. I said it is a conviction in my mind.

Q. Does it relate to the question of crime or does it relate to the question of guilt or innocence of the accused?

A. No, sir, it is on the crime.

Q. Have you formed any opinion as to whether or not the defendants are guilty or innocent?

A. No, sir.

Q. Of this charge?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any scruples, conscientious or otherwise against the soundness of the law that the death penalty must be invoked where a verdict is murder in the first degree?

A. No.

Q. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt upon all of the evidence in the case, after hearing the law as given by the judge, that these three defendants are guilty of murder in the first degree, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

A. No, I would not.

[fol. 144] Q. Have you any bias or prejudice against the prosecution which avails itself of the use of accomplice testimony?

A. What does accomplice testimony mean exactly?

Q. Assuming that The People of The State were to bring here a witness or individual who participated in the commission of the crime with the defendants—that person would be known as an accomplice—without going into any extended legal requirement—have you any inherent bias or prejudice against the prosecution because it uses and avails itself of the use of that type of testimony?

A. I do not believe I can pay much attention to such testimony by such a party.

Q. Do you mean, then, that you would close your mind to the evidence produced in such a case?

A. Yes, sir, I would.

Q. Absolutely close your ears to it?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And disregard it?

A. Yes, sir, I would not be influenced by it.

Mr. Turkus: Now we are in an awkward position, the District Attorney will press the challenge for cause at the same time. Nobody wishes to try this challenge any further.

The Court: Challenge sustained.

(Raymond J. Cunningham, No. 2649, residing at 474 Marlborough Road in the Borough of Brooklyn, City and State of New York, examined as to his qualifications as a talesman.)

[fol. 145] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you reside in the Flatbush section?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it you have heard some of the questions which have been put to the other jurors.

A. I have.

Q. Are you familiar with the nature of the charge in this case?

A. I believe I am.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge, that is, the charge of murder in the first degree, which would impair or prevent you from conducting a fair and impartial trial of the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. I have not.

Q. So, if the evidence in the case, after you have heard the Judge's charge, satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone are guilty of murder in the first degree, you would have no hesitation or reluctance in saying so in your verdict; am I correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does your business bring you into contact with individuals in the Brownsville and East New York section or around the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any contact, directly or indirectly, with any persons or firms in that area?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you at any time had any business connections with anyone in the garment or clothing district of Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 146] Q. Or with any clothing truckers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with the clothing trucking industry?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any connection by way of business now, directly or indirectly, or have you had in the past, any connections with any Brooklyn waterfront section?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you heretofore had service as a juror in criminal cases?

A. I never had.

Q. Would this be your first experience?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you heretofore had service as a juror in a civil case?

A. Never did.

Q. So at no time have you had the benefit of having the Judge's instructions on the law?

A. I never had.

Q. If accepted, would you follow the judge's instructions on the law implicitly and without qualification?

A. I would.

Q. Since your name appeared as a prospective juror in this case did anybody speak to you about the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the penal law of the state?

A. What do you mean by that?

Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. Oh, yes, indeed I am.

Q. Do you know Mr. Barshay, who was an assistant District Attorney for a number of years, ending December 31, 1939?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Wegman, who was at one time an Assistant United States Attorney?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 147] Q. Or his associate, Mr. Climenko?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone in the office or connected with any of the lawyers I have just stated?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know former Judge Alfred J. Talley, who represents Weiss?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. James I. Cuff, who was at one time an Assistant District Attorney in this county?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. Murray Kreindler, who was at one time an Assistant United States Attorney?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody who was connected with their respective offices?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Sidney Rosenthal?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Rosenthal is the attorney who stands at my left side; do you know him?

A. I have seen him before.

Q. In court?

A. This morning.

Q. Other than this morning you have never seen him before?

A. Never seen him before.

Q. Do you know Mr. Leon Fischbein or Emanuel Rosenberg, partners, and associated with Mr. Rosenthal in the Capone case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know intimately any member of the bar who practices criminal law as a specialty?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether you have ever come in contact with a man named Kleinman?

A. If I have ever come in contact with him? No.

[fol. 148] Q. Do you know him or his partner, David Price?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or a lawyer named Saul Price, at one time an assistant District Attorney in Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name Murray Weinstein, manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local No. 4, Clothing Makers of America, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Sam or Sammy Katz, business agent of Local No. 4 of the Clothing Cutters Union, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name Barney Bellanca, an organizer attached to the Amalgamated, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name Salvatore Marazzano familiar to you?

A. No sir.

Q. Do you know any union official of Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers Helpers Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Philip Orlofsky, one-time manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local No. 4 of the Amalgamated, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name of Peter Monat, of the Control Committee of the Amalgamated, familiar to you in any way?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name of Max Silverman, of the Flour Trucking Union, or Wolfie Goldis?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name of Yudelowitz, a man in the knee pants business; is that familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. If accepted as a juror and the Judge instructs you on the doctrine of reasonable doubt and the presumption of [fol. 149] innocence will you follow the Judge's instructions implicitly and give the defendants the benefit of this doctrine of law as to reasonable doubt and the presumption of innocence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By the same token, if you are satisfied that The People of the State of New York have established their cause by believable evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, will you say so and reflect that in your verdict?

A. Yes, sir, I will.

Q. Do you find any fault with the District Attorney of this county calling to the stand men who participated in the commission of crime with the defendants, and availing himself of the use of that type of testimony?

Mr. Barshay: I don't believe anybody finds fault with the District Attorney's doing that.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Then may I assume you have no bias or prejudice against the District Attorney or against the prosecution which uses testimony of accomplice witnesses?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. With respect to any defense that may be invoked, will you take the law specifically from the Judge with regard to that?

A. I will.

Q. For example, if any defendant pleads an alibi, will you take the law specifically from the Judge on that point?

A. I will.

[fol. 150] If selected as the first juror in the case, such selection would automatically make you foreman of the jury, and, if accepted as such, would you endeavor to work conscientiously with the other jurors and endeavor to arrive at a verdict which will do justice in the case?

A. I will.

Q. Will you listen to reasonable argument and discussion of the other jurors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you use common sense and understanding in weighing the issue in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the name of William Albert, a bondsman, familiar to you in any respect?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name of Emanuel Buchalter, Philip Buchalter, or Philip Kowas?

A. No, sir.

Q. If selected, is there any reason why you cannot hear the evidence in the case, listen to the Judge's instructions on the law, and render a verdict in consonance with justice in the case?

A. Not as I know of.

Q. If selected will you try to do justice in this case?

A. I will.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. May I know with whom you are connected in your profession or business?

A. I am with the Kopper Coke Company.

Q. How long have you been with the Kopper Coke?

A. Nine years.

Q. Frankly, I may say that when I was an Assistant Dis-
[fol. 151] trict Attorney I had some official business with your company, do you recall that?

A. I would not know that.

Q. You never came in contact with me?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you at No. 16 Court Street then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you still at No. 16?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember some correspondence with the office of the District Attorney of Brooklyn at that time?

A. I never knew about that.

Q. You don't know anything about it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any of the defendants that are named in this indictment?

A. No, sir, only through the newspaper.

Q. Only by what you read?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Having read about them in the newspapers, as you did, does that refresh your recollection at any time you may have known their family or them?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or had business with them?

A. Never did.

Q. Or if your concern dealt with them in selling coal?

A. Not as I know of.

Q. You have no such knowledge?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you read about them in the Daily Mirror?

A. I do not read the Daily Mirror.

Q. Or the New York Journal?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any other publications?

A. I read about them in the Tribune.

Q. Often?

A. No, I would not say often.

[fol. 152] Q. Have you read about them before you received your notice in this case?

A. I did read some, yes, sir.

Q. You read about them since?

A. No, sir, not since.

Q. Have you formed any impression about them from what you read about them in the newspaper?

A. No, sir, I cannot say I have, truthfully.

Q. You cannot say you have? Is there some doubt in your mind that you may have?

A. No, there is not any doubt.

Q. Do you believe what you read?

A. To tell you the truth, I did not think of it enough to really believe or disbelieve it.

Q. Is that the only publication you read?

A. About the only.

Q. Have you read about it in the Eagle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you read about them before you received your notice?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. And after you received the notice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you formed any impression by reading the Eagle with respect to the defendants?

A. Well, yes, I have formed an impression, yes.

Q. You were going to mention that yourself?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the impression or opinion you formed was prejudicial to the defendants?

Mr. Turkus: I object to the form of the question. "Impression" and "opinion" are two different things. The juror said he had an impression.

The Court: It is a double question.

[fol. 153] Mr. Barshay: I will accommodate you.

Mr. Turkus: I object to Mr. Barshay going into it to accommodate anybody.

Q. Have you formed any impression as a result of reading the Eagle with respect to this defendant?

A. It is a general impression, yes.

By the Court:

Q. Have you formed that impression as to whether or not the defendants or any of them are guilty?

A. Oh, yes, to some extent.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. That is your impression, personally?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it would necessitate proof to dissipate that impression?

A. That is true.

Q. That is your honest opinion?

A. That is true.

Mr. Barshay: On behalf of the defendant Buchalter, I challenge this juror for cause.

The Court: Try the challenge.

Mr. Talley: On behalf of the defendant Weiss, I join in the challenge.

(Raymond J. Cunningham was then sworn on the challenge.)

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. You are still of that opinion, while you are under oath?

A. What opinion?

[fol. 154] Q. Now that you are under oath, do you repeat now what you said to me a few seconds ago?

A. Do I repeat it? Yes, I do.

Q. That is you opinion now?

A. That is right.

By the Court:

Q. It would require evidence to eradicate it from your mind?

A. I believe it would, yes, sir.

Q. That is, on behalf of the defense?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: Challenge sustained.

(William C. Pape, No. 2732, residing at No. 955 New York Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, interrogated as to his qualifications.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is that in the Highland section?

The Court: Near Vandeveer Park.

Q. Have you lived in that section a number of years?

A. Yes.

The Court:

Q. That is down by the waterworks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been in this room while the other questions were being asked of prospective jurors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it you understand the nature of the charge, that these defendants, Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone, are charged with murder in the first degree?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge, that is, the charge of murder in the first degree, which would impair or prevent your service as a juror, fair to the People [fol. 155] of the State and to the defendants on trial?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any conscientious or other scruples against the requirement of the law that the death penalty must be imposed in the case where the jury finds a defendant guilty of murder in the first degree?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. How far are you from where New York Avenue is interrupted by the waterworks?

A. About half a mile.

Q. Near what street are you?

A. Near Church Avenue.

The Court: I had a reason for asking that because a witness in another trial lived on the very corner where the waterworks interrupts the street. Go ahead.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you heretofore had any jury service in civil or criminal cases?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it a civil case?

A. Civil and criminal.

Q. With respect to the criminal case, has that been in recent years?

A. About a year or so ago.

Q. Was it in this county Court that you served as a juror?

A. Yes, sir.

D. Did the case go to a conclusion?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you, accordingly, have the benefit of listening to the Judge's instructions on the law?

A. I did.

Q. And if accepted as a juror in this case will you follow the Judge's law—that is, the law given by the judge [fol. 156] here, Judge Taylor, implicitly and without qualification?

A. I will.

Q. Since your name appeared on this list as a prospective special juror in this case, has anyone spoken to you about the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the Penal Law of the State of New York?

Mr. Barshay: I object to that as an improper question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

A. I am.

By the Court:

Q. Was your father in business on Court Street near Joralemon?

A. No, sir.

Q. Years ago?

A. No, sir.

Q. That was William Pape.

A. I don't remember the name.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you know Mr. Barshay, who was an Assistant District Attorney for a number of years up to December 31, 1939, in this county?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. Bertram Wegman, who was at one time an Assistant United States Attorney?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or his associate, Mr. Jesse Climenko?

A. No, sir.

Q. They are the attorneys for Buchalter. You know none of them; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 157] Q. Do you know anyone attached to their office or associated with them in the practice of law?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know former judge Alfred Talley?

A. No, sir.

Q. He represents the defendant Weiss.

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. James I. Cuff, who was at one time an Assistant District Attorney in this County?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Murray Kreindler, a former Assistant United States Attorney?

A. No, sir.

Q. So you know none of the lawyers who represent the defendant Weiss?

A. I do not know them.

Q. Do you know any person associated with them in the practice of law or connected in their law office in any way?

A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you the same questions with respect to Mr. Sidney Rosenthal, Mr. Leon Fischbein, and Mr. Emanuel Rosenberg, who are the lawyers for the defendant Capone. Do you know any of them or anyone attached to their office?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know intimately or personally any member of the bar who practices criminal law as a specialty?

A. I do not.

Q. Do you know Mr. William W. Kleinman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or David Price, a lawyer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Saul Price, at one time an Assistant District Attorney in Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer or any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 158] Q. Specifically, do you know Turkus, Klein, or Joseph, who are trying this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. If accepted as a juror in the case and the Judge, as he will, charges you on the doctrine of presumption of innocence and on the law of reasonable doubt, will you take those laws and doctrines implicitly from the Judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will you apply them to the benefit of the defendant as the Court instructs they should be applied?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By the same token, if the evidence in the case overcomes the presumption of innocence and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt on the evidence in the case that Louis Capone, Buchalter, and Weiss are guilty of murder in the first degree, will you say so in your verdict?

A. I will.

Q. Without fear or reluctance?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you heard the discussions we had with several of the prospective jurors with regard to accomplices—is that word familiar to you now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you find any fault or have you any prejudice against the District Attorney who avails himself of testimony of such an individual against defendants on trial?

A. No, sir.

Q. So you start off without any prejudice or bias against the prosecutor or against the prosecution for the use of that type of testimony; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know the former District Attorney of this county?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 159] Q. Or any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know the present District Attorney of this county?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with any official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Murray Weinstein, manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local No. 4, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Samuel Katz, business agent of that local of Cutters affiliated with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Jacob Potofsky, an official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name of Bruno Belia, an organizer attached to the home office of the Amalgamated, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name of Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any official connected with Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers Helpers Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any officials of the Flour Truckmens Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any former officials?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, of Local 240, or the Clothiers Pressers Helpers, or Flour Truckmens Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of William Albert, a bondsman, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 160] Q. I take it that you have never been a party to any suit, civil or otherwise, even as a witness, in any type of litigation?

A. That is right.

Q. Are the names of Emanuel Buchalter or Phil Buchalter familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Phillie Korvel?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Bellanca or Tosca familiar to you in any way?

A. No, sir.

Q. In the event that any defendant should invoke the defense of alibi, will you take the law with respect to alibi implicitly from Judge Taylor, if selected?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you should become the foreman of the jury by reason of your selection as the first juror, will you endeavor to work and listen with the other jurors, to reasonable arguments and discussions of the case, as it is discussed in the jury room?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you listen to fair argument of the other jurors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If selected, will you endeavor to arrive at a just verdict in consonance with justice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you use common sense and understanding in applying it to the issue in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. What business are you in?

A. I am employed in the Federal Reserve Bank.

[fol. 161] Q. The main office?

A. Yes, sir, the New York office.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is the name of Peter Monat, of the control committee of the Amalgamated, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. If selected as a juror, after you have heard the evidence in the case and you have heard the argument of counsel for the defense and the inferences drawn by the District Attorney after the conclusion of the testimony, and you have the benefit of the Judge's instructions on the law, and then you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that Buchalter, Capone, and Weiss have committed the crime of murder in the first degree, would you hesitate, would you be fearful or reluctant to say so in your verdict?

A. I would not.

Mr. Turkus: No challenge for cause.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. If there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of any of the defendants, you would not hesitate to say, "Not guilty," would you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not owe a special duty to either side in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are a federal employee?

A. I am.

Q. Civil service?

A. Well, it is not directly, but indirectly.

Q. Indirectly you are?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you held that position?

A. Twenty years.

[fol. 162] Q. Can you tell us what you do there, please?

A. I am in the Auditing Department. I am involved in transactions which involve securities and paper money. We have to check them in and out, and take a record, and be there when the transaction takes place.

Q. Do you know anyone at all named in the indictment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know anyone at all in Judge O'Dwyer's office?

A. I do not.

Q. Did you have any contact, directly or indirectly, with Assistant District Attorney Turkus or Assistant District Attorney Klein, both of whom are specialists in criminal law, before they became Assistants on January 1, 1940?

A. I was working on a criminal case, I think last year——

Mr. Turkus: There is just one point objectionable. I object to the statement by Mr. Barshay that Messrs. Turkus and Klein are specialists in criminal law.

Q. Was Mr. Turkus prosecutor?

A. I think Mr. Klein was the prosecutor, to my best recollection.

Q. Did that make an impression upon you so that you would be favorable to him irrespective of the evidence in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q Was it a homicide case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it reach a conclusion?

A. It did.

Q. Was it a blue ribbon jury that you were a member of?

[fol. 163] A. It was not a blue ribbon jury.

Q. It was an ordinary jury?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that your only experience at the criminal bar?
A. I think that was my first experience.
Q. You have not had any since?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you know the deceased, Rosen, Joseph Rosen?
A. I did not.
Q. Do you know any member of his family?
A. No, sir.

Q. This is alleged to have occurred September, 1936, in the East New York section of Brooklyn. Were you a resident of Brooklyn then?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you read about the case?
A. I do not recall specifically.

Q. Has your memory been refreshed since receiving the notice to serve as a juror in this case, whether you read about it before then?
A. No, sir, I do not think it has been refreshed.

Q. Were you a member of the Grand Jury at any time in this county?
A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever called on a special jury at any time?
A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear any lecture by any of Judge O'Dwyer's assistants on the subject of crime?
A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever read any magazines with respect to the same subject?
A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear any of their speeches, if there were [fol. 164] any, on the radio?
A. No, sir.

Q. Have you read the serial in the New York Journal with respect to Judge O'Dwyer's life?
A. No, sir.

Q. Have you read the serial now being published in the New York Daily Mirror?
A. No, sir.

Q. You never read the Mirror?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you read it recently?
A. No, sir.

Q. Have you read anything at all with respect to any of the defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it before or since you received your notice?

A. Before.

Q. Long before you received your notice?

A. I should judge so, yes, sir, to the best of my recollection.

Q. May I know in what publication you read it?

A. It would be in—it would be the Tribune.

Q. Any evening paper?

A. I do not read many papers.

Q. Do you read the Brooklyn Eagle?

A. Very seldom.

Q. Do you read any evening paper?

A. Not as a rule.

The Court:

Q. Are you married?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does the paper come into your home?

A. No, sir.

Q. No evening paper?

A. No, sir.

Q. As a result of what you read, no matter where it was, have you formed any impression with respect to any of the defendants?

A. Not any specific impression.

Q. Have you formed any impression, specific or general, [fol. 165] with respect to any of the defendants?

A. I cannot say.

Q. You do not know?

A. No, sir.

Q. Your mind is not clear on it one way or the other?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, sir, since you have been sitting here and heard the prospective jurors questioned, has it refreshed your recollection as to whether or not you formed, general or specific, an impression concerning the defendants?

A. It has not.

Q. Did you form an impression as to the truth or accuracy of whatever you may have read?

A. I don't think so.

Q. One way or the other, you don't know?

A. I don't know.

Q. Just at present is there any prejudice in your mind as to the defendants, or any of them?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Is your mind free and clear of any bias at the present time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is no doubt about it?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Sitting here, presently, is there an assumption in your mind present now that each of these defendants are innocent?

A. I did not hear you.

Q. Do you assume now as you sit here that each defendant sitting here now is innocent of the crime charged?

A. Absolutely.

Q. You feel that way?

A. I feel that way.

Q. You know the law gives them the presumption of innocence, which is theirs by right and not by privilege?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 166] Q. And you must guard them with that right throughout the entire trial if you are chosen as a juror, you know that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know that the burden of proof rests solely and only with the prosecution in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That, too, is in the Penal Law, the Criminal Code, you know that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will compel the prosecution at all stages of this trial to prove each of the defendants guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, won't you?

A. That is right.

Q. And should there be a reasonable doubt arising out of the evidence in this case, to whom would you give it?

A. The defendants.

Q. No doubt about that?

A. No.

Q. And that is irrespective of how many jurors may be against you, if there are jurors against you; isn't that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you will render individual judgment in this case based upon the evidence as you hear it and determine it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the matter of time, that has nothing to do with your conclusion, isn't that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you would not yield and compromise and be pleasant to your fellow jurors if you believed there was a reasonable doubt in this case arising out of the evi- [fol. 167] dence, that duty you not only owe to this defendant whom I represent but to every defendant in this case; there is no doubt about that?

A. No, sir.

Q. The definition of reasonable doubt which will be given you, you will follow that as his Honor shall instruct you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the Court shall tell you that the burden of proof never shifts to the defendant and that the defendant need not prove his innocence, you will follow that law implicitly?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you will fight for it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the Court shall tell you that neither defendant in this case need prove a single charge against him or explain away a single accusation against him, you will follow that law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Should all defendants remain absolutely silent, the Court shall tell you that from that fact no unfavorable inference shall be drawn against defendants. You will follow that law implicitly?

A. I will.

Q. You will guard it jealously?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And no member shall overpower you on this jury by reason of argument or any other way if you personally believe that to be the law?

Mr. Turkus: You will not listen to reason? Maybe you misunderstood the question. You would not hang a jury? [fol. 168] Mr. Barshay: Maybe you misunderstood the question. May I ask your Honor at this time to instruct the jury and the balance of the panel that may be here, that I did not intend, nor did I say a word in my question which would warrant Mr. Turkus in saying I am trying to hang a jury.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Barshay: And I except to it.

Q. If there is a reasonable doubt——

The Court: Questions of law are not for the jury to speculate on, but only for application by the jury. You must take the law from the Court.

The Talesman: Yes, sir.

The Court: The jury does not debate about the law.

Mr. Barshay: That is exactly what I was trying to say to you.

Q. You will follow the law on that point, if his Honor shall give it to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If his Honor shall charge you that if you should find a reasonable doubt arising out of the evidence you must give it to the defendants, will you follow that law?

A. I will.

Q. That is clear to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know an indictment in and of itself has no probative value; it is not proof?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It simply starts the trial?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when the defendant says, "Not guilty," it raises [fol. 169] an issue to be proven by the District Attorney beyond a reasonable doubt for you to decide?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think you would have the courage to render a verdict of "Not guilty" if you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt—if you are not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. I have courage.

Q. And you will exercise it?

A. I will.

Q. Will you apply the evidence in accordance with his Honor's instructions—each defendant, as it is given from the witness stand, only against the defendant to whom it applies, unless his Honor shall charge you otherwise?

A. I will do that.

Q. And unless his Honor so charges the jury, you will not borrow the testimony against one defendant and charge it against the other.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. While you are trying them together, each one is entitled to a separate and distinct verdict under the law in this case.

Mr. Turkus: I object to that as an ambiguous question.

Q. You will not use the evidence given against one defendant against another defendant in the case if it has no application to the other defendant and his Honor shall so charge you?

A. As the Court rules.

Q. There has been some talk about the testimony of alleged accompli-es; you heard that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If his Honor shall charge you that the testimony of [fol. 170] an accomplice alone, uncorroborated by any other evidence tending to connect the defendant Buchalter with the commission of this crime, is insufficient as a matter of law, will you follow that law?

A. I will.

Q. Before you accept the testimony of a person who says he is an accomplice, you will find out for yourself, from the evidence, who that person is who is giving that testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. His criminal record, if it comes out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will weigh with caution, won't you, the testimony of the person who says he is an accomplice, if he says on the stand that he himself has been a murderer—you will weigh that man's testimony with caution?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will weigh it very carefully?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before you accept it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will find out, if you can, from the evidence in this case, what motivates him to give such testimony, what he hopes to gain as a result of giving such testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will weigh it very, very carefully before you accept it, there is no doubt about that, is there?

A. No, sir, no doubt.

Q. Even if you come to the point where you do believe the testimony of this alleged accomplice, if there is nothing else in the case tending to connect the defendant Buchalter with the commission of this crime, and his Honor shall say [fol. 171] to you you must acquit, will you do so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. No doubt about it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, do you know any police officials intimately?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever know them?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any police officials who are now connected with the District Attorney's office?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever know of any?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever read about them?

A. I recall some, but I do not know the names: I could not say one way or the other.

Q. If a police officer should take the stand and he is one of high rank, that fact alone will not so impress you as to lead you to the conclusion that he must be telling the truth?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. You will treat all witnesses alike?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. No doubt about that?

A. No doubt.

Q. In accepting those witnesses who admit out of their own mouths their past criminal activities, you will be careful with that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear Reles testify?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever read his testimony in any place?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever read about Allie Tannenbaum?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Sholem Bernstein?

A. No, sir.

Q. You never read about them at all?

A. Not to my recollection.

[fol. 172] Q. If, during the trial, you shall hear some testimony which should refresh your recollection as to having read something about it, you will subordinate what you read and dismiss it from your mind?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And apply only that which you hear from the witness stand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if, at the conclusion of the case, there is one reason for doubt that arises out of the evidence which you find, you will give it to the defendant Buchalter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. No doubt about that?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Talley: On behalf of the defendant Weiss I have no questions.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Did I understand you to answer Mr. Barshay, in respect to your reading of articles concerning some of these defendants, that you are not sure now whether it left an impression or it did not leave an impression?

A. No impression in my mind now. I don't remember much, if anything, about it.

Q. When you were asked the question by Mr. Barshay, you said you did not know whether it left an impression or not.

A. Something like that.

Q. Do you recall whether or not you did or did not answer the question when he propounded or put it to you in the fashion which you recall his asking you, whether you read articles concerning any of these defendants?

[fol. 173] A. I recall the question, but I know I had no impression, no definite impression in this case as far as I know.

Q. But you did not remember whether you had an impression or not? Am I correct in making that statement? That was your answer?

A. I did not have any impression; I did not read about the case.

Q. You did read about the case, didn't you?

A. I could not say any specific case; I very seldom read the papers.

Q. How do you keep busy when you are not working?

A. I don't as a rule read the papers.

Q. Do you go to the clubs or play cards to kill time?

A. I go to church.

Q. You are affiliated with church organizations, your activities are there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a member of any law enforcement society, or have you ever been?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I, in view of the nature of the case, go into his former service—usually we are not allowed to inquire into a particular case, but in view of the nature of this case I think we should be apprised of what homicide he sat on a year ago. Your Honor understands.

By the Court:

Q. Do you remember the name of the case?

A. No, sir, I do not recall.

Q. Who defended it?

A. Mr. Klein—no, not Mr. Klein.

[fol. 174] Q. Who was the judge?

A. Judge O'Dwyer.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Was it before Judge O'Dwyer was District Attorney or since he has been District Attorney?

A. Before he was.

Q. It was tried before Judge O'Dwyer, who was then a county judge?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I think you have mistaken Mr. Barshay for Mr. Klein.

A. I think it was the man in the brown suit; is that Brother Klein?

Mr. Hurkus: That is Mr. Rosenberg.

Mr. Rosenthal: No further questions.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. That case was a murder case some years back?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Judge O'Dwyer was presiding judge at the time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The case went to a conclusion and you heard Judge O'Dwyer's instructions on the law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The gentleman with the brown suit whom you indicated is one of the lawyers who represents Capone in this case. His name is Emanuel Rosenberg. Do you remember whether he was a participant in the case as a defense lawyer?

A. Well, the gentleman from the District Attorney's office had the appearance of that gentleman there.

Q. He was never in the District Attorney's office. But at any rate, that will have no effect upon your deliberations [fol. 175] in this case—your experience in that case or with any of the lawyers who are now in the court-room who may or not have been in that case, that will have no effect on your determination of this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Barshay spoke to you about accepting with care and caution the testimony of accomplices. Will you take the definition of law given by the Judge as to the credibility to be given to certain evidence of witnesses?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What I want to make sure of it, have you any inherent bias or prejudice against the prosecutor, Judge O'Dwyer, or against the prosecution which uses that type of testimony against defendants, namely, one who commits the crime with him, and uses him to testify against him, have you any inherent bias or prejudice against the prosecutor for using him, or against the prosecution which employs him?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: The juror is satisfactory.

Mr. Barshay: All counsel join in peremptorily challenging this juror.

(Talesman excused.)

The Court: We will now take a recess until two o'clock. Members of the panel are instructed, the same as yesterday [fol. 176] afternoon, to avoid discussing the case and avoid reading anything about it.

Mr. Cuff: Will your Honor kindly adjourn until tomorrow because of the Primary Day?

Mr. Ronsenthal: I was going to ask your Honor when you adjourned today to adjourn until Thursday, in view of the fact that no juryman has been chosen. I have a slight cold, and I would like to avoid any complications. No juryman has been placed in the box.

The Court: There are nine lawyers for the defense, and this is a season for colds. Would it be agreeable to you if either Mr. Rosenberg or Mr. Fischbein conducted the examination.

Mr. Rosenthal: It would be agreeable to me, but it would not be agreeable to my client. This is one of the most essential parts of the trial, and I do not think it is fair to my client not to be present.

The Court: I do not want to set a precedent, because there may be a lot of colds result.

Mr. Rosenthal: If one develops hereafter, I will stay here.

The Court: I will give you until Thursday to get over your cold. If you do not get over it by Thursday morning at ten o'clock, other counsel will have to continue the questioning. We will recess until Thursday. The talesmen [fol. 177] are excused in the meantime, but before the talesmen go out, the defendants will be remanded.

(Adjourned until Thursday, September 18, 1941, at ten o'clock a. m.)

[fol. 178] Brooklyn, N. Y., September 18, 1941.

Trial Resumed

The Court: I am sorry to have been delayed, but there were matters regarding this case which had to be taken up in chambers, which could not be taken up in the court-room. The trial will proceed.

(Paul W. Wolf, of 2 Grace Court, Brooklyn, New York, was then examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Wolf, do you reside at Grace Court?

A. Correct.

Q. That is in the Brooklyn Heights, that is the Columbia Heights section of Brooklyn?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you lived in Brooklyn a number of years?

A. Since December, 1935.

Q. In the interrogation of the other prospective jurors in the case, did you hear the nature of the charge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge, namely, a charge of murder in the first degree, which would impair or hinder your service as a juryman in the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you permit the question of punishment to enter into your deliberations in the jury room if you were selected [fol. 179] as a juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does your business give you any contact in the Brownsville-East New York section of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had any business or social or any type of contact, directly or indirectly, with any persons or firms in the Brownsville-East New York section of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any business contacts in the garment district in Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or in the clothing district?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did business ever bring you into any contact, directly or indirectly, with any firms or corporations doing business in the garment or clothing districts in Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any contacts, by way of business or otherwise, direct or indirect, with people or firms on the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had any contact, direct or indirect, with anyone in the clothing trucking industry?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know or do you have any contact, directly or indirectly, with any official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No.

Q. Do you know or do you have any contact, direct or indirect, with any official of Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. No.

Q. In the past have you had any business or other connection, direct or indirect, with any official of the Amalga-[fol. 180] mated or with Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Jacob Petrofsky, an official of the American Clothing Workers of America, familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Murray Weinstein, manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local 4, of the Amalgamated, at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or is the name of Sam or Samuel Katz, business agent of Local 4, at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Bruno Belia, an organizer attached to the home office of the Amalgamated, at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Salvatore Marazzano at all familiar to you, sir?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Philip Orlofsky, one-time manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local 4, of the Amalgamated, at all familiar to you?

A. It is not.

Q. Or the name of Abe or Abraham Beckerman?

A. No.

Q. Or the name of Mendel Yudelowitz?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did business contact or any other contact, directly or indirectly, bring you in contact with any officials of Local 138 of the Flour Truckmens Union?

A. No.

Q. Are you familiar with the name of Max Silverman, a one-time official of the union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Wolfie Goldis familiar?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 181] Q. Is the name of one William or Willie Alberts familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know or have you had any contact, direct or indirect, with a dentist by the name of Emanuel Buchalter?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Philip Buchalter or Phillie Kowas at all familiar?

A. No.

Q. Are the names of Belanco and Tosca familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you, Mr. Wolf, had any prior service as a juryman in a court of record?

A. Yes.

Q. Has it been in this state?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it in the County Court or Supreme Court?

A. It was a civil case, I think in the Supreme Court, I am not sure.

Q. Did that case go to a conclusion, and by that I mean did the Judge charge the jury on the law?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you had any experience as a juror in a criminal case?

A. No.

Q. Mr. Wolf, since your name appeared as a prospective juror in this case, did anybody speak to you about the case?

A. No. Yes, sure, it was mentioned in my presence.

Q. Was that at your place of employment?

A. It was not discussed; it was mentioned.

Q. By that I take it there was no discussion by anyone with you as to the merits of the case?

A. No.

Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 182] Q. There are various lawyers in the case, to be exact, nine lawyers for the defense, three representing each defendant. Mr. Barshay, an Assistant District Attorney up to December, 1939, Mr. Bertram Wegman, a former Assistant United States Attorney, and Mr. Jesse Climenko are counsel for the defendant Buchalter. Do you know any of the three whose names I have mentioned?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone who is connected with them in their office?

A. No.

Q. The defendant Emanuel Weiss is represented by former General Sessions Judge Alfred J. Talley, former District Attorney James I. Cuff, and former Assistant United States Attorney Murray Kreindler. Are you familiar — or do you know any of those three lawyers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone associated with them or connected with their office?

A. No, sir.

Q. The defendant Louis Capone is represented by Mr. Sidney Rosenthal, Mr. Leon Fischbein, and Mr. Emanuel Rosenberg. Do you know any of those three lawyers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or anyone connected with their offices?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of William W. Kleinman or David Price familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You know neither Kleinman nor Price?

A. I do not.

Q. Do you know a member of the bar by the name of Saul Price, at one time Assistant District Attorney in Manhattan?

[fol. 183] A. I do not.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar who specializes in the trial of criminal cases?

A. No.

Q. If accepted as a juror in this case will you take the law exclusively from the trial judge in the case, Judge Taylor?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If accepted as a juror and the trial judge charges you, as he will, on the presumption of innocence and the doctrine of reasonable doubt, will you give the defendant the benefit of those presumptions, and each of the defendants, if you are so instructed by the Court, as you will be?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any bias or prejudice against the prosecutor of this county, Judge O'Dwyer, or against the prosecution which avails itself of accomplice testimony against these defendants at the bar?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to the degree of corroboration or the degree of proof required, will you take the law exclusively from the judge, that is, Judge Taylor? Have I made that clear?

A. Yes, I think so.

Q. With respect to any defenses which may be invoked by any of the several defendants, for example, if one defendant should use the defense of alibi, will you take the law with respect to that defense solely from Judge Taylor, who presides at the trial?

A. Certainly.

Q. If accepted as a juror in this case, you will auto-
[fol. 184] matically become the foreman of the jury, and if accepted will you endeavor to listen to reasonable and fair discussion by the other jurors in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In weighing the issue in the case, the issue being the guilt or innocence of these three at the bar, will you use common sense and understanding in deciding that simple issue?

A. I would try to.

Q. You will listen to fair argument and reasonable discussion in the sanctity of the jury room when the case is being deliberated, will you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If accepted as a juror in the case, will you endeavor to do justice in the case?

A. Yes, I will try.

Q. Mr. Wolf, I neglected to ask whether you know the former prosecutor of the county, Mr. Geoghan, or any member of his staff.

A. No.

Q. If accepted as a juror, Mr. Wolf, and you hear all the evidence in the case and you hear the defense lawyers draw the inferences from the testimony and then you hear the prosecutor draw his inferences from the testimony, and then you have the benefit of the Judge's instruction on the law and then reasonable discussion with your fellow jurors and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from the evidence in the case that Buchalter and Weiss and Capone are guilty of murder in the first degree, will you have any fear, hesitation or reluctance in so saying in your verdict?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 185] By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Wolf, may I know, please, for whom you are a salesman?

A. The bond department of the Harris Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago.

Q. May I know the office address?

A. 14 Wall.

Q. Has it any branches up in the garment center?

A. No, sir.

Q. And to your knowledge do you know any flour merchants who had accounts in your bank?

A. No.

Q. You do not know?

A. I do not.

Q. It is reasonable to assume that the names Mr. Turkus read to you have no accounts in your bank at all?

A. I would not answer for that.

Q. You do not know?

A. I do not know.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer personally?

A. No.

Q. Do you know him at all?

A. I heard him speak in a private meeting.

Q. Was it on the subject of crime?

A. Yes.

Q. May I know how long ago?

A. About eighteen months, I think.

Q. Eight or nine months ago?

A. I say about eighteen months, I recall it.

Q. Was that before he was a District Attorney?

A. No; after.

Q. Since he was a District Attorney?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you mind telling me where you heard him speak?

A. At a church men's meeting, church dinner for men.

[fol. 186] Q. Was it a long speech, sir?

A. No.

Q. You were impressed by that talk, I take it?

A. Yes.

Q. I take it, too, you were impressed by the man himself?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you reach the conclusion that anything that gentleman sponsors must have merit in it?

A. That would be for me to decide, I think.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. I would not say that anything he sponsored I would agree with, no.

Q. Would the fact that District Attorney O'Dwyer is the gentleman whose name is signed on this indictment, would that create an unfavorable inference against our defendant?

A. I don't think so.

Q. You don't think so?

A. No.

Q. Is there some doubt in your mind, sir, about that?

A. Not with reference to the fact that District Attorney O'Dwyer would be sponsoring the case, no, sir.

Q. As you sit here now, sir, is there any prejudice against any of the defendants?

A. Not against them individually.

Q. I heard you say "not against them individually"?

A. Them.

Q. Is there any prejudice against them collectively?

A. I doubt if I could give them a fair trial, to be honest about it.

Q. That is your honest opinion?

A. That is my honest opinion.

Mr. Barshay: In behalf of all counsel for the defense. [fol. 187] I challenge this juror for cause.

The Court: Try the challenge.

Paul W. Wolf, of 2 Grace Court, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Now, Mr. Wolf, that you have been sworn, is the answer to the question I have just asked before you were sworn the same as if I ask it again?

A. That is true.

Mr. Barshay: I Press, your Honor, the challenge for cause.

Mr. Rosenthal: Defendant Capone joins in.

Mr. Talley: Defendant Weiss joins in.

The Court: Anything, Mr. Turkus?

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You have given, sir, an honest expression of opinion, that you doubt you can give the defendants a fair trial?

A. That is true.

The Court: The challenge is sustained.

(Albert C. Bender, of 1661 Hendrickson Street, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Bender, do you reside at Hendrickson Street?

A. That is right.

[fol. 188] Q. In what section or district of Brooklyn is that?

A. I would say the Flatlands district.

Q. Have you lived in Brooklyn a number of years?

A. Practically my lifetime.

Q. Do you live anywhere near Filmore Avenue and East 52nd Street?

A. Not too far away from it.

Q. Is there anything that may have occurred in that neighborhood that would impair your service as a juryman in this case?

A. Not to my knowledge.

By the Court:

Q. Near what street are you?

A. I am at Flatbush Avenue and Quentin Road. Filmore is two blocks over and some odd—I would say about ten blocks away from me.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I take it, Mr. Bender, that you are familiar with the nature of the charge.

A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge, namely, a case of murder in the first degree, which would impair or prevent you from serving as a juror in the case?

A. I don't think so, not to my knowledge.

Q. Have you any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No.

Q. Would you permit the question of punishment to enter into your deliberations in the jury room as to the guilt or innocence of these defendants?

A. No.

[fol. 189] Q. On the trestle board, Mr. Bender, you are listed as a clerk, and no further description. By whom are you employed?

A. Metropolitan Life Insurance.

Q. Are you employed in Manhattan?

A. That is right.

Q. Do your duties confine you to the office or do you go about the city?

A. In the office only.

Q. Have you any contact, directly or indirectly, with any person or firm in the so-called Brownsville or East New York district or section of Brooklyn?

A. No.

Q. Have you had any by way of business or any other way at any time with any person or firms in the Brownsville-East New York area?

A. Only as to buying a couple of electrical fixtures, that's all.

Q. Has that been sometime in the past?

A. Within a year and a half somewhere.

Q. It has not been since May, 1940?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any contacts, directly or indirectly, with any person or firm in the garment district in Manhattan?

A. No, not to my knowledge.

Q. Can you recall whether you have had any contacts in the past in that district?

A. No.

Q. Have you any connection, directly or indirectly, with any person or firms on the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No.

Q. Did business or any other situation bring you into [fol. 190] contact with anyone connected with the clothing trucking business?

A. No.

Q. Or the clothing business or clothing district in Manhattan?

A. No.

Q. Since your name appeared or notification was given to you that you were a prospective juror in this case, did anybody speak to you about the case?

A. Well, only in the office.

Q. Was that fellow employees?

A. That is it.

Q. In connection with the time that might be spent?

A. Reporting in and out, they knew what I was attending to, naturally.

Q. No discussion on the merits of the case?

A. No.

Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer or any member of his staff?

A. No.

Q. Specifically, do you know Turkus, Klein, or Joseph, Assistant District Attorneys?

A. No.

Q. The defendants are represented by nine lawyers, Mr. Barshay, Mr. Wegman and Mr. Climenko representing Buchalter. Do you know any of the three?

A. I only know Mr. Barshay through serving in previous cases.

Q. Was that at a time when he was an Assistant District Attorney?

A. That is right.

Q. On Mr. Geoghan's staff?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you know Mr. Geoghan or any other member of the staff?

A. I know Fred Kopf.

[fol. 191] Q. Intimately?

A. We belong to the same club.

Q. Since Judge O'Dwyer came into office have you had any discussions as to cases with Mr. Kopf?

A. I believe not.

By the Court:

Q. You live around where the car barns are on Utica Avenue?

A. Yes, not too far from there. That is Avenue N and 49th Street.

Q. That is on the way to Bergen Beach?

A. That is right.

Q. I take it you belong to the Midwood on Kings Highway?

A. No, I don't, I belong to——

Q. Kings County Lodge.

Mr. Cuff: Judge, we cannot hear what the juror is saying.

Q. Kings Highway Lodge on Bedford Avenue, of which Mr. Kopf was formerly Master.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Bender, that discussion you had with the Judge was not quite audible to the defense counsel, and I confess not quite audible to the District Attorney either.

The Court: He says he belongs to Kings County Masonic Lodge, which meets on Bedford Avenue and has its own temple. Mr. Kopf was formerly Master of that lodge.

The Talesman: I doubt that very much, your Honor. I believe Mr. Kopf was Master of the Midwood Lodge.

The Court: I made a mistake, but he was District Deputy [fol. 192] Grand Master of that Masonic district; is that correct?

The Talesman: I believe that is correct, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you been a close friend of Mr. Kopf?

A. I would not say so. We belong to the same club, not the lodge, but a club, and I have associated with him in minstrel shows and such stuff.

Q. Would there be any embarrassment in your service on a case as a juryman in connection with a murder which happened in 1936 and which is being prosecuted now by Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No.

Q. The defendant Weiss is represented by three lawyers, former Judge Talley, former Assistant District Attorney Cuff, and former Assistant United States Attorney Kriendler. Do you know any of the three?

A. No.

Q. Or anyone connected with their offices?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Defendant Capone is represented by Mr. Sidney Rosenthal, Mr. Fischbein, and Mr. Rosenberg. Do you know any of the three?

A. No.

Q. Or anyone connected or associated with their law offices?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know Mr. William W. Kleinman or David Price, lawyers in Brooklyn?

A. No.

Q. Anyone connected with their office?

A. Not to my knowledge.

[fol. 193] Q. Or Mr. Saul Price, former Assistant District Attorney in Manhattan, now practicing law?

A. No.

Q. Do you know intimately or closely any member of the bar who specializes in the trial of criminal cases?

A. Not except Freddie Kopf, if he is doing that now. I do not know whether he is.

Q. Having seen Mr. Barshay, you have seen him in this County Court, then?

A. That is right.

Q. How long ago, sir, was that?

A. I would not be sure of the time, but I would say it was about three years ago.

Q. Do you recall who the judge was before whom you served?

A. I think it was Judge Brancato.

Q. Was it a capital case? By that I mean was it a murder case?

A. Not murder, no, sir.

Q. Did the case go to a conclusion, that is, did the judge charge the jury and did the jury render a verdict?

A. Yes, the jury rendered an undecided verdict; I mean there was a split. There was not a decided verdict given. The Jury——

Q. Disagreed?

A. —disagreed.

Q. Is that the only service that you had, Mr. Bender?

A. No, I have served at other times, but usually it never got as far as the jury room. It was pleading to a lesser degree.

Q. Routine dispositions of cases?

A. That is right.

Q. At any rate, in this specific case in which Mr. Barshay [fol. 194] was then acting as prosecutor, you had the benefit of listening to Judge Brancato's charge on the law to the jury?

A. Yes.

Q. I take it that you understand that is your state of mind, is it not, that the Judge has the exclusive province in the court-room of telling the law to the jury?

A. Yes.

Q. And will you accept the law in all its aspects from the trial judge in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. When the Court charges on the presumption of reasonable doubt, you will accord that presumption to the benefit of the defendant, will you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And each of the defendants, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And when the Judge charges on the presumption of innocence, you will permit that presumption to inure to the benefit of each of the defendants as the law says they shall have it, will you not?

A. I will.

Q. Do you find any fault or do you have any bias against the District Attorney of the county or against the prosecution which avails itself of the testimony of co-participants in the crime with the defendants and uses that testimony against the defendants on trial?

A. No.

Q. With respect to the degree of proof of corroboration that is required, will you take the law exclusively from the Court and apply the principles of law as given by the Court?

A. Yes.

Q. You would not, would you, arbitrarily refuse to listen [fol. 195] to one who participated in the commission of the crime with defendants solely because he was an accomplice, would you?

A. No.

Q. And may I understand, then, that you have no inherent bias or prejudice against the prosecutor of the county or against the prosecution which avails itself of accomplice testimony?

A. No.

Q. Have you any bias or prejudice against the use of expert testimony or against expert testimony, whether it comes from a physician, a fingerprint expert or handwriting expert or any other type of expert?

A. No.

Q. Should defendants invoke any defense, for example, should one or more invoke the defense of alibi, will you take the law exclusively from the trial judge as to the law applicable to such a defense?

A. Yes.

Q. Through your business connections or any other way, did you come in contact with any officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No.

Q. Or with any officials connected with Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. No.

Q. Or with any officials of the Clothing Cutters Union?

A. No.

Q. Or of Local 138 of the Flour Truckmens Union?

A. No.

Q. Specifically, is the name of Jacob Petrofsky, an official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, familiar to you?

[fol. 196] A. No.

Q. Or that of Murray Weinstein, manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local 4, of the Amalgamated?

A. No.

Q. Or Sam Katz, the business agent of that local and union?

A. No.

Q. Are you familiar with the name of Bruno Belia, an organizer at the home office of the Amalgamated?

A. No.

Q. Or the name of Salvatore Marrazzano?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Philip Orlofsky, one-time manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local 4, connected with the Amalgamated, familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. The name of Abe or Abraham Beckerman or Mandel Yudelowitz; is that familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. May Silverman or Wolfie Goldis of the Flour Truckmens Union, Willie or William Alberts, a bondsman? Is the name of Emanuel Buchalter familiar?

A. No.

Q. Phillie Buchalter or Phillie Kowas?

A. No.

Q. Anybody by the name of Weiss in the automobile business up on Park Slope?

A. No.

Q. The name of Bellanca or Tosca?

A. No.

Q. If accepted as a juror in the case would you endeavor to work in harmony with the other jurors, and by harmony I mean to listen to common sense and reason in the jury room?

A. Yes.

Q. May I ask, was there any rancor in that other case?

A. Pardon?

[fol. 197] Q. Was there any rancor among the jury in that other case?

A. There was, yes. I assume you mean——

By the Court:

Q. Anybody stubborn?

A. Well, who knows who is stubborn? There was about nine by three and maybe the three thought the other nine were stubborn. It is according to whom you are asking the question.

Q. It is always the other fellow?

A. I think so, regardless of the number for and against.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Bender, without unduly prying, you can understand that this case may be a lengthy case. It is important not only to The People of the State of New York, but important to these three defendants, and we are trying to get a jury that will be fair and impartial, fair to The People of the State of New York and, by the same token, fair to the defendants at the bar. Would you listen to reasonable discussion, and I take it from what you said to the Judge you did listen to reasonable discussion in another case?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that some felony case that you presided in?

A. Yes, burglary and grand larceny hooked up in some way. I do not know the way they charge——

Q. In other words, the indictment had several counts?

A. Yes.

Q. Larceny, burglary. How long was that jury out?

[fol. 198] Mr. Talley: I object to that, if your Honor pleases. I think counsel has gone far enough.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Turkus: I did not receive a direct answer to the question as to whether or not there was any bitterness in the jury room.

Mr. Rosenthal: May I object upon the ground of its seeking to inquire on secret deliberations of a juryman in the jury room?

The Court: He said there was rancor; that is enough.

Mr. Turkus: Not that there be any impression created to the contrary, your Honor. I am merely endeavoring to secure a jury here that will deliberate the case and use reason one with the other.

The Court: You mean you are trying to estimate this gentleman's emotions and his emotional reaction.

Mr. Turkus: That is true.

The Court: Look at him. He gets along with his fellow men; he belongs to fraternal societies.

Q. Mr. Bender, do you know of any reason concerning which I have made no inquiry which would impair or hinder you from serving as a juror in the case, fair to The People of the State of New York and fair to the defendants at the bar?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. If you are selected as a juror in the case, will you [fol. 199] endeavor conscientiously to arrive at a fair and impartial verdict in the case, a verdict that will do justice in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. If sworn as a juror will you listen to reasonable discussion with the other jurors in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you, if accepted as a juror, listen to the testimony in the case, the arguments or inferences drawn by defense counsel in their summations to the jury, the inferences drawn by the prosecutor in his summation to the jury, and the law as given by the Court, and then with reason and common sense deliberate with the other jurors in the case, and if you are satisfied then upon all the evidence in the case beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three guilty men at the bar of justice, Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone, would you hesitate, would you be fearful, would you be reluctant to say so in your verdict?

A. No.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Bender, did you ever see me in Mr. Kopf's house?

A. No, I have not.

Q. Did you ever see me at Mr. Kopf's lodge, Masonic lodge?

A. No.

Q. Were you present when both of his sons were inducted into the lodge?

A. No, I was not.

Q. You know Mr. Kopf, you say, quite intimately?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know any other members of Mr. Kopf's staff [fol. 200] at that time?

A. No.

Q. Other than your seeing me in the court-room, had you known me at all?

A. No.

Q. You never had any business with me, isn't that so?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Kopf give his lectures accompanied——

A. With photo slides.

Q. And those were concerning the prosecution of crime, were they not?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you see them more than once?

A. Yes, I saw them a couple of times.

Q. Some of the pictures were of men shot?

A. Yes.

Q. Some of the bodies apparently were tortured?

A. That is right.

Q. And acompanying the showing of the slides, you heard Mr. Kopf speak about it?

A. That is right.

Q. And tell me, sir, did you form any impression about the prosecution of crime then favorable to the prosecution?

A. Well I could not say that.

Q. Were you influenced at all by either his speech or the showing of the slides?

A. It was very interesting.

Q. Did they impress you?

A. Yes.

Q. Did they arouse in you a desire or a zeal for the prosecution——

Mr. Turkus: I object to the tenor of the question. Every-[fol. 201] one has a right to prejudice against crime.

The Court: Finish the question.

Mr. Barshay: I am too, Mr. Turkus.

(Pending question read.)

Q. —or to be somewhat part of the machinery of the prosecution?

A. I was very much interested, and I appreciate what they were doing, yes.

Q. And would that now result to the detriment of any of the defendants here?

A. I don't think so.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. I don't think so.

Q. When you say you don't think so, sir, is there a doubt in your mind?

A. No, not to the extent that it has anything to do with this particular case.

Q. Remembering Mr. Kopf's slides, I know they showed in great detail the operation of the prosecutor's office and the Police Department.

A. That is right.

Q. He sort of gave you a behind-the-scenes attitude, did he not?

A. That is right.

Q. So that you were enriched by that experience far more than those who did not either listen to the lecture or observe the slides, isn't that so?

A. That is true.

Q. And subconsciously, if you were chosen as a juror, would those things that you heard and saw come up, creep into your mind, so that some of the things you saw and heard would give you a greater experience and an advantage over [fol. 202] the other jurors who did not hear or see them?

A. It would be hard for me to answer that question.

Mr. Turkus: I don't think that it can be answered, because——

Mr. Barshay: Mr. Turkus, he said he cannot answer. I will try to reframe it.

Mr. Turkus: I object to the question because it is impossible of answer.

Mr. Barshay: He is the judge of that.

Mr. Turkus: No, he cannot tell what experience other jurors have had, and you have asked him if he had more experience than the other jurors, and I think the question was not susceptible of an answer.

The Court: Will you reframe it?

Mr. Barshay: I will reframe it, sir.

Q. Mr. Bender, do you feel now that you have a greater education in crime and the prosecution of crime because of your experience with Mr. Kopf?

A. Yes.

Q. You might say you are more of an expert than the layman?

A. I would say that I know a little more than the average layman.

Q. And would that knowledge be carried into the jury room?

A. I doubt it.

Q. At any rate, there is a doubt in your mind, isn't that so?

A. I could not be sure.

Q. And if a question arises in the jury room with respect [fol. 203] to procedure in the Police Department or the District Attorney's office, maybe that doubt will resolve itself in favor of the prosecution?

A. It may.

Q. It might, isn't that so?

A. It might.

Mr. Barshay: I challenge the gentleman for cause.

The Court: Try the challenge.

Albert C. Bender, of 1661 Hendrickson Street, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Bender, would you answer under oath the same way the questions that I asked you as I asked before you were sworn?

A. I will.

Mr. Barshay: May I press it at this time without any further questions?

Mr. Talley: Counsel join in the challenge.

Mr. Turkus: The question, as I understand it, was: If a question arose with respect to procedure in the District Attorney's office or the Police Department, would that be resolved in favor of the prosecution? Is that correct?

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Bender, as I understand the purport of your answers to Mr. Borshay, they were that during the time that Mr. Kopf was chief Assistant District Attorney in Kings County he gave certain lectures on crime, accompanying [fol. 204] which he had some slides; is that correct?

A. That is true.

Q. Other than that you have had no experience with the prosecutor's office or with members of the Police Department in the apprehension of criminals or the prosecution of cases; is that correct?

A. Well, also a member of the club is Henry Bauer. He is a Deputy Inspector, and of course, as club members—this is not the lodge, this is a Masonic club—and of course, at times there are discussions.

Q. In the discussions that you had with Mr. Koph or with the Deputy Inspector, at any time was the murder of Joseph Rosen discussed; that murder took place on Sunday, September 13, 1936?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Were there any slides that Mr. Kopf had in connection with the Rosen case which you saw?

A. I don't think that either. No, not to my knowledge.

Q. So that whatever slides or whatever material you listened to by way of discussion had absolutely no connection with the murder of Joseph Rosen on September 13, 1938, in a little candy store at 725 Sutter Avenue, Brooklyn; is that correct?

A. No.

Q. So that some of the discussion and some of the slides,—you may be familiar with the procedure adopted by the District Attorney's office and by the Police Department in the apprehension of criminals, and their prosecution; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Is there anything that you have learned from the [fol. 205] prosecution of cases which would prevent you from giving the defendants on trial a square deal?

A. Not to my knowledge. That would require deliberation. I do not know just what I did gain from them that might become of importance in the development of this case. But, as I sit here now, I do not feel that way.

Q. Is there anything that you have seen of the slides or anything that Mr. Kopf spoke of in his discussion on crime which has impaired your ability to be fair to three defendants who were charged with the crime of murder in the first degree?

A. No.

Q. If the Judge charges you on the law that the defendants and each of them, Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone, are presumed to be innocent, until their guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt to your satisfaction upon credible evidence, would you follow the instruction of the Court and would you give the defendants the benefit of the presumption of innocence?

A. Yes.

Q. And if the Judge should charge you that throughout the case the burden is upon the District Attorney and the District Attorney accepts the burden of establishing guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, will you follow that instruction?

A. Yes.

Q. The question you were asked was with respect to procedure. Having in mind that the defendants have no burden at all by way of proof, that the burden is entirely upon the prosecutor and, on the contrary, the defendants have a presumption of innocence, would you give the prosecutor any [fol. 206] edge of the case, would you give him any edge because of the slides you have seen or the discussions on crime that you have heard?

A. I don't think so.

Q. And if the Judge tells you the District Attorney must establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt with respect to the procedure in the District Attorney's office or the Police Department, whatever that may mean or whatever it may tend to mean, would you give the District Attorney or the Police Department any advantage, to the detriment of the defendants?

A. No.

Q. Do you feel, as you sit in the jury box now, that you could take your place in the trial of this case and render justice, justice to The People of the State and justice to the three at the bar?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Bender, in reply to Mr. Turkus's question with respect to giving the District Attorney an edge in this case, your answer was, "I don't think so"?

A. No, I don't think so.

Q. Was your answer, "I don't think so"?

A. Yes.

Q. That implies some doubt, doesn't it?

A. Well, I can't be sure of that. That is, the certainty of it. I can't be sure whether that would become involved in the case or not.

Mr. Barshay: I press my challenge, your Honor, for cause.

The Court: Let other counsel examine if they wish.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

[fol. 207] Q. Mr. Bender, you made an answer to Mr. Turkus that as the facts in this case develop you might call upon what you have learned from the outside by reason of these slides and talk in aiding you and in arguing to the jury. Isn't that the import of your answer?

A. It may enter into discussions.

Q. So, in other words, if the facts as they unfold in this case have any similarity to what you have learned through slides and Mr. Kopf's talk, your attitude then may be unfair to the defendants, isn't that true?

A. It might enter into it.

Mr. Rosenthal: I press the challenge.

Mr. Barshay: We all press the challenge, sir.

The Court: Anybody else wish to question?

Mr. Talley: I have no questions to ask.

Mr. Turkus: May I ask one further question?

The Court: No. What the juryman states has no specific application to the alleged crime stated in the indictment. It has relation only to the normal functioning of jury psychology on the subject by acquired general knowledge of the individual, on the subject of collective usages and procedures. This is a normal condition and does not signify prejudice. It is a psychology which is omnipresent in the jury system and legally offers no basis for sustaining the challenge. The word "edge" is ambiguous. I do not know what it means. It does not imply partiality. The challenge is overruled.

[fol. 208] Mr. Barshay: We take an exception, your Honor. May we pursue the questioning a little further along the line——

The Court: Yes. Not along that. You tried that issue.

Mr. Talley: All counsel have an exception to your Honor's ruling, I take it?

The Court: Yes, an exception by any counsel is available to all throughout the trial of this case. This applies likewise to objections.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q Mr. Bender, about how many slides did you see all together?

A. Well, I do not know how many slides. There were several cases.

Q. You do not recollect the name of any of the those cases, do you?

A. By name, no.

Q. You don't recollect how many cases Mr. Kopf spoke of?

A. No, I don't.

Q. All you do remember is the pictures of the victims of crimes or perpetrators of crimes, detectives, and police?

A. That is right.

Q. It may be, sir, that one of the pictures you saw had some connection with this case, isn't that so?

A. It may have.

Q. And if that should occur during the trial your recollection may be refreshed, isn't that so?

A. It may.

Q. And if your recollection is refreshed it may influence [fol. 209] your mind in this case to the prejudice of these defendants, would it not?

A. It may without my even knowing it.

Q. Isn't that a fact?

A. It may.

Q. Did you ever see a lecture accompanied with slides that I gave at your club?

A. No, I didn't, unless you were there the night Freddy Kopf was there.

Q. Exclusive of Freddy Kopf, did you see my series at that time?

A. I saw some series there. I might have seen that too, but I would not be sure.

Q. You have no independent recollection of that, have you?

A. No.

Q. So that if during the deliberation of the jury or during the course of this trial there is something in this case which in your mind is connected with—they refresh recollection of the lecture or slides you saw then—you might be influenced by that fact and determine the specific issue to the detriment of these defendants; isn't that so?

A. It might be.

Mr. Barshay: May I renew the challenge for cause at this time, sir?

The Court: Are all other counsel through?

Mr. Talley: Yes.

Mr. Cuff: All counsel are.

The Court: This is purely guesswork and speculation. Mr. Kopf was chief assistant under Judge O'Dwyer's predecessor as District Attorney, served under Mr. Geoghan, [fol. 210] and during that administration nothing relating to this case had cropped up. The challenge is overruled.

Mr. Barshay: We take an exception, your Honor. May we disagree with your Honor's conclusion that nothing cropped up in that administration concerning this case?

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Now, Mr. Bender, were you ever a member of the Grand Jury?

A. No.

Q. Do you know or do you recall now reading about the Grand Jury investigation conducted in 1936 with respect to this case?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you recall reading about it at the time of its occurrence? Do you recall reading about it since its occurrence?

A. The investigation or the case?

Q. The case itself.

The Court: There was no case, Mr. Barshay. The Grand Jury investigation of the alleged murder was secret. It was not in the newspapers as to any of the defendants.

Mr. Barshay: I again beg to differ with the Court and say of my own personal knowledge, sir, that there was lots written about the investigation of this case at that time.

The Court: Nothing in relation to any of the defendants.

Mr. Barshay: I will not answer that, sir.

[fol. 211] By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Now, Mr. Bender, do you read the Daily Mirror?

A. No.

Q. Some member of your family read it?

A. No.

Q. Somebody in your office read it?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever look at it?

A. Yes.

Q. Since you were called as a juror here did you see the Daily Mirror in your office or any other place?

A. Yes.

Q. More particularly, were you attracted to the headlines therein concerning this case?

A. Yes.

Q. About how many times, Mr. Bender?

A. Well, I read one article in the life of one of the defendants.

Q. And did that particular article, sir, influence you to the detriment of these defendants or any of them?

A. I don't think so. I mean it has hurt his character.

Q. It had hurt his character?

A. The article I read had, yes.

Q. So that article did impress you to some extent to the detriment of at least one of the defendants, without mentioning any name?

A. That is right.

Q. And you are of that impression right now?

A. As to character, yes.

Q. Now I will ask you this question: If the Court should charge you that the character and the reputation of any defendant is not at issue here at all unless that defendant chooses to put it in issue, would you follow that law?

[fol. 212] A. I wish you would repeat that question.

Q. If the Court should charge you in this case that the character or reputation of any defendant is not at issue here at all unless he himself chooses to make it an issue by putting evidence of good character or reputation in evidence, will you follow the Court's instructions with respect to that law?

A. Yes.

Q. You will? Keeping that in mind, sir, would you be influenced by the fact that you have already formed some opinion by virtue of what you read in the Mirror which is detrimental to any one of the defendants' character?

A. I would try not to.

Q. You still use the word "I will try." There is some doubt in your mind?

A. I could not be sure.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. It may creep into my unconscious mind to the extent that it may influence me regardless.

Q. On that point alone, sir, there may arise something in the case which would creep in detrimental to any of the defendants; isn't that so?

A. It may.

Q. And it may creep in to the extent that it would influence your own decision, isn't that possible?

A. I suppose that follows right along the same lines. It may.

Q. And it would be difficult to dissipate the impression you gained from having read that particular article which you say was detrimental to the character and reputation of one of these defendants?

A. I suppose that may be so.

Q. And it may require evidence on the part of that par- [fol. 213] ticular defendant in your mind to dissipate that impression, isn't that so?

A. I will answer that the same way. It may. I do not know.

Mr. Barshay: I renew my challenge for cause, your Honor.

The Court: Swear the witness on the trial of this challenge.

(Albert C. Bender, being duly sworn, testified as follows:)

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Now, under oath, sir, would you answer the questions the same way if I asked them in the same way, as you did before you were under oath?

A. I would.

Mr. Barshay: We renew our challenge for cause, sir, on behalf of all counsel.

The Court: Any questions by the other counsel?

Mr. Talley: No, sir.

The Court: Sustained.

(Joseph A. Cole, of 292 Covert Street, Brooklyn, New York, was then examined as to his qualifications.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Cole, what section of Brooklyn is Covert Street?

A. It is called the Bushwick section.

Q. Have you lived in the Bushwick section of Brooklyn a [fol. 214] number of years?

A. Yes.

Q. Is your home in close proximity to Jefferson Avenue or Jefferson Street?

A. Yes, Jefferson Avenue, I think it is.

Q. Would that be between Evergreen Avenue and some other street?

A. It runs a different way.

Q. Did anything occur on Jefferson Street while you were a resident which might impair your service as a juryman in this case?

A. Not that I remember.

Q. Mr. Cole, I take it that you understand now the nature of the charge in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge, namely, a charge of murder in the first degree, which would impair or prevent your service as a juror in the case?

A. No.

Q. Would you permit punishment to enter into your deliberations of guilt or innocence?

A. I did not get that.

Q. Would you permit the question of punishment to be argued in the jury room when you are deciding the question of guilt or innocence?

A. Yes.

Q. You would permit punishment to be argued?

The Court: That is a question of law. He may think that he should.

Mr. Turkus: That is true. I did not look at it in that light. I will withdraw it in that form.

Q. What I am specifically trying to ascertain is this: Have you any conscientious or other scruple against capital [fol. 215] punishment?

A. No.

Q. In deciding the issue of guilt or innocence, you will not permit anybody to talk punishment in the jury room, will you?

A. No.

Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror in a criminal case?

A. No.

Q. Have you served as a juror in a civil case?

A. No.

Q. At any rate, I think that you understand by now, do you not, that the Judge, the trial Judge, is the ex-usive one on the law?

A. Yes.

Q. That the jury takes the law from the trial Judge without question or qualification?

A. I do.

Q. If selected as a juror in this case will you do that? Will you follow the law as given by Judge Taylor?

A. Yes.

By the Court:

Q. 272 is near what street?

Mr. Turkus: 292.

A. Is between Knickerbocker and Irving.

Q. Knickerbocker and Irving is about over a half a mile from Evergreen and Jefferson?

A. There is a Jefferson Avenue and a Jefferson Street.

Q. I am talking about Jefferson Avenue.

A. I always get confused between the two.

Q. Jefferson Avenue parallels Fulton Street.

A. And Jefferson Street does, too.

[fol. 216] Q. Yes, but that is a long distance away.

A. It is Jefferson Avenue I live near.

Q. How far away are you from Jefferson Avenue?

A. I would say perhaps a mile and a half.

Q. You are up near Evergreen Cemetery?

A. Yes.

Q. Just off the edge of the cemetery?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. That is the district of two-story-and-basement homes?

A. Primarily.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Cole, on the trestle board you are listed as a bookkeeper.

A. That is right.

Q. Is that the correct listing?

A. Yes.

Q. By whom are you employed?

A. By attorneys, Appleton, Rice & Perrin.

Q. And their offices are in Manhattan?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you in a specific branch of the work, that is, do you work on books exclusively?

A. And trust accounts, yes, of that type now.

Q. That is books and trust accounts handled by this firm of lawyers?

A. That is right.

Q. Clients of theirs, I assume?

A. Yes.

Q. In the nature of banks would they be?

A. Yes, they are banks.

Q. These lawyers do not specialize in the trial of criminal [fol. 217] cases?

A. No.

Q. Do you know whether or not there is any criminal case pending in the office?

A. There is not as far as I know.

Q. Their work is exclusively trust work and corporation work?

A. Yes.

Q. This may be repetitious but it is imperative that we go through these various questions. Have you any contact, directly or indirectly, with any person or firm in the Brownsville-East New York section of Brooklyn?

A. Yes.

Q. An individual?

A. Individual and some employees of a particular place.

By the Court:

Q. You represent labor unions?

A. No, not any connection with labor unions.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You say you have Brownsville-East New York contacts?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you had them for the last few years?

A. Yes.

Q. Are they with firms or individuals in the Brownsville-East New York area?

A. With individuals.

Q. Is it a business connection?

A. Partly, yes. I have done some income tax returns for some of the employees there.

Q. Is it partly social?

A. Yes.

Q. Income tax returns for employees of a firm?

[fol. 218] A. That is right.

Q. What firm is that?

A. Salzer & Weinsier.

Q. What type of business is that concern engaged, do you know?

A. Plumbing supplies.

Q. And is their work in that Brownsville-East New York area of Brooklyn?

A. Yes.

Q. During your contact, both social and by way of business, have you engaged in discussion from time to time with reference to certain investigations pending in this county?

A. I have a very hazy recollection of talking it over with my brother some time ago, but nothing very clear in my mind.

Q. You say you have been in and out of that Brownsville-East New York area for the last few years?

A. Yes.

Q. That is having some social and business contacts, the nature of which you described to us. Did any time anyone discuss any pending investigations in this county?

A. No.

Q. While you were in that area?

A. No.

Q. Do these people work in this Brownsville-East New York section of Brooklyn or do they reside there?

A. Work there. One or two may live there too, as far as I know.

Q. But you are definite, now, that there has been no discussion of any pending investigation with any of those contacts that you have enumerated?

A. Yes.

Q. As the result of your contact with people in that area, have you read the newspapers in regard to any pending [fol. 219] investigation?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you read them at length?
A. To some extent, yes.
Q. You followed the articles with great interest?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you have any business or other connection in the garment district of Manhattan?
A. No.
Q. Anybody in the clothing district of Manhattan?
A. No.
Q. Or the clothing trucking business or industry?
A. No.
Q. The Brooklyn waterfront?
A. No.

By the Court:

Q. Do you mind giving the general character of the legal practice your firm has?
A. Yes.
Q. In the way of clientele.
A. Preparation of wills, preparation of trust accounts, probating of wills.
Q. What particular line of business?
A. Civil practice.
Q. Do a big corporation business, don't they?
A. Yes.
Q. Madison Avenue?
A. No, we are down on Wall Street.
Q. Any of the big industrial companies?
A. No, sir.
Q. Any of the big transportation companies?
A. No.
Q. What particular bank or trust company?
A. Must I answer that?
Q. There is no secret about it.
A. Bank of Manhattan is one of the clients.
Q. That keeps you pretty busy?
A. Yes.
Q. On trust accounts?
A. Yes.

By Mr. Turkus:

[fol. 220] Q. Since you received notification that you were a prospective juror in the case, did anybody speak to you about the case?

A. No.

Q. Any of the persons that you met in that Brownsville-East New York area either socially or on business, did they have any discussion with you about the case?

A. No.

Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. Yes.

Q. There are nine lawyers here defending these three at the bar: Mr. Barshay, a former Assistant District Attorney—you have heard him interrogate other jurors?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know him?

A. No.

Q. Mr. Bertram Wegman, a former Assistant United States Attorney. He has not as yet interrogated any jurors, but he is seated—he was seated over here. Do you know whether his name is familiar to you?

A. No, it is not.

Q. Or Mr. Jesse Climenko?

A. No.

Q. Associate of Mr. Wegman?

A. No.

Q. Do you know anyone attached to any of the respective offices of Barshay or Wegman and Climenko?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Emanuel Weiss is represented by former General Sessions Judge Talley. Do you know Judge Talley?

A. No.

Q. Any member of his office staff?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Or Mr. Cuff, a former Assistant in Kings County?

A. No.

Q. Mr. Murray Kriendler, a former Assistant United States Attorney?

A. No.

[fol. 221] Q. Do you know anybody in the offices of Mr. Cuff or Mr. Kriendler?

A. No, I don't think I do.

Q. Capone is represented by Mr. Sidney Rosenthal, Mr. Leon Fischbein, and Mr. Emanuel Rosenberg. Do you know any of those lawyers?

A. No.

Q. Or anyone in their offices?

A. No.

Q. Your work for the law firm that you have disclosed to the Court is such that you work on figures and on numbers, accounting work, more or less, and bookkeeping work?

A. Yes, now it does.

Q. You don't write briefs or discuss law?

A. No.

Q. Do you have any bias or prejudice against the prosecutor of the county, Judge O'Dwyer, or against the prosecution for using the testimony of co-participants in the crime against the defendants on trial?

A. No.

Q. Will you take the law exclusively from the Judge as to what corroboration is required of that type of individual?

A. Yes.

Q. In the event the defendant or a defendant or any of the defendants or any one or more of them should invoke a defense of alibi, will you take the law exclusively from the Judge as to the law applicable to that type of defense?

A. Yes.

Q. There were various names that I read to the other jurors. Particularly may I direct your attention to the names of officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers [fol. 222] of America. Are any of their names familiar to you?

A. No they were not.

Q. You do not have any contact, directly or indirectly, with those individuals?

A. No.

Q. For example, is the name Potofsky or the name of Weinstein or Katz familiar to you at all?

A. No.

Q. Officials of the Amalgamated Union?

A. No.

Q. The name of Bruno Belia, an organizer of the Amalgamated, is his name familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. The name of Salvatore Marazzano familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. Do you know any officials of the Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. No.

Q. Do you know any officials of the Flour Trucking Union, specifically, Local 138?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Wolfie Goldis or Max Silverman familiar?

A. No.

Q. The name of Philip Orlofsky, one-time general manager of the Amalgamated, is that name familiar at all to you?

A. No, it is not.

Q. Or Willie Alberts, a one-time bondsman?

A. No.

Q. The name of Emanuel Buchalter or Phillie Buchalter familiar?

A. No.

Q. The name of Bellanca or Tosca familiar?

A. No.

Q. The name of anyone by the name of Weiss or any company which rents out automobiles in the Park Slope district of Brooklyn, is that familiar to you in any way?

A. No.

[fol. 223] Q. Do you know intimately any member of the bar who practices criminal law as a specialty?

A. Just an attorney on the Attorney General's staff.

Q. Who is that?

A. M. B. Quint.

Q. Of Mr. Amen's staff?

A. That is right.

Q. You know no other member of the bar who specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. No.

Q. The name of William W. Kleinman or David Price, is that familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. Or the name of Saul Price in Manhattan?

A. No.

Q. If accepted as a juror in the case, you will take the law exclusively from the Court; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. If selected as a juror and thus automatically become the foreman of the jury, will you endeavor to listen to common sense and reason in the discussions in the jury room?

A. Yes.

Q. If selected as a juror will you endeavor to do justice in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. Assuming you are selected as a juror and you take your place in the jury box and you hear all the evidence in the case, then you hear the defense lawyers sum up to the jury and draw their inferences from the testimony, and their arguments, then you hear the prosecutor draw his inferences and then the learned Court address you on the law, and you discuss the case with the other jurors in the jury room sensibly and without bitterness, and you come to the conclusion that upon all the evidence in the [fol. 224] case there are at this bar of justice beyond a reasonable doubt three guilty men, Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone, will you say so in your verdict?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you have any hesitation, fear or reluctance in so finding?

A. No.

The Court: The precise location of that plumbing supply house may have some bearing on the possible familiarity of the talesman. He knows the employees.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. At the suggestion of the Court, Mr. Cole: Do you know where Saltser & Weinsier's place is located?

A. Approximately, I know about the number. I think it is 430-something Sutter Avenue.

By The Court:

Q. Near what street?

A. I don't know the street. I know just how to go there.

Q. Would that be in the East New York or the Brownsville?

A. Brownsville.

Mr. Turkus: Brownsville.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. The place of occurrence of the murder in this case was at 725 Sutter Avenue. Do you know whether or not you were not going to this Sutter Avenue district of Brooklyn or the Brownsville district as early as 1936?

A. No, I did not go there myself at that time, but my brother worked there. My brother still works there.

[fol. 225] By The Court:

Q. Did you make out the income tax reports at that time?
A. Yes, I did.
Q. That was only a few blocks removed?
A. That is right.
Q. Three blocks removed?
A. The employees came to my house at that time.
Q. No discussion about the murder?
A. No.
Q. Nothing ever said?
A. Yes, at that time my brother did talk about it.
Q. That was an alleged street shooting?
A. Yes.

Mr. Turkus: Store.
The Witness: Store shooting.

Q. You knew that?
A. Yes.
Q. You heard that?
A. Yes.
Q. From discussion?
A. From discussion.
Q. With your brother?
A. Yes.
Q. Where did your brother live?
A. My brother worked right in Saltser & Weinsier.
Q. That is where you got the income tax business?
A. Yes.
Q. And he came home and told you about the shooting?
A. Yes.
Q. Just answer this yes or no without going into details. Was anything discussed as to who might be responsible for the shooting?
A. No.
Q. Or as to the reason for the shooting?
A. No

[fol. 226] Mr. Barshay: If your Honor pleases, I could not hear the discussion. May I ask this question: Was your Honor interrogating the gentleman with respect to this case?

The Court: Yes, precisely.

(Questions and answers read.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Am I sure, Mr. Cole, that you have no embarrassment or reluctance in serving on this case?

A. No.

Q. None of your outside contacts or connections in any kind, manner, shape, or form will have any effect on your deliberations on the one issue in the case, the guilt or innocence of the three at the bar of justice?

A. No.

Q. And specifically, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt on all the evidence that these are three guilty men, you won't have any embarrassment or hesitation in saying so in your verdict?

A. No.

Q. None of your outside connections will influence it?

A. No.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Cole, was Mr. Appleton of your firm ever a Magistrate?

A. No.

Q. Was it a brother, do you know?

A. I do not think any relation of his.

Q. How long have you been with the firm?

A. About nineteen years.

Q. And during the nineteen years was there ever a time [fol. 227] when any criminal matter arose in your office?

A. No, I don't think so.

Q. Was there an appeal involving a criminal matter during the years that you were there?

A. No, I don't think so.

Q. How many employees has the firm?

A. About twenty or twenty-two.

Q. And of them how many are lawyers?

A. Roughly I would say eleven.

Q. Do any of them have the privilege of practicing exclusively—— Withdrawn.

Q. They have the privilege of practicing law other than that law connected with the firm?

A. No.

Q. They all work for the firm?

A. All work for the firm.

Q. And do any of them have any criminal matters whatever?

A. No.

Q. Do you read law yourself?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Did you ever study law?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear any criminal cases discussed that were not in your office, in the office when you were working there?

A. I may have. I know in recent years I have not.

Q. So as far as you are concerned you have no direct contact with any part of the criminal law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nor any indirect contact with it?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Turkus has said to you, or rather, has asked you whether you know any of the lawyers for the defense. [fol. 228] Do you you know any of the lawyers for the prosecution?

A. No.

Q. He said the lawyers for the defendants number nine. I may tell you the lawyers for the prosecution number about thirty-five.

Mr. Turkus: In this case?

Mr. Barshay: Yes. Only two of them are appearing in court just at present.

Mr. Turkus: I object to Mr. Barshay stating what he knows about Judge O'Dwyer's office. He is not an Assistant District Attorney now.

The Court: Go ahead with the questions.

Q. Do you know anybody in that office?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Do you know anybody in the Police Department?

A. Some of the officers, yes.

Q. Intimately?

A. Friendly with them.

Q. High officials?

A. No.

Q. Officials who are assigned to that section of Brownsville where that firm Saltser & Weinsier has its place of business?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever discuss this case with any police officials?

A. No, I have not.

Q. Is there any prejudice in your mind, sir, because the defendants here are represented by nine counsel?

A. No.

Q. Not at all?

A. None at all.

Q. Or is there any prejudice in your mind because some [fol. 229] of us have had official office before?

A. No.

Q. Only a short time ago our positions were changed. Mr. Turkus for years was a specialist in criminal law.

Mr. Turkus: I object to Mr. Barshay giving me a certificate of ability. That has nothing to do with the qualification of the juror.

The Court: It is of no consequence.

Mr. Turkus: Of course it is not.

The Court: Finish your question.

Q. That has nothing to do with the case?

A. No.

Q. Isn't that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Fate decreed that the positions be changed, that's all.

Mr. Turkus: I object to it. Nothing about fate here. I was appointed by Judge O'Dwyer as an Assistant District Attorney, and that is the end of it.

The Court: That is not the end of it; that is the beginning of it.

Mr. Turkus: I hope so.

The Court: We will take a recess until two o'clock.

(To Mr. Cole) Do not discuss the case. Be back here at two o'clock, when questioning will be resumed.

The defendants are remanded.

The other jurors return at two o'clock.

(Recess taken to 2:00 P. M.)

[fol. 230] Afternoon Session—Trial Resumed

JOSEPH A. COLE resumed the stand and testified further as follows:

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Cole, you said you are a friend of Assistant Attorney General Quint of Mr. Amen's office?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you an intimate friend of his?

A. I worked with him for about six or seven years.

Q. And have you been working with him since his appointment as an Assistant Attorney General?

A. No.

Q. Have you seen him since?

A. Yes, two or three times.

Q. And have you talked about his work there?

A. Generally. I just know a little bit of it.

Q. Mr. Cole, do you know whether or not, or can you recall whether or not you and Mr. Quint spoke about this case?

A. I don't think we did.

Q. You say you don't think you did?

A. I am quite sure.

Q. Is there a doubt in your mind?

A. I am quite sure.

Q. The fact that Mr. Quint is an Attorney General would not have any influence upon you in this case, would it?

A. No.

Q. You, of course, never heard any propositions of criminal law from him?

A. No.

Q. Never? You said that you read the papers serially with respect to this case; am I correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Was one of the papers the New York Daily Mirror?

A. No.

[fol. 231] Q. Was it the New York American or the New York Journal?

A. No.

Q. Was it the Brooklyn Eagle?

A. No.

Q. May I have from you what paper?

A. Telegram, it could have been the News, or the Sun. It might have been P. M.

Q. P. M. had features about this case too?

A. Yes, it was the first day or the second day.

Q. You are right, sir, the first day you were called here on August 4th, the afternoon issue had a two-page spread with pictures.

A. Yes.

Q. About this case. You read that?

A. Not entirely. I happened to pick it up and saw it and read a little bit of it and did not finish it.

Q. The picture of one of the defendants, at least, was there?

A. Yes.

Q. Without mentioning any names?

A. Yes.

Q. And a little history of the case?

A. Yes.

Q. As the result of reading that or part of it, did you form any impression with respect to this case?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Is that impression that you formed by reason of reading that article detrimental to any of the defendants?

A. Yes, I think so.

Q. And, being under that impression, can I have you tell me whether or not you would be precluded from being a fair and impartial juror in this case?

A. Yes, I think so.

[fol. 232] That is your honest opinion?

A. Yes.

Mr. Barshay: Challenge the juror for cause.

Mr. Talley: Join in.

The Court: Try it.

Mr. Cuff: Join in.

Joseph A. Cole, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Cole, if I ask you now the same questions that I just asked you before you were sworn, would you give the same answers?

A. Yes, I would.

Mr. Barshay: May I stop here and renew my challenge for cause, sir?

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Cole, I think when I asked you questions you said you had never sat as a juror in a criminal case. Is my memory correct?

A. Yes, that is so.

Q. Do you understand now since the questioning that the burden of proof to establish guilt rests upon the prosecutor?

A. Yes.

Q. And that guilt must be established by the evidence adduced in the court-room to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you feel now that your state of mind is such that you would be inclined to substitute some picture or some [fol. 233] little article that you saw in a P. M. newspaper or any other newspaper for the proof that the District Attorney must bring into a court-room?

A. I am afraid it might. It might put the burden on them.

Q. You mean you feel prejudiced against the defendants?

A. Yes.

Mr. Barshay: On behalf of all defendants, sir, I renew my challenge for cause.

The Court: Sustained.

(John R. Hamilton, of 317 East 29th Street, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Hamilton, do you live in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did you make an application for excuse from jury service?

A. That is right. My firm asked that I be excused.

Q. Defense counsel have asked me to ask you to speak loudly so that they may hear what you have to say.

A. I will try to.

Q. Was that at the request of your firm? Was there a question of your health involved?

A. No, sir.

Q. So that there is nothing the matter with you physically to sit on this jury?

A. That is right.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of your work that at this time would impair your service as a juryman—[fol. 234] by that I mean is there something pressing about your excuse?

A. No, it is merely that the work is very difficult to replace, that is all.

Q. You live in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you lived there for a number of years?

A. About four, approximately four years.

By the Court:

Q. That is in the vicinity of Church Avenue and Nostrand?

A. That is correct.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is your profession that of an accountant?

A. And clerk.

Q. By whom are you employed?

A. The National Car Loading Corporation.

Q. It has offices in Manhattan?

A. That is right.

Q. Does your business keep you inside the office or do you work outside?

A. Inside.

Q. Have you any contacts, by way of business or any other way, in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever have any such contacts with any persons or firms in that area?

A. Is that near the New Lots section?

Q. New Lots section would be part of Brownsville and East New York.

A. No.

Q. Have you any contacts in the New Lots section of Brooklyn?

A. No, I just wanted to make sure where the Brownsville [fol. 235] section was.

Q. That is out around Pitkin Avenue, Sutter Avenue.

A. No.

Q. Did business bring you into any contact with the garment district in Manhattan?

A. No.

Q. Or the clothing district?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever have any contacts with any persons or firms in either the clothing district or the garment district?

A. No, unless they ship over our lines. That I do not know.

Q. That does not bring you in any personal contact?

A. It does not bring me in personal contact.

By the Court:

Q. What is the National Car Loading Association?

A. They load cars into freight cars throughout the United States——

Q. What kind of cars do they load into freight cars?

A. All type of freights.

Q. They load freight cars?

A. That is right.

Q. Sort of a stevedoring business?

A. Not exactly, more shippers agents. Merchandise that the railroads do not handle on carload basis.

Q. Just what does your concern do with that merchandise? They consolidate them into cars and ship them to our other offices throughout the United States and distribute them.

Q. You mean that merchandise which is shipped in small lots, too small for the shippers to ship by freight?

A That is right.

[fol. 236] Q. And after accepted by the railroad is taken by your company and then the shipments of various shippers is consolidated by you into one shipment and you hire the freight car and put the stuff in?

A. That is right.

Q. And you profit by taking the difference between the carload lot rates and the less-than-carload-lot rates? That is your profit?

A. Yes, that is right.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you have any contact with clothing trucking?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you at any time have any business contact or any other contact with people in the clothing trucking industry?

A. No.

Q. Since your name appeared upon the special panel and notification was given you that you might serve in this case, did anybody speak to you about the case?

A. No.

Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. Yes.

Q. In connection with your work of car loading that you have described to the Court, did you come in any contact with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any officials in that union?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Jacob Potofsky familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name of Murray Weinstein?

A. No, sir.

Q. The name of Sam Katz?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you come in any contact, directly or indirectly, with any officials of local 240 of the Clothing Drivers and Helpers Union?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 237] Q. Is the name of Philip Orlofsky, a one-time manager of the Cutters Union, Local 4, associated with the Amalgamated familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Bruno Belia familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or that of Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No, sir.

Q. The name of Abe or Abraham Beckerman, or Yudelowitz?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any contact, direct or indirect, with anybody in Local 138 of the Flour Truckmens Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. In this carloading work that you handle, do you have any shipments of flour or any shipments of clothes or clothing?

A. I am not familiar with that angle of the work at all. My work is strictly accounting.

Q. Your work is devoted to the time you spend on books?

A. That is right.

Q. That is the bookkeeping department of this company?

A. The other work is handled by another office.

Q. So that you have no personal contact with any of the shippers?

A. That is right.

Q. Is the name of Max Silverman or Wolfie Goldis familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or that of Willie or William Alberts, a one-time bondsman?

A. No, sir.

Q. The name of Emanuel Buchalter familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Phillie Buchalter, Phillie Kowas?

A. No.

[fol. 238] Q. The name of Bellanca or Tosca familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody by the name of Weiss in the automobile rental business?

A. No, sir.

Q. In the Park Slope section of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody in the automobile rental business, that is, renting out cars by the hour or day?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have no such contacts?

A. That is right.

Q. There are three lawyers representing the defendant Buchalter, Mr. Barshay, a former Assistant District Attorney in this County, Mr. Wegman, a former Assistant United States Attorney, and Mr. Climenko. Do you know any of the three?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone connected with them in the practice of the law or employed in their law offices?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Defendant Weiss is represented by former General Sessions Judge Talley. Do you know him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Anyone in his office?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Two other lawyers for Weiss associated with Judge Talley are former Assistant District Attorney Cuff and former Assistant United States Attorney Kriendler. Do you know any one of them?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or anybody in their respective law offices?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Capone is represented by Mr. Rosenthal, Mr. Fisch-
[fol. 239] bein, and Mr. Rosenberg. Do you know any of those gentlemen whose names I have enumerated?

A. No, sir.

Q. Anybody in their law offices?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar who specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of William W. Kleinman, or David Price familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or that of Saul Price, a former Assistant District Attorney in Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have had no contacts, directly or indirectly, by way of business or by way of any social connections with anyone in the Brownsville-East New York, the garment or clothing districts in Manhattan, or the Brooklyn waterfront; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you heretofore sat as a juror in a criminal case?

A. I never sat as a juror.

Q. In any type of case?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you ever been interrogated as to your qualifications for jury service prior to this experience?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it that you understand that Judge Taylor is the one who has the exclusive province of telling the jury the law in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you accept the law from Judge Taylor without qualification?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you are charged as a matter of law that defendants [fol. 240] are presumed to be innocent, that The People of the State of New York have the burden of establishing their guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, will you follow the Court's instructions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any bias or prejudice against the prosecutor of the county or against the prosecution which uses the testimony of co-participants in the murder to testify against the defendants on trial?

A. Are you referring to the credibility of the witness?

Q. No, I am not going into credibility, because that is something that we will discuss later. First I want to find out if you have any prejudice against the prosecutor.

A. No.

Q. Or against the prosecution.

A. No.

Q. Would you close your ears to the testimony of an accomplice solely because he was an accomplice?

A. No.

Q. Would you listen to his story and apply the tests of credibility that the Court instructs you should be applied to that type of witness?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you find any fault with the use of that type of testimony?

A. No.

Q. Does the prosecution start off with any handicap in your mind because that type of testimony is employed?

A. No.

Q. Have you any bias or any prejudice against so-called expert testimony?

A. No, sir.

Q. For example, you have no feeling against handwriting [fol. 241] testimony, medical testimony, that is, emanating from an expert?

A. No.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer, the District Attorney of the County?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of his staff?

A. No.

Q. Specifically, do you know Assistant District Attorneys Turkus, Klein, or Joseph?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the case that would prevent you from being a fair and impartial juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No.

Q. Would you permit the question of punishment to enter into your deliberations as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants?

A. No, sir.

By The Court:

Q. Does your concern deal with loaders?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the railroad platforms?

A. Some we employ, men on our own payroll, and others we hire.

Q. How are those public loaders hired?

A. That I do not know. That is the concern of the local offices. I am associated with the general office.

Q. Who is the head of your concern, the president?

A. They just had a new one, Mr. Dilhofer.

Q. Where is your office?

A. 19 Rector Street.

Mr. Talley: If your Honor pleases, it was impossible [fol. 242] to hear.

Q. That is near Church Street? That is on Rector Street near Church?

A. Rector and Greenwich, between Greenwich and Washington.

Q. The numbers run from West Street towards Broadway?

A. No, sir, they run from Broadway to West Street.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Did you know the former prosecutor of Kings County, Mr. Geoghan, or any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. If selected as a juror in this case, will you endeavor to listen to reason and the logical argument of your fellow jurors in the case when it is being deliberated in the jury room?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will you, in determining the one issue in the case, the guilt or innocence of the defendants at the bar, use the every-day business experience that you have acquired in weighing the believability of witnesses and in settling that problem according to justice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any reason concerning which I have made no inquiry which would affect your qualification or ability to sit as a fair and impartial juror in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you sit in the jury box free from prejudice?

A. As far as I can tell, yes, sir.

Q. With an open mind, ready to receive the evidence in the case?

A. That is right.

[fol. 243] Q. Assuming, then, that you have heard all the evidence in the case and you have had the benefit of the defendants' lawyers summing up and drawing their inferences from the testimony and the prosecutor drawing his inferences and then the learned Court charges you on the law and you have deliberated without rancor and fairly and reasonably with the other jurors in the case and you come to the conclusion beyond a reasonable doubt that at the bar of justice there are three guilty men, Buchalter, Capone, and Weiss, will you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

A. No.

Q. Would you have any fear or reluctance to say so in your verdict?

A. No.

Q. Is there any experience you have had in your past life or any business connection that you have presently which would interfere with the rendition of that kind of a verdict?

A. No, sir.

Q. If selected as a juror in the case, will you endeavor to do justice in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. May I ask if you are married, sir?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you ever studied law, Mr. Hamilton?
A. No, sir.
Q. Has any member of your family been a lawyer?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you ever been on any Grand Jury?
A. No, sir.
Q. Has any member of your family been on any Grand Jury?
A. No, sir.
[fol. 244] Q. Do you know anything at all connected with the law enforcing agencies of the City or State of New York?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or of the United States Government?
A. No.
Q. Have you ever been a victim of a crime?
A. No, sir.
Q. Any close member of your family or intimate friend been the victim of a crime?
A. No.
Q. Or your employer?
A. Throughout the United States our firm has been victimized at times, but that is all.
Q. Your firm has been victimized throughout the United States?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Any one of those instances were you closely connected?
A. No, I was not connected at all.
Q. And, Mr. Hamilton, the fact that your firm has been the victim one place or another, one time or another of a crime, has that created a prejudice in your mind against these defendants?
A. No.
Q. Or against any of them? No doubt about that? Did you read about this case at the time of its occurrence?
A. I read one article in the paper.
Q. May I know in what paper?
A. The Mirror.
Q. Daily Mirror?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. May I know how long ago?

A. Approximately a month, I should say.

Q. Was it since you were called as a juror here?

A. It was about the time I was, I guess.

[fol. 245] Q. Is that the only time you read that article?

A. That is right.

Q. And did it leave an impression with you?

A. It was not on this case at all, but it was about the defendant.

Q. Was it concerning one of the defendants involved in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. According to the indictment?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 246] Q. Without mentioning his name, did it prejudice you against that particular defendant?

A. I don't think so.

Q. You say you don't think so. I take it that implies some doubt in your mind. Am I correct?

A. It is hard to dissociate the impression.

Q. It is hard to dissociate the impression that you gathered?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the impression, I take it, was an unfavorable one to that defendant, isn't that so?

A. It would be, yes, the way the article was written.

Q. The way the article was written tended to create an unfavorable impression with respect to that defendant in your mind; isn't that so?

A. I would say so.

Q. And that impression still remains with you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is an impression that is prejudicial to that particular defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if you were sworn as a juror, it would need some proof or evidence to dissipate that impression; is that so?

A. I am afraid so.

Q. You are afraid so? So that when you said that you could do justice, you did not mean exactly that, because somewhere else in your mind——

A. I don't think it goes as far as that, Counselor.

Q. It does not go that far?

A. No, it is more or less just a vague—you know what I mean—a vague impression.

[fol. 247] Q. Do you know whether or not you believe the accuracy or the truth of those articles?

A. As far as the material, I would say yes.

Q. The substance of that article seemed to you to be the truth, isn't that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that too was to the prejudice of that particular defendant?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have not eliminated that prejudice yet?

A. Not completely, no.

By the Court:

Q. Have you relatives in Brooklyn by the same name?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Dr. Hamilton?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Barshay: Your Honor, on behalf of all the defendants, I challenge this juror for cause.

The Court: Try the challenge.

John R. Hamilton, of 317 East 29th Street, was then sworn.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Now that you are under oath, Mr. Hamilton, would you answer the question that I asked you a few minutes ago in the same manner?

A. I would.

Q. As you answered them before?

A. I would.

Mr. Barshay: I urge the challenge for cause, your Honor.

[fol. 248] The Court: Any other questions by any other counsel?

Mr. Rosenthal: No further questions.

Mr. Talley: No further questions on this challenge.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Hamilton, I think you said, when I interrogated you, that you had had no prior experience as a juror in any type of litigation. Is my memory correct on that?

A. That is right.

Q. In other words, you have sat through no criminal case and have not had the benefit of listening to the Judge's instruction on the law?

A. That is correct.

Q. Do you find any fault with the judicial principle that defendants are presumed to be innocent when they sit down in the court-room?

A. No.

Q. And do you find any fault with our American system that the prosecutor must establish the guilt of the defendants beyond a reasonable doubt?

Mr. Barshay: Your Honor, may I object to it at this time that it is not the subject of the challenge that I made?

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. (Pending question read.)

A. No.

Q. You agree, do you not, that he must establish such guilt by the evidence that he adduces in the court-room, that he presents before a Court and jury; is that clear?

A. I do.

Q. To the satisfaction of the minds of the jury beyond a [fol. 249] reasonable doubt that the men at the bar of justice are guilty; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you agree that no prosecutor can substitute a newspaper article for that type of testimony?

A. That is right.

Q. There was something that you read about a month ago in one issue of a newspaper, I think you said to Mr. Barshay, that caused you to form an impression concerning one defendant in the case; is that right?

The Court: He did not say concerning his guilt or innocence on this charge.

Mr. Turkus: That is right.

Q. That article, as I understand from what you said to Mr. Barshay, was not directed to the Rosen case.

A. That is right.

Q. Whatever you read in that single issue of the newspaper in regard to some matter extraneous or foreign to the Rosen case, did that give you an opinion as to the guilt of innocence of the defendants in the Rosen case?

A. No, sir, I did not mean it that way. I meant it as purely a general opinion as to his character, his former record.

Q. Do you find any fault with the principle that a defendant in a criminal case has no burden at all, the burden is entirely with the District Attorney?

A. No.

Q. Would the reading of that one issue of a newspaper prevent you from deciding the issue in the case, the guilt or innocence of the three at the bar, on a charge of murder [fol. 250] in the first degree? Would you be prevented from being fair and impartial in your judgment as a juror from the context of that one article?

A. No.

Q. Do you feel that in deliberating, in pondering over the guilt or innocence of the defendants on trial in the Rosen case, that you could banish any impression that you received from the one reading of that newspaper?

A. I think I could.

Q. You say you think you could. No one is the better judge of that than you are, Mr. Hamilton. Can you conscientiously say that you can lay aside the impression that you gathered from the reading of that one article, and decide this case on the evidence you hear in the court-room?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Hamilton?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You told Mr. Turkus that you are in sympathy with law enforcement.

A. That is right.

Q. That has a wide meaning. You know that. It means that a defendant is entitled to be tried by a jury of his peers, and that jury must be composed of men who are absolutely free of sympathy for him or free of prejudice against him. Do you agree with that?

A. I do.

Q. That means that you must not only have no opinion with respect to his guilt in this case, but you must be absolutely unprejudiced against him in any respect whatever, isn't that so?

[fol. 251] The Court: Mr. Barshay, is that what it means? Doesn't it mean political peers, people with equal civil rights?

Mr. Barshay: Judge, I don't think that it means that.

The Court: I think that is the meaning of the English common law, because otherwise a commoner might be tried by members of the peerage, and they might take a view of his social status which might work against him; consequently the commoners insisted on a jury of the defendant's peers, people with equal civil rights.

Mr. Barshay: That was the origin.

The Court: Not moral rights. It does not go to the question of prejudice at all.

Mr. Barshay: Your Honor, that was the origin of the reason for the statement that every person is entitled to a trial by his peers.

The Court: It would mean that a serf would be entitled to be tried by a jury of serfs. I am talking about the British common law. It would mean that a member of the nobility would be entitled to be tried in the House of Lords.

Mr. Barshay: That is what it meant then.

The Court: That is what it means today.

Mr. Barshay: The application of the rule, then, your Honor means that this man here or any of the defendants is entitled to a trial by a jury of their peers.

The Court: People with the same civil rights.

[fol. 252] Mr. Barshay: I do not know of any distinction, sir, in any rights that people have in this community.

The Court: The discussion will not be continued.

Mr. Barshay: May I press my question?

The Court: You may ask the question, but it seems to me to be academic. If there is any objection to it——

Mr. Barshay: There is no objection to it.

The Court: It seems in the nature of an examination on a scholastic or an academic question.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Be that as it may, Mr. Hamilton, do you agree with the law that every defendant is entitled to a trial by men who compose a jury free of any prejudice at all against the defendant?

A. That is right.

Q. Whether it is with respect to this case, or his race or his color, or his social standing; isn't that so?

A. That is right.

Q. You do not waver on that point, do you?

A. No.

Q. But you told us a little while ago that the article you read created a prejudice against one of the defendants because of his character.

A. Merely a reflection on his character, and not a prejudice against the man as far as he stands in court is concerned.

Q. So that it caused some prejudice against that defendant, whoever he may be; is that so?

A. In that one respect, yes.

[fol. 253] Q. That is in violation of the simple rule that you must be a man free of any prejudice against the defendant; isn't that so?

A. That is right.

Q. I did not hear your answer.

A. That is right.

Q. If you took an oath to be a fair and impartial juror, ready to render a verdict without sympathy or prejudice, and you felt the way you feel now, you would be violating that oath, would you not?

A. I don't think so.

Q. You don't think so?

A. No, sir.

Q. Can you explain how you can subdivide the prejudice?

The Court: Is not that too fine?

Mr. Barshay: I withdraw the question.

The Court: Mr. Barshay, I hope you do not think I am intruding in your examination. Supposing we take a hypothetical case. Many of the defendants who are brought into this court are unkempt and they don't present a very nice appearance. It is elementary that we form quick impressions concerning character, concerning people whom we meet, by looking at them. The moment that a member of the jury looks at many a man who is brought in here for trial, there is an impression adverse to the defendant. But nevertheless, he must be tried, and the question is, Is the juryman willing and able and does he promise to lay aside any impression of that kind and decide the case strictly upon the evidence. That seems to me to be the question.

[fol. 254] Q. Mr. Hamilton, would it take any evidence on the part of that particular defendant to remove that prejudice that you have against the character of that defendant?

A. No.

Q. It would not?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you want him to present some evidence of good character in order to dissipate the impression you now have?

A. No, sir.

Q. Your answer is no?

A. That is right.

Q. If it came to a point where his credibility was involved, would the fact that that article caused some prejudice in your mind with reference to his character cause you to discredit that man on a given point of testimony?

A. The credibility?

Q. If that man whom you have in mind should take the stand and testify with respect to a specific issue in this case, and you are the judge of the credibility of that man, would the fact that you read that article to that man's prejudice, cause you to disbelieve him because you had made up your mind as to the bad character of that man?

A. No.

Q. You would not?

A. No, sir.

Q. You know, sir, that character is not an issue in this case at all unless the defendant puts it in issue?

A. That is right.

Q. Nor that reputation has nothing to do with this case unless the man puts it in issue?

A. That is right.

Q. Will you follow that law? No doubt about it?

A. No doubt.

[fol. 255] Q. You cannot even consider a person's character in deciding the guilt or innocence of that person unless that person puts his character in issue. Do you know that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, having formed an impression by reading that article as to the man's bad character, and having accepted, as you said, the truth of that article, wouldn't it be difficult for you to dissipate the impression you formed?

A. I would not say difficult, no.

Q. What would you say?

A. It would mean merely a matter of examination and throwing my prejudice to one side.

Q. It would be a matter of examination by whom?

A. By me.

The Court: He said, "and throwing my prejudice to one side."

The Talesman: That is determining how much my position is influenced by that and discount it.

Q. Mr. Hamilton, will it require that that person take the stand so that you can examine him, not orally, but in your mind?

A. No.

Q. Could you dissipate it without that person taking the stand?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you tell us what you shall use as a basis for your examination?

A. I was under the impression that you said his credibility would be in doubt if he took the stand.

Q. Assuming he does not take the stand?

[fol. 256] A. Then it does not matter.

Q. What?

A. Then the prejudice does not matter.

Q. Then the prejudice does not matter?

A. That is right.

Q. If he takes the stand, you say the prejudice will matter?

A. It could matter, but I could discount it. It would matter slightly, but I could discount it.

Q. So that if he took the stand, it would matter slightly, but you could discount it. It will require an effort on your part to discount it,—correct?

A. Some, yes.

Q. And it will require, naturally, that the defendant take the stand?

A. If the defendant took the stand, then I would have to take the prejudice to one side in order to determine the credibility.

By the Court:

Q. Would you be able to do that?

A. I believe so.

Q. Can you give us your promise that you would?

A. Yes, sir; I would make every effort.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Supposing, Mr. Hamilton, the defendant does not take the stand?

A. Then the character does not enter into it.

Q. And will you be left with the impression you gained when you read the article?

A. No.

Q. So that up to this moment you do not know whether that impression has been dissipated or not, do you? You do not know?

A. I would say that the impression was not dissipated [fol. 257] as to his character, no.

Q. Just now, as you sit here, you are prejudiced against the character of that particular person; am I right?

A. That is right.

Q. And that prejudice has remained with you since you were here last and read that article?

A. That is right.

Q. That is almost over a month?

A. About that.

Q. Have you read any further articles with respect to that particular defendant?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with respect to this case?

A. I saw a headline that the case was put off, that is all.

Q. Did the headline contain the name of any particular defendant—yes or no?

A. Yes.

Q. And the headline was prejudicial to that particular defendant?

A. No, sir. It was merely that the case had been postponed.

Q. Do you bear the same feeling towards people who will take the stand and testify out of their own mouth that they are accomplices?

A. The feeling as to their character, their credibility?

Q. Yes, their character or credibility.

A. I would feel that under certain circumstances that the witnesses' testimony would have to be substantiated.

Q. Substantiated?

A. Under certain circumstances.

Q. Assuming, sir, that a man takes the stand and he tells [fol. 258] you all his life he had been a thief, a burglar, an extortioner, a perjurer, and a murderer.

A. A convicted man?

Q. Convicted or otherwise, but out of his own mouth he says that is how he has lived up to the time he takes the stand; he stole, he burglarized, he committed perjury in courts or in other places, would you accept or reject his testimony?

The Court: You have not told the juryman what the law is as to corroboration.

Mr. Barshay: I am not getting to that point yet, Judge. I will reframe my question.

Q. Assuming a witness for the prosecution takes the stand and out of his own mouth he says that he has lived by stealing, by burglarizing, by being a common thief would you accept his testimony with caution, whether he is an accomplice or he is not an accomplice?

A. I would accept it provisionally.

Q. Provisonally?

A. Yes.

Q. Provisionally to what?

A. To being supported with other evidence.

Q. And if the other evidence shall be furnished by a person who is not an accomplice but who, out of his own mouth, will testify here in court that he has committed six murders, he has already participated in the commission of six, would you then evaluate that testimony with a great deal of caution?

A. I would have to.

Q. You would have to?

A. I am afraid so.

[fol. 259] Q. You promise you would?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you in any wise prejudiced against that type of testimony, whether it is substantiated or not?

A. That type of testimony would have to be substantiated for me.

Q. Without any doubt?

A. Without any doubt.

Q. You would not accept it, would you, without close examination?

A. I would not accept it, but I would not throw it away, either, until it has been either substantiated or not substantiated.

Q. You would not require the defendant to disprove anything that a person of that character alleges on the witness stand, would you?

A. No.

Q. You would have to find the proof in The People's case, wouldn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You would have to find the substantiation in The People's case, wouldn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. No doubt about it?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you read anything at all about any of The People's witnesses in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. At no time?

A. No time.

Q. Did you read anything about Abraham Reles?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear the name?

A. I have heard the name in some connection, but I don't know. I don't follow——

Q. Did you ever hear the alias "Kid Twist"? Did you ever hear about Sholem Bernstein?

A. No.

[fol. 260] Q. Did you ever hear about Allie Tannenbaum?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear about Seymour Magoon?

A. Who?

Q. Seymour Magoon.

A. No.

Q. Not a word?
A. Not a word.
Q. Never heard of them?
A. No.
Q. If Mr. Reles takes the stand and he testifies out of his own mouth, under oath, called by the District Attorney, and he says that he has committed eleven murders, would you be prejudiced against his testimony?

The Court: You cannot state specific names of witnesses and ask the talesman how he would resolve the testimony of that witness as to truth or falsity.

Mr. Turkus: That has already been answered in the prior question.

The Court: You have already asked that without mentioning the name.

Mr. Barshay: I take exception.

Q. Did you read about Dukie Maffatore?
A. No.
Q. Or Abie Levine?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you read about Julie Catalano?
A. No. If these are criminal names, I don't read any of these cases at all.
Q. So that the only thing you read with respect to any of the defendants is the article in The Mirror?
A. That is right.
Q. You accepted the truth of it?
A. Yes, as to——
Q. What it said?
A. As to the facts contained.

[fol. 261] Q. So that a mere reading, without any substantiation on anybody's part, caused an impression in your mind to accept the truth of that article; is that correct?
A. That is right.
Q. But assuming the facts as I gave them to you, that these men would testify and they would admit the commission of those respective crimes, assuming that were to be the fact, if you were chosen as a juror and you heard that from the witness stand would you be prejudiced against their testimony?

The Court: Counselor, the Court will have to make a charge to that effect.

Mr. Barshay: If the Court so charges.

The Court: You mean the Court would have to make the charge. In such contingency that he may so consider as having a bearing on credibility.

Mr. Barshay: But without the Court's charge or anybody's charge, your Honor, this man has already formed an opinion with respect——

The Court: I am just cautioning you as to the law.

Mr. Barshay: I amended my question as your Honor suggested. If the Court shall so charge you.

By the Court:

Q. If the Court charges you, in the event these men take the stand and admit matters that you read about in The Mirror, that you may consider that in determining whether they are truthful witnesses, will you follow the charge of the Court?

[fol. 262] A. Yes.

Mr. Barshay: I except to that question, sir, as not the correct statement of the law.

The Court: You asked it.

Mr. Barshay: Not with respect to the person mentioned in The Mirror article.

The Court: I beg pardon. I misunderstood you.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Would you accept the testimony of the accomplices more readily against any of the defendants because of what you read concerning any particular defendant in the article you mentioned?

A. No.

Q. Would you use it at all in weighing the credibility?

A. No.

Q. Do you know that no defendant need take the stand to disprove a charge against him?

A. That is right.

Q. You know that every defendant in this case is presumed as innocent of the charge against him as you are?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know that?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know that the District Attorney is required throughout the entire case to prove the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. That is right.

Q. And you know that the defendant can remain silent in his seat and never answer the charge against him, as the result of which you have no right to draw any unfavorable [fol. 263] inference against him?

A. Yes.

Q. You know that?

A. Yes.

Q. If that should be the case here, would you then draw upon the impression that remains with you at this moment as the result of what you read in The Mirror and use it against that particular defendant?

A. No.

Q. You would not? What have you done with that impression up to this second?

A. The impression seems to me to have nothing to do until——

Q. Until when?

A. Until the character of the particular defendant is called upon. If it is not called upon, it has no bearing.

Q. So you are holding that impression in reserve, are you not?

A. No, I am not.

Q. You say "until." Until what?

A. It is just there, and I will remember that I had the impression and I will discount it accordingly.

Q. You will discount it?

A. Accordingly.

Q. At some time in the future?

A. One cannot just erase an impression.

Q. That is what I am trying to get at. Even now, after all this questioning, you have not erased the impression which is prejudicial to the defendant you have in mind; am I right?

A. As to his character only.

Q. As to his character. That would preclude you from [fol. 264] giving a fair and impartial verdict in this case?

A. I don't think so.

Q. It would not? What are you going to do with that impression?

A. I said if the character of that person is called into account; I would discount it in considering his credibility.

By the Court:

Q. By "discount," you mean put aside?

A. That is right. I do not know any other way of expressing it, your Honor.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. So that if the trial lasts about four or five or six weeks, you will still reserve that impression until such time; is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. And you will be sitting in that box, in that jury box, and all the time you will hear this testimony and somewheres in the back of your head will be that impression waiting for you to either use it or not use it; is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. You say that under oath?

A. Yes.

Mr. Barshay: I challenge the juror for cause.

Mr. Cuff: We join in.

Mr. Turkus: I went over a lengthy——

The Court: Any other counsel for defense?

Mr. Barshay: No questions.

The Court: Any questions by other counsel?

Mr. Rosenthal: Not as to this challenge.

The Court: There is no such thing as the perfect juror. There is no such thing as a jury of isolationists [fol. 265] who never have any contact with the world and never hear anything or see anything that gives them recollection. The question is whether a juror can lay aside his impression, and I think from the entire examination that is sufficiently clear. The challenge is overruled.

Mr. Barshay: We all take an exception, your Honor.

The Court: Yes. I do not know if you recollect, Mr. Barshay, but I know that Judge Talley will, in the Becker case it was notorious that all of the members of the jury who were sworn admitted having formed impressions concerning publicity in regard to Charles Becker's activities as head of the vice squad, but that had no bearing upon the issues. It did not constitute error. That is only one case, but I call attention to it so you will understand the way that I have been trying to work out a conclusion as to my duties.

Mr. Barshay: We do not coincide.

Mr. Cuff: Judge, isn't that the fact that is what convicted him? It was just that impression that convicted Becker.

The Court: I am talking about the legal aspects. I have my own notion of that case.

Is the juror satisfactory?

Mr. Climenko: No, your Honor. May we be indulged for a moment?

The Court: What about the prosecution?

[fol. 266] Mr. Turkus: The defense have not finished their questioning.

The Court: I understood they had.

Mr. Rosenthal: That was only on the challenge.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Mr. Hamilton——

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —you said that you had read an article in the paper which created an unfavorable impression on your mind; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. You told us also that you could, in the ordinary case, sit as an impartial juryman and take the law from the Court and determine the facts as they apply to the law as given; isn't that right?

A. That is right.

Q. You have also told us that because of the article that you read you formed an impression at this time which is detrimental to one of the men on trial. That is correct?

A. Just as to his character.

Q. Yes, as to his character?

A. That is right.

Q. Of course, under our rules of law, you understand that a defendant may or may not take the stand, as he sees fit?

A. That is right.

Q. If he does take the stand he raises all issues concerning his character, you understand that?

A. That is right.

Q. From the answers you have given. But he may also——

Mr. Turkus: That is not the law.

Mr. Rosenthal: The character is not in issue if he does [fol. 267] not take the stand is not the law?

Mr. Turkus: Character evidence is only put in issue in one way. What is the use of mentioning it?

Mr. Rosenthal: I said his character is not put in issue if he does not take the stand.

Mr. Turkus: Judge, I must appeal to the Court to be the exclusive judge of the law. I do not want any jurors to have a misguided——

The Court: Cannot character be put in issue by character witnesses without the defendant taking the stand?

Mr. Rosenthal: Through the defense.

The Court: If the defendant takes the stand, it is credibility, not character. His credibility becomes a question. That does not rate character. The mere putting the defendant on the stand, that does not open the door for the prosecution to prove bad character.

Mr. Rosenthal: It opens the door. Well, we won't discuss the question of what it opens the door to or not at this time.

The Court: It raises only the question of credibility, not of character.

Mr. Rosenthal: I used the word character because Mr. Barshay and Mr. Turkus both used it. Credibility would be the better word.

Q. The issue of a man's credibility is raised when he [fol. 268] takes the stand. Is that clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. But you understand also, the Court will undoubtedly charge you, that if he does not take the stand, that that fact cannot be used against him. Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. At the present time you have an adverse feeling towards the character of one of the individuals on trial: is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Assuming, Mr. Hamilton, that you had read nothing and knew nothing about any individual that is on trial here—— Let me withdraw it and put it this way: In the ordinary case, if you knew nothing about the individuals or the case, there would not be any question but what you could sit as a fair and impartial juryman without any prejudice against the individual on trial; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. But in this particular case you have a prejudice created by what you read and what you believed when you read it as to the character of one of the men; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Isn't it true, Mr. Hamilton, because of that prejudice that exists in your mind in this particular case that would not exist in your mind had you read nothing, that it would either require a greater amount of evidence on the part of that defendant or a lesser amount of evidence on the part of The People to produce in order for you to be convinced as to the guilt or innocence of that particular defendant? Isn't that true?

A. No.

[fol. 269] Q. You say that irrespective of the prejudice that you have against the one man, that you would not require any greater amount of evidence?

A. That is right.

Q. Or any lesser amount from The People, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. But you said to Mr. Barshay that you reserved that prejudice or impression until the question of his character came into issue; didn't you say that?

A. That is right.

Q. Reserving that prejudice until his character came into issue, did you mean by that that if some people came on the stand, witnesses for The People, and made detrimental statements to this man as to his character, that that would lend greater weight because of the fact that you read the Mirror article?

A. As to his character?

Q. Yes?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, because of what you read in The Mirror as to his character, if anybody got on the stand as The People's witness and accused him or said things detrimental to his character, it would have a greater weight because of what you have read? Is that what you just said?

A. Purely in that one line.

Mr. Rosenthal: I challenge him.

Mr. Climenko: Join in the challenge.

The Court: Try the challenge.

(The talesman was again sworn.)

[fol. 270] By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Mr. Hamilton, before you were sworn I ask you questions directed to whether or not, having read this Mirror article and certain things that were in it, your opinion would be as you phrased it before being sworn. Do you recall the question and the answer?

A. Yes.

Q. Now that you are under oath you reiterate the same answer with the same force and effect as if I asked you the question and you gave the answer; is that right?

A. I would.

Mr. Rosenthal: That is all.

The Court: Any other counsel for defense?

Mr. Barshay: We all join in.

The Court: Anybody else wish to question the witness?

(No response.)

By the Court:

Q. You understand, Mr. Witness, that whether a man has a good character or a bad character, he is entitled to a fair trial on a specific allegation?

A. Yes.

Q. No matter how good he may be or how bad he may be, he is entitled to an absolutely fair trial when he is charged with doing a specific thing?

A. That is right.

Q. Are you willing to give it here?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you understand that a man's character, when tried on a specific allegation or charge, does not come in issue unless he puts good reputation witnesses on the stand?

A. I see.

[fol. 271] Q. Who testify that he has good character, then and then only does his character come in issue.

A. Yes.

Q. Are you willing, in that event, in this case, if sworn as a juror, to completely set aside any impression you may have from what you have read?

A. On character alone.

Q. On character alone?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you sure that you can?

Mr. Rosenthal: May I object to the Court's question.
The Court: Overruled.
Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

Q. Are you sure that you can?
A. Yes, sir, I am sure.

Mr. Barshay: We have no other questions.
Mr. Turkus: Neither have I.
The Court: The challenge is overruled.
Mr. Barshay: We all take an exception, your Honor.
Mr. Turkus: Satisfactory.
Mr. Talley: Challenged peremptorily by the defense, in which all counsel join.

(John J. Maloney, of 3214 Clarendon Road, was then [fol. 272] examined as to his qualifications.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Maloney, the trestle board lists your address as Clarendon Road, is that correct?
A. That is correct.
Q. That is Flatbush, isn't it?
A. That is right.
Q. Have you lived in Flatbush a number of years?
A. Oh, I would say about twelve.

By the Court:

Q. You are East 32nd Street and Clarendon Road?
A. On the corner of New York Avenue.
Q. One block from the waterworks?
A. That is correct.
Q. Is Marshall Covert a friend of yours?
A. No, I don't believe I know him.
Q. He lives on your block. He is a newspaper man.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I was at the point, Mr. Maloney, of interrogating as to whether you have any business or other contacts in the Brownsville or East New York area of Brooklyn.

A. I have not.

Q. Did you at any time in your experience have any such contacts?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does the same apply to the garment district in Manhattan? Do you have any connections there of any kind, nature, or description?

A. No, I have not.

Q. Have you had any in the past?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does that apply to the clothing district of Manhattan? [fol. 273] A. That is right.

Q. And to the Brooklyn Waterfront as well?

A. That is right.

Q. So that there is nothing by way of social or business contact or connection that brought you in contact with any individuals or firms in any of those areas or industries that I enumerated?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does that hold true with respect to the clothing truckers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. According to the trestle board your profession or occupation is listed as that of a cashier.

A. That is right.

Q. I take it you handle money on the inside, somewhere in an office?

A. Money and securities.

Q. Through any of your business contacts have you come in connection with or in any wise associated with any official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. I have not.

Q. No social contacts with any of those?

A. None whatever.

Q. The names of Potofsky, Weinstein, and Katz, officials of that union, familiar to you in any way?

A. I never heard of them.

Q. I assume, then, that you have no contact with any officials in Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. No.

Q. Or with Local 138 of the Flour Truckmens Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has the name Bruno Belia any significance to you?
A. None whatsoever.
[fol. 274] Q. That of Salvatore Marazzano?
A. No.
Q. Or Philip Orlofsky, one-time manager of the Cutters Local No. 4, associated with the Amalgamated?
A. No, sir.
Q. The name of Abraham Beckerman?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or William Alberts or Willie Alberts, one-time bondsman?
A. No.
Q. The name of Emanuel Buchalter have any significance?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or Philip or Phillie Buch*la*ter or Kowas? The name of Weiss, associated with some automobile rentals?
A. No, sir.
Q. The name of Bellanca or Tosca at all familiar?
A. No.
Q. You have no contacts by way of business or any wise with any of the unions or the locals that I have read off to you?
A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. What is your concern?
A. Thompson & McKinnon.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror?
A. Never.
Q. You have never had the benefit of listening to a judge's instruction on the law, either in a civil or criminal case?
A. No, sir.
Q. If selected as a juror in this case, will you take the law that applies to the case exclusively from the Judge?
A. I would.
Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?
A. Yes, I am.
[fol. 275] Q. Do you know the District Attorney of the county, Judge O'Dwyer, or any member of his staff?
A. No, sir.

Q. Specifically, do you know Assistant District Attorneys Turkus, Klein or Joseph or any of them?

A. No, I do not.

Q. The defendants on trial are represented here by nine lawyers, three apiece. Do you know Mr. Barshay, Mr. Wegman, or Mr. Climenko?

A. I met Mr. Barshay about fifteen or sixteen years ago, but I never saw him again until I recently came into court.

Q. Was that meeting him at a social function?

A. I was introduced to him. It was with regard to a case.

Q. Was that in the District Attorney's office?

A. No.

Q. Did you meet him at his office?

A. No, I met him at a political club.

By the Court:

Q. In Williamsburgh?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was the Assemblyman there then?

A. I did not live there at that time. My mother lived down there shortly after I was married.

Q. Where did your mother live?

A. South Third Street.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Was it in connection with some case that Mr. Barshay was handling as counsel?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. Was it for some member of the family?

A. He was not acting as counsel for the member of my family.

[fol. 276] Q. Was it against some member of your family?

A. That is right.

Q. Would there be anything about that relationship that would prejudice you against his cause or against his client?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. And there would be nothing that would prejudice The People of the State of New York or its cause?

A. I beg pardon?

Q. I say, nothing in regard to that relationship which would prejudice The People of the State of New York or the prosecutor?

A. No.

Q. In other words, that would not have any effect one way or the other in your deliberations upon the guilt or innocence of the defendants at the bar of justice?

A. No, sir, it would not.

Q. You know none of the lawyers that represent the defendant Buchalter; you know neither Wegman, Climenko, nor Barshay except as you outlined to us? Do you know former Judge Tailey, or former Assistant District Attorney Cuff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or former United States Assistant District Attorney Murray Kriendler representing the defendant Weiss?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody in their respective offices or associated with them?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to defendant Capone, do you know Mr. Sidney Rosenthal or Mr. Fischbein or Mr. Rosenberg?

A. No, sir.

Q. Anyone in the office of any of those gentlemen?

[fol. 277] A. I do not.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar who specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of William W. Kleinman familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. Or that of David Price?

A. No.

Q. Or Saul Price, the former Assistant District Attorney in Manhattan?

A. No.

Q. When the Judge charges you on the law, will you give the defendant the benefit of the presumption of innocence in consonance with the Court's direction?

A. I would.

Q. And will you enforce the doctrine of reasonable doubt in consonance with the Judge's instruction on the law?

A. Yes.

Q. In regard to reasonable doubt. Have you any bias or prejudice against the prosecutor of this county, Judge O'Dwyer, or against the prosecution for employing the use of accomplice testimony, that is, employing the testimony of one who participated in the commission of the crime with the defendants, against them on trial?

A. No.

Q. As to the credibility to be given to such type of witness, will you take the instructions from the Court as to the test to be applied? You won't close your ears to accomplice testimony, will you?

A. No.

Q. And there is no bias or prejudice against the prosecutor or against the prosecution which employs that type of testimony?

[fol. 278] A. No.

Q. Mr. Maloney, did you know the former District Attorney of the county personally?

A. I did not.

Q. Or any member of his staff?

A. No.

Q. Outside of Mr. Barshay?

A. Outside of Mr. Barshay.

Q. In the event that any of the defendants invoke a defense, for example, a defense of alibi, will you take the law exclusively from Judge Taylor as to the law of alibi?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If selected as a juror in the case, will you listen to reasonable argument and discussion in the jury-room from your fellow jurors?

A. I would.

Q. If selected as a juror, will you conscientiously endeavor to arrive at a just, true verdict in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge, namely, a charge of murder in the first degree, which would prevent you from rendering a just verdict?

A. No.

Q. Have you any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you permit the question of punishment to enter into your deliberations?

A. No.

Q. If, after you have heard all the evidence in the case and you have heard the various lawyers for the defendants sum up to the jury and draw the inferences that they draw from the testimony and you hear the prosecutor draw his inferences and then the learned Court charges you on [fol. 279] the law and you have discussed the case with your fellow jurors sensibly and reasonably in the jury room, and you come to the conclusion beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three guilty men at the bar of justice, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

A. No.

Q. Would you have the slightest hesitation or fear in so saying in your verdict?

A. No.

Q. Is there any reason concerning which I have made no inquiry which would prevent you from rendering a verdict in consonance with justice?

A. No.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. Mr. Maloney, you would not have any fear of expressing a verdict of "Not guilty" if you entertained a doubt of the guilt of any of the defendants, would you?

A. I would not.

Q. Have you read about this case?

A. Yes, a little.

Q. In what papers, if I may ask?

A. Well, the only papers I read are the World-Telegram and the morning Times.

Q. Because of your reading articles in those papers, have you formed an opinion as to the innocence or guilt of any of the defendants in this case?

A. Well, I don't know that I would call it an opinion. I have some sort of an impression.

Q. I am afraid that whatever distinction there may be between the word "impression" and "opinion" is one that you will have to define for me. Will you tell me how you distinguish between those two words?

A. Well, I would say that the thought in my mind is not [fol. 280] a very definite one, although I have some ideas, or I should say thoughts, in that regard.

Q. You presently have some ideas, thoughts, or impressions which are the result of your reading, and those ideas, impressions, and thoughts are adverse to one or more or the other of the defendants; is that correct?

A. Yes, I would say so.

Q. And as you sit here now as we discuss this matter, those ideas or impressions or thoughts exist in your mind?

A. Yes.

Q. And they relate to the innocence or guilt of one or the other or more than one of the defendants; is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. Thinking about it as objectively as you can think about the operations of your own mind, do you feel that it would require affirmative evidence to be produced by the defendants to dispel those notions?

A. Well, it would require pretty conclusive evidence, I would say.

Q. You mean that that evidence, in order to correct and balance your mind on the question of innocence or guilt, would be evidence that you would require to be produced by or on behalf of the defendants or one of them?

A. Yes, I would say so.

Q. Is that correct?

A. I would say so.

Mr. Climenko: If your Honor pleases, I challenge this gentleman for cause.

The Court: Try the challenge.

JOHN J. MALONEY, of 3214 Clarendon Road, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

[fol. 281] By Mr. Climenko:

Q. Mr. Maloney, I have just asked you about the operation of your mind in consequence of literature, newspaper literature, that you read about one or more of these defendants. Now that you have been sworn, were I to repeat those questions would your answers be the same?

A. Yes, they would.

Mr. Climenko: I press the challenge, if your Honor pleases.

Mr. Talley: In behalf of all defendants.

Mr. Cuff: I join in it.

Mr. Turkus: May I proceed?

The Court: Yes.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Maloney, I think that when we discussed the matter in advance of the defense lawyers, you said you had never served as a juror before.

A. That is correct.

Q. So that if this were your case and you were in the jury box and you would listen to a charge on the law from the Judge for the first time? Do you find any fault with our American principle that the prosecutor must find a defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt? Do you find any fault with the principle that defendants are presumed to be innocent as they are seated in the court-room?

A. No, I would not say I do.

Q. Would you find any fault with the principle of law if the Judge were to tell you that as a member of the jury, [fol. 282] that a defendant has no burden, that he need produce no evidence at all? Would you find any fault with that instruction of law?

A. Will you repeat that?

Q. Would you find any fault with the instruction of law that the Judge will give you, that the defendant has no burden in a criminal case, and would you follow that instruction of law?

A. I believe I would.

Q. And if the Judge should instruct you on the law that a defendant may or may not take the stand, and if he does not, no unfavorable inference may be drawn against him, would you find any fault with the Judge for telling you that that was the law?

A. No.

Q. Do you find any fault with that instruction of law?

A. No.

Q. Would you follow it if the Judge told you that was the law?

A. Yes, I would.

Q. By the same token, do you understand that the prosecutor of this county comes before a jury and asks for a verdict of guilty upon evidence that he produces in the court-room? Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. You would not expect that part of the proof to come from a newspaper, would you?

A. No.

Q. You would expect the prosecutor to bring the proof into the court-room and satisfy your mind and the rest of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three [fol. 283] guilty men at the bar of justice before you vote "Guilty"; isn't that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you would find no fault with that proposition of law or that instruction of law; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Can't you now take your place in the jury box and, devoid of any newspapers that you may have read, because that is not under oath, it does not supply proof, can't you sit down and listen to this case, use common sense and judgment, and decide this case on the evidence that you hear in the court-room?

Mr. Climenko: I object to the form of the question, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

Mr. Talley: Exception to the defendant Weiss.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Can't you use common sense and judgment?

By the Court:

Q. Decide the case on the evidence?

A. Well, yes, I think I could.

Q. You applied for excuse, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. I said no, and you are hoping to get off?

A. I won't be sorry if I do.

Q. The only papers you read are the Times and the Telegram?

A. Yes.

Q. And neither one of them has expressed an opinion. [fol. 284] Do you know where this is alleged to have occurred?

A. I believe in the Brownsville section.

Mr. Cuff: We are interested in the answers.

Q. Did you read and did you remember the address where the alleged crime is alleged to have been committed?

A. The street, I believe, was Sutter Avenue.

Q. You heard that mentioned here, didn't you?

A. I heard it mentioned here. I did remember it from the newspaper as well.

Q. Did you read anywhere in either the World-Telegram or in the New York Times that any of these defendants are, in the opinion of that newspaper, guilty?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did the World-Telegram or did the New York Times, according to your recollection, state any evidence against these defendants of this particular crime which would entitle you to form a belief as to whether they are guilty or not?

A. No.

Mr. Barshay: I object to the form of your Honor's question.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

The Court: He has already answered. He said "No."

Q. Isn't it a fact you are trying to get off from the jury and so you are professing a prejudice for that purpose?

A. No, your Honor.

Mr. Climenko: I object to your Honor's question.

The Court: Overruled.

[fol. 285] Mr. Climenko: Exception.

Q. Is it a fact, when you read the Telegram and the Times that you prefer those papers because your Company carries ads in those papers?

A. No, we don't advertise.

Q. Is it a fact the first page you turn to is the stock report?

A. No, I don't believe so.

Q. Baseball?

A. Generally baseball.

Q. And then stock reports?

A. That is correct.

Q. And if you see anything on the subject of crime, it is a matter of minor interest?

Mr. Barshay: I object to the form of your Honor's question.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Mr. Talley: Exception to us.

A. As a general rule I read the front page, then after that the sporting page, and then the financial question.

Q. Do you recall at any time when either the Times or Telegram carried this case on the first page?

A. I don't recall.

The Court: Go ahead with your questioning.

(To the talesman): I think you are trying to get off.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Maloney, the only way that we can decide qualification to sit on the jury and to decide a case with justice [fol. 286] is to ask questions to elicit the state of mind of the prospective juror. I want to ask you very frankly, do you think you can sit in this jury and decide the guilt or innocence of the defendants at the bar of justice on the evidence that you hear in the court-room?

A. Yes, I think I could.

Q. And if selected as a juror, will you lay aside any impression you may have gathered from reading of press-reports, and decide that issue, of importance to The People of the State and, of course, to the defendants, upon the evidence that you hear in the court-room?

A. I would try my best to.

Q. Is there anything that would impair or impede your ability to decide a case on evidence?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Could you, in consonance with your oath of office which you take as a juror, render a just verdict on the evidence in the case?

A. Yes, I think I could.

Mr. Barshay: May the record show that the juror hesitated at least a half a minute before he answered that question?

The Court: I did not time him.

Mr. Barshay: That is my best impression.

Q. There seems to be some question in the mind of the Court and the defense lawyer as to the amount of time that elapsed before my question was finished and you gave your answer. Is there some doubt in your mind as to your ability to sit here as a juror, obey your oath of office, and [fol. 287] render a just verdict in consonance with the evidence?

A. As I said before, I had formed some impression. It would require a little effort for me to set that aside.

The Court: And all the time you were sitting as foreman you would be thinking of Thomson & McKinnon is that [fol. 288] correct?

Mr. Barshay: I sustain it. I thought I was doing you a favor. Excused.

Mr. Talley: I was going to take an exception to your Honor's examination and observations, but in view of your ruling he is excused, I must withhold my exception.

The Court: I do not think he would make a good juryman. I am going to sustain the challenge. I do not think his mind would be on the job.

Mr. Talley: I take exception, with great respect, to your Honor's observation as to this juror on the ground——

The Court: I withdraw it. I say he would make a good juryman; his mind would be on the case; but I will sustain the challenge, and you can guess as to the reason.

Mr. Talley: I object to your Honor's observations, because they may have a prejudicial effect on the talesmen who have not yet been called and have not been examined and who, in view of your Honor's remarks as to this talesman, may hesitate to express fully what is in their minds, and I respectfully except to your Honor's examination and your Honor's observation in regard to John J. Maloney, the last talesman called and examined.

Mr. Barshay: That is an exception as to all defendants, your Honor.

[fol. 289] The Court: Do you want to continue?

Mr. Cuff: No use starting with another man now. We have only five minutes.

The Court: We will continue at ten o'clock tomorrow morning, and I trust there will be nothing to prevent the session of the court starting promptly.

The defendants are remanded, and the jurymen are cautioned not to read anything concerning the case and not to listen on the radio, not to talk to anybody about it.

(An adjournment was thereupon taken to September 19, 1941, at ten o'clock a. m.)

[fol. 290] Brooklyn, N. Y., September 19, 1941.

Trial Resumed

The Court: Proceed. Case on trial.

(Alfred M. Silverman, of 150 East 19th Street, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Silverman, do you live in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn?

A. That is right.

Q. And have you lived in Brooklyn for a number of years?

A. About six years.

Q. Your business is listed as Ins. I imagine that means insurance.

A. That is right.

Q. Are you in business for yourself, Mr. Silverman?

A. No, I am with the Aetna Casualty & Surety Company.

Q. In their office?

A. That is right.

Q. Does your work bring you outside?

A. It does.

Q. Do you handle all types of insurance?

A. Principally casualty insurance.

Q. Does business bring you into the garment district of Manhattan?

A. No.

Q. Clothing district?

A. No.

Q. Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No.

[fol. 291] Q. Brownsville-East New York section of Brooklyn?

A. Yes.

Q. Frequently?

A. I am there on an average of once or twice a week.

Q. On business?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you any social contacts there too?

A. No.

Q. Are you intimate or friendly with those clients that you have in that Brownsville-East New York area?

A. I only see them on business. May see one person now and never see them again.

Q. Is that in reference to some claim?

A. That is right.

Q. In which you represent the company?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you been going to the Brownsville-East New York section for the past four years?

A. Yes.

Q. While you were there did you hear anything of the Rosen case in 1936?

A. I recall reading about it when it happened, just at the time it happened.

Q. Was the case discussed in your presence?

A. No.

Q. Since you received notice to serve on the jury or prospective juryman in this case, did anybody discuss the case with you?

A. No.

Q. Have you heretofore had prior jury service?

A. Not in this state.

Q. Some state?

A. Pennsylvania.

Q. Was it in a criminal case?

A. I never got on.

Q. You got as far——

A. I was called but never served on a jury.

[fol. 292] Q. Have you had any service in a civil case?

A. No.

Q. If accepted as a juror in this case, will you take the law exclusively from the trial judge?

A. I will.

Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. I am.

Q. Did business ever bring you in any of those districts or in contact with any of the industries that I enumerated?

A. No.

Q. Do you have any business of any kind, directly or indirectly, with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Samuel Katz or Sam Katz familiar?
A. No.
Q. Or that of Murray Weinstein?
A. No.
Q. Is there any familiarity in the name of Bruno Belia, an organizer for the Amalgamated?
A. No.
Q. Or the name of Salvatore Marazzano?
A. No.
Q. Do you have any business with anybody in the clothing trucking industry?
A. No.
Q. Do you know any official of Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers and Helpers Union?
A. No.
Q. Is the name of Philip Orlofsky, a one-time manager of the Amalgamated, familiar?
A. No.
Q. Does business bring you into any contact, directly or indirectly, with the Flour Truckmens Union?
A. No.
Q. Is the name of Max Silverman familiar to you in any way?
[fol. 293] A. I have heard the name.
Q. Is that something that you have read?
A. I think so.
Q. Is the name of Wolfie Goldis familiar?
A. Yes.
Q. Is that by way of reading in the press?
A. That is right.
Q. Have you followed any of the articles in connection with Judge O'Dwyer's investigation with any degree of interest?
A. No.
Q. Is the name of Willie or William Alberts, a bondsman, familiar?
A. No.
Q. I take it you have no connection, directly or indirectly, with any flour truckmen?
A. None at all.
Q. Is the name of Emanuel Buchalter familiar?
A. No.
Q. Or that of Philip Buchalter or Phillie Kowas?
A. No.

Q. The names of Bellanca or Tosca familiar?
A. No.
Q. Do you know anybody in the knee-pants business?
A. No.
Q. Or in clothing industry at all?
A. No.
Q. Manufacture or distribution of clothes?
A. None at all.
Q. There are nine lawyers here representing these defendants at the bar: Mr. Barshay, a former Assistant District Attorney in this county, Mr. Abraham Wegman, and Mr. Jesse Climenko. They represent the defendant Buchalter. Do you know any of the three?
A. No, I don't.
Q. Or anyone associated in their law offices?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. The defendant Weiss is represented by former General Sessions Judge Talley, former Assistant District At- [fol. 294] torney Cuff, and former United States Assistant District Attorney Kriendler. Do you know any of those three?
A. I do not.
Q. Or any member of their office force or staff?
A. No.
Q. Mr. Capone, the third defendant, is represented by Mr. Sidney Rosenthal, Mr. Fischbein, and Mr. Rosenberg. Do you know any of those three?
A. I do not.
Q. Or any members of their staff?
A. No.
Q. If selected as a juryman in the case, I think you told me you would take the law exclusively from the Court in all respects, that is, from Judge Taylor presiding at the trial. Is that correct?
A. That is right.
Q. Will you give to the defendants the presumption of innocence and apply the doctrine of reasonable doubt as instructed by the Judge?
A. I will.
Q. Do you have any bias against the District Attorney of the County or any bias against a prosecution which takes people who are implicated in the crime and uses them in court as witnesses to testify against defendants in the case?
A. No.

Q. Will you listen to that type of testimony?
A. I will.
Q. Will you apply tests as given by the Judge, that should be applied to the credibility of that type of witness?
A. Yes.
Q. As to what corroboration or supporting testimony is required, will you take the law from the Judge in that respect.
A. Yes.
Q. You won't close your ears, will you, to any testimony [fol. 295] of a co-conspirator or an accomplice in the killing, will you?
A. No.
Q. Do you know any of the former Assistant District Attorneys who were attached to the office of Mr. Geoghan when he was District Attorney of the county?
A. I think I knew Mr. Madden before he was ever District Attorney, but during the time he was District Attorney I never met or talked to him.
Q. Did you know Mr. Geoghan personally?
A. No.
Q. At any time that you knew Mr. Madden did you discuss the Rosen case with him?
A. I have not seen him since that happened.
Q. Was your meeting with him through your connection in the insurance business?
A. That is right. He worked for the same firm.

By the Court:

Q. How long have you been in that business?
A. Twenty-six years.
Q. What is your firm?
A. Aetna Casualty & Surety Company.
Q. All that time?
A. Most of it.
Q. You live on East 19th Street between Albemarle and Beverly?
A. That is right.
Q. Is that nearer Beverly?
A. Yes.
Q. Is it opposite the church?
A. The church is on the corner; I am about almost half way up the block.

Q. There are apartment houses on that block?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 296] Q. You never lived on Tennis Court at the foot of East 19th?

A. No.

Q. Do you know Judge Healy?

A. No, I don't.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Silverman, do you know any member of the bar who tries criminal cases as a specialty?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of William W. Kleinman familiar?

A. I have heard the name.

By the Court:

Q. I will ask one more question just to clarify the previous question. I asked you that because I knew a man named Silverman had lived in the same house with Judge Healy on Tennis Court, at the foot of that street. That is a block and a half from where you live?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you know this Silverman?

A. I don't think so.

Q. He is rather stouter than you and he belongs to the Elks.

A. I don't know him.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you know of any reason concerning which as yet I have made no inquiry, which would affect your ability to serve as a juror in the case?

A. No.

Q. Do you sit in the jury box now with an open mind on the case?

A. I do.

Q. Have you read any of the articles concerning the investigation conducted by Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No.

[fol. 297] Q. You have read nothing in the press whatsoever?

A. I have read headlines. I have never gone deeply into it.

Q. You have read nothing in the Rosen case that persists in your mind?

A. Nothing. I recall of it at the time it happened, little sketches about it now and then, nothing particular.

Q. While you were in the Brownsville-East New York area on business, did anybody discuss the Rosen case with you?

A. Never heard it discussed at all.

Q. And it was never discussed in your presence?

A. No.

Q. In the event that any defense is raised in the case by one or more of the defendants, for example, a defense of alibi, will you take the law exclusively from the trial judge with regard to such a defense?

A. I will.

Q. You say you have no prejudice against the prosecutor or against the prosecution which employs the use of accomplice testimony?

A. No.

Q. As you sit in the jury box now, have you any prejudice against any of the defendants in the case?

A. None at all.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge, namely, a charge of murder in the first degree, which would impair or preclude you from serving as a juror.

A. I think not.

Q. Have you any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No.

Q. In your business experience has there been any discus- [fol. 298] sion about Judge O'Dwyer's investigation?

A. No.

Q. You have engaged in no lengthy discussions with anyone about it?

A. I never discussed it.

Q. Never discussed it at all? And you read very little?

A. That is right.

Q. And the reading has been limited to headlines?

A. Mostly. I have read some of the articles I have seen in the paper.

Q. If selected as a juror in the case, will you listen to fair argument from the other jurors?

A. I will.

Q. Discuss the case without rancor and bitterness in the jury room?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Use common sense and reason in applying yourself to the one issue in the case, the guilt or innocence of the defendants?

A. I will.

Q. If selected as a juror, will you endeavor to reach a just and true verdict in consonence with the evidence?

A. I will.

Q. Assuming that you have heard all the evidence in the case and you have listened to the defense lawyers draw their inferences from the testimony, and then the District Attorney draw his inferences, and you have had the benefit of the learned charge of the Court on the law, and you discuss the case with reason and common sense with the other jurors, and then you, Mr. Silverman, are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three guilty men [fol. 299] at the bar of justice, will you hesitate to say so with your verdict?

A. No.

Q. Would you have any fear or reluctance in so doing?

A. No.

Q. Is there anything about your business connections which would in any wise impair your service on the jury?

A. No.

Q. In the event that the trial is protracted, are business conditions such with you that you can devote your mind exclusively to the issue of the case?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. Mr. Silverman, I did not quite understand what you said, if you did any, your duties were with the insurance company.

A. I am a claim adjuster.

Q. Does that mean that in the course of your duties you yourself investigate crimes?

A. That is right.

Q. Consult with attorneys about them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have been doing that for some time?

A. Twenty-six years.

Q. Any particular type of crime that you specialize in the investigation of?

A. Liability claims.

Q. Does that mean negligence in the operation of motor vehicles?

A. No, that is in connection with accidents in buildings and on the streets, public accidents.

Q. The maintenance of real property?

A. That is right.

Q. And not with automobile liability?

A. None at all.

Q. You specialize only in this real estate liability business, then, is that right?

A. If that is what you call it. It is called public liability, [fol. 300] has to do with accidents in buildings, apartments, stores.

Q. I do not pretend to know the right name for it. I am just trying to get the subject that you do deal with. That is it—real estate?

A. That is right.

Q. In the course of your duties you consult with lawyers?

A. I do.

Q. In consequence of those discussions, you know many lawyers, don't you?

A. I know a lot of negligence lawyers.

Q. Those discussions have never brought you into communication with lawyers who have discussed this case with you?

A. Most of the lawyers I met do not know anything about criminal law.

Q. You have read about this case?

A. Off and on.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. In what newspapers?

A. I generally read the News in the morning and the Post in the evening.

Q. Have you read about any of the defendants in those newspapers?

A. I think I have.

Q. In consequence of your reading about them, have you formed any opinion about the defendants?

A. No.

Q. When I say "opinion," have you formed any opinion with respect to their alleged guilt or their innocence in this case?

A. No.

Q. None whatsoever?

A. No.

[fol. 301] Q. When is the last time that you read about any of these defendants?

A. I think about the time I was first called for jury duty.

Q. That is the first literature that you are conscious of right now relating to this case, that you read?

A. The first, did you say?

Q. The first newspaper articles that you read that you can remember about this case were at the time you were first called here?

A. I thought you said the last time.

Q. I beg your pardon. I am told that I did say last time. Is that the last time you read about it, was when you were first called here?

A. That is right.

Q. You have not read about it since?

A. No.

Q. And that was an article in the News or the Post?

A. I do not recall which paper—one or the other.

Q. You have also read from time to time about Mr. O'Dwyer, who is the District Attorney of Kings County; is that right?

A. Nothing particular. I may have seen his name in the paper. I do not recall what it had reference to.

Q. The fact that Mr. O'Dwyer—Mr. Turkus calls him Judge O'Dwyer when he refers to him—is the District Attorney of Kings County is not a factor which would affect your consideration of this case one way or the other, would it?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. The fact that at one time the District Attorney was a [fol. 302] Judge would not affect your consideration of the matter one way or the other, would it?

A. No, sir, it would not affect me.

Q. If you were charged as a part of the law by the Court that the mere bringing of an indictment, the lodgment of an indictment against any defendant is in and of itself no indication whatsoever of guilt, would you have any difficulty in following that law?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you have any difficulty in following that law?

A. No, sir.

Q. In other words, you realize, when I translate that into practical language, that the mere fact that an accusation is made is no indication of guilt whatsoever. You understand that clearly, don't you?

A. I do.

Q. So that as you sit here now with your mind on this case, your assumption is that the defendants are innocent; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. And if you were sworn as a juror, that would be your attitude, htat the defendants are assumed to be innocent?

A. That is right.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. And then if the Court should charge you that as a matter of law the defendants are presumed to be innocent unless they are proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, you would have no hesitation in accepting that as law, would you?

A. No.

Q. And, translating that again into practical meaning, [fol. 303] you would have no hesitation in accepting the guidance of the Court on the proposition that you cannot arrive at a verdict of guilt unless beyond a reasonable doubt you are convinced of guilt? You understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have no quarrel with that concept of law?

A. None at all.

Q. And you can understand that that is one of the fundamental principles that affects the trial of a case; isn't that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Turkus has asked you about people who he says may be called as witnesses, who may have participated in the crime, and he has asked you whether or not you would believe them; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. You say that you would have no prejudice against the prosecution because such a witness was called by the prosecution?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. Assuming that is so, at the same time would you weigh the credibility of that witness, having in your mind at the time that you weigh it as one of the factors affecting his credibility the fact that he admitted the doing of such an act?

A. I would weigh the credibility of the witness.

Q. You would?

A. Yes.

Q. And, in weighing the credibility of any witness, would you give due regard to the admission, if such an admission were made, that that witness had on a prior occasion com-[fol. 304] mitted perjury?

A. I would consider who the man was.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. I would consider who the man was.

Q. Of course, we always consider who a man is and his identity, but I am saying more specifically: Assume that a man takes the stand in this case and he swears to tell the truth, and then after he has taken that oath he admits that in a prior proceeding, some other case, he also took the oath to tell the truth and now, today, he admits that on that former occasion he lied after he had taken that oath, would you consider that circumstance in affecting his credibility?

A. Certainly.

Q. Would you reject his testimony by reason of that circumstance, or would that circumstance have substantial weight with you in weighing the credibility of his testimony?

A. Your question is so long that I lost track of it.

Q. I withdraw it. Would the fact that a witness who takes the stand in this case, swears to tell the truth, admits that in some independent trial that has gone by he also took that oath, swore to tell the truth, and now admits for the first time that he did not tell the truth on that prior occasion, on the contrary, he tells you today that he lied on that prior occasion, if he made such an admission would that admission weigh heavily with you in assessing the credibility of that witness?

A. I think it would, yes.

Mr. Climenko: That is all.

[fol. 305] By Mr. Cuff:

Q. Mr. Silverman, do you read the Mirror?

A. No.

Q. And then, I gather, you have not read any of the articles referring to this case that have been published in the Mirror?

A. Never read any of them.

Q. Do you prepare cases for trial?

A. No.

Q. That you investigate?

A. No.

Q. You don't go to court for your company at all?

A. Only as a witness in some cases.

Q. Sometimes as a witness, to contradict statements made by parties whom you have interviewed; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And your office is where—151 William?

A. That is right.

Q. And how long have you been doing that type of work?

A. Twenty-six years.

Q. In New York City?

A. No, only the last seven years in New York. Prior to that in Pennsylvania.

Q Are you assigned to a particular district in the investigation of these general liability cases?

A. Yes.

Q. That is the type of work that you specialize in; is it not?

A. That is right.

Q. And what district is your present assignment?

A. East New York, Brownsville, Coney Island, Brighton Beach.

Q. How long have you been assigned to the East New [fol. 306] York and Brownsville district?

A. Six years.

Q. During those six years have you read anything about the conditions there?

A. Yes.

Q. You know what I mean?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And in what papers did you read these things?

A. Usually the News or the Evening Post.

Q. Did you read all of the articles in those two papers that you mention about the Rosen case after it occurred?

A. I don't read the articles in their entirety. I usually just glance at the headlines.

Q. Not particularly interested, is that it?

A. That is right.

Q. Did any of this reading, particularly while you were assigned and working in the Brownsville and East New York district, create any impression in your mind one way or the other about this case or any of these defendants?

A. No.

Q. Mr. Turkus asked you about the doctrine of reasonable doubt. I understand you have never served on a criminal case as a juror in a criminal case; is that right?

A. Never.

Q. And, of course, you have never heard the doctrine of reasonable doubt explained by any judge, have you?

A. No.

Q. And if the Court should instruct you that a reasonable doubt is something that exists, arising from the evidence or some omission in the evidence or in the prosecution's case, you would follow that instruction?

A. I would.

[fol. 307] Q. And you would not hesitate, would you, Mr. Silverman, if you found a reasonable doubt, to acquit?

A. I would not.

Q. And if you were convinced, after a careful study of the evidence, after considering the arguments of the lawyers and the charge of the Court, that there was a reasonable doubt, would you have the courage to say it by your verdict?

A. I would.

Q. And to maintain it?

A. I would.

Q. I understand that you say that your business will not cause you any uneasiness if you are here in a protracted trial; is that right?

A. As far as I know.

Q. And when you were questioned about giving the defendants the benefit of the presumption of innocence, do you know that that presumption must be given to the defendants throughout the entire trial and while you are deliberating and until you are satisfied of the guilt of the defendant or the defendants beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. I do.

Q. And if you are selected, will you give that presumption to these defendants during that time?

A. I will.

Q. Mr. Silverman, you realize, do you not, that each defendant is entitled to a separate verdict in this case?

A. I do.

Q. And you will consider carefully the evidence as it affects each defendant and only the evidence that affects that particular defendant?

A. I will.

Q. On the question of the testimony of an accomplice, [fol. 308] you appreciate such testimony must be weighed and considered with extreme care and caution?

A. I do.

Q. And if there is testimony of an accomplice or accomplices in this case, will you weigh it just that way?

A. I will.

Q. And if you find that that evidence is not corroborated, as the Court will instruct you, by other independent testimony that you believe and which tends to connect a defendant or the defendants with the crime, will you vote to acquit?

A. I will.

Q. Do you realize that if there is only testimony of accomplices that is not corroborated by some other testimony that tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, that you must vote to acquit?

A. I know that as a matter of law.

Q. You have read that before, have you, and you have heard it discussed before?

A. Yes.

Q. Where did you find that out, in your discussions, lawyers?

A. By associating with lawyers, I guess.

Q. And if you are selected in this case, you will adhere to that, follow that rule of law as it will be instructed by the Court?

A. That is right.

Mr. Cuff: I think that is all.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Mr. Silverman, you understand that the reason why different lawyers are addressing you is that each represents [fol. 309] a separate person on trial here?

A. I can't hear you.

Q. I say, do you understand that the reason why three separate lawyers have questioned you is that each one represents a separate person on trial?

A. I understand.

Q. Nobody has asked you whether or not you have any relatives on the police force. Have you any such?

A. No.

Q. Have you any close friends among the police?

A. No.

Q. Do you know Captain Bals?

A. No.

Q. Or Lieutenant Osnato?

A. No.

Q. And to your knowledge at this time you have no close friend or relatives who are attached to the Police Department; is that correct?

A. None at all.

Q. Without trying to inquire into your private life, do you belong to any men's club of any synagogue?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever heard either Mr. Turkus or any of the members of Mr. O'Dwyer's staff speak at any place in reference to crime?

A. I have not.

Q. Have you ever read any articles purporting to relate to crime by any of the Assistant District Attorneys?

A. I think I read a little bit of an article in the Journal one time.

By the Court:

Q. Do you belong to Beth Emeth?

A. I do not.

Q. That has an active men's organization.

Mr. Rosenthal: I did not want to specify any specific organization.

[fol. 310] The Court: I know the organization. That is in the vicinity of where he lives.

Mr. Rosenthal: That is right, Church and Beverly, I think.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. How long ago was it that you read this article, Mr. Silverman?

A. It must be six or seven months ago.

Q. And do you recall who was the sponsor of the article?

A. No.

Q. Was it in relation to any of the defendants who are on trial?

A. No.

Q. Did it make any impression of any character upon you either as to the guilt or innocence of any person?

A. None at all.

Q. You never sat on a jury before, although you have been called? Am I correct in that statement?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you ever been called on a Grand Jury or sat on a Grand Jury?

A. No.

Q. Of course, you realize that the defendants are brought here by an indictment which charges them with having committed a certain act. You realize that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The mere fact that they have been indicted, does that raise any presumption in your mind as to their guilt?

A. None at all.

Q. Having had experience in accident work, you know [fol. 311] that even if a man has a false claim, there is nothing to bar him from serving a summons and complaint on your assured and claiming something definitely untrue; isn't that so?

A. That is right.

Q. And the only method that you on behalf of the insured would have of disproving it would be by putting in an answer denying the claim, isn't that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Then the issue is tried before a jury?

A. That is right.

Q. That is the same method of procedure following an indictment. The minute the defendants plead not guilty, you understand that raises——

Mr. Turkus: Just a minute. That is not the same procedure, about the filing of any false claim.

Mr. Rosenthal: Let me withdraw it and put it this way:

Q. The method of disproving, or the method that the District Attorney must assume once a defendant pleads not guilty, you understand, is by proving to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt all of the allegations which they have made against the defendant. You understand that?

A. I do.

Q. Do you further understand that although these three men are being tried together at your hands, each one is entitled really to a separate trial; do you understand that?

A. I do.

Q. You understand that you may find the three men guilty, two men, one man, or you may acquit all of them—that is your province?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you further understand if you are accepted as a [fol. 312] juryman that it is your absolute duty to weigh each person's guilt, separate, distinct, and apart from the other persons' charged in the indictment? Do you realize that?

A. I do.

Q. Of course, the law you are going to take from the Court; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. Merely because the District Attorney may claim in this case that a man is not an accomplice, if the Court were to charge you as the law in the case that it is your province under certain conditions to determine for yourself as a fact his complicity, will you, merely because of the fact that the District Attorney says he is not, take his word for it, or will you deliberate in your own mind whether the person is an accomplice or not?

A. I will deliberate that in my own mind.

Q. Assuming that the Court were to charge you as the law that if the District Attorney relies upon the testimony of accomplices in determining the guilt of the individuals on trial, there must be other independent evidence tending to connect the individual before you can find a verdict of guilt—I say, assuming the Judge tells you that that is the law—would you without fear or favor currycomb the evidence to ascertain in your own mind whether you believe there is any other independent evidence before you find a verdict of guilty?

A. I would.

Q. If the Court charges you that ten accomplices' testimony has no more probative weight than one in so far [fol. 313] as the question of independent evidence is concerned, would you follow that law?

A. I would.

Q. I want to make myself clear on that point. You may have an erroneous theory that one person, an accomplice admittedly, can corroborate or furnish the other evidence by another accomplice or more than one other accomplice. You have not any such theory at this time, have you, sir?

A. No.

Q. The law, if the Court charges it to you in this fashion, presumes that there must be other evidence other than one or more or a million accomplices, before you can convict anyone. Is that clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. You have no fault to find with that law either, have you?

A. No.

Q. You further realize that there is not any one of these three men that are on trial for anything else in this court except for the things that are charged by the District Attorney in this indictment? You understand that?

A. I understand.

Q. You realize, sir, that if such were not the case it would be impossible for a lawyer to prepare a case, if he did not know what he was going to be charged with, that is, his client; is that true?

A. No.

Q. So that in determining the evidence here, you are going to determine, if you are one of the jurymen, what the District Attorney has proven against these men in this particular case, not what may be in your mind as to anything [fol. 314] else extraneous to the issue on trial; isn't that true, sir?

A. That is right.

Q. Mr. Turkus has asked you also, about the question of alibi, would you take the law from the Court, and you rightly answered that you would. That is true. Do you realize that at no time does the defendant in a criminal case have to prove anything? Do you realize that?

A. I do.

Q. Do you realize that even if all of the defendants were to stand mute and were not to offer any testimony at all in this case, that it would still be the duty of the District Attorney to prove to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt that they are guilty before you could find them guilty?

A. I understand.

Q. And you realize that if they stood mute, that you could not use that fact or argue about it in your juryroom?

A. Yes.

Q. That no unfavorable impression could be drawn through that? Do you feel, sir, that merely because one man charged with a crime may know or have had some association or admit that he knows one of the men who takes the witness stand as a witness, that that association alone, without other proof, is sufficient to raise a presumption in your mind of his guilt?

A. No.

Q. The point which I am trying to raise is this: There may be some witness called here whom the defendant may admit that he knew and had been in the company with at times, but whom he denies ever having had any nefarious [fol. 315] dealings with. The mere fact that he admits knowing the person, would that in itself raise a presumption in your mind that he must be guilty, because he knew or went out with this person, or that person happened to visit him at some time?

A. No.

Q. Mr. Turkus has also asked you, as well as other men, if you thought or if it was proven that there were three guilty men at the bar, would you have any hesitancy or any fear in bringing in a verdict of guilty, and you promptly answered no, that you would not. On the other hand, merely because—and you admit that you read about this case in the papers and you read headlines of articles—would you, merely because of what you may have read or what you may have heard, which you say has not made any impression upon you at all, be hesitant or afraid or fearful to bring in a verdict of Not Guilty if under your oath as a juryman, and your conscience, you felt that the District Attorney had failed to prove the charge which he makes against either all of these men or any one of them—would you be hesitant at all?

A. No.

Q. You are positive of that?

A. Absolutely.

Q. You were also asked whether you would be arbitrary in the jury-room or whether you would argue without any rancor or bitterness, and you said you would not. You understand, do you not, sir, that every man called on a jury has a right to his own opinion as long as that opinion is based upon his conscience and what he believes the evi- [fol. 316] dence to disclose? You understand that?

A. I know that.

Q. Merely because you may be outnumbered in the jury room, because of the statement of Mr. Turkus that you should not argue with rancor and bitterness, would you change your opinion, say, "Here are eleven men against me, so there must be more force to what they say than what I say," or would you, if your opinion after listening to the reasoning of other men remained the same, would you be upright enough to retain that opinion which you formed, until you are convinced that you are wrong?

A. I have a mind of my own.

Q. I see. I take that answer to mean that you would, if you believe conscientiously in your own mind that the proof falls short of what the Court tells you is necessary, retain that opinion if after argument you have not been dis-uaded from your view; is that correct, sir?

A. That is correct.

Q. Just this one other question, sir: The District Attorney may—I do not know what because, as the Judge rightly said, even the names of witnesses are no longer on an indictment and therefore we may ask you questions now which may subsequently appear frivolous or foolish and may never arise in the case, but we must ask them in the event that they do arise. That is clear to you? The District Attorney may attempt to prove the guilt of one or more of these defendants by alleged admissions, in other words, have somebody say, "Well, this man told me that he did so and so." Is that clear?

[fol. 317] A. Yes.

Q. If such is the fact and if you are charged by the Court relating to the law of admissions, would you at this time say that you will carefully scrutinize the source from which the alleged admissions come, find out what motive the person would have in making the statement, whether he, himself being a murderer and having never been tried, has a reason, an interest, a motive for lying in this particular instance, and weigh that carefully before you place any weight upon such alleged admission?

A. I would.

Mr. Rosenthal: No further questions.

The Court: In view of the four-day holiday recess, the Court will be agreeable to tentative acceptance of jurors today. That will enable jurors to return home for the holidays but will, at the same time, enable counsel on Wednesday to further question as to possible conversations and reading fresh reports by these gentlemen in the interim. If that is agreeable to counsel, that will be done.

Mr. Talley: Will your Honor indulge us for a moment?

(All counsel confer.)

The Court: If counsel are not prepared to decide at this time, then any juror selected today will sit in the box without being sworn until the close of the day. By that time [fol. 318] counsel can decide, and if you wish the jurors sworn, they will be sworn at that time.

Mr. Climenko: I think, your Honor, if we may be indulged for another two minutes, we will know by that time.

The Court: While counsel are consulting, I will withdraw and declare this to be a five-minute recess.

(After a short recess:)

Mr. Cuff: May we see your Honor for a moment?

The Court: No. Any more questions?

Mr. Turkus: There is, by the prosecution.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Silverman, some of the counsel went into an extended discussion with you on law, and one of them drew the analogy about a civil case. You understand, I take it, do you not, that there is a difference between the trial of a civil case and a murder case?

A. I do.

Q. Without wishing to be facetious, you understand this is not the trial of a negligence claim?

A. I do.

Q. This is the trial of a murder case. There has been an extended discussion about certain types of witnesses that may or may not be produced by the prosecution in the trial of this murder case. As you sit in the jury-box now, would you expect the prosecutor to bring in as an accomplice or a co-killer the type of your assureds?

A. No.

Q. In weighing the believability of an accomplice or a man [fol. 319] who tells you he was out on the murder with the defendants, will you look at the other evidence in the case to see if the accomplice is telling the truth and if the other evidence in the case tends to connect the defendants with the murder?

A. I will.

Q. And if you are satisfied from the other evidence in the case that the accomplice who says he participated in the murder with the defendants at the bar is not only telling the truth, but that the other evidence connects each and every defendant, would you hesitate, would you be fearful, would you be reluctant to find a verdict of Guilty?

A. No, sir.

Q. In speaking of your association with Mr. Madden, was that a long-time association?

A. It was mostly through correspondence. He was in New York and I was in Pittsburgh, but we met several times on business.

Q. Both employed by the same company?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you ever come in contact with Mr. Cuff in any of your work?

A. No.

Q. Going back to Mr. Madden, do you understand that he was an Assistant District Attorney during the time that Mr. Geoghan was a District Attorney of the county.

A. Yes.

Q. This was a murder that happened in 1936, during the time that Mr. Geoghan was District Attorney. The case is now being tried on an O'Dwyer indictment. Is there anything about your association with Mr. Madden that might [fol. 320] have some influence on your verdict?

A. I have not seen him in probably ten years, I guess. I do not know anything about him personally. It would not have any effect on me.

Mr. Turkus: Peremptory.

(Parker M. Spence, of 75 Winthrop Street, Brooklyn, New York, was called as a prospective juror.)

The Court: Unless counsel are prepared to announce a decision on the Court's suggestion, the Court will make this announcement, that counsel may have all day to consider this question and that jurors will be sworn at the close of the day unless counsel agree that they need not be sworn until Wednesday.

Mr. Talley: I would say that counsel are inclined to agree to your Honor's proposition that they be not sworn until after the holiday.

The Court: Is that agreeable all around?

Mr. Talley: That if accepted they be accepted tentatively with challenge reserved until Wednesday?

The Court: I think you are apt to get more jurors that way today than if they feel they are going to be locked up [fol. 321] over the four-day holiday.

Mr. Talley: That we must avoid, and counsel is quite agreeable to your Honor's suggestion. Personally, I think it is a very good one.

Mr. Turkus: Judge Talley made a reservation about a challenge on Wednesday. Is that correct?

Mr. Rosenthal: That is subject to further questioning.

The Court: Subject to further questioning. The juror may converse or may read something about the case in the interim that should be ascertained by further questioning.

Mr. Turkus: What I am not clear about is this: Is there a reservation of a peremptory challenge, or is it only a cause challenge?

The Court: Purely a tentative acceptance, and either side may make a peremptory challenge or a cause challenge if new cause ground is developed by further questioning on Wednesday.

Mr. Turkus: If no cause ground is developed, a peremptory challenge would mean for no reason?

The Court: Exactly. That is applicable to both sides.

Mr. Turkus: And that is reserved?

The Court: Yes. The Court is very anxious to get a few jurors in the box, at least tentatively, today, because up to [fol. 322] the present time the only progress we have made has been flat failure.

(Mr. Spence was then examined as to his qualifications.)

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Spence, do you reside at Winthrop Street?

A. I do.

Q. In what section of Brooklyn is that?

A. Flatbush.

Q. Have you lived in Brooklyn a number of years?

A. About ten years.

Q. At any time did you live in the Brownsville-East New York section of Brooklyn?

A. No.

Q. Or have any social or business or business contact there?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. I take it that from the other examinations of the jurors that you understand that this is a capital case, a charge of murder in the first degree?

A. I do.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge which would preclude you from being a fair and impartial juror?

A. No, there is not.

Q. Have you any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. Have you heretofore had the benefit of any jury experience either in a civil or criminal case?

A. Both.

Q. And has your experience been in the County Court of Kings County in so far as the criminal case is concerned? [fol. 323] A. Judge Brancato's court.

Q. Did the case go to its conclusion, and by that I mean did the Judge charge the jury on the law in the particular case in which you were a juror?

A. No, he did not.

Q. The case never reached the jury?

A. Never reached the jury.

Q. From sitting around the court-room awaiting your chance to be a juror, did you hear a judge's charge on the law?

A. No, I don't believe I did. I believe I was selected immediately and the case was brought up, but it never went to the jury.

Q. Did you serve a week?
A. Yes, I did.

By the Court:

Q. Was your father president of a bank on Broadway and Reid Avenue?
A. My father has been dead about forty years.
Q. That would be about the time I had in mind.
A. No, it must be a different person.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Spence, you are listed here as a purchasing agent. Is that a correct listing?
A. Not at the present time. I am in the sales end of the business too at the present time.
Mr. Talley: We do not hear you.
The Talesman: I am also in the sales end of the business at the present time.
Q. What is the nature of the business?
A. Ceramic chemicals that has to do with pottery, glass, tile, and so forth.
[fol. 324] Q. And is your place of business in Manhattan?
A. It is in Newark, New Jersey.
Q. At any time in your past business experience did business ever bring you into the Brownsville-East New York area of Brooklyn?
A. Never.
Q. Do you have any contacts, by way of business or social, with any person or firms in that area?
A. None at all.
Q. Has business in the past brought you in contact with any firm or individual in the garment district in Manhattan?
A. No, none at all.
Q. And you have no such connection presently?
A. No.
Q. Does that hold true with respect to the clothing industry?
A. It does.
Q. Have you had any contact, directly or indirectly, with anyone in the clothing trucking industry?
A. No, none at all.
Q. Or the Brooklyn waterfront?
A. No.

Q. Since your name appeared on this special panel and you received notification, did anybody speak to you about the case?

A. Just in a general way, that the case had come up.

Q. And I take it, then, that those discussions were at your place of employment?

A. Yes, and among my family.

Q. And that would be as to the length of possible jury service in the case?

A. That is right, and just what it meant to me.

Q. No discussions as to the merits?

A. Not at all.

[fol. 325] Q. Are you, sir, in sympathy with the enforcement of the law?

A. I am.

Q. The defendants at the bar of justice are represented here by nine lawyers, and I have read their names to the other jurors, and briefly I will repeat them to you: Mr. Barshay, a former Assistant District Attorney, Mr. Climenko, and Mr. Wegman. Are any of the three gentlemen friends of yours? Do you know any of them?

A. None at all.

Q. Or do you know any of the men in their offices or any employees attached or connected with their law office?

A. Not of those three. I met Mr. Rosenthal once out at the North Hills Golf Club.

Q. Was that recently?

A. I think that was about two years ago, possibly.

By the Court:

Q. It was not the day before yesterday?

A. No, it was not.

Mr. Rosenthal: You probably passed me on the course.

The Talesman: No, it was at one of their affairs out there.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Did you play golf with him?

A. No, he is too good for me.

Q. At any rate, you would not be prejudiced against his client because you met him out at North Hills?

A. Certainly not.

Q. You did not see me out there at that time?

A. No.

[fol. 326] Q. Or Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No.

Q. Then the only acquaintance that you have with Mr. Rosenthal is some knowledge of his prowess as a golfer?

A. That is right.

Q. Would not have any bearing in the case?

A. None at all.

Q. I take it by specifically mentioning Mr. Rosenthal's name that you do not know Judge Talley or Mr. Cuff or Mr. Kriendler?

A. I do not.

Q. Or Mr. Fischbein or Mr. Rosenberg.

By the Court:

Q. What is the name of that concern, ceramic chemical?

A. Ruche. They were formerly a New York concern. They moved to New Jersey.

Q. Sell to Trenton potteries?

A. Some.

Q. Hydrofluoric?

A. That is a very small item, use it in frosting glass quite a bit, but it does not come into the ceramic and pottery business much. We specialize in the colors particularly that are used on pottery and glass and chinaware and porcelain.

Q. Who is the head?

A. Mr. E. Frederick Ruche. His brother recently died. There were two brothers partners. One of them recently died.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you know intimately or socially any member of the bar who specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

[fol. 327] A. No, I do not.

Q. Do you know William W. Kleinman or David Price?

A. No, I don't.

Q. A lawyer by the name of Saul Price, a former Assistant District Attorney in Manhattan?

A. No.

Q. In any of your business or other contacts did you come in connection with any official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Jacob Potofsky familiar?

A. It is not.

Q. Is the name of Murray Weinstein, manager of the Clothing Cutters Union of the Amalgamated, familiar to you in any way?

A. No, it is not.

Q. Or that of Sam Katz, the business agent of that union and associated with the Amalgamated?

A. No.

Q. Is there any familiarity in the name of Bruno Belia, an organizer for the Amalgamated at its home office?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. Or that of Abe or Abraham Becker?

A. No.

Q. Or the name of a man, Yudelowitz, in the knee-pants business?

A. Never heard of him.

Q. Any familiarity with a Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No.

Q. Do you have any connection, directly or indirectly, or have you had in the past, with Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. None at all.

Q. Is the name of Philip Orlofsky, a one-time manager of [fol. 328] a cutters' union connected with the Amalgamated, familiar?

A. It is not.

Q. Do you have any present or have you had any past connection with anyone in the Flour Truckmens Union, and specifically Local 138?

A. None at all.

Q. Is the name of Max Silverman familiar?

A. No, it is not.

Q. Or that of Wolfie Goldie?

A. No.

Q. Is there any familiarity to the name of William or Willie Alberts, a one-time bondsman?

A. None at all.

Q. Or the name of Emanuel Buchalter?

A. No.

Q. Phillie Buchalter?

A. No.

Q. Phillie Kowas?

A. No.

Q. The name of Bellanca or Tosca mean anything?

A. Not a thing.

Q. The name of any man with the surname of Weiss in the automobile business familiar?

A. Not at all.

Q. I take it that you have heard some discussion by counsel in connection with accomplice testimony. Have you heard that?

A. I heard smatterings of it from the rear of the room.

Q. Do you hold any prejudice against the District Attorney of the county or against the prosecution of a case wherein that type of testimony is employed or used by the prosecution?

A. No, I don't hold it against them at all.

Q. Do you hold anything against the prosecution? Do you have any bias or prejudice against the prosecution?

A. No.

[fol. 329] Q. Will you apply the tests that the Judge tells you should be applied to that type of witness?

A. I don't know that they are.

Q. Yes, I mean will you take the law exclusively from the Judge?

A. Yes.

Q. And if he applies certain rules or tests that you as a juror may or may not use in weighing the believability or the credibility of that type of witness, will you listen to the Judge's instruction in that regard and endeavor to follow it out in your deliberations?

Mr. Climenko: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Overruled.

A. Yes.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

Q. I did not hear your answer.

A. I say I will endeavor to carry out his instructions.

Q. As you sit now as a prospective juror, is your state of mind such that you would reject completely the testimony of an accomplice solely because he was a participant in the crime?

A. I would not reject it; I would think it over more carefully than I would other testimony, would not give as much credence to it probably immediately.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you could not believe an accomplice under any circumstances?

A. Well, unless the instructions of the Court were able [fol. 330] to convince me otherwise. At the present time I would not put much credence in the testimony of an accomplice witness.

Q. Let me try to get a more direct answer without wishing to bind you down, as it were, to your mental state. What I want to find out is this: As you sit in the jury box now as a prospective juror, is your state of mind such that no matter what the circumstances were, you just would not believe an accomplice?

A. My present state of mind is that, not having heard anything, I would not believe it, I would not give credence to what he said unless I had a very good reason to do so. I would not reject it. I would listen to him with an open mind as much as I could, but I don't believe when he came to the stand I would feel the same towards him as I would towards another witness. I would not say I was biased, but I would be a little suspicious that he had some irons in the fire or something like that.

Q. I don't mind you looking at the testimony with care and with caution, even suspicion, when it emanates from an accomplice. What I am trying to find out, Mr. Spence, is this: Would you reject that kind of testimony solely because it came from an accomplice?

A. No, not solely because of that, no.

Q. Well, would you reject it because the testimony came from an accomplice?

A. I would be inclined to. I would not say definitely [fol. 331] that I would, because the circumstances in connection with the testimony might change my opinion that I have now, but right now I feel that testimony from an accomplice witness is not as credible as one that comes in without being an accomplice to the supposed crime.

Q. Of course, in the prosecution of crime do you understand that in some cases the District Attorney has outside witnesses, what may be termed outside witnesses?

A. Yes.

Q. People that saw the actual crime committed, for example, if it were a robbery case, the victim of the robbery and the people that were near by when the occurrence took place. You understand that there are those types of prosecution?

A. I do.

Q. Then, of course, do you appreciate, too, that there are types of prosecution where the prosecutor must avail himself of accomplice testimony?

Mr. Climenko: I object to that question, improper in form and it assumes a state of facts not applicable, and it is not true as a matter of fact or law.

The Court: Reframe it. Use the word "may."

Mr. Turkus: I will reframe it in that respect.

Q. Do you understand, Mr. Spence, that there are certain types of prosecution for crime where the District Attorney may use the testimony of an accomplice?

A. I understand it has been done, yes.

Q. What I am trying to find out, and, of course, I cannot creep into your mind except by the questions, to ascer- [fol. 332] tain your state of mind as to whether you would reject the testimony of an accomplice because he was a participant in the crime.

The Court: You mean uncorroborated?

Mr. Turkus: No, I don't mean uncorroborated.

The Court: If uncorroborated, he would have to reject it.

Mr. Turkus: He would not even get a chance to do anything else.

The Court: He does not know that. Maybe you better make that clear. His answers have been quite fair.

Mr. Turkus: Does your Honor preclude any further questioning?

The Court: No, I am only arguing. I think you will get to the point more quickly if you will let the witness understand just what the law does require.

Mr. Turkus: All I am endeavoring to ascertain is whether the prospective juror would reject the testimony of an accomplice under all circumstances.

The Court: Whether corroborated or uncorroborated?

Mr. Turkus: Yes, Judge.

The Court: All right.

The Talesman: Would I reject it under all circumstances?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I would not.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you would not believe the testimony of an accomplice under any circumstances?

A. No, it is not.

[fol. 333] Q. Is your state of mind such that you will look at the testimony of an accomplice carefully and with caution?

A. Yes.

Q. And that you will listen to his testimony, you won't shut your ears to it, you will listen to it?

A. I will listen to it.

Q. Will you close your mind to what he says, or will you really listen to it?

A. I will listen to it, yes.

Q. Now, you get other evidence in the case, and from the other evidence in the case you are satisfied that the accomplice is not only telling the truth about this murder, but that the defendants are connected with the murder. Would you have any bias or prejudice against the prosecution for the use of accomplice testimony?

A. Not at all, not under those conditions.

Q. Do you find any fault with the prosecutor for using that type of a witness in the case?

A. No fault with the prosecutor at all.

Q. Or would you have any bias against the prosecution?

A. None at all.

Q. Of this specific case. If you were satisfied after you heard the accomplice and you heard all the other evidence in the case that the accomplice is not only telling the truth but that the defendants at the bar are connected with the murder, by the other evidence, you would not acquit the defendants because you did not like accomplices, would you?

[fol. 334] Mr. Talley: I object to that question, if your Honor pleases. He has no right to ask that.

Mr. Turkus: I have a perfect right to ask it.

Mr. Talley: As to form and as to substance.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. Have you lost track of it?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. (Pending question read.)
A. I would not.

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to it on the ground that he not only must be satisfied, but he must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt. The question is improper.

The Court: Beyond a reasonable doubt and with that degree of corroboration which the law requires.

Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?
A. I am.
Q. And if selected as a juror in the case, will you endeavor to do justice in the case?
A. I will.
Q. And render a verdict that is in consonance with justice?
A. Yes.
Q. Have you any bias or prejudice against expert testimony, whether it be medical testimony, fingerprint testimony, or ballistics testimony?
A. No bias.
Q. I believe you presented some excuse to the Court.
A. I certainly did.
Q. Is your state of mind such that you can devote your[fol. 335] self to the trial of this case?
A. I would try and make it that way. At the present time things are considerably upset in my business and I found myself lapsing away from things that happen here and thinking of things in other places. Of course I would do my best to keep my mind on the business in hand here.
Q. If accepted as a juror, will you listen to the evidence and banish——
A. Yes.
Q. —outside things?
A. Yes.
Q. And decide this case on its merits?
A. Yes, I will.
Q. If accepted as a juror you will undoubtedly and as a matter of law automatically become the foreman of the jury, and if accepted will you listen to reasonable discussion of the other jurors in the case?
A. Certainly.

Q. Use common sense and understanding that you acquired in your every-day business in deciding one issue in the case: Are these defendants guilty, or are they innocent?

A. I will.

Q. If any defendant comes forward with a defense, for example, the defense of alibi, will you take the law exclusively from the Judge in that regard?

A. Yes, I will.

Q. If instructed, as you will be, on the law of reasonable doubt, will you apply the instruction of law to the case?

A. I would.

Q. And when instructed on the presumption of innocence, defendants are presumed to be innocent, will you apply that [fol. 336] presumption to the case?

A. I would.

Q. To the defendants at the bar of justice?

A. I would.

Q. Do you know the former District Attorney of the county, Mr. Geoghan?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Do you know any member of his staff?

A. None at all.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer, from out at North Hills?

A. No, I never met him out there.

Q. Do you know any member of Judge O'Dwyer's staff?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Do you attend at North Hills regularly?

A. No, I am not a member. I have been a guest of a member out there on several occasions.

Q. You have no connection now with any of the industries or any of the unions that I enumerated?

A. None at all.

Q. No contact, directly or indirectly, with any of the areas that I mentioned?

A. No.

Q. Is your mind free and open now as you sit in this jury, to decide this case on the merits?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you any opinions or impressions of prejudice against the defendants?

A. No.

Q. If selected as a juror in the case, you will devote yourself to your job as a juror and endeavor to do justice in the case?

A. I would.

Q. Listen to the evidence in the case? The argument and the inferences to be drawn up by defense counsel when they sum up?

[fol. 337] A. I would listen, yes.

Q. The argument and inferences of the prosecutor when he draws inferences in his summation?

A. Yes.

Q. The law of the case as given by the trial judge, discuss the case with reason and common sense with the other jurors, without rancor and bitterness, and after you have heard all the evidence and had the benefit of listening to all the lawyers and the District Attorney and the Judge, and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three guilty men at the bar of justice, guilty of the crime of murder in the first degree, will you say that in your verdict?

A. I would.

Q. Would you hesitate, would you be reluctant, would you be fearful to say so?

A. No, I would not.

Q. Is there any reason concerning which I have elicited no response from you which would preclude you from being a fair and impartial juror?

A. No, there is not.

Q. And you say unequivocally, if satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three guilty men at the bar of justice, you will render that verdict in consonance with your finding?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Mr. Spence, if you were not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of these defendants or any of them, would you hesitate to bring in a verdict of Not Guilty?

A. I would not hesitate at all.

[fol. 338] Q. Do you know of any reason why you cannot sit as a fair and impartial juror in the trial of this case, any reason at all?

A. Well, only my outside affairs, that's all, if that is a reason.

Q. You mean that you might be distracted by your being away from your business?

A. That is right.

Q. That is the only thing in your mind now that might interfere with your——

A. That and the testimony of the accomplice witness would be the only doubt in my mind.

Q. Will you repeat that?

A. The testimony of accomplice witness would be the only thing that would in any way hinder me from fulfilling my duty as a juror.

Q. With regard to the testimony of accomplice witness, if the Court charges you that it is your duty to scrutinize such testimony with extreme care and caution, that you would do?

A. I would do it, yes, to the best of my ability.

Q. Yes, that is all that is expected of you or any juror, to do the best of your ability. Have you read anything about this case or any of the defendants connected with it?

A. News items telling it had come to trial and giving supposed cause of the murder, the motive.

Q. Did you form any impression from the reading of news items or anything else with respect to the guilt or innocence of these defendants?

A. Not to the guilt or innocence of them, no.

[fol. 339] Q. Do you go into the jury box with any impression about either of these defendants, one way or the other?

A. Well, yes, I do.

Q. Is that impression an unfavorable one to the defendants or any of them?

A. I would say it was.

Q. And that impression is formed solely upon what you read in the newspapers; is that so?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you read any articles in The Mirror?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you read the Life and Achievements of the District Attorney as set out in the Journal American?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Would it take some evidence to remove the unfavorable impression that you say you formed about these defendants or any of them from what you read?

A. Some evidence.

Q. Yes.

A. The impression that I have has nothing to do with their guilt or innocence in this particular case. I have an unfavorable impression of the defendants as men from the newspapers.

Q. You mean with respect to their character and reputation?

A. That is right.

Q. This case, then, would start with a handicap against them so far as you were concerned?

A. Yes, I think it would to some degree.

Q. And that would require some evidence, wouldn't it, adduced in this case, to change that impression?

A. It would; it would.

[fol. 340] Q. If the Court charges you that it is the law of this state, in fact, it is one of the fundamental laws of the country, that every defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is proven and that in addition to that it must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, your actions as a juror would be determined by that charge of the law, would it?

A. My efforts as a juror would be put forward in that respect. I would make every effort to discard what was in my mind and judge them solely on the evidence, and as charged by the Court.

Q. Do you think it would require some effort upon your part to do that?

A. At the present time it would, yes.

Q. It would?

A. The way I feel now, yes.

Q. And the only way that it could be removed, Mr. Spence, would be by some testimony, wouldn't it?

A. That is right, of what happened during the trial.

Q. Something during the trial? So that we would not start off with the presumption that they are innocent?

A. Yes.

Q. As far as you are concerned, would they?

A. Yes, they would.

Q. Despite your impression gathered from what you read as to their character, you still would accord them the benefit of the presumption of innocence, would you?

A. Yes, on the charge.

Q. Irrespective of the impressions you have formed from the reading of newspapers with respect to their character, [fol. 341] you still believe that the evidence in the case might be such that would satisfy you they were not guilty of the particular crime by which they are charged; is that correct?

A. That could happen.

Q. Do you understand that an indictment for a crime has no probative force about it at all?

A. I understand that.

Q. And do you understand it is merely an accusation in writing, which is made by the District Attorney of the county?

A. That is right.

Q. And it brings them into court and starts the machinery of the trial going? That is quite clear to you, is it?

A. Very clear.

Q. And you do not attach any more importance to an indictment than just that, that it is a charge against them?

A. Not against the men on trial. I do against the accomplice witness. If he has been indicted and he is testifying, he has some reason to avoid that indictment.

Q. Or punishment for the crime?

A. That is right. I believe that.

Q. And that is why you follow the instructions of the Court to scrutinize carefully the testimony of a witness who said he was an accomplice in a crime?

A. That is right. I would make every effort to believe that he was an ordinary witness and had no purpose in being an accomplice witness, but it would be rather difficult to get that out of my mind.

[fol. 342] Q. If the Court charges you you are not beholden, you are not compelled to get it out of your mind, that would make it more uncomfortable for you?

A. If I did not?

Q. If the Court charged you it is your duty as a juror to scrutinize with great care the testimony of an accomplice, that would not make it difficult for you, would it?

A. I would follow the Court's instructions to the best of my ability.

Q. And you would scrutinize the testimony of an accomplice with great care?

A. Yes, I would. I would scrutinize the testimony of any witness with great care.

Q. But particularly of an accomplice in a crime?

A. More carefully.

Q. Yes, that is what the Court would charge you is the law in this case. You are not acquainted with anybody now attached to the District Attorney's office?

A. No one at all.

Q. Are you acquainted with any of the officials of the Police Department?

A. No officials, no.

Q. Any members of the Police Department at all are you acquainted with?

A. I have a brother-in-law who is in the Police Department.

Q. What rank?

A. Patrolman.

Q. In what borough is he working?

A. In Manhattan, Second Precinct downtown.

Q. In the Detective Bureau is he?

A. No.

Q. Have you discussed this case or any of its phases, or [fol. 343] have you discussed the defendants or any of them with your brother?

A. My brother-in-law.

Q. Your brother-in-law.

A. No, I have not seen him. I have only seen him briefly since I have been called as a juror.

Q. Do you know whether he is acquainted, from his identification in the Police Department, with Judge O'Dwyer, the District Attorney?

A. No, I don't believe he is.

Q. Would the fact that the District Attorney is a candidate for Mayor make any difference in your deliberations upon this case?

A. None at all.

Q. Could you dissociate that fact entirely from your deliberations as a juror to determine the guilt?

A. Absolutely. It never entered by mind.

Q. It would not occur to you in your mind at all?

A. No way at all.

Mr. Rosenthal: Your Honor, could I make a request? In view of the fact that it is necessary for all the defendants to join in a challenge for cause which the panel here may not know, it becomes necessary for counsel to confer together. I don't want any unfavorable impression to be gained by that fact.

The Court: There cannot be any unfavorable impressions.

Mr. Rosenthal: But the fact is that we all must join in the challenge, in the event there is one.

The Court: That is the law; you have to talk together.

[fol. 344] Mr. Rosenthal: Thank you, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Spence, just a few questions to clear up a little odds and ends. I heard you say that a delay in this case may prejudice your business interests. Is that so, sir, to some degree?

A. Yes.

Q. I hope you won't charge that to either side in this case?

A. No, I would not charge it to them. It would be a condition that I could not avoid, but I would not hold any prejudice on it.

Q. It would not prejudice either side, would it?

A. No.

Q. By no means?

A. None at all.

Q. Is your business condition of such a nature that it would take your mind off your work as a juror, sir?

A. Well, that is one thing that I am not too sure of, that conditions in the business are considerably upset due to the death of a member of the firm. My duties have been increased to take over some of his, and it is an unfortunate time that this should occur to me.

By the Court:

Q. Priorities?

A. We are working now in connection with some naval lenses. It has gone through the laboratory stage of development, and I am more or less handling it personally.

Q. You do not make lenses?

A. We make a certain material is used in producing this [fol. 345] type of lens that the Navy is developing.

Q. Pigment in lens?

A. Yes, some metallic pigment.

Q. Is your concern a jobbing concern?

A. Manufacture.

Q. Or do you manufacture from the raw material?

A. Manufacture from the raw material, and some items we buy.

Q. You make the ceramic colors?

A. That is right.

Q. And the gold?

A. That is a nucleus of our business, and it is one of those that has been developed to a state that can be used for this particular type of lens. It has all passed through the laboratory stage and a company has been formed to go into manufacture of these lenses. That is just where we are now. As a matter of fact, I have the name of the company only last week which has been formed to produce the lenses. While nothing is in contract form at the present time, we hope to be the ones that will supply the metallic preparation.

Q. That would have to go to the American Optical Company, wouldn't it?

A. No, it is not going through that at all. You mean up in Massachusetts?

Q. Yes.

A. No, it is not being handled through them at all. As I say, a new company has been formed. As a matter of fact, the experiments did not even go through our laboratory. It went through an outside source laboratory and having been approved, then the company was formed for making——

Q. It is a secret formula?

[fol. 346] A. The formula is not secret; the process is secret.

Q. You have the process?

A. We have the material used in the process, and that is the situation as it is today.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Spence, of course you realize in this procedure here that some things are entirely with the Court and not with us, either Mr. Turkus or our counsel?

A. I do.

Q. You understand?

A. I do.

Q. Would the fact that the jury when chosen, if you are one of them, would be locked up for the duration of the trial at the order of the Court, would that prejudice you against any of the defendants?

A. No, it would make me resentful of the whole condition, but I don't think it would prejudice me against any individual or group of individuals.

Q. Will your resentment find a subject which is one of the defendents?

A. No, I would not take it out on anybody, so to speak.

Q. We will take your word for it. You also said, Mr. Spence, that in reading about the case you read about the motive?

A. That is right.

Q. Something in the newspaper?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you accept the accuracy of that statement in the newspaper?

A. I accepted it as fitting in. I do not accept any newspaper items as truths, but I accepted it as fitting in with my own conclusion that that could be the motive very easily, [fol. 347] what the newspaper stated.

Q. And, of course, that conclusion that you drew is unfavorable to some of the defendants, or maybe two of them?

A. At the present time it is.

Q. And by reason of that you said that it would require some evidence to remove that conclusion or opinion?

A. That is correct.

Q. Isn't that so?

A. That is correct.

Q. I take it you understand that the District Attorney would not furnish you with evidence to remove that conclusion or impression?

A. Naturally not.

Q. So you would require the defendants to furnish evidence to remove that conclusion or impression, wouldn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. I may say to you, Mr. Juror, that that conclusion, that you would require testimony on the part of the defendants, is inconsistent with the priniples of law under which we try cases, because the Court shall tell you that each defendant, if he wants to, in his own choice, may remain absolutely silent, he need not prove anything at all, he need not disprove anything at all, he need not even explain any accusation against him. Would that effect your judgment?

A. Would that affect my judgment?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't understand the question thoroughly.

Q. I will put it a different way. You said the defendants will have to offer some testimony.

A. Yes.

[fol. 348] Q. To remove that impression; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Other than speaking for the defendant Buchalter, if in the wisdom or lack of wisdom of counsel we should decide to remain absolutely silent and not offer a single word of testimony here, then you would be placing us in the position of demanding from us an explanation which the law says we need not offer; isn't that so?

A. Apparently it is, yes.

Q. Then you will hold it against us if we do not offer—

A. I would still have that opinion in the matter that I had gained from the newspaper article, what the newspaper stated, in collaboration with my own opinion in the matter. I would have received nothing to change my opinion.

Q. And that would preclude you from giving this defendant a fair trial?

A. I imagine it would in some respects.

Q. You want to be a fair and impartial juror, don't you?

A. I certainly do.

Q. Then you place the defendant Buchalter in a very unenviable position.

A. I don't do it; it is the circumstance that I happened to read the newspaper. It is my own mind. I have not a legal mind; I just read and conclude, as anybody does, draw an opinion.

Q. You have a right to find any way you want. I find no fault with your opinion at all, but it would not be fair to the defendant Buchalter, would it?

[fol. 349] A. No, I don't believe it would be thoroughly fair to him, no.

Mr. Barshay: I challenge the juror for cause.

The Court: Try the challenge.

PARKER M. SPENCE, of 75 Winthrop Street, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Should I ask you, now that you are under oath, the same questions that I asked you before you were sworn, would you make the same answers, sir?

A. I would.

Mr. Barshay: I press the challenge.

Mr. Turkus: No questions.

Mr. Talley: We join in.

The Court: Sustained.

CARL J. JOHNSON, of 107—80th Street, Brooklyn, New York, was then examined as to his qualifications.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Johnson, do you live in the Bay Ridge section of Brooklyn?

A. Yes.

Q. Lived in Brooklyn for a number of years?

A. All my life.

Q. I believe when you were addressing the Court you said you were in the business of manufacturing window shades and other articles of that type?

A. Yes.

Q. Does business bring you into the Brownsville-East [fol. 350] New York area of Brooklyn?

A. It has, yes.

Q. Does it presently?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it with firms doing business in that district?

A. Yes.

Q. You personally go into the neighborhood?

A. On occasions.

Q. Do you have any business in the garment district of Manhattan?

A. No, but based on the questions that you raised with other jurors, I have had some business dealings with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and Mr. Potofaky.

Q. Has that been recent?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it in connection with your own business?

A. Yes.

Q. Are any of the employees of your business in the Amalgamated as members of that union?

A. No.

Q. Do you secure material from any firm or corporation which is identified with the Amalgamated?

A. They buy it from us.

Q. The Amalgamated?

A. A gentleman that was set up in business by that union buys our materials. Based on his financial condition, I would not check his credit, and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union guaranteed our account.

Q. Is that the limit of your contact with that union?

A. That is the limit of my contact.

Q. Is the name of Murray Weinstein, a manager of the Cloaking Cutters Union, Local 4, of the Amalgamated, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 351] Q. Is the name of Samuel Katz or Sam Katz, a business agent of Local 4 of the Clothing Cutters Union of The Amalgamated, familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear the name of Bruno Belia?

A. No.

Q. Organizer at the home office of the Amalgamated?

A. No.

Q. Or of Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No.

Q. Do you know any officials of Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or of Local 138 of the Flour Truckmens Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any familiarity with the name of Silverman, Max Silverman, or Wolfie Goldis?

A. The name Silverman recalls to my mind that I saw or rather, I was on the Luckman conspiracy case, and I think I might have seen Silverman at that time.

Q. Were you a prospective juror in that case?

A. I was a juror.

The Court: Grand Juror?

The Talesman: No, I was a juror.

Q. In that case where Silverman was a defendant?

A. I believe he was one of the defendants, if I recall it correctly.

Q. Conspiracy charge, was it?

A. Yes.

Q. Is the name of Willie or William Alberts, a bondsman, familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. That of Emanuel Buchalter or Phillip Buchalter?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Phillie Kowas?

A. No.

[fol. 352] Q. Bellanca, or Tosca? Did you ever hear those names?

A. No.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge, Mr. Johnson, which would preclude you from presiding as a trial juror in the case, namely, a charge of murder in the first degree?

A. No.

Q. Have you any conscientious or other scruple against capital punishment?

A. No.

Q. Will you decide the case on the facts and on the merits regardless of the punishment?

A. Yes.

Q. Since your name appeared on this jury panel and since you received notification, did anyone speak to you about this Rosen case?

A. My family has, yes.

Q. And that was with respect to the possibility of serving as a juror in the case?

Mr. Barshay: Your Honor, I object to the form of the question. It is leading and suggestive of an answer. Let him tell what the family spoke about.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

(Pending question read.)

Mr. Barshay: There may be other reasons. That is my objection. There may be other reasons that the family spoke to him about other than the one implied in the question.

Mr. Turkus: The juror can take care of himself.

[fol. 353] Mr. Barshay: The question requires a yes or no answer.

Mr. Turkus: I wish to argue the point.

The Court: Hear what the juryman says.

A. Will you repeat the question, please?

Q. (Pending question read.)

A. Yes.

Q. Have you had any discussion as to the merits of the case?

A. Yes.

Q. With members of your family?

A. Yes.

Q. Anyone outside your family?

A. Yes.

Q. Anyone connected with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Anyone connected with Local 138 of the Flour Truckmens?

A. No, sir.

Q. The Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Anyone in the garment district or clothing district of Manhattan?

A. No.

Q. Anyone associated or connected at the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the law, the Penal Law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know any of the lawyers who are defending the men at the bar? I have read the names off. I will re-read them.

A. I don't know any of them.

Q. Is the name of William W. Kleinman or David Price familiar to you?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 354] Q. By reading?

A. By that conspiracy case that I was a juror on.

By the Court:

Q. That was tried in June four years ago?
A. About that, I believe, yes.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You don't know them other than that?
A. No.
Q. Saul Price, a lawyer in Manhattan, one-time Assistant District Attorney, have any contact with him?
A. None at all.

By the Court:

Q. Where is your place of business?
A. 225 Fifth Avenue.
Q. What is the name of it?
A. The Columbia Mills, Incorporated.
Q. Where are the mills located?
A. Minetta, New York, West Pullman, Illinois, Los Angeles, California, Saginaw, Michigan.
Q. You make window shades of fabric?
A. We make the window shade cloth.
Q. Purely a textile business?
A. Yes, sir, except for the fact we manufacture Venetian blinds also.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Johnson, do you have any bias against the District Attorney of the county or any prejudice against the prosecution which employs the use of accomplice testimony?
A. I do.
Q. Is that a strong prejudice?
A. Yes, sir.
[fol. 355] Q. Is the prejudice directed to the prosecutor or the prosecution, or both?
A. It has reference to my position with reference to an accomplice.
Q. Have you read of this case in the newspaper?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you formed an impression or opinion in connection with it?
A. I believe so.

Q. Would you say it was an opinion or an impression?

Mr. Climenko: I object to the question.
The Court: Overruled.
Mr. Climenko: Exception.

A. I would say it was an impression.

Q. Is it an impression that goes to the merits of the case?

A. I don't understand that question.

Q. Is it an impression that goes to the question of guilt or innocence of the defendants?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it an impression that would require some evidence on the part of the defendant to remove?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the part of all of them, or one?

Mr. Rosenthal: That is objected to.
Mr. Turkus: Withdrawn.

Q. As you sit in the jury box now, would you expect the defendant against whom you have that opinion to present evidence to you to dispel it?

A. Yes.

Q. And unless he did so, you would have the same impression or opinion that you have now?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 356] Q. Even though he were under no legal obligation to do so?

A. That is right.

Mr. Turkus: Challenge for cause.

Mr. Barshay: Everybody joins in.
The Court: What is that?

Mr. Barshay: We have no questions, your Honor.
The Court: Any challenge for cause?

Mr. Barshay: The District Attorney made a challenge.
The Court: I did not hear any challenge.

Mr. Turkus: There is, your Honor. I am compelled to challenge when he has that opinion against the defendant.
The Court: I did not hear it. Try the challenge.

Carl J. Johnson, of 107 Eightieth Street, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Johnson, before you were sworn on this challenge, I asked you questions affecting a prejudice that you have against one of the defendants. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The responses that you made were true and sincere, were they not?

A. They were.

Q. You have that prejudice?

A. I have.

Q. That precludes you from being fair and impartial to the defendants?

A. Yes.

Mr. Rosenthal: No questions.

The Court: Sustained.

[fol. 357] John F. Fitzgerald, of 1823 East 16th Street, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Fitzgerald, are you living in this Flatbush section of Brooklyn?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you lived there for a number of years?

A. About twenty-eight years.

Q. On the trestle board you are listed as an assistant treasurer. Is that with some firm or corporation?

A. Yes, sir, Postal Telegraph.

Q. Offices in Manhattan?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are you employed in the office in Manhattan?

A. I am.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge, namely, the charge of murder in the first degree, which would impair or prevent your service as a juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. I have not.

Q. Would you permit punishment to enter into your deliberations as to guilt or innocence?

A. No, I would not.

Q. Do you know any of the nine lawyers representing these defendants at the bar?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Do you know anyone connected with their law offices?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Do you know intimately any member of the bar who [fol. 358] specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of William W. Kleinman or David Price familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or that of Saul Price?

A. No.

Q. Have you had any business or other contacts, directly or indirectly, with any official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, I have not.

Q. Were the names of Jacob Potofsky, Murray Weinstein, or Sam Katz familiar as I read them off to other jurors?

A. No.

Q. That of Bruno Belia or Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name of Philip Orlofsky, a one-time manager of the Cutters Union, Local 4, of the Amalgamated?

A. No.

Q. Do you know or are you acquainted with any official of Local 138 of the Flour Truckmens Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of William Alberts, a one-time bondsman, familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or that of Phillie Buchalter, or Phillie Kowas?

A. No, sir.

Q. Emanuel Buchalter, is that name familiar?

A. No, it is not.

Q. Is the name of Weiss, running some rental agency of automobiles, familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. The names of Bellanca or Tosca mean anything to you?

A. They do not.

Q. Did business at any time bring you into contact with [fol. 359] the Brownsville-East New York area of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. The garment district of Manhattan?

A. No.

Q. Or the clothing district?

A. No.

Q. Or any clothing truckers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or trucking companies?

A. No.

Q. Any connection, directly or indirectly, with anyone on the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No.

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the Penal Law of the state?

A. I am.

Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror in a criminal case?

A. Not in a criminal case, no.

Q. Was it in a civil case?

A. Yes.

Q. Did the case go to a conclusion, and by that I mean did you hear the Judge's charge on the law?

A. I did.

Q. In this case will you accept the law without qualification and without reservation from the trial judge, Judge Taylor?

A. I will.

Q. If the Judge charges you, as he will, on the law of reasonable doubt, will you do your best to follow that instruction?

A. I will.

Q. And when he charges you on the presumption of innocence, will you give that presumption to the benefit of the defendants?

A. I will.

Q. If, after you have heard the whole case, however, you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants [fol. 360] at the bar are guilty as charged, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

A. I would not.

Q. Would you have any fear or reluctance in so saying?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything as yet concerning which I have elicited no inquiry or no response, rather, which affects your ability to sit on this jury as a fair and impartial juror?

A. No, sir, except that the length of the trial might make me anxious of what is going on at home.

Mr. Talley: We did not hear you.

The Talesman: The length of the trial might make me think of what is going on at the office or at home.

By the Court:

Q. The Postal Telegraph Company will be there when you get back.

A. Yes, I hope so.

Q. Fifty-one years in existence, isn't it?

A. That is right.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I suppose your state of mind is that nobody goes looking furtively for jury duty, but if you are called to serve, you will do your job as a juror in consonance with your oath?

A. I would.

Q. So that as you sit in the jury box now there is nothing which would impair your ability to carry out your oath of office as a juror and decide this case on the evidence; is [fol. 361] that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer, the District Attorney of the county?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of his staff?

A. No.

Q. Do you know the former District Attorney, Mr. Geoghan, or any member of his staff?

A. I do not.

Q. In the event that any one or more defendants should invoke the defense of alibi, will you take the law with respect to that defense exclusively from the trial judge and apply the law that he gives you?

A. I will.

Q. As you sit in the jury box, you have no prejudice, then, either against the prosecution or in favor of it?

A. No.

Q. And you have no prejudice against any of the defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you find any fault or have you any prejudice against the District Attorney of the county for the use of accomplice testimony, that is, taking one of the participants in the crime and having him testify against the defendants on trial? Do you find any criticism, have you any prejudice against the prosecutor for the use of such testimony, or against the prosecution?

A. No.

Q. If you are satisfied from all the evidence in the case the accomplice is not only telling the truth but the other evidence tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the murder, and you are satisfied of that beyond [fol. 362] a reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

A. No, I would not.

Q. If selected as a juror in the case, will you endeavor conscientiously to arrive at a just verdict?

A. I will.

Q. Will you listen to fair and reasonable discussion and argument by the other jurors in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you use the common sense and understanding that you get in your every-day business experience and daily life, in weighing the one issue in the case, the guilt or innocence of the defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If at the end of the entire case, after you have heard all the evidence and you have listened to the lawyers for the defendants at the bar of justice tell you what they think of the evidence and the inferences they draw, and you listen to the District Attorney make his summation, and then have the benefit of the discussion of law and the charge of the learned Court on the law, you talk the case over without rancor and bitterness with the other jurors, and you come to the conclusion that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that Buchalter, Weiss and Capone are guilty of murder in the first degree, will you say that in your verdict?

A. I will.

Q. Will you say it without fear, without reluctance, and without hesitation?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Fitzgerald, are you related in any way to judge [fol. 363] Fitzgerald of this court?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you related to Detective Fitzgerald?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Patrolman Fitzgerald?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have no relatives by that name in the law-enforcing agencies of the City or State of New York?

A. No, I have not.

Q. Do you belong to any association with any of the assistants of Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No.

Q. Or Judge O'Dwyer himself?

A. No.

Q. Social, political, or otherwise?

A. None whatever.

Q. Church?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear any of Judge O'Dwyer's assistants speak on the subject of crime?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Never?

A. Never.

Q. Or the Judge himself?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Are you on any committee, sir, to elect Judge O'Dwyer as the Mayor of New York?

A. No, I am not.

Q. Do you intend to be?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Are you intimately familiar with any police official of the City of New York?

A. Patrolman, that is all.

Q. And do you know where they are stationed?

A. Yes, he is up in Harlem right now.

Q. Do you know him intimately?

A. Yes, very good friend.

Q. Do they reside in Brooklyn?

A. Yes, just one.

Q. And have you ever discussed the subject of the prosecution of crime with them?

A. No, I have not.

[fol. 364] Q. Or the subject of the District Attorney's office in Brooklyn?

A. No.

Q. Or any of their own particular cases?

A. Well, spoke of different men he made arrests, that's all.

Q. Nothing to do with any Brooklyn case?

A. No.

Q. Are you a member of any law-enforcing agency yourself?

A. No.

Q. Or are you a member of any society for the prevention of crime?

A. No, I am not.

Q. Were you ever a grand juror?

A. No.

Q. Were you ever the victim of a crime?

A. No, I was not.

Q. Was any member of your family?

A. I might correct myself.

Q. Yes.

A. Last summer we were robbed, burglarized.

Q. Your home was burglarized last summer?

A. Yes.

Q. As the result of that did you form any prejudice against any person accused of crime?

A. No, they never arrested anybody for it.

By the Court:

Q. This was a Flatbush burglary?

A. That is right.

Q. Kings Highway and East 16th Street?

A. Well, it was the residence of my father. At that time they were away, and I was staying over there.

Q. Where is that?

A. That is on the corner of Ocean Avenue and Avenue T.

[fol. 365] Q. That is only a short distance from where you live?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you use the Kings Highway station of the Brighton Line?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Fitzgerald, have you read about the case itself?

A. Just the news items, and I did read one article in the New York Mirror.

Q. Did you form an opinion as to the accuracy of the news items?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. With respect to this case?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Are any of the facts contained in those items fresh in your mind now?

A. Yes.

Q. Are they detrimental to the defendants or any of them?

A. Well, I don't believe they would be detrimental.

Q. You say you don't believe. Is it that you are not certain?

A. I am not certain, no, that is right.

Q. They may be detrimental?

A. That is right?

Q. And the article that you read in the Daily Mirror, is that fresh in your mind?

A. There was not very much of it that I did read.

Q. Whatever you read, did you determine its accuracy?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Did you form an opinion one way or the other with respect to its accuracy?

[fol. 366] A. Well, I believe that it was written on former cases.

Q. On former cases?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you read anything at all other than what you have already told us, magazines?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Or heard on the radio any discussion?

A. No.

Q. Did you read anything about the defendants any place at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. As you sit here now, sir, is that opinion which you say is detrimental still in your mind?

Mr. Turkus: I object to the form "now," because the prospective talesman has said that the has read nothing of the defendant on trial.

Mr. Barshay: Talking about——

Mr. Turkus: The man may have a general prejudice against the commission of crime. That does not disqualify him.

The Court: Clarify your question.

Mr. Barshay: I am repeating the language that you used yourself.

The Court: Not repeating the context.

Q. What is detrimental toward the defendant that you said you read, some conclusion that you drew from reading the article isn't that so?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Fitzgerald, that remains with you right now?

A. That is right.

[fol. 367] Q. And that would require some proof on the part of the defendants to remove that detrimental impression, wouldn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. And you would require the defendants to furnish that proof?

A. I believe so.

Q. Or somebody on their behalf?

A. Yes.

Q. Then you would receive personally more than the law requires of the defendants, isn't that so?

The Court: This is clearly establishing an escape medium for the juror if he does not want to serve. You are putting the words in his mouth.

Mr. Barshay: I must strenuously object to your Honor's comment.

[fol. 368] The Court: Make it doubly strenuously, but it goes just the same. You will have to frame your questions in such a way as not to constantly lead.

Mr. Barshay: I object to that, sir.

The Court: You are doing the thinking for the talesman.

Mr. Barshay: I object to that comment.

The Court: Go ahead with the case.

Mr. Barshay: You don't feel as though I am putting any words in your mouth, do you, sir? (to talesman)

The Court: It is immaterial what the gentleman thinks; it is what the Court thinks that counts.

Mr. Barshay: I object to that, your Honor. I am addressing the juror. I am seeking his determination in the matter.

The Court: Very well. We will take a recess now till twenty minutes of two. Then conduct the questioning direct.

Defendants are remanded.

Recess till twenty minutes to two.

(A recess was thereupon taken until 1:40 p. m.)

[fol. 369] Afternoon Session—Trial Resumed

JOHN J. FITZGERALD, No. 2675, residing at 1823 East 16th Street, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. If I am correct, let me know. Did you say that as a result of some reading some place you formed an impression which is detrimental to the defendants, and which would require dissipation by the defendants on their behalf; did you said that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that your opinion right now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Unless the defendants or any of them or someone in their behalf dissipates that detrimental impression, it will not be removed?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is your honest answer?
A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: I challenge for cause.
The Court: Try the challenge.

(The talesman was then sworn, on the challenge.)

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Would you answer the same way now that you are under oath as you just answered before?
A. I would.

Mr. Barshay: All counsel press the challenge.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. At the outset, I think I got to the point with you where you said you could obey your oath as to the evidence, as a [fol. 370] juror, and decide the case on the merits; do you recall that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I think you also said you had never heretofore served as a juror in a criminal case.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. So, accordingly, you are familiar, aren't you, with some of the rules of evidence in criminal cases?
A. That is right.
Q. If you were instructed by the Judge presiding at the trial that no defendant in a criminal case has any burden whatever, would you obey that instruction of law?
A. I would.
Q. And if the Judge tells you that the defendant may or may not take the stand as he deems fit, and if he does not take the stand no inference may be drawn against him, would you obey that instruction?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And if the trial justice should charge you that every defendant has the benefit or presumption of innocence and that he is presumed to be innocent unless his guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt by the prosecution, will you follow that instruction?
A. I will.
Q. As you sit in the jury box now, have you any bias or prejudice against the law as I have just enumerated it to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Understanding now that the defendant has no burden whatever in a criminal case, would you, nevertheless, expect him to give you facts in the case—now you understand he has no such obligation—would you feel he must give you evidence?

[fol. 371] A. My impression I formed from reading the article, not in this case——

Q. In other words, whatever you read has nothing to do——

Mr. Barshay: Let the juror finish his answer.

The Court: Yes.

Q. In other words, whatever you read had nothing to do with the Rosen case or the Rosen murder?

A. That is right.

Q. So you have read some articles in the newspaper in connection with other matters?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it you understand your state of mind is such that certain cases are publicised more or less?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it when people do read certain articles they leave impression—when you read your daily paper you are left with some impression?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the test is this—and before I apply the test may I say this—should the Judge charge you the law that it is the burden of the District Attorney to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and that it must be fulfilled by evidence he brings in the court-room and not upon the basis of any newspaper article, would you follow that instruction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you find any fault with such a law?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is sensible and reasonable?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you establish the guilt of the defendants before a Court and jury upon evidence the prosecution brings [fol. 372] into court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you find any fault with the proposition that no newspaper article can supply any proof to a jury?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is sensible?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the test is this: Knowing that the defendant has no burden in this case, knowing that the burden is with the prosecution, to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt upon evidence—that he cannot remedy anything and cannot supplement anything by newspaper articles, do you feel you can lay aside whatever impression you may have gathered and decide this case fairly and squarely, and give a just result and just verdict on the evidence, in consonance with your oath as a juror?

A. I would try to.

By the Court:

Q. Would you or not?

A. I think I could.

Q. We have to get something better than that. Would you or wouldn't you?

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Let me take you step by step again. Regardless of whether you think ill or well of a person, do you realize that on a specific charge he is entitled to justice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To be judged upon the evidence as to that specific charge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And surely don't you know whether or not you are competent and capable and will actually give such justice?

A. I would.

[fol. 373] Q. Without regard to your previous notion concerning his character?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. When you answered Mr. Barshay as to your attitude or state of mind, you had no quarrel with any of the laws of our land at that time?

A. No, sir.

Q. When you answered Mr. Barshay you had in mind the knowledge that you would get the law from the Court?

A. I did.

Q. So when you made your answer to him it was with the thought and knowledge in mind that the law should come from the Court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you first answered Mr. Turkus as to your ability to be fair, you used the word that you would try to be fair, and you thought you could be fair; isn't that what you said?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was before his Honor addressed any question to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you said you would try to be fair, that implied there was a commitment in your mind, didn't it?

A. It did.

Q. When you said you thought you could be fair, that also implied a doubt in your mind?

A. It did.

Q. Now, what you read in the newspaper was concerning one or more of these defendants, irrespective of what case it was involved in; isn't that true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was directed toward one of the names of the [fol. 374] defendants in here, the articles which you read?

A. That is right.

Q. So that when you said your prejudice was not attached to the particular case, you had in mind, however, your prejudice was attached to one of the individuals connected with this case, wasn't it?

A. I don't think I said prejudice.

Q. Your impression was detrimental?

A. That is right?

Q. And you had in mind that this impression which you had formed was a prejudicial one against one of the defendants in this case by reason of what you read about him not connected with this case?

A. That is right?

Q. When you answered Mr. Barshay you further stated, didn't you, that because of what you had read you would require proof to remove the impression which you had in your mind?

A. I did.

Q. That was your state of mind only two or three minutes ago?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is it not a fact that because of this impression which you had gained and which you carried with you for how long a period of time—Let me interrupt the question—How long a period of time is it since you read these articles?

A. About a month.

Q. And you have carried that impression, which is prejudicial to one of the defendants, for a month?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you carried it while you were sitting in the court-room listening to the other jurors being questioned, and [fol. 375] you carried it while you were being questioned by Mr. Barshay—that is true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is it not a fact that because of that impression which is, in its nature, detrimental to one of the defendants, that you, trying as you would to be fair, would require a greater amount of evidence either from the defense, or a lesser amount of evidence from The People, than you would otherwise require if you did not have that impression in your mind?

A. I don't think so.

Q. There is a doubt in your mind even now, isn't there; wouldn't you say? You say you "don't think so." that implies a doubt, dosen't it? So that there is even a doubt now in your mind as to whether or not, because of the adverse impression you gained as to one of these defendants, you would be able to require only the same quality of evidence you would require in a case where you had not that impression? Isn't there a doubt right now in your mind?

A. I would want to be fair and listen to the evidence.

Q. I am only questioning you—nobody can find fault with your state of mind—we are entitled to twelve fair and impartial jurors. Are you implying by your answer to my question a second ago that there was a doubt as to your ability, even as much as you would like?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you still have that doubt as to your ability to do so?

A. That is true.

[fol. 376] Mr. Rosenthal: I press the challenge. All defense counsel join in the challenge.

The Court: Is everybody through?

Mr. Barshay: Yes.

The Court: The trouble is, with this talesman, he says one thing and then another; then somebody else comes back and asks him the same thing and he changes his mind again. The Court is unable to find out from his answers whether he would be partial or impartial juror, and, taking that, in connection with his apparent unwillingness to serve, the Court lacks faith in the sincerity of the talesman's answers. The challenge is sustained.

Mr. Barshay: May we record an objection to your Honor's comment about his unwillingness to serve?

The Court: Supposing you take at this time a blanket objection to all the comments of the Court in the course of the trial. It will save a lot of time.

Mr. Barshay: Yes.

The Court: Because the attitude between Court and counsel throughout the trial should, if possible, at all times be dignified and marked with both respect and restraint. The Court is trying to do its part. Of course, in the heat of advocacy, counsel sometimes shouts an exception and sometimes adds a word of displeasure. That should be [fol. 377] avoided. We must treat one another with respect throughout.

Morris Leibowitz, residing at 1005 Forty-fourth Street, Brooklyn, New York, No. 2803, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By the Court:

Q. Are you related to Mr. William Leibowitz, the lawyer?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you related to Judge Taylor's brother on the bench, Judge Leibowitz?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you live in the Bay-Ridge Section of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir, you call that Borough Park.

Q. The trestle board lists you as manager, without any identification. What do you manage?

A. I am in the advertising novelty business. We make these cloth—painters' caps, which different painters wear on the job, with the advertisement of the paint concern on it.

Q. Do you supply those products to these painters?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you come in contact with many painters in the painters' union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does your business bring you in contact, or is the business with which you are connected—does it bring you in contact with people in the painting union?

A. No, sir.

Q. To whom are the products sold?

[fol. 378] A. To paint manufacturers and they, in turn, distribute them to the different stores.

Q. In other words, your business contact only brings you into association with different manufacturers of paints?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the sole product you manufacture?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you lived in the Borough Park section for a number of years?

A. Yes, sir, for about twenty-two years.

Q. Are you familiar with the nature of the charge in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge that would prevent or impair your service as a juror in the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you been in this business of manufacturing hats for a number of years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. More than ten?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is your address in the neighborhood of 10th Avenue and 44th Street?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any familiarity with the name of Irving Feinstein?

A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know of any such person?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear his name mentioned in any discussion around Borough Park?

A. No, sir.

Q. You lived in that section in 1939?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 379] Q. And you never heard the name of Feinstein mentioned?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever read about Feinstein in the press?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did your business bring you at any time in contact with persons or firms in the Brownsville or East New York section?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any contact of any kind, nature, or description in that area?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or in the Brooklyn waterfront area?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or in the garment district of Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the clothing district or the clothing truckers.

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any business with unions?

A. Yes, sir, we sometimes make caps for use in their May Day parade.

Q. What union is that?

A. We have made caps for the Cooks & Countermens Union uptown in Manhattan; we have made caps for the Electric Union.

Q. Was that Local No. 3 of the Electrical Union?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you remember the local number of these Cooks & Helpers?

A. No, sir, I do not remember that.

Q. Did you come in contact with any officials of these locals?

A. Not directly; these sales were made through our sales staff. We have salesmen to get that business, and we follow [fol. 380] the orders up.

Q. Are you manager of the sales division?

A. Manage everything in the place.

Q. In other words, you are general manager in charge of production and in charge of sales and distribution?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the men under you came in contact with various officials of these unions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since your name appeared on the jury panel as a prospective juror, did anybody discuss the case with you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any discussion with anyone about your name being on the panel for a prospective juror in the case?

A. Well, there was no discussion, but I told a few friends of mine I was going on the panel when I originally received the notice, not knowing what case it was going to be.

Q. I mean since now you have been attending in court—I believe you reported in August.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And since then was there any discussion about your service as a juror in the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. No one, inside or outside of your office?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know specifically the names of officials of unions that your firm and the men of your firm came in contact with?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you know them if you heard the names?

A. I would not.

Q. Did you ever come in contact with any official of [fol. 381] the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name Jacob Potofsky familiar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are the names of officials Weinstein and Katz of the Amalgamated familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would there be any embarrassment on your part to serve as a juror in this case because of business connections your firm had with these locals, the Electrical Union and the Cooks & Helpers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is that a substantial business you do with these unions?

A. It is just that we get that one item a year, and in this past year we did not get the order.

Q. Is the name of Bruno Belia, organizer, of the home office of the Amalgamated, familiar to you? Does that name mean anything to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any persons or firms in the clothing industry?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or in the knee pants industry?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or in the Clothing Truckers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you lived in other sections of Brooklyn besides Borough Park?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror in a criminal or civil case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Philip Orlofsky, one-time manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local No. 4 of the Amalga-[fol. 382] mated, at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or of any official of Local No. 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. In the business you are in, do you ship and truck out your products?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do they go out through union truckmen?

A. Well, I don't know whether the man I do business with employs union truckmen.

Q. Did you ever have any contact, directly or indirectly, with anyone in the Flour Truckmens Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name Max Silverman of Local 138, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Wolfie Goldis?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure you never read about Feinstein?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Is the name William L. Alberts, a bondsman, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name Emanuel Buchalter, at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Phillie Buchalter, Phillie Kowas?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any familiarity with the names of Bellanca and Tosca?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with Terry Burns?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know District Attorney O'Dwyer or any member of his staff?

A. I do.

Q. Do you know the Judge himself?

[fol. 383] A. Yes, sir; I am a member of the same political club with him.

Mr. Turkus: I don't think the defense will like that.

Mr. Cuff: That is not a fair statement, and I object to it.

Mr. Turkus: I withdraw it.

Q. Do you know him personally, the Judge?

A. Yes, sir, I have met him on several occasions.

Q. Would you be prejudiced in favor of the prosecution because you know the Judge?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you be prejudiced against the defendant because you know Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any other member of his staff?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who?

A. Mr. David Selzer, from Borough Park.

Q. Intimately?

A. Yes, sir, personally.

Q. Would that acquaintance—and I take it it is a long-time acquaintance with Mr. Selzer——

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know him before he was an Assistant District Attorney?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you know him since he has been on Judge O'Dwyer's staff?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you be prejudiced in favor of the prosecution because of your friendship with Mr. Selzer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you be biased or prejudiced against any of the defendants on trial because you knew Mr. Selzer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Taking both of the facts together: Because of your [fol. 384] friendship and acquaintance with Judge O'Dwyer and Mr. Selzer, would there be anything in that relationship which would affect your deliberation on this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to the nine defense lawyers in this case: Do you know Mr. Barshay?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. Wegman, or Mr. Climenko?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any members of their office staffs?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Judge Talley, Mr. Cuff, or Mr. Kriendler, who represent the defendant Weiss?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of their staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Representing Capone are Mr. Sidney Rosenthal, Mr. Fischbein, and Mr. Rosenberg. Do you know any of those men?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any persons attached to their staffs?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar who practices the defense of criminal cases as a specialty?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know William W. Kleinman or Mr. David Price?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. Saul Price, once an Assistant District Attorney in Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the Penal Law of this state?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have no scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you permit the question of punishment to interfere with your deliberations in the jury-room?

A. I would not.

[fol. 385] Q. Because of your knowledge and acquaintance with Judge O'Dwyer, did you follow the O'Dwyer investigation in the press with any degree of interest?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Specifically, did you read anything about the Rosen investigation, the Rosen case?

A. No, sir.

Q. In every aspect, will you take the law from Judge Taylor?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if selected, will you endeavor to work the problem out, the issue in the case, the question of guilt or innocence, and listen to reasonable argument from other jurors in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you start off now with any prejudice?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have prejudice?

A. No, I have not.

Q. So you do start out now as a prospective juror free from any prejudice?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you find any fault with the District Attorney of the county, Judge O'Dwyer, or with the prosecution of a case which employs accomplice testimony against the defendants on trial?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to the credibility of that type of witnesses, will you take the instructions of law from the Court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the tests to be applied from the judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have no bias or prejudice against the prosecutor or against the prosecution for the use of that type of evidence?

[fol. 386] A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to the law of corroboration, the supporting evidence, will you take that exclusively from the Judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you are satisfied, after hearing the accomplice, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from the supporting or other evidence in the case, that not only the accomplice is telling the truth but that there is supporting evidence tending to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime of murder in the first degree, if you are satisfied as to that beyond a reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to say so by a Guilty verdict?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Geoghan, or any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any bias or prejudice against the use of expert testimony, be it handwriting, medical, ballistics, or any other type?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any reason concerning which I have not elicited any response, which goes to your ability to serve as a fair and impartial juror in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will you apply common sense principles and the common knowledge that you get in your every-day business in weighing the issues in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Listen with common sense and understanding and reason to the other jurors in your deliberation?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 387] Q. Will you, if selected, endeavor to do justice in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any reason in the world at all that if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three guilty men at the bar of justice, Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone, that you will say so in your verdict?

A. There is not.

Q. And if you are satisfied as to their guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, will you say so in your verdict?

A. I will.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. I don't remember whether Mr. Turkus asked you this question, but have you ever sat on a jury in a criminal or a civil case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Never before?

A. No, sir.

Q. This would be your first experience?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So, of course, you never heard the Judge charge a jury?

A. I never did.

Q. Well, have you read about any of the defendants in this case?

A. I did not read about it, but glancing over the paper I did see some headlines, but I never read the article, just passed it by—found no interest.

Q. What paper do you read habitually?

A. The World-Telegram and the News.

Q. You said you never read any article that was written about any one of these defendants in either of those papers?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 388] Q. But you have seen headlines about them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were here on August 4, 1941?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since that date have you seen mention of the names of any of the defendants in this case in the News or the Telegram?

A. I don't think I noticed any of them.

Q. You read those papers every day?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not restrict your attention to any particular page, as, for instance, some people read only the sporting sheets, some people read only the Stock Market?

A. I usually read the war news and sports.

Q. That is all you read?

A. That is all.

Q. You have seen—you recall seeing the names of some of these defendants in both the Telegram and the News since August 4, 1941?

A. Yes, sir, that is right.

Q. You knew you were to return here on the 15th of September, 1941?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not read any of those stories?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Was your interest excited by the headlines?

A. No, sir, it was not.

Q. Had you, prior to August, 1941, read any stories about the defendant Buchalter?

A. No, sir.

Q. Never?

A. No, sir.

Q. When for the first time did you ever hear the name of Louis Buchalter?

A. When did I hear the name?

[fol. 389] Q. Yes, when first, do you recall it now, that you heard the name of the defendant Louis Buchalter?

A. The first time I heard the name mentioned was when Walter Winchell mentioned that fact over the radio.

Q. That was sometime in 1939?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since then you have not read any stories about him?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have no impression or opinion as to his innocence or guilt in this case?

A. I have not.

Q. Now, although you have not ever served as a juror in any case, you understand, do you or not, that the defendant is presumed to be innocent of the charge mentioned in the indictment; do you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you understand also that the mere bringing of an indictment is not in any degree proof?

A. Yes, sir, that is right.

Q. As you sit there now, considering this matter, you assume the defendant Buchalter is innocent?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your mental attitude with respect to this case is that you would not yourself or with others bring in a verdict of guilty unless the proof that is adduced here satisfied you and demonstrates guilt beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. That is right.

Q. And I think the Court, in announcing the law to you on this charge, defines reasonable doubt as a doubt for [fol. 390] which you could ascribe a reason. You would accept that as a proper definition of the law?

A. That is right.

Q. So that if the proof did not demonstrate guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, as I have just tried to explain reasonable doubt, you could not and would not agree to a verdict of guilt, is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. You realize the trial of a case is a serious matter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is not a trivial thing?

A. That is right.

Q. That your oath, if you take the oath to act as a juror, is a very serious commitment that you make with the community and the State in which you live?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You would not allow any trivial matter to interfere with your faithful performance of that duty?

A. That is right.

Q. You know Mr. O'Dwyer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have had the pleasure of shaking hands with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That has been a pleasure, hasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have been impressed by the fact that a gentleman of his eminence is within the circle of your friendship?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are honored by the pleasure I assume you obtain by saying hello to him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. O'Dwyer is District Attorney of Kings County.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. O'Dwyer may from time to time be actually [fol. 391] present in this court-room.

A. That is right.

Q. Have you seen him here within the last few days?
A. No, sir, I have not.
Q. Were Mr. O'Dwyer to be present during the course of this trial, would that, to any extent whatever, affect your ability to fairly try this case?
A. I don't think so.
Q. It would not, would it?
A. (No answer.)

By the Court:

Q. Are you a member of a political club?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you an officer?
A. No, sir, I am an active member; in other words, I am active as far as going out and speaking to neighbors, and so forth, in my district.
Q. Are you a district captain?
A. Well, yes, from the 4th election.
Q. How long have you been a district captain?
A. Well, I have taken an active part since Magee became leader, after Wogan left.
Q. Are you president of the club?
A. No, sir.
Q. Are you there every night working?
A. No, sir.
Q. How often do you go?
A. Well, occasionally, when there are meetings; I do not attend every meeting.
Q. Are you on any campaign committee?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you expect to take any active part in this campaign?
A. Yes, sir, in our locality.
Q. How about any club house that would bring you in [fol. 392] contact with Mr. O'Dwyer?
A. No, sir, that was arranged between a few of our own captains, to take an active part.
Q. You are not on any committee for Judge O'Dwyer?
A. No, sir.
Q. Are you a member of the General Committee, the County General Committee?
A. No, sir.
Q. That met to ratify the ticket?

A. No, sir, my wife was a member of the County Committee.

Q. Does she hold a political position?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is she an election inspector?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you receive campaign funds as district captain?

A. We call that zone leader, who has charge of five or six districts, he receives the money and distributes it to the workers.

Q. Directly?

A. Yes, sir, we instruct him who to distribute it to.

Q. You give him the names and he distributes the money?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. As I understood you to say, you have made speeches for Mr. O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir, I did not say I made speeches, but we intend to do some speaking in our own locality for the District Attorney. I am one of the workers who intends to do that.

[fol. 393] Q. Would you permit your political allegiance or your personal friendship to Mr. O'Dwyer to affect an honest, faithful, serious discharge of your duties as a juror, and by that I mean, among other things, primarily, the obligation to be an absolutely impartial juror?

A. What is that question?

Q. I will repeat it. You know Mr. O'Dwyer pretty well?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not think Mr. O'Dwyer would want you to be anything except absolutely fair, were you to act as a juror in this case?

A. That is right.

Q. And Mr. O'Dwyer would not want any break in the case because you happened to know him and he happened to know you?

A. That is right.

Q. He would not want you to trifle with your oath, but to be absolutely impartial?

A. That is right.

Q. You would not permit that to trifle with your oath, even though at this moment Mr. O'Dwyer is a political candidate in the forthcoming election?

A. That is right.

Q. You would not permit that to trifle with your oath, even though you are interested in the election as a party worker?

A. That is right.

Q. You would not contemplate doing that for a minute?

A. That is right.

Q. And you know Judge O'Dwyer would not want you to do that?

A. That is right.

[fol. 394] Q. You have known Mr. Selzer for some time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is an Assistant District Attorney?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For how many years have you known him?

A. About ten or twelve years.

Q. And Mr. Selzer would not want you to be anything except impartial were you to act as a juror in a capital case?

A. That is right.

Q. And were you to act as a juror in this case, you know, as it will probably be charged you, that the defendants and each of them are presumed to be innocent?

A. That is right.

Q. And, as I said before, as you sit here now you assume that they, each of them, are innocent of the charge?

A. That is right.

Q. You have no prejudice whatever as against any of these defendants at this time?

A. That is right.

Q. You would listen to the testimony as it was given, without any prejudice as against any of these defendants?

A. That is right.

Q. Because you understand, if it is so charged, that these defendants are presumed to be innocent at all stages of the trial of this case until such time as it is finally committed to you for your deliberation?

A. That is right.

Q. You have heard Mr. Turkus refer to accomplices?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what an accomplice means, as Mr. Tur-
[fol. 395] kus used that word?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let us see if we mean the same thing by it—a witness who says he participated in the commission of a crime.

A. That is right.

Q. You said that you would not be prejudiced against the prosecution were it to employ that type of witness; is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in assessing a group of witnesses, would you take into consideration any possible motive that the witnesses might have in giving their testimony?

A. What is that question?

Q. I withdraw it. In the ordinary course of your business you apply certain tests in deciding or passing upon for yourself the honesty or accuracy, or dishonesty or lack of accuracy, of any statement made by a person to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do that every day of your life?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do employ such rules?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I suppose you will agree with me that one important rule you always invoke in your own mental assessment of the accuracy or lack of accuracy of the statement made to you is the motive of the speaker?

A. That is right.

Q. You can understand, I assume, that during the course of the trial of a case people take the stand and they make certain statements in response to questions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Questions put by either the prosecution or the attorneys for the defendants?

A. Yes, sir

[fol. 396] Q. You understand, of course, that one of your fundamental duties, were you to be accepted as a juror, would be to pass upon the honesty or credibility of these statements?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in weighing the credibility of the testimony of an accomplice, so-called, would you take into consideration the motive, if any, which that witness might have in so testifying?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you, therefore, in assessing or testing the credibility of that witness, seek to find out if he had a motive, and would you be particularly careful in examining the truth or lack of truthfulness of his statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if the Court should charge you that it would be your duty as a trial juror to assess or weigh the credibility of the so-called accomplice with care, with great care, would you follow that rule as the Court gave it?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You understand the purpose of asking questions of you is to have a personal determination of your own mind, whether you think you can be a fair man on the jury?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You understand, in the final analysis, you are the one that is going to raise your hand and swear that when you go into the jury room, after the case is over, that on your conscience you will deliver a true and just verdict?

A. That is right.

Q. So any questions that might be asked of you, I do not [fol. 397] want you to take any offense at; it is in order to enable you to better determine whether you can act as a fair man.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you have candidly stated that you are friendly with Judge O'Dwyer, you belong to the same club, and also know Mr. Selzer, but when you were asked by Mr. Climenko as to whether or not, if Judge O'Dwyer came in the room, it would have any influence, you said you did not think so, that is correct? Now, I will put it a little more strongly: Assuming that during the course of the trial Judge O'Dwyer, as is quite possible, and as he has a perfect right to do, being that he is District Attorney, may not only come in the room and sit around where he would be seen by the jury, but he might even associate himself, as he would have a perfect right to do, with Mr. Turkus or with any of the Assistants; now, would that have any effect on your judgment because of your friendship with him?

A. I don't think it would.

Q. I do not want you to be doubtful. You heard me tell you a minute ago I wanted you to use your own mind. I do not want to use your mind for you. It is up to you. Imagine yourself sworn as a juror, imagine yourself sitting in the box, imagine someone, while the witness being on the stand, and Judge O'Dwyer not only sitting here, as he would have have a perfect right to do, questions some of the witnesses; would that have any effect on your judgment in going into the jury room, or would that sway you [fol. 398] one way or the other?

A. No, sir, it would not.

Q. So you want to change your "don't think so" and say positively that it would not affect your judgment?

A. No, it would not.

Q. You realize that, of course, Judge O'Dwyer, nor Mr. Turkus, nor any one of the lawyers, have any first-hand knowledge of any of this case? They are not witnesses?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are only presenting what has been told to them either by the prosecution witnesses or the defense witnesses?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the entity of the lawyers should not enter into your deliberations.

Mr. Turkus: I object. It is not only what he has been told, but what investigation he makes.

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to a speech being made here. This has no effect upon this jury.

The Court: State nothing about what has been said, just put your ground for the objection.

Mr. Turkus: The objection is Mr. Rosenthal is telling a prospective juror and stating as a fact something that is not so, that we are presenting this case upon the basis of what we have been told. We are not.

The Court: It is a fair assumption that it is based upon alleged information. Objection overruled.

Q. Let me repeat the question. You realize the information that the lawyers get—and that is including the District [fol. 399] Attorney—is from witnesses to any episode alleged to have occurred in the facts set out in the indictment or in the defense raised against it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So knowing that to be the fact, you would not permit your knowledge of any individual, whether he be associated with the District Attorney's office, including Judge O'Dwyer, or any of the defense counsel, to interfere with your deliberation when it is in your hands to determine whether the man is guilty or not?

A. That is right.

Q. That you are sure of at this time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Although before, when you said you did not think so, you had not yet assumed giving it sufficient thought to understand what was meant; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you belong to any men's club attached to any Hebrew institute?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever heard any assistant of Mr. O'Dwyer make any speeches on crime?

A. No, sir.

Q. What you know about any of the defendants here is superficial knowledge you gained by hearing Walter Winchell talk over the radio or seeing some headlines in the newspaper?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your interest in reading newspapers, I take it, is, first see how the war is going on and then to pass to the sports?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And skip over what is in between?

A. Yes, sir.

That being so, you haven't any prejudice of any char- [fol. 400] acter at this time, as you sit here, against any of these individuals, have you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have no impression that is unfavorable as to any of them?

A. No, sir.

Q. You realize that when a man is charged with committing a crime he only prepares himself, under our law, to meet that particular charge?

A. That is right.

Q. So that when the District Attorney, by indictment or through notice, charges that these men participated in the perpetration of the crime of killing this man Rosen, that is what we are here to meet?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is what he must prove to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt before you will bring in a verdict of Guilty?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you realize, never having been on a jury before, that the defendant at no time, under our laws, is compelled to even open his mouth or say anything?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In fact, even if they were not to put on a witness to rebut anything that was said by the District Attorney's witnesses, you still could not draw an unfavorable impression—I don't say it is going to be the case, but that is how far the law goes.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So, if you are called as a juror, you are willing to state now taht you can conscientiously determine what weight you are going to give from what you hear from the People's [fol. 401] witnesses, irrespective of whether there is any defense, and render a true and a just verdict.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have been told by Mr. Turkus that accomplices are going to take the stand, whether it be in the singular, "accomplice," or "accomplices"—you understand from what you have heard in the court-room that no man can be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice? You heard that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You find no quarrel with that?

A. No, sir.

Q. In fact, you have heard also stated that even if there were ten accomplices telling the same story, a man cannot be convicted on that testimony alone?

A. That is right.

Q. You do not find any fault with that?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have heard discussions before you became a prospective juryman as to the fact that accomplice testimony must be scrutinized very closely and very carefully, having in mind what motive he may have and the interest he may have, and all the other surrounding things, to make him tell the story he is telling?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are going to apply the test if you are accepted?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now then, you have also heard discussed, I assume, if you were close enough, even though the accoustics are bad here, regarding the fact that there must be other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the crime, even assuming you believe the accomplice, you could not convict [fol. 402] the man unless there was other evidence tending to connect the defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You might go into the jury room and say to yourself, "Well, the accomplice told the truth, in my opinion," but then, if the Court w e to charge you that even if you believe that you still could not convict unless and until you found some other evidence tending to connect the particular defendant with the crime, you would not find any fault with that proposition at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would ferret down and look through the evidence and seek out and find out whether there was any other believable testimony to connect the defendar.t?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, again, you might come to the question, and as I stated to one of the other prospective jurymen, there is no way I know now whether we could direct our questions to a particular point and leave other points out——

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You might come to the question that some other man who admits he is a murderer, who has murdered people and done numerous other things, might say that one or more of these men admitted to him that they had committed the crime.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If such a condition were to arise, you would have the right to weigh what particular motive that particular individual might have in making such a statement; is that clear?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you would have a right, for instance, he has pos-
[fol. 403] sibly committed, admittedly, some crime for which he has not been prosecuted—possibly he has some ill feeling toward the particular individual he is making the charge against—all these things might happen—you would have the right to determine whether you believed such admission or alleged statement by determining who it is who made the statement and the manner in which he made it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you would do?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have been asked by Mr. Turkus that assuming you were to listen to all of the evidence and were finally to come to the conclusion that The People have proven their case beyond a reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to find a verdict of guilty?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you properly said that you wouldn't?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now let me ask you the question that, irrespective of what you have heard and irrespective of what you read, if in your mind you were satisfied at the conclusion of this case that any one or all of these defendants are not guilty, would you, because of what you have heard or read, or the things you have heard in the court-room about the bias of some of these men who have been excused, or their prejudice, would you, because of that, be afraid to come in and under your oath say "Not guilty"?

A. I would not.

Q. You understand you are trying these men together for convenience and that each one is entitled to a separate verdict?

[fol. 404] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Each one is entitled to a separate deliberation on the evidence in so far as it affects the particular individual?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. You stated you were an intimate friend of Mr. Selzer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since you received a notice to appear on this jury did you see Mr. Selzer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you spoken to him by phone?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you spoken to his family by phone?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has his family visited you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any communication between you and Mr. Selzer, his family or himself, directly or indirectly, with respect to your being on the jury in this case?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you ever go out with Mr. Selzer when he was on homicide cases in various precincts?

A. No, sir.

Q. So that with respect to Mr. Selzer, as far as you know, there is no knowledge on his part that you are here?

A. That is right.

Q. And it would not make any difference one way or the other?

A. No, sir.

Q. I don't know whether Mr. Rosenthal asked you, but did you ever hear Judge O'Dwyer speak on the subject of crime?

A. No, sir.

Q. In your association?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 405] Q. Or at no place at all?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. I ask you, Mr. Leibowitz, I asked one of the other members the same question, assuming it develops in the trial that one or more of these defendants may have known some of The People's witnesses, may have even been in their company at times, would that fact alone in any wise prejudice you against them so you would be apt to find a verdict of guilty simply because of that fact?

A. No, sir, it would not.

Q. You realize you know a lot of people too?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some good and some maybe bad?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. The attitude you have maintained throughout is that you are absolutely free of bias or prejudice against any of these defendants?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, sir, if it should develop from this witness stand that the defendant whom we represent, Mr. Louis Buchalter, is at present serving a sentence of not less than 44 years and not more than 70 years in a Federal prison, would that fact prejudice you against this defendant?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are positive of that?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Would the fact that Lepke Buchalter is serving that term——

Mr. Barshay (interrupting): The question is objection-[fol. 406] able in its inception as to our client's name. Our client's name is Louis Buchalter.

Mr. Turkus: His alias is Lepke.

Mr. Barshay: You have not proved it as yet, and you have no right to say it. It is said with the intention of prejudicing not only this juror but the prospective jurors who are listening. I have a serious objection to that. It is [fol. 407] deliberate on the part of the District Attorney to do that. We refrained from it. We have not opened the door. The indictment is in the name of Louis Buchalter, and deemed to be so until you present such proof; but until such proof you should be fair.

Mr. Turkus: The indictment alleges "Louis Buchalter, alias Lepke." We have had that out before your Honor on other occasions. The sensitivity of Mr. Barshay is hard to understand.

Mr. Barshay: I am protecting my client's rights. I am not sensitive about anything.

Mr. Turkus: He has been known as Lepke for years, not only to the People but to the witnesses.

Mr. Barshay: That is a matter of proof for you.

The Court: This is a brawl. Just call him Buchalter, and there will be peace in the family.

Mr. Barshay: Mr. Buchalter.

Mr. Turkus: I will not call him "Mr." I will call him Buchalter.

The Court: I would suggest you do not ask that question impulsively; be very careful.

Mr. Turkus (to talesman:) Would the fact of what Buchalter is presently serving deter you from finding him guilty of murder in the first degree if you were satisfied upon the evidence in the case beyond a reasonable doubt that he is a killer?

Mr. Barshay: I object to the form of the question.

[fol. 408] The Court: It has no specific application to this indictment.

Mr. Barshay: Your Honor, I am constrained to make a motion for the declaration of a mistrial.

Mr. Talley: All of the defendants join in that motion.

The Court: Motion denied. Exception to defendants.

By the Court:

Q. Would that affect your verdict in this case one way or the other?

A. It would not.

Q. You would judge him on the evidence in this case on this charge?

A. That is right.

Q. Regardless of whether he has served a sentence on conviction for another crime?

A. That is right.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Regardless of whether he has any appeal pending or not from the conviction that Mr. Barshay spoke of?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, there is just one thing I want straight. Some of the questions and answers did not reach me that you discussed with the Judge. If I heard correctly, you are presently working in Judge O'Dwyer's behalf?

A. Yes, sir, in the Borough Park section.

Q. Did I hear you correctly in saying you intended to make some speeches in his behalf?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to be very fair with the situation. Could you [fol. 409] in any wise have your judgment in the case affected one way or the other by that association with Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: Talesman is satisfactory.

Mr. Barshay: He is satisfactory to all counsel, in accordance with the arrangement we made before.

The Court: The juror will be accepted tentatively but not sworn, as indicated this morning. He may sit in the first seat.

(Mr. Leibowitz occupies Seat No. 1 in jury box.)

CHARLES GOLDMINZ, No. 2713, residing at No. 44 Sea Gate Terrace, Brooklyn, New York, was then examined as to his qualifications as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is Sea Gate Terrace in Sea Gate, in the Borough of Brooklyn?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. William Kleinman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Max Silverman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Your business is listed as that of manager. What is it?

A. G. & G., wholesale grocers.

Q. Does your business bring you in contact with persons or firms in the Brownsville or East New York area in Brooklyn?

A. The business does, yes, sir.

Q. Daily?

A. Daily.

Q. How many years have you been going in that district?

[fol. 410] A. I have not been going there, the trucks have.

Q. Are you in general charge of distribution?

A. I am.

Q. In other words, you are the concern?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do your trucks go in the East New York section of Brooklyn?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any contact in or about the garment district or the clothing district?

A. Nothing in Manhattan.

Q. Or on the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. Picking up.

Q. You pick up stuff there and then bring it to your factory?

A. To my warehouse.

Q. Has that been going on for a number of years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you heard discussions about Judge O'Dwyer in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you read about it in the newspapers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any contact, directly or indirectly, with the Brownsville or East New York area besides deliveries made to people there?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any connection whatever in that area?

A. Not as I can say, no, sir.

Q. Or in the garment district in Manhattan, or the clothing district?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with clothing truckers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America Union, New York—do you know any of the officials?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you do business with unions?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 411] Q. The trucking unions?

A. I would not call them trucking unions, no, sir.

Q. What kind of unions are they?

A. The teamster's union; they don't do any trucking for me.

By the Court:

Q. Where is the G. & G.?

A. 15 Washington Avenue, corner of Flushing.

Q. That is the old Von Glahn building?

A. In Wallabout Market; no, sir.

Q. On which corner is it?
A. Right next to Rockwell's.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. As far as you can recall, you have no contact directly or indirectly with any person or firm in the garment clothing district or in the clothing trucking industry, in Brownsville or East New York, except in so far as your own products are delivered there?
A. That is right.
Q. Do you understand the nature of the charge in this case?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge which would preclude you from being a fair and impartial juror?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?
A. None.
Q. In the event this trial is protracted, would there be anything about a protracted duty which would interfere——
[fol. 412] A. That is the question, it might interfere.
Q. Since your name appeared on this jury panel did anybody speak to you about the case?
A. No, sir, except my wife.
Q. That was as to your prospective jury service?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. There was no discussion as to the merits of the case?
A No, sir.
Q. Have you served before as a juror in any case?
A. No, sir.
Q. Civil or criminal?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know any official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America—I think I started interrogating at that point when I was interrupted before—do you know any officials in that union?
A. None.
Q. Is the name of Jacob Potofsky, an officer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America a familiar name to you?
A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Murray Weinstein, manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local No. 4 of the Amalgamated, a familiar name to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name Abraham Beckerman, one of the joint board, a familiar name?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Sam or Samuel Katz, business agent of Local 41, Clothing Cutters Union, familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody in the knee pants business?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or in any clothing branch of the industry?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 413] Q. Did you ever hear the name of Bruno Belia, an organizer for the Amalgamated?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name of Salvatore Narazzano?

A. No, sir.

Q. Local No. 240 of the Clothing Drivers and Helpers Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any official of that union?

A. No, sir.

Q. You did say something about the Teamsters Union, it having some effect on your business?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does your firm do business with the Teamsters Union?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. If the name of somebody associated with the Teamsters Union was to come out in this case, would you be embarrassed in your jury service?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. Do you know any officer of the Flour Truckmens Union?

A. I heard you mention before 138 of the Flour Truckmens. That sort of struck home; that is the Teamsters Union, but I don't know of any 138 Flour Union.

Q. Your description is more correct than mine—138 of the Teamsters Union.

A. That is right.

Q. Do you know any officials of that union?

A. I only know the delegates, one or two.

Q. What is the name of the delegate?
A. One is Philip Wachtel and Abie Feller.
Q. Did you ever hear the name of Max Silverman?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or that of Wolfie Goldis?
A. No, sir.
[fol. 414] Q. Would your acquaintance with Wachtel and Feller be embarrassing to you in the discharge of your duties in this case if the names of those union officials should come out?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know Wachtel intimately?
A. No, sir, just in a casual business way.
Q. This man Feiler, whose name you gave, how well do you know him?
A. Only as a delegate.
Q. Since your name appeared on the panel as a prospective juryman, has anybody spoken to you about the case?
A. No, sir.
Q. Is the name Philip Orlofsky, one-time manager of Local No. 4, Cutters Union, familiar to you?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or the name of William Alberts, a bondsman?
A. No.
Q. Or Emanuel or Philip Buchalter?
A. No.
Q. Do the names Bellanca or Tosca mean anything to you?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or Cashel?
A. I heard the name mentioned.
Q. When did you hear that?
A. I don't know; that was sometime during negotiations for a new contract. Cashel, head of the Amalgamated?
Q. No, you had negotiations with the Teamsters Union?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When they were securing a contract?
A. That is right.
Q. What is that, a yearly contract?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. The carting of produce, is that a necessary and [fol. 415] integral part of your business?
A. No, sir, not produce; groceries.

Q. What does "G. & G." stand for?
A. Grittman & Glass.

By the Court:

Q. How long have you been there?
A. About eighteen years.
Q. What particular trade do you sell?
A. All grocers—anything, like canned goods, your Honor.
Q. Do you have your own plant?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you jobbers?
A. Jobbers.
Q. You are manager of what department?
A. All departments except the office.
Q. That is, you have delivery contact?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have supervision of the shipping clerks?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the receiver?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the stock?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you an officer of the corporation?
A. No, sir.
Q. How long have you been with them?
A. Six years.
Q. You started in what capacity?
A. As selling, on the floor.
Q. As a salesman?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How many street numbers does that building occupy? I am trying to find out the street distance.
A. We were formerly at 36, 38, 40, and 41 Wallabout market and the Government took over that property so we had to get another place. 59 Washington Avenue is a five-story building.
Q. That is a narrow building?
A. It is 45 by about 125 on the first floor and then gradually—— [fol. 416] Q. The delivery platform is in the back of the building?
A. No, sir, in the front of the building, on Washington Avenue.

Q. Is that something new?
A. No, that has been there quite a while.
Q. How tall a building is it?
A. Five stories.
Q. All of the stock is carried in that building?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have no other warehouse?
A. No, sir.
Q. How many employees are there?
A. All told——
Q. Outside of the truckmen.
A. About eight or nine.
Q. That includes the office?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then it is comparatively a small business for a wholesale house?
A. We do an average of three-quarters of a million dollars. There are many smaller ones than we are.
Q. I do not ask these questions to embarrass you, but to see how you could have contacted with the people that the prosecution asked you about.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. How many trucks are used by your firm?
A. We have one we call our own, but we have other truckmen picking up and delivering.
Q. You use this truckman who has contact with the teamsters union?
A. No, sir, that is one; all of our men inside belong to the Teamsters Union.
Q. So that every employee of yours is a member of that Teamsters Union?
A Not the office, all the male employees.
[fol. 417] Q. The female employees are not connected with that union?
A. No, sir, no union.
Q. Are you a member of the Teamsters Union?
A. No, sir.
Q. Are you an officer, or do you have a financial interest in that firm?
A. I have a little financial interest.
Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer, the District Attorney of this county?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know former District Attorney Geoghan or any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know Mr. Barshay when he was a member of Mr. Geoghan's staff, or do you know him now?

A. I do not know him now.

Q. Do you know Mr. Wegman or Mr. Climenko?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or anybody connected with their office—they are counsel for the defendant Buchalter.

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any acquaintance with Judge Talley, or former Assistant District Attorney Cuff, or former Assistant United States Attorney Kriendler, who represent the defendant Weiss?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody in their respective law offices?

A. I do not.

Q. Do you know Mr. Sidney Rosenthal or Mr. Fischbein or Mr. Rosenberg, who are counsel for Capone?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody in their respective law offices? [fol. 418] A. I do not.

Q. Have you lived in Sea Gate for a number of years, in the Gate?

A. Practically the Gate, on the bay side; I should say about six years.

Q. That is actually in the Sea Gate colony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you never heard of Mr. William W. Kleinman or David Price?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name of Max Silverman?

A. No, sir.

Q. How long have you been doing business with Wachtel?

A. I think about three or four years.

Q. Have you ever been a witness in any kind of litigation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever been a party to a litigation?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever been a witness in a criminal investigation?

A. No, sir.

Q. As the witness in the civil litigation, in connection with what?

A. No, sir, it was in the separation of a business.

Q. An outgoing partner?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar who is a specialist in the defense of criminal cases?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will you take the law in all of its aspects from the Judge, if you are accepted as a juror?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you sit in the box, are you free from all prejudice against the defendants?

A. I am.

Q. You have no prejudice for them and no bias against them?

[fol. 419] A. That is right.

Q. Do you have any bias or prejudice against the prosecutor of the county, Judge O'Dwyer, or against the prosecution of a case wherein the testimony of an accomplice is used?

A. I have not.

Q. Would you close your ears and shut your mind to the testimony of such an individual solely because he was a participant in the crime?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you expect the District Attorney to bring witnesses from some city of learning?

A. They must know about the case.

Q. If you are satisfied that the accomplice who testifies in the case not only knows about the case, but knows about the defendants' implication in it and tells us about it, and then there is other evidence in the case showing the accomplice is telling the truth, and other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of murder, and you are satisfied of that beyond a reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to say so by finding a verdict of guilty?

Mr. Cuff: I object to that as being an incorrect statement of law—"other evidence."

The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Cuff: Exception.

A. I would not.

Q. Do you have any bias or prejudice against the use of expert testimony, that is, the testimony of an expert on [fol. 420] medicine, handwriting, ballistics, or whatever it may be?

A. If he is a proven expert, no.

Q. You have no bias against his testimony?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything concerning which I may not have inquired which goes to your qualification as a juror in the case?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Do you feel as you sit in the jury box that your mind is free and open and you can decide the case upon the evidence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Free from prejudice against the defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Should any defendant or any one of the defendants, or any one or more of them enter a defense of an alibi, or some other defense, will you take the law exclusively from the Judge?

A. I will.

Q. I think you said you know none of counsel, either on the District Attorney's side or on the defense side?

A. That is right.

Q. You have no embarrassment or reluctance in serving?

A. None, once I am in.

Q. If accepted, will you endeavor to work in harmony with the other jurors, listen to reason, reasonable argument and discussion—you will listen to reason and common sense?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, suppose you have heard all the evidence in the case; you have heard the defense lawyers sum up to the [fol. 421] jury, stating the inferences they draw from the testimony, and you hear the prosecutor tell the inference he draws, and the learned Court charges on the law, and after due deliberation with other members of the jury you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that we have three guilty men at the bar of justice, will you say so in your verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you say so without fear or hesitation?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Is there anything in your business connections or background in life that would in any wise interfere with the rendition of that kind of a verdict if you feel it is in consonance with the evidence?

A. None whatever.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. You said you did not know anybody at all connected with the defense or the prosecution?

A. That is right.

Q. I ask you if you have in mind you do not know police officials either, who may be connected with the case?

A. That is right.

Q. So that the people you know, none at all have anything to do with this case?

A. That is right.

Q. No doubt about it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall when this case is alleged to have happened?

A. I don't remember.

Q. You never heard of it?

A. Never heard of it.

Q. As you sat here for three days and heard the prospective jurors being questioned, did you form any impres- [fol. 422] sion one way or the other with respect to this case?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you form any idea as to how you shall answer questions when called?

A. I did not.

Q. You do not know any of the other jurors here?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you read about the case at any time?

A. I did not bother much about it at all; I had other business worries.

Q. That were more important?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you read the Mirror?

A. No, sir, I do not read the Mirror.

Q. Or the Journal?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did any member of your family ever discuss this case with you?

A. Just only since the time I knew it was the Lepke case.

Q. You have no prejudice against our client?

A. Absolutely none.

Q. You said you knew Philip Wachtel?

A. Just through the business.

Q. Have you seen him lately?

A. No, sir.

Q. When did you last see him?

A. The last time I saw Phillie Wachtel I think it was about quite a number of months ago; some sort of a dispute on agreements.

Q. Do you know now that he is no longer connected with the Teamsters Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did he ever talk to you about any business he may have had with the District Attorney's office?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 423] Q. Or with respect to his friendship for Mr. Rooney or Mr. Math of that office?

A. No, sir, I never cared to know his business.

Q. And he never volunteered?

A. No, sir.

Q. At no time did he tell you he had anything at all to do with them?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would the fact that a person has been shot raise any prejudice in your mind against any of the defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. No doubt about that?

A. No doubt at all.

Q. Do you know anybody on the Grand Jury in the Borough of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody who was ever a special juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now we are assured that you know none of the facts and that you know none of the people that may be involved in this case?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you know what an indictment is?

A. Something you are accused of.

Q. An indictment is an accusation against someone; in this particular case it is against these defendants. It is only an accusation and nothing else?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You cannot proceed on the theory that wherever there is smoke there must be fire?

A. That is right.

Q. You file an indictment and that is how you start a [fol. 424] trial? The defendant came in and he said "Not guilty," and so did the other defendants; that is what brings this case to you, and you are chosen to decide. We start off at scratch.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. We are seeking, to be frank with you, twelve jurors who will be eminently fair; we do not want an acquitting or a convicting jury; we want a fair jury in this case.

A. I understand.

Q. So that you find no fault with any counsel here who stood here for a long time questioning prospective jurors?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, we have nine lawyers sitting at the table. Does that influence you against any of these defendants?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. As a matter of fact, I think that is the customary procedure in this court in most cases, that when a man is charged with homicide the Court supplies him three lawyers.

Mr. Turkus: I object to that.

The Court: Only when they have no money to employ lawyers.

Q. So the number of lawyers has nothing to do with it?

The Court: That is not in this case.

Q. Well, whether they have money to hire or not is not important.

A. That don't bother me.

Q. If you are chosen as a juror and you see a person take the stand and that person raises his right hand and swears to tell the truth, and he is presented as a witness [fol. 425] by the District Attorney, be he expert, policeman, detective, officer, or a plain individual, the fact that he is offered by the District Attorney would not influence you to the point where you might say to yourself, "That fellow must be telling the truth," would it?

A. Unless he is corroborated.

Q. In other words, the mere fact a man raises his hand and says he is telling the truth does not mean that he is?

A. That is right.

Q. You will decide whether he does or does not?

A. That is right.

Q. One of the tests you will use in determining a man's credibility—that means whether or not he is telling the truth, rests with you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If he is a clean man and has no interest in the outcome of the case, that is one thing?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If he is a man who, out of his own mouth, says he is not a clean man, that is another thing, and the dirtier record he has that will come from the witness stand, the more carefully and cautiously you will weigh the testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if some man takes the stand and it is brought out here that he himself admitted before that he had disrespect for an oath and committed perjury, you are going to weigh with caution that man's testimony?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And if it develops that that same man tells you, voluntarily, that he i sa theif, a burglar, a gun toter, and a par-[fol. 426] ticipant in murder, the more he says those things, the more caution you shall use in weighing his testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If twenty men take the stand and corroborate that person, and they are no better than he, you will weigh their testimony with extreme caution too?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Numbers do not count at all?

A. That is right.

Q. If the District Attorney calls fifty witnesses and we do not call one, that would not matter if you did not believe any one of those witnesses?

A. That is right.

Q. If, in addition to those things I have described, there shall be people who will say they are accomplices, you will still use more caution with respect to accepting that man's testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the Court shall tell you that every defendant is presumed innocent, now, that is not just language, that is the right of every person accused of crime, that is his substantial right, that is not a privilege that is given to us, it is something no person living can take away from us. That presumption is this: Until twelve men have decided unanimously that the District Attorney has proven t defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt—there is no doubt about accepting that law if the Court charges you?

A. Absolutely.

Q. The law gives the defendant another right and says the District Attorney must sustain the burden throughout the case and it never shifts to the defendant to any degree [fol. 427] whatever, and if the defendant should remain absolutely silent, you must not draw an unfavorable inference against that defendant. You do not find any fault with that law?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would not expect the defendant to explain anything at all?

A. No, sir, if he did not care to.

Q. The fact of his silence would not influence you?

A. No, sir.

Q. On the question of corroboration, let us assume that you have now weighed carefully the testimony of those people whom the District Attorney has described as accomplices. You will want to know who they are, who gave the corroboration that tends to connect any given defendant with the commission of this crime. He, too, is a witness. You want to find out from that witness, who is he—Why shall we take his word for what he says? Let us look into his record. And if you find that one of these men, not an accomplice, but one of these men who says, "I am coming here to give evidence which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime," out of his own mouth says to you under oath, "I myself have committed eleven murders," you will weigh his testimony with a great deal of caution?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And you will say to yourself, "What reason has that man to give such testimony here?" won't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will put it through the mill and grind it finely?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 428] Q. If, in addition to that man, they will offer another man, not as an accomplice but as a person who gives testimony tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, or any of them, and he says, "I have committed six murders," you will want to find out why he is giving such testimony?

A. That is right.

Q. You know this murder is alleged to have occurred in 1936?

A. I do not know when it occurred.

Q. Well, it was in September, 1936. You are going to ask yourself why that person remained silent all this time, and, if he gives evidence tending to connect any one of these defendants with the commission of the crime?

A. That is right.

Q. You will render judgment individually with respect to each defendant in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will use the evidence given against one man, and only as against him, unless his Honor shall charge otherwise?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are giving each defendant in reality a separate trial?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in a case of this prominence a juror must have courage one way or the other. You said to the District Attorney you have the courage, if you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think you have the courage that if you are not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, to acquit our defendant?

A. — —.

[fol. 429] Q. And if you think that, on the evidence, you yourself, after listening and answering arguments, but not being stubborn in any respect, after sifting the evidence and the people who gave it, you find a reason for doubt in this case (you will then have the courage to say "Not guilty"?

A. That is right.

Q. And if all the other eleven should be contrary, without being obstinate or stubborn, you talking to them and listening to their arguments, are still not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt——

A. (interrupting): I would still say, "Not guilty."

Q. Only then would you be living up to your oath as a juror; do you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If it shall develop in this case that Mr. Louis Buchalter is now under sentence of the Federal Court and the State Court, the minimum of which is forty-four years and the maximum of which, I think, is seventy years, would that fact prejudice you against him in any respect?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. No doubt about it?

A. No doubt.

Q. So now you are ready to say, if chosen, that you can render a verdict in this case which shall reflect the truth, based upon only the evidence in this case which you believe?

A. That is right.

Q. No doubt about it?

A. No doubt.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. I represent the defendant Capone, together with Mr. Rosenberg and Mr. Fischbein; do you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 430] Q. I don't know whether you were seated in a place where you could hear all the questions I addressed to Mr. Leibowitz or not. Could you hear me?

A. Yes, sir, I was right behind you.

Q. Now I will try not to repeat questions which were addressed to you by Mr. Barshay but confine myself to other questions which he did not ask you. You understand that although all of the defendants—the three defendants are here together being tried before one jury, that each of these men is entitled to a separate trial and deliberation at your hands?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You understand that in accordance with the Court's instructions that even though there may be a number of witnesses called and only a certain amount of them applying to certain individuals on trial, that you can only use that evidence against that particular individual to whom it applies?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the Court does charge you in that manner and in the further manner that you will deliberate the guilt of each person separately, you will have no hesitancy in doing that?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not feel that because three men are being tried together, that you must try to find a verdict of Not Guilty as to all or guilty as to all?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are able then to determine in your own mind fairly and squarely the issue as it respects each defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever had, either you or your firm, any difficulty with any union?

A. No, sir.

Q. I heard you say something about having some con- [fol. 431] tracts with unions. You work in harmony with them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So there would not be any prejudice or favor to either the prosecution or the defendant in view of the questions that have been asked of you by Mr. Turkus as to the number of so-called officials or members of different organizations or different unions?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you any immediate relatives or close friends on the Police Department?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever heard any speeches of any character either made by Mr. Turkus or any of the officials of Mr. O'Dwyer's office?

A. I have not.

Q. You realize that lawyers for both sides have no personal knowledge of transactions involved here; you understand that?

A. I don't understand you.

The Court: Lawyers are not witnesses.

The Talesman: That is right.

Q. So you will not allow the entity of any lawyer in any wise to sway you?

A. That is right.

Q. Because Judge O'Dwyer is now District Attorney and formerly a judge and is running for Mayor, that is not going to have any effect on you?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. The issue is whether or not you believe witnesses that have presented the story to the District Attorney which was subsequently presented to the Grand Jury and is now before you for consideration?

A. That is right.

[fol. 432] Q. If it develops in the course of the trial that some of the witnesses called by the People actually know some of the defendants, or even all of them, the mere fact that they knew one another, without any other proof, would that in itself lead you to render a verdict against them?

A. No, sir.

Q. I will put it more clearly. The witness takes the stand and the District Attorney inquires as to his supposed knowledge of an alleged crime; is that clear?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then if the District Attorney were to ask him does he know any of the defendants, and he says, "Yes, I know the defendant Capone, I have been to his house, I used to meet with him, I attended a ball game or something else," and assuming that subsequently Capone, going on the stand and saying to you, "I know that witness," would the mere fact that he admits knowing the person, standing alone, influence your verdict to the extent that you would say, "He knew the man, therefore he must be guilty"?

A. No, sir.

Q. In judging a person who takes the stand, you are going to judge what motive that man has in testifying?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If a man were to take the stand and say to you, "I have not only committed eleven murders, for which I have never been tried for one, I lied before the Federal Grand Jury under oath and I lied in this very court under oath where it concerned myself, but now I will tell the truth, so help me God, here," and then tells you a story, you are not going to believe that simply because of his saying, "I am [fol. 433] telling the truth"?

A. That is right.

Q. You are going to look and say, "Well, this fellow admits under examination he committed eleven murders, that he lied before several judges under oath in different cases, and I will judge his testimony with great care and caution"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Assuming that some other witness gets on the stand and admits to a lesser amount of crime, but admits he was involved in murders he has never been tried for, and involved in numerous other things, and he says, "Well, one of the defendants told me that he committed the crime," are you going to judge whether you are going to believe that fellow or not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are going to judge him in the light of how much force you are going to give to that testimony in view of what motive or interest he may have had?

A. Yes.

Q. You understand from what you have heard that no man can be convicted on the statement of an accomplice?

A. That is

Q. And no man can be convicted on the statement of fifty accomplices or one thousand, for that matter, you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You also understand from what you have heard discussed by both defense and the prosecution that there must be independent evidence tending to connect the defendants, if you believe the accomplice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you can go on in the jury room and [fol. 434] say, "Well, irrespective of what this accomplice is, I believe his story," but even if you did that you could not convict unless and until you found other dependable, credible evidence that tended to connect the defendants with the crime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you hesitate because of what has been said about this trial and the number of men who have prejudice and otherwise, to come out into the court-room and say, "Not guilty," if you were unable, after inspecting the evidence, to find sufficient under the law of our land to warrant you in finding a verdict of guilty?

A. I am not afaid of any just verdict.

Q. In other words, you understand, as you should understand, that your verdict, if it rests on your conscience, cannot be questioned by anybody whether they like it or not?

A. That is right.

Q. Assuming you are in the jury room and you enter into discussion with other jurymen. You are outnumbered in the thought they feel one way, whether it is guilty or innocent, and they feel the other way; you listen to all reasonable argument without rancor or bitterness; you argue your opinion and they argue their opinion; after listening and debating the question you conscientiously believe you are right, would you stick to your opinion?

A. I would stick to it.

Q. You don't feel, as has been evinced by a statement of the District Attorney to some other juryman, that simply because you stick to your opinion you are looking for a [fol. 435] hung jury, do you?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: I object to the question.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

Q. Will you, irrespective of what the District Attorney may think, if you are honestly convinced after listening to reasonable argument in the jury room that the opinion you have gained is a proper and just one, retain that opinion after listening to reason and argument, if you have not been changed by other jurymen?

A. That is right, I would.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Although Mr. Barshay and Mr. Rosenthal went over with you in great detail about the character of an accomplice, do you recall their questions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you expect an accomplice, one who admits himself to be part of a crime, to be a college professor or a paragon of virtue?

Mr. Barshay: I object to that.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Q. In the usual course of events, is your state of mind such that murders are not committed openly, on Broadway and 42nd Street?

Mr. Barshay: I object.

The Court: Objection sustained.

[fol. 436] Q. Do you understand that in the prosecution of crime the District Attorney may use an accomplice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you feel that because a man is a bad man, that he could never tell the truth?

A. He may tell the truth sometimes.

Q. That is going to be your job?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you feel that because a criminal testifies against others who were associated with him in the commission of crime, do you feel he cannot tell the truth, that that would be impossible?

A. No, sir, it could be.

Q. Do you appreciate that sometimes crooks and killers fall out?

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to that.

The Court: Sustained as to form.

Q. Is your state of mind such that men who commit crime together sometimes testify against each other?

The Court: He says an accomplice may tell the truth.

Q. As you sit in the jury box it is going to be your job to find out if what an accomplice tells about his past associates is true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if evidence in the case, other evidence in the case, shows that the accomplice is telling the truth, and other evidence tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime of murder in the first degree, would you expect the District Attorney to do more than that to get a conviction?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 437] Mr. Rosenthal: Objected to.

The Court: Sustained as to form.

Q. We will go at it this way: Assuming you heard the testimony of the accomplice and then there is more evidence comes in the case, and you are satisfied from the evidence that the accomplice is not only telling the truth about his past associates in connection with the charge, but you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the other evidence in the case tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the murder, would you expect the prosecution to submit more than that?

Mr. Barshay: I object.

The Court: Objection sustained as to form. That would be a hard question for a law student to answer.

By the Court:

Q. You understand, no matter how bad a man is, if he takes the stand as an accomplice, that the law requires, in order to consider his testimony, that he be corroborated by sufficient evidence which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if he is so corroborated you have a right, if you see fit, to accept his testimony as worthy of belief, and would you in that case try to be fair?

A. I certainly would.

Q. In determining whether his testimony is worthy of belief?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your employment before you went in this business?

[fol. 438] A. I was a manufacturer of woodwork, personally.

Q. What kind of woodwork?

A. Cabinet work.

Q. For how long?

A. Fifteen years.

Q. That was the trade you learned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a member of the union?

A. No, sir.

Q. You mean furniture?

A. Furniture, cabinet work, showcases.

Q. One of those concerns on Park and Flushing Avenue?

A. No, sir, not that type; we specialized in certain items of store fronts and all that kind of work.

Q. Those are the only employments you ever had?

A. That is all.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Barshay told you that his client Buchalter is serving a long-term sentence, and asked you if that would prejudice you against the defendant Buchalter, and you said no.

A. That is right.

Q. If he told you there was an appeal pending from the sentence, would that prejudice you?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Barshay: I object to that.

Mr. Turkus: I will withdraw the question.

Q. Supposing counsel for Buchalter went all the way and told you that from part of the sentence there was an appeal pending, or a prospective appeal pending, would that prejudice you against the defendant?

[fol. 439] Mr. Climenko: I object to the form of the question; I specifically object to the question as assuming a state of facts not in evidence.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Turkus: Am I precluded?

The Court: I don't think the question looks good on the record. I have sustained it on a different ground.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Would that sentence enter into your deliberation on the jury as to the guilt or innocence of Buchalter in the Rosen murder?

A. No, sir.

Q. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that Buchalter is guilty of murder in the first degree in the Rosen case, that sentence we spoke of would have no bearing in your decision?

A. None at all.

Q. In all, how many trucks does your firm operate in which the teamsters' union has some effect on it?

A. You mean directly, of my own? One of my own, but others that we hire.

Q. How many would that be in gross—all together?

A. Well, we have two others that do work for us.

By the Court:

Q. That is the way you do business, that you have to have your own truck or hire trucks to bring merchandise from the railroad or depots?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that they deliver to some customers and you also do that?

[fol. 440] A. Yes, sir.

Q. But some customers, in fact, many, come with their own?

A. Yes, sir, cash and carry.

Q. They pay for their goods and take them away?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Turkus: Challenged peremptorily.

The Court: This trial will resume on Wednesday morning at ten o'clock. Members of the panel are cautioned not to discuss the case or read about it or listen to anything that may be said about it during adjournment. Keep your minds open.

(Addressing Mr. Leibowitz) You have been tentatively selected. Follow the same instructions as given to the remainder of the panel.

Return here at ten o'clock Wednesday morning.

The defendants are remanded.

(Whereupon an adjournment was taken until Wednesday, September 24, 1941, at ten o'clock a. m.)

[fol. 441] Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 24, 1941.

Trial Resumed

(Mr. Turkus and Mr. Talley confer with the Judge privately before the bench, without the hearing of the panel.)

Mr. Turkus: I had a discussion with Judge O'Dwyer as regards this talesman (Leibowitz); he is to be of assistance to him in the campaign and it might have some implication on a verdict to be rendered in the case. Under the circumstances, I am going to challenge for cause.

The Court: Do counsel for the defense wish to try the challenge?

Mr. Talley: No, we do not.

The Court: It is unanimous?

Mr. Talley: Yes, all the defendants join in it.

The Court: Then there is nothing to try and the Court has to sustain the challenge. Of course, there has to be ground for it. I am of the opinion that notwithstanding the apparent absolute honesty of this talesman and the fact that he would be an excellent foreman for this jury, he would be in an embarrassing position in the juryroom [fol. 442] as foreman of the jury in expressing any opinion on this because of his political connection. Challenge sustained.

For the convenience of talesmen who are kept waiting day after day the Court directs the clerk to call twelve talesmen, which will fill the box, and that will, according to the standard of work done last week, supply ample material for the morning's work.

(The clerk then called Norman Kendy, No. 2595; Matthew Labden, No. 2790—no answer to the name—Samuel Cone, No. 2783; Emanuel Camachi, No. 2808, Charles E. Stevens, No. 2602; Joseph Herrick, No. 2788; John M. Pleil, No. 2819; Randolph Tyrrel, No. 2205; Andrew Merrick, No. 2684; Max Gould, No. 2817; Henry Lathrop, No. 2685; Samuel Lieberson, No. 2711; Max Oliver, No. 2724.)

The Court: All members of the panel other than those who have been called in the jury box may go until two o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Turkus: May I respectfully suggest we continue examining in the same manner as heretofore so that all counsel may hear the questions and answers?

The Court: Yes.

[fol. 443] Norman Kendy, of 225 Sterling Place, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. According to the trestle board you live on Sterling Place. Is that the Park Slope district in Brooklyn?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you lived in that area for a number of years?

A. Three years.

Q. Prior to your residence in the Park Slope area did you live in Brooklyn too?

A. For about twenty-five years.

Q. In any particular district?

A. In Flatbush.

Q. You are listed as a secretary, without any further description. Would you mind telling me the nature of the firm?

A. Importers of crude rubber; I am an officer.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge in this case, namely, the charge of murder in the first degree, which would impair your ability to serve?

A. No.

Q. I take it that you have no conscientious or other scruples against capital punishment?

A. No.

Q. That the matter of punishment will not be considered by you in the jury room nor deliberated upon when considering the guilt or innocence of the defendants?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you had any business contacts in the past that brought you in contact with any firms or individuals in the Brownsville or East New York sections of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it that you have none personally?

A. No.

[fol. 444] Q. With respect to the garment district in Manhattan, have you had any contact there, directly or indirectly?

A. No.

Q. Have you had any in your past life?

A. No.

Q. Does that also take in the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. Yes.

Q. I take it you have had no connection, directly or indirectly, at any time, either business or social, with anyone in the garment district in Manhattan, Brooklyn, or on the waterfront or in Brownsville or the East New York section of Brooklyn?

A. Yes.

Q. And does that pertain to the clothing district as well?

A. Yes.

Q. Has your business at any time brought you in contact with people in the clothing district?

A. In a social way, yes; a relative of mine has a business in the garment trade.

Q. Is he personally engaged in that business?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the manufacture of clothing?

A. No, sir, retail.

Q. So it is not, in the accepted clothing district in Manhattan, where clothes are manufactured and distributed?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has your business at any time brought you in contact with persons or firms in the clothing trucking industry?

A. Never.

Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror in a case?

A. Yes.

Q. Has it been a criminal case?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it in the County Court of Kings County?

A. Yes.

[fol. 445] Has it been recent?

A. Four or five years.

Q. Did that case come to a conclusion? Did the Judge charge the jury on the law?

A. Yes.

Q. So you are familiar with the meaning of reasonable doubt and the doctrine of the presumption of innocence?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you, in accord with the Judge's instructions, give the defendants the benefit of the presumption of innocence and the doctrine of reasonable doubt?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does your business at any time bring you in contact with any officials, directly or indirectly, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. Never.

Q. Is the name Jacob Potofsky, an official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Murray Weinstein, manager of the Clothing Cutters Local No. 4, affiliated with the Amalgamated?

A. No.

Q. Or that of Sam Katz?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any familiarity with the name of Bruno Belia, organizer of the Amalgamated?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with Philip Orlofsky, at one time manager of the Clothing Cutters Local No. 4; is that name familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever know anyone associated with Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 446] Q. Is the name of Beckerman or Yudelowitz at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any individual or any officer of the Flour Truckmens Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or of the Teamsters Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Max Silverman or Wolfie Goldis at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any familiarity with the name of William or Willie Alberts, a one-time bondsman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone named Emanuel Buchalter, is that name at all familiar with that of Philip Buchalter, sometimes known as Philip Kowas?

A. No, sir.

Q. Any familiarity with the name of Bellanca or Tosca?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Terry Burns?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any inherent bias or prejudice against the prosecutor of the county, Judge O'Dwyer, or against the prosecution in this case in which the use of accomplice testimony is employed?

A. None whatever.

Q. In questioning the other prospective talesmen, Mr. Barshay, representing the defendant Buchalter, directed attention of the jury to the fact that he is serving a long term in jail and asked whether or not prospective talesmen had any prejudice against a defendant for that reason, and I ask you if you have any prejudice?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 447] Q. By the same token, do you feel that one who has been convicted of crime and served a sentence should have any sanctuary in a jail when he is charged with the crime of murder in the first degree?

Mr. Climenko: I object to that as improper in form.

The Court: I am trying to figure out what is meant by "sanctuary."

Mr. Turkus: I will withdraw it.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you would be inclined to relax or deviate from a proper verdict because the defendant is convicted of a crime and has a jail sentence?

Mr. Barshay: I object to the word "proper."

The Court: The question can be put in more direct form and you will more likely be able to get a proper response. The Court does not like the form of the question, because it assumes something which is not on the record. Now, the talesman may be apprised of the question asked by the defense.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Barshay has brought out that Buchalter has been convicted of a past crime and is now serving a sentence.

The Court: Is that on the record, that statement?

Mr. Turkus: I have watched carefully, and I notice the stenographer is taking down every question and answer.

The Court: Well, the Court knows that was asked by [fol. 448] Mr. Barshay in open court in the presence of all the members of the panel, but that does not establish it as of the present examination. You must be careful of that.

Mr. Turkus: In questioning every prospective talesman, Mr. Barshay has addressed a question in which he has directed attention of the prospective juror to the fact that Buchalter has been heretofore convicted of crime and is now serving a long sentence in jail.

Q. I ask you would you be inclined—is your state of mind such you would be inclined to relax or deviate from a proper verdict in the case because the defendant is presently in jail for past crimes, serving a long sentence?

The Court: A past crime. That is too involved to follow.

By the Court:

Q. Would the fact that one of the defendants, Buchalter, is now serving a term of sentence under conviction for another crime, a thing that would cause you to avoid convicting him here if he is proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. No.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. In other words, your state of mind is such that no matter what his situation may be with regard to past crime on this charge of murder in the first degree, you will decide the case on the evidence presented in the courtroom and on nothing else?

Mr. Barshay: I object to the use of the words "past [fol. 449] crime," I asked specifically about two items, and if Mr. Turkus will confine himself to that I have no objection.

The Court: That refers to the conviction that the defendant Buchalter is now serving a sentence on?

Mr. Turkus: Yes.

The Talesman: The answer is yes.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. The defendants are represented by nine lawyers. Buchalter is represented by former Assistant District Attorney Barshay, former Assistant United States Attorney Bertram Wegman, and Mr. Jesse Climenko. Do you know any of those three lawyers representing Buchalter?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone attached to their staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. The defendant Weiss is represented by three lawyers, former General Sessions Judge Talley, do you know him or anyone connected with his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Former Assistant District Attorney Cuff, do you know him or anyone connected with his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Former Assistant United States Attorney Kriendler?

A. No, sir.

Q. Capone is represented by three lawyers, Sidney Rosenthal, Leon Fischbein, and Emanuel Rosenberg; do you know any of those three?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or anyone connected with their staffs?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to the District Attorney, do you know [fol. 450] Judge O'Dwyer, the District Attorney, personally?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know the Assistant District Attorney in charge of this prosecution, Mr. Turkus, or Mr. Klein or Mr. Joseph?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of the District Attorney's staff intimately?

A. Yes.

Q. Who is that?

A. Mr. Helfand.

Q. Mr. Helfand is sitting in the jury box facing the prospective talesmen here. Is that the Mr. Helfand you refer to?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is your association with him an intimate one?

A. He is a relative.

Q. The next question that might suggest itself is this: Would your association or intimacy with Mr. Helfand in anywise preclude you from rendering a just verdict on the evidence in this case?

A. No, sir—conscientiously, it might.

Q. As the defendants are seated in court, have you any prejudice or bias against any of the three?

A. None.

Q. Have you any conscious favor for the District Attorney in the prosecution of the case because of your intimacy with Mr. Helfand?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is your state of mind such that if you were accepted as a juror you could listen to all of the evidence adduced in the court-room, discuss the case with your fellow jurors without rancor and with common sense and understanding, [fol. 451] listen to the arguments of lawyers for the defendants as they draw their inferences from the testimony, listen to the arguments of the prosecutor and the charge of the learned Court on the law, and then decide the case solely and squarely upon the evidence presented in court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if accepted as a juror in the case, will you endeavor to listen to reasonable argument and discussion by the other jurors in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If selected, will you endeavor to do justice in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Assuming that you were accepted as a juror and you did hear all of the evidence in the case and listen to the lawyers for the defense draw their arguments before the jury, listen to the prosecutor and to the Court on the law, discuss the case with the other jurors in the jury room, and then, if your conscience is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that upon all the evidence in the case there are three guilty men at the bar of justice, would you hesitate—would you be fearful—would you be reluctant to say so in your verdict?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: No challenge.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. You volunteered to Mr. Turkus the fact that when it came to reason this case in the jury box—I am not quoting your exact language—your knowledge of Mr. Helfand, subconsciously, might affect your judgment?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 452] Q. Is that what you intended to say?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is based upon your intimate knowledge of Mr. Helfand in connection with the prosecutor of this county?

A. Yes.

Q. And, of course, if that did occur, that would not be fair to any of the defendants, would it?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not intend to be unfair?

A. No, sir.

Q. But subconsciously it might preclude any of the defendants or all of them from receiving at your hands an impartial verdict?

A. Maybe.

Q. So if it came to a question of testimony where the D. A.'s office would contend one thing and the defense another, that knowledge, you volunteered yourself, subconsciously might cause you to lean in the direction of the District Attorney's office?

A. It might.

Q. You are very honest and frank about it?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: On behalf of counsel, we challenge this [fol. 453] talesman for cause.

The Court: Try the challenge.

(The talesman, NORMAN KENDY, residing at 225 Sterling Place, Brooklyn, New York, was then sworn.)

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Now that you are under oath, would you answer the question in the same manner as you did before?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the sum and substance is that, because of your intimate knowledge of Mr. Helfand, an assistant prosecutor engaged in work like Mr. Turkus, if it came to a matter of deciding one way or another, subconsciously, your knowledge of Mr. Helfand would cause you to lean in the direction of the D. A., to the prejudice of the defendants?

A. Subconsciously it might, yes, sir.

Q. When you say "it might," that means that you are absolutely certain that you cannot exclude from your mind that intimate knowledge of Mr. Helfand?

A. No.

Mr. Barshay: We urge the challenge.

The Court: Any more questioning by any counsel?

Mr. Turkus: None by the District Attorney.

The Court: This is purely speculative and fantastic and is a psychological question. The effect of fear—there will normally be resistance to it and a tendency to go in the other direction. There is nothing to it. The challenge is overruled.

[fol. 454] Mr. Barshay: Exception for all counsel for the defense.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. How well do you know Mr. Helfand?

A. He is a member of my family.

Q. A relative?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. May I know how close?
A. A brother-in-law.
Q. You are married to his sister?
A. I am.
Q. And consequently you see him, then?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Often?
A. Quite often.
Q. You have great hope in his career and for his success?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have talked about cases?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. He has discussed some of the work he has done?
A. In a way, yes, sir, an offhand way.
Q. Naturally you pay close attention to the progress he in making with respect to work in the D. A.'s office?
A. Yes.
Q. Not only do you talk to him, but I take it you talk to your own wife about your brother-in-law's progress in the office and his work?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. So it is more than a subconscious feeling; isn't that so?
A. It is according to the way—maybe to draw the line.
Q. It would be hard for you to draw the line?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. It would be like rooting for the team on which your [fol. 455] brother-in-law is playing?
A. That is a good analogy, yes, sir.
Q. And that would be to the prejudice of these defendants?
A. It might.
Q. You are the one who volunteered "it might"?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I did not bring that out of you at all?
A. No, sir.
Q. You say "it might." Is that based upon the fact that you know the type of work your brother-in-law, Mr. Helfand, is doing?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. And also on the knowledge you gained from talking to Mr. Helfand about the type of work he was doing?

A. He did not discuss it.

Q. You followed that work?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Especially the work he has done very recently, before the summer session?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So you can honestly say that it will affect your judgment in this case?

A. It might, yes, sir.

Q. You still say, "It might." Can't you make sure about it?

A. Well, I would weigh the evidence and listen to all of the facts in the case, but when it came to a final conclusion I can say it might weigh because of the fact I am of close relationship.

Q. To the prejudice of the defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that if the District Attorney's office contended a proposition and we argued conversely, and it became a question of good faith sometimes with respect to the [fol. 456] District Attorney's office—I don't say it will, but if it does—your judgment would lean in the direction of the District Attorney's office?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: I press my challenge for cause.

Mr. Turkus: I do not wish to seem presumptuous in rising at this time, but there have been some matters brought out that were not brought out on the prior challenge. I can readily understand it may be embarrassing to this prospective talesman because of the relationship with one of the prosecutor's staff—he being a brother-in-law.

The Court: Does that mean that Mr. Helfand is connected with the prosecution of this case?

Mr. Turkus: Not this present case, no, sir.

The Court: Supposing you, Mr. Turkus, brought out in examining talesmen that the brother-in-law was a lawyer who at times defended criminal cases other than this, would that be ground for challenge?

Mr. Turkus: It might not be a technical ground, but I certainly feel he would have no place on the jury.

The Court: You can challenge him peremptorily if you wish; the Court is not allowing this panel to be weeded out any more than is necessary under challenges for cause.

Mr. Barshay: May I respectfully except to your Honor's [fol. 457] comment.

The Court: The law allows a very liberal number of peremptory challenges, and they must be used in a proper case.

Mr. Barshay: May I comment upon your Honor's statement that Mr. Helfand is not directly connected with this prosecution? Every Assistant District Attorney is connected with every prosecution that goes on. Mr. Helfand has prepared and prosecuted cases in the office concerning which your Honor knows but which I shall not name; I do not know whether he had any part in the preparation of this case or on a collateral matter having something to do with this case.

The Court: Have you any such information?

Mr. Barshay: I cannot give it to you because I do not know what goes on in the District Attorney's office, but every member of the staff is part of this transaction as much as Mr. Turkus is.

The Court: Are you through?

Mr. Barshay: Yes.

The Court: The Court's ruling is unchanged.

Mr. Turkus: There is something in what Mr. Barshay says about the preparation of prosecutions, but I do not want to make any more specific reference to it.

The Court: The policy of the Court is this: The Court [fol. 458] is not going to sit from now until Doomsday, spending the taxpayers' money, in trying to save counsel from spending peremptory challenges. The Court will sustain, according to its judgment, a proper challenge for cause. The Court has overruled this challenge, and that stands.

Mr. Barshay: May we respectfully except to your Honor's comment.

The Court: If the Court follows any other policy it will undoubtedly string out the trial of this case as far as the selection of a jury is concerned. It has already consumed more time than is understandable by many people.

Mr. Turkus: May I make my position clear?

The Court: I think the defense made it clear by letting the matter stand as it is, unless you wish to exercise a peremptory challenge.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Have you ever gone out on homicide cases with Mr. Helfand?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has he ever been called from your home while he was on homicide duty?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: May the Court make a suggestion?

Mr. Barshay: Yes.

The Court: I think, in the interest of fairness, if it is [fol. 459] reasonable to assume the relationship has caused discussions and family talks about this case or related cases, then the Court will apply another challenge so we may hear about the family discussions in this matter.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Do you remember the last prosecution that Mr. Helfand personally conducted?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was much discussion in your family concerning it, wasn't there?

The Court: I withdraw everything I said, because instead of facilitating the selection of a jury, it simply leads to wrangling. The Court will say nothing more, but will be an observer.

Mr. Barshay: I am handicapped through circumstances from asking questions I would like to ask, but I thought your Honor knew these things. I cannot ask them directly.

The Court: Use your own judgment.

Mr. Barshay: That is what I am doing; Mr. Turkus understands it and agrees with me.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. There was much discussion, wasn't there, in the family circle with your brother-in-law concerning cases which your brother-in-law frequently handled?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I do not want you to mention the name of any [fol. 460] defendant, you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you did hear the name of Reles?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did hear the name of Tannenbaum?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You did hear the name of Mrs. Walker?
A. I don't recall that.
Q. You did hear the name of Mr. Bernstein?
A. I don't recall.
Q. You did hear a lot of names which you have heard here while you were sitting in the rear of the court-room?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In other words, there was some similarity?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you know, when you were sitting there, your memory was refreshed as to what had been discussed at your home?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When you heard those questions?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And that is why you said that subconsciously it might prejudice you against these defendants?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, now, isn't it clear, subconsciously or otherwise, you will be prejudiced against these defendants if these people do testify and their testimony becomes an issue in this case, and their credibility becomes an issue in the case—you will be inclined to favor their side of the case because you have already heard the substance of the stories about like cases?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And in that way you would be precluded from render-[fol. 461] ing fair judgment on behalf of these defendants?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You are honest about that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You do not want to be a juror who is not fair or equitable to both sides?
A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: I renew my challenge for cause.
The Court: Try the challenge.

Norman Kendy, sworn:

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. You would repeat the same answers under oath?
A. Yes, sir.

The Court: The trouble, Mr. Barshay, is that the answers were put in the witness's mouth by you.

Mr. Barshay: I take an exception to your Honor's comment, most respectfully.

The Court: Will you please proceed and try the challenge?

Mr. Barshay: I am finished.

The Court: Any questions to be asked by other counsel?

Mr. Talley: No, sir, we join in the challenge.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. In making the responses you did to Mr. Barshay, did you make those in full candor and fairness?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you honestly feel that because of your relationship with Mr. Helfand and because of your familiarity with cer- [fol. 462] tain aspects of the case, you could not be fair to the defendants on trial?

A. Yes.

Q. That is your honest opinion?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Turkus: I join with the defense in the challenge.

The Court: The Court is forced into the position of sustaining the challenge, although it has no basis whatever. The talesman's previous answers were all given on the basis of psychological speculation. Then answers were put in his mouth by both sides and willing assent to the suggestion that he is biased. The Court cannot try both sides. You may go. I have sustained one of the challenges only.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Samuel K. Cone, residing at 405 Woodbine Street, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you live on Woodbine Street?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that in the Ridgewood section of Bro yn?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you lived there for a number of years?

A. Seven.

Q. Prior to that time did you reside in Brooklyn?

A. Yes.

Q. In the same district or in some other district?

A. Wierfield Street, about ten blocks away.

[fol. 463] Q. Is that also known as the Ridgewood district?

A. I believe so.

Q. There have been many questions asked of prospective talesmen, some of which you may not be familiar with, so that I am obliged to reiterate them specifically to each prospective juror, so I know you will have patience with us as we go on with these matters. Has your business brought you in contact with the Brownsville or East New York area of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has it in the past?

A. No, sir.

Q. So you have no connection, then, directly or indirectly, with any person or firm in that area?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that also hold true with respect to the garment district in Manhattan?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know no one there, individual, or any member of a corporation?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have had no business with them one way or the other, directly or indirectly?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to the Brooklyn waterfront, would you give the same response?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any contact, directly or indirectly, with any firm or any manufacturers in the clothing district, or with any clothing trucking industry?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the penal law of the State of New York?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge, [fol. 464] namely, murder in the first degree, which would impair your service as a juryman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you, if selected, permit the question of punishment to be argued by any member of the jury?

A. No.

Q. I will repeat, would you, if accepted as a juror, permit any other juror to argue the question of punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you heretofore had the benefit of listening to a Judge's charge on the law in a criminal case?

A. Yes.

Q. If accepted, will you take the law without qualification and implicitly from the trial judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you take that law in all of its aspects?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you are charged on the law of reasonable doubt, will you give the benefit of that doctrine to the defendants at the bar?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Judge will charge you in substance that the burden is upon the prosecution to establish the guilt of the defendants beyond a reasonable doubt. Will you follow that instruction of law and apply it to the evidence in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. The Judge will likewise charge you that the defendants are presumed innocent until their guilt has been established beyond a reasonable doubt. Will you apply that presumption of innocence and give the benefit of it to the defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 465] Q. If after you have heard all the evidence in the case you are satisfied that the prosecution has overcome the presumption of innocence and has satisfied your mind beyond a reasonable doubt there are three guilty men at the bar of justice, would you have any hesitation in saying so?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you have any fear or reluctance about your verdict because of any impairment whatever?

A. No, sir.

Q. There are various names concerning which I want to ascertain if you have any familiarity with. For example, do you know or do you have any connection with any officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Potlofsky at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or that of Murray Weinstein, manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local No. 4?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Samuel Katz?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Bruno Belia, organizer for the Amalgamated, does that mean anything to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or that of Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had any business or other connections, directly or indirectly, with any officials of the Teamsters Union or Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers Helpers Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Bellanca at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Abraham Beckerman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any familiarity in your mind with the name of [fol. 466] Max Silverman or Wolfie Goldis?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any familiarity with the name of William or Willie Alberts, at one time a bondsman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Emanuel Buchalter, or an individual named Phillie Buchalter, sometimes known as Philip Kowas?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do the names of Bellanca and Tosca suggest anything to your mind?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or that of Terry Burns?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any individual in the automobile business by the name of Weiss in the Park Slope Section of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. The defendants are represented by various counsel. I have read their names before: Former Assistant District Attorney Barshay, former United States Attorney Weg-man, and Mr. Jesse Climenko, representing the defendant Buchalter. Do you know any of those three gentlemen or anyone connected with their office staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. The defendant Weiss is represented by former Judge Talley, former Assistant District Attorney Cuff, and former Assistant United States Attorney Kriendler. Do you know any of those three?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know intimately any member of the bar who practices criminal law as a specialty?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Sidney Rosenthal, Mr. Fischbein, or Mr. Rosenberg, who represent the defendant Capone?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 467] Q. Or anyone connected with their office?

A. No, sir.

Q. The section in which you live, is that part of the Borough of Brooklyn?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is not in Queens County?

A. No, sir.

Q. I ask you that because there may be a disqualification.

A. It is right on the border line.

By the Court:

Q. You are between Wilson and what?

A. Knickerbocker or Ridgewood Place. It is a short street, about three blocks long, one block off Wyckoff.

Q. Just where the City Line crosses?

A. Yes, sir, Wyckoff Avenue.

Q. You are a supervisor of what?

A. Telephone repair.

Q. For whom?

A. The Western Electric.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you know the former prosecutor of this County, Mr. Geoghan, or any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer, or any member of the District Attorney's staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it you do not know Assistant District Attorney Turkus or Mr. Klein?

A. No, sir.

Q. (The Court:) What concern did you say you were employed by?

A. The Western Electric.

By the Court:

Q. Do you belong to a local club up there in the Bushwick [fol. 468] section?

A. No.

Q. Do you know of any local club?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know a place at Broadway and Woodbine Street called the Wickwack Club? That is quite some distance away from you.

A. No, sir.

Q. You never went in there?

A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know a man known as "Commissioner" up there?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. In this transaction, do you have any bias against the prosecution for the use of accomplice testimony, if employed?

A. Why, yes, I would say yes; that type is revolting to me; that is my candid opinion. I am truthful when I say that to you. I am opposed to accepting any of the testimony of a man of that kind, of that nature.

Q. Does that prejudice and bias go to the point where under no circumstances you would accept testimony of an accomplice?

A. I would say yes to you.

Mr. Turkus: Challenge for cause.

The Court: Try the challenge.

SAMUEL K. CONE, residing at 405 Woodbine Street, in the Borough of Brooklyn, was then sworn.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Prior to being sworn as a proposed talesman, you made response to questions I put to you. I ask you now, did you make those responses in full frankness and full candor?

—. ——.

Q. That is your state of mind?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You used the word "revolting." That was one of the [fol. 469] words you used?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You stated, didn't you, and do you reiterate under oath, that under no circumstances would you accept testimony of accomplices?

A. That is right.

Q. And your bias and prejudice against the prosecution which employed the use of such testimony is such as to preclude you from rendering a just verdict in the case?

A. Yes.

Mr. Barshay: No questions from any counsel.

The Court: The inquiry is not sufficient. You did not inform the talesman as to the law on corroboration, as to how he would feel.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I take it, Mr. Cone, you have heard the other talesmen questioned in connection with the degree of corroboration required?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have those instructions of law in mind when you made the responses now?

A. I don't quite follow you.

Q. Did you hear when the other talesmen were in the box where you are now and being questioned, a discussion of the law of corroboration?

A. Corroboration?

Q. Did you know and were you aware of the fact that testimony of an accomplice must be corroborated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew that when you made your answers to me?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you of the same opinion, that, regardless of cor- [fol. 470] roboration, you cannot render a verdict free from prejudice because of your feeling against accomplice testimony?
A. I repeat, regardless.

Q. You have a feeling against accomplice testimony that nobody could overcome?
A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Do you realize that in the prosecution of cases District Attorneys use accomplices at times?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Supposing there was a hold-up in your place, and supposing one of the accomplices spilled the beans, so to speak, and that was corroborated, would your view be just the same, that the case should go out of the window?
A. I would say yes.

Q. I want to find out if you are trying to get out of jury service.
A. I am honest.

Q. Please answer my question directly.
A. Would I accept the testimony?

Q. You heard what I said.
A. I would say no.

Q. I don't know what you mean by "No."
A. I would not accept it.

Mr. Climenko: I object to the question.
The Court: I will reframe the question.

Q. Supposing you were interested in the prosecution of a case, a criminal case in which you yourself were the complaining witness, would you want the case to be thrown out [fol. 471] simply because one of the participants testified as a witness for the prosecution?

Mr. Barshay: I object.
The Court: All right, objection sustained. I am sustaining the objection because I don't think the man is mentally fitted to sit on a jury.

EMANUEL CAMACHI, residing at 647 56th Street, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you live in the Bay Ridge section?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you lived in the Bay Ridge section for a number of years?

A. Yes, sir, about twenty-odd.

Q. I take it by now you are familiar with the nature of the charge in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You understand, don't you, that the defendants at the bar are charged with the crime of murder in the first degree? Is there anything about the nature of that charge which would prevent you from being a fair and impartial juror and rendering a conscientious and just verdict?

A. No, sir.

Q. Am I correct when I assume your state of mind is such you have no scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. If selected, you will automatically become foreman by [fol. 472] virtue of your first selection, and if selected as foreman, would you permit anybody to discuss the question of punishment in arriving at a just verdict?

A. No, sir.

Q. If selected, will you listen to reasonable argument and discussion by the other jurors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. These question I repeat. They are all necessary and I must go into them again with each juror. You understand the reason when I tell you it is mandatory on both sides to ask certain questions of talesmen, it is mandatory with the prosecution and with the defense. Is there anything concerning which I have not made inquiry which would affect your ability to sit as a fair and just juror in the case?

A. No, sir, none whatever.

Q. You are listed on this trestle board as a sales clerk. Is that with some firm or corporation?

A. Yes, sir, R. H. Macy & Company.

Q. Have you been employed there for a number of years?

A. Six years.

Q. Prior to that were you in a different line of business?
A. Yes, sir, I was working in the Chase National Bank.

By the Court:

Q. In what department?
A. Tellers Note Department, such position I had.
Q. You are a Mexican?
A. No, sir, Spanish extraction.
Q. American-born?
A. No, sir, British-born, Spanish extraction.
[fol. 473] Q. May I ask what colony?
A. Antigua, West Indies.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you heretofore had the benefit of listening to a judge charge the jury on the law, that means to tell the jury what the law is?
A. No, sir.
Q. If accepted as a juror, will you take the law in every respect solely and exclusively from the trial judge?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. (The Court:) You are a naturalized citizen?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Since your name appeared on this special panel as a prospective talesman, did anybody speak to you about the case?
A. Not as I know of.
Q. I take it your answer means nobody has discussed the merits of the case with you?
A. That is right.
Q. Are you in sympathy with law enforcement?
A. Absolutely.
Q. May I assume, then, at no time in your past business experience you have had any contact with firms in the Brownsville or East New York area?
A. That is right.
Q. Is that true with respect to the garment district in Manhattan?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is it likewise true respecting the clothing industry in Manhattan?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has business brought you in any contact, directly or indirectly, with the clothing cutters or teamsters of any kind, nature, or description?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 474] By the Court:

Q. You live on the block north of Sunset Park?

A. No, sir, it is quite a ways from Sunset Park. That is between 6th and 7th that I live.

Q. Sunset Park is between 5th and 6th?

A. Yes, sir. I am quite a ways away from it.

Q. You are just west of Shore Road extension?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am just trying to get the section.

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. May I proceed with the thought that you have had no connection, directly or indirectly, business or social or otherwise, with any firms in the district and the industries I enumerated?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you have any business connection at any time with any officials in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you selling specialties for Macy's?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it you have no familiarity with the name of Murray Weinstein or Samuel Katz, officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does the name Bruno Belia or Salvatore Marazzano suggest anything to your mind?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are completely unfamiliar with those names?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is that true with respect to the name of Philip [fol. 475] Orlofsky, at one time manager of the Clothing Cutters Union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know any of the officials of Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers Helpers Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is a union in the clothing industry, in the delivery of clothes?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or anyone connected with the Teamsters Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with the flour trucking union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is anything suggested to your mind by the names of Max Silverman and Wolfie Goldis?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Willie Alberts, one-time a bondsman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything suggested to your mind by the name of Emanuel Buchalter?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Phillie Buchalter, sometimes known as Kowas?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything suggested to your mind by the mention of the names Bellanca and Tosca?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Terry Burns?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know the former District Attorney of this county, Mr. Geoghan?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it you do not know Mr, Barshay, former Assistant District Attorney, who is one of the lawyers for Buchalter?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you know Mr. Wegman, former Assistant United States Attorney, or Mr. Climenko, or anyone attached to the law offices of these gentlemen?

[fol. 476] A. No, sir.

Q. Does that hold true with respect to Judge Talley, and former Assistant District Attorney Cuff, and former United States Attorney Murray Kriendler, who represent the defendant Weiss?

A. That is right.

Q. With respect to Capone, who is likewise represented by three lawyers, Mr. Rosenthal, Mr. Fischbein and Mr. Rosenberg; do you know any of those three gentlemen?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar who specializes in the business of criminal cases?

A. No, sir.

Q. As you sit in this jury box, is your mind open and free to receive the evidence in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it you sit there without any prejudice against any of the defendants at the bar?

A. That is right.

Q. You are here to deal out even-handed justice to them and render a just and conscientious verdict in consonance with the evidence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. We have had some discussion with other prospective jurors as to whether or not they have any bias or prejudice against the prosecution for the use of accomplice testimony. Have you heard any of those discussions with the other jurors?

A. Yes, sir, I have heard them.

Q. Have you any prejudice or bias against the District Attorney who breaks a case from the inside?

A. No, sir.

Q. And uses the testimony of accomplices against the other defendants in the case?

[fol. 477] A. No, sir.

Mr. Barshay: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you will listen with care and caution, and carefully to the testimony of the accomplice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you appreciate at times that even bad men can tell the truth?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And that will be your job?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if the prosecutor not only satisfies you that one of the accomplices and one of the co-participants with these defendants in the commission of the crime is telling the truth, and he also furnishes independent evidence from another source which tends to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime, I take it you have no prejudice against that type of case?

Mr. Barshay: I object.

Mr. Turkus: I will withdraw it in that form.

By the Court:

Q. If the Court should charge you not to accept testimony of any accomplice unless you find it to be sufficiently corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime, will you follow that instruction?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 478] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I take it you will follow the instructions of the Court in every respect as to the law and that, conscientiously, you will endeavor to apply the principles of law which the trial justice gives, to the facts in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And use common sense and experience, and common knowledge, every-day business knowledge, in deciding the single issue in the case, the guilt or the innocence of the men at the bar of justice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When accepting principles of law, will you take the principles of law the Judge will give you with respect to any defense any specific defendant may invoke? For example, should a defendant use the defense of an alibi, that is that he was not present at the time the crime was committed, will you take the law from the Judge with respect to that type of defense?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you sit in the box, have you any bias or prejudice against expert testimony?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is the testimony of ballistic experts, medical examiners, handwriting examiners, whatever expert testimony there may be?

A. No, sir.

Q. In questioning every prospective talesman, Mr. Barshay brought it to the attention of prospective jurors that his client Buchalter has been convicted of a crime and is serving a long sentence. Would you be inclined, is your state of mind such that you would relax or deviate from your [fol. 479] duty as a juror in deciding a murder case simply because the defendant is in jail for some other crime?

A. No, sir.

Q. And on this charge, murder first, you will decide that, if accepted, on the evidence in the case, regardless of where Buchalter may be?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the Judge charges you that the defendant in a criminal case has no burden of proof, that he may sit still and do nothing that the burden is with the prosecution at all times to establish the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, will you accept the instructions of law and endeavor conscientiously to apply the same to the facts in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if accepted as a juror, will you listen to the evidence in the case, the arguments of the defense lawyers in the case, drawing the inferences they draw from the testimony, and to the prosecutor, and then to the charge of the learned Court on the law, and discuss the case without rancor or bitterness, with common sense and understanding with the other jurors, and, having done all of that, and your mind is satisfied that these defendants at the bar have been proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will you endeavor conscientiously to arrive at a just verdict?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Would you have any fear, reluctance or embarrassment if their guilt is proven to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt, in announcing that verdict in open court?

[fol. 480] A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: No challenge for cause.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. We were not able to hear you with respect to your occupation. Will you repeat it?

A. I am connected with R. H. Macy & Company.

Q. Have you ever been a juror?

A. Never.

Q. Have you ever been called as a special juror?

A. No, sir; this is the first time.

Q. Have you ever been the victim of a crime?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you read about this case?

A. Yes, sir, to a certain extent, but I have not read with the idea to form an opinion; I have read by way of news.

Q. Whether you read it for that purpose or not, will you tell me, what did you read, and in which paper?

A. I read several. I read the News, sometimes the Mirror, the Post, the Times.

Q. In the Mirror, more particularly, there was a series of articles referring to some of the complainants having "come across."

A. I think I have read one article.

Q. Was it since you have been called?

A. Yes, sir, since I have been called.

Q. I notice his Honor admonished prospective jurors not to read those articles in the Daily Mirror, and at this time may I make the observation that on the very front seat in [fol. 481] this court-room, where jurors were assigned to sit, there is a copy of the Daily Mirror. I make that observation for the record.

Mr. Turkus: Let the offensive paper be removed.

The Court: It is directly behind counsel. Maybe one of your colleagues was reading it.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. At any rate, you are not going to form any opinion by a newspaper?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you form any opinion by virtue of that you read?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you determine the accuracy of what you read by reading it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you read about the defendants in any other paper?

A. I may have read the headlines but I did not read it to gather an impression; I read all the News headlines.

Q. Sometimes a person does not read for a purpose, nevertheless, the same purpose is accomplished. You may not have formed an opinion, but did you form one whether you wanted to or not?

A. I don't believe I did; I am positive I did not.

Q. Can you tell me now that you do not know anything at all about what you read with respect to its truth or accuracy?

A. I cannot recall what I did read in the first article.

Q. You won't say now. You don't even recall what you read?

A. I will not say I recall everything I read; I certainly may recall some parts.

[fol. 482] Q. Did you believe some parts you did read?

A. No, sir, I would not say so definitely.

Q. May I know how long ago you read it?

A. Well, I read—after I came in here, because I knew nothing about this case before I came in, so I really read that after I came in and knew what case I was on.

Q. While waiting to be called, you heard other prospective jurors being questioned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that refresh your recollection as to what you read?

A. Yes, sir, the outlines I would say, yes.

Q. Are you impressed with the truth of what you read?

Mr. Turkus: I object to the form of the question. I think counsel has pursued that point sufficiently; the prospective talesman has twice reiterated he can hardly recall what he read and he made no point as to the truth or non-truth of the article.

The Court: Objection overruled.

By the Court:

Q. Have any of the questions that were put to the other jurors brought to your mind what you read?

A. Well, talking over will do that, because I did not know nothing about the case. I may say I heard it. I may say I formed some impression, but no definite impression.

Q. Can you now say whether you have any impression?

A. I would say no.

[fol. 483] Q. Do you say no?

A. I would say no, I have formed no opinion or definite impression against any of the defendants.

Q. You say "definite." Have you formed any opinion one way or the other?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure about it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any speeches concerning the defendants or the case any place at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. On the radio or in a club?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Turkus speak about crime, generally?

A. No, sir, except I heard, I heard him talk, but this is the first time I heard him speak.

Q. Did you ever hear any other prosecutor speak about crime generally in any organization?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you prejudiced by the fact that the defendants are represented by nine counsel?

A. No, sir.

Q. No more than you would have a prejudice against the prosecution because before Mr. Turkus became an Assistant District Attorney he was one of the most eminent criminal lawyers in Brooklyn?

A. I would not know that because I did not know Mr. Turkus at that time.

Mr. Turkus: May I rise humbly and bow to Mr. Barshay.

Q. That has nothing to do with the case at all, isn't that so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody at all connected with the waterfront in New York?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 484] Q. Did you know Joseph Rosen?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear the name?

A. Not as I recall.

Q. Mr. Turkus read a list of names to you. They mean nothing to you, you said?

A. That is right.

Q. And unless there is testimony in the case connecting them with the case itself, you will disregard the names completely?

A. That is right.

Q. As a matter of fact, you will discard them right now, the same as if I asked you if you knew Jack Dempsey or Gene Tunney?

A. I would not say that, because, to reverse the position there, Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney I would like to hear, I would be very much interested.

Q. But they have nothing to do with this case; that is what I mean.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The reading of the names themselves means nothing?

A. No, sir.

Q. For example, do you know Emanuel Buchalter?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name of Emanuel Buchalter or Louis Buchalter familiar to you, or do you know them?

A. No, sir.

Q. He mentioned also the name of Philip Buchalter, who uses the name of Philip Kowas—his right name is Philip Kowas, his name is not Buchalter; he is a step-brother of the defendant.

A. That I do not know.

Q. He has no alias whatever; you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 485] Q. And unless there is some connection with the testimony, you will pay no attention to the reading of those names, Potofsky and all the rest?

A. That is right.

Q. Are you a member of any political club?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you propose partaking in this coming campaign or contributing to it?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have no interest in it at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that this is a battle between the prosecution and defense counsel, and you will not find any fault with Mr. Turkas when he fights here, and you will not find any fault with us when we fight here?

A. That is right.

Q. You will take into consideration the number of witnesses that the prosecution has, if they outnumber the defense witnesses in any respect?

A. No, sir.

Q. If they call fifty and you don't believe them, it has nothing to do with the fact that we call none?

A. That is right.

Q. In other words, numbers do not count?

A. Numbers do not count.

Q. As you sat here listening to prospective jurors being chosen, did you form an impression which favored either side, one way or the other?

A. No, sir, I have not, because I do not know what the facts are and I cannot decide one way or the other.

Q. Irrespective of the facts, have you formed an impres- [fol. 486] sion which favors the prosecution or the defense?

A. In this particular issue, no.

Q. You know the only issue in this case is the accusation on this piece of paper called an indictment—no other issue—and when the question was asked if you would have a prejudice against my client, Mr. Buchalter, because he is now serving a long sentence, that has not been asked for any purpose except a prejudice against him in your mind, should his credibility become an issue in this case.

A. No, sir.

Q. I am not seeking any sympathy, because I am not trying him on that issue; I am only trying him on the issue before me. We want no sympathy, but we must be sure we get no prejudice from any person in the court-room.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the only reason that question was asked. Do you know any of the names mentioned in this indictment?

A. No, sir. If I heard them maybe I would recall them.

Q. You do not know any of them just as you sat here and heard the jurors asked?

A. I never heard the names.

Q. You don't know them?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know the deceased, Joseph Rosen?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear about the case when it first happened?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone who sat on the Grand Jury that first investigated the matter?

A. No, sir.

Q. His Honor shall charge you that this is a piece of paper [fol. 487] known as an accusation, or indictment, that it has no meaning except it starts a trial; will you follow that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It has no probative force whatever; it proves nothing.

A. I understand that.

Q. When the defendant said, "Not guilty," he put something at issue for you to determine.

Mr. Turkus: I object to counsel going into an extended discourse on the law with the prospective juror, because knowledge of law is not an essential requisite for jury service.

The Court: The objection has to be to a specific question. Objection overruled.

Q. If the Court shall tell you what I just said to you, will you follow that?

A. What is that?

Q. That this has no probative force whatever.

A. That is right.

Q. And if the Court shall tell you the plea of not guilty puts the accusation in issue for you to decide, will you follow that law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the Court shall tell you that with every accusation there comes a presumption of innocence in favor of the defendant and that you must apply this to him throughout the stages of the trial, will you follow that law implicitly?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. While you are deliberating, that presumption is still with the defendant, the presumption of innocence—it is a [fol. 488] substantial right that goes to every defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will carry out that law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because when the District Attorney asked you if you believed in law enforcement, you said yes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But that does not mean only one side of law enforcement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Law enforcement also includes the right which is given to the defendant, demanding of him nothing at all, but demanding from the prosecution proof, the burden of proof, beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I shall not try to tell you what reasonable doubt is, but the Court shall define it, and you will follow it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you hear it elsewhere, or you shall hear it elsewhere between now and the time you are chosen, you will disregard any other definition except his Honor's?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you follow instructions if his Honor should tell you the defendant need not even explain a single accusation against him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or deny any facts urged against him on the witness stand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The burden is only with the prosecution and shall never shift, never shift to the defendant in any respect. You will follow that law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as long as there is honestly in your mind a rea- [fol. 489] sonable doubt with respect to the defendants' guilt, or any of the defendants' guilt, you will courageously urge it in his behalf?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if there is a reasonable doubt arising out of the evidence, no matter how many people on the jury may disagree with you because they see things differently, you will have the courage to stick to your opinion if it is based upon the evidence; you will be reasonable, you will hear argument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And unless you are persuaded by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, not from the argument, you will not yield?

Mr. Turkus: I object.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Turkus: I don't want any foreman to go into the box misguided; he must listen to common sense. May the jury understand that that question was excluded by the Court?

The Court: Yes.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Of course, you understood that; I do not want you to be stubborn; I want you to listen to the evidence and reason with your fellow jurors, argue with them and try to make them see the light, or they may try to see the light. But in the end, the only place you shall look for reasonable doubt is from the witness chair?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if, from the witness chair, and from all the [fol. 490] evidence given in the case, you shall feel that the District Attorney has failed to prove our client guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, you will say so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You owe no duty to either side?

A. No, sir.

Q. You agree to do a juror's duty, that is, give both sides an eminently fair and square trial?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Turkus has asked you about accomplice testimony. Would you follow the law on that point as given by his Honor if he shall charge you that you, as a juror, must accept the testimony of an accomplice with caution, if you accept it at all?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That will be your job to decide, first, is he telling the truth, won't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you will weigh it to know whether he is telling the truth?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will weigh it very carefully before you shall accept a person's testimony, if he says he is an accomplice in the commission of a crime?

A. Yes, sir, very, very carefully.

Q. Would you use, in weighing the truth or falsity of his testimony, the fact that there was an occasion when the same accomplice, under oath, in another court, when asked about his being an accomplice in this case, said that he was not; would you use that in weighing the truth of his story?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to.

The Court: Objection sustained.

[fol. 491] Mr. Turkus: I ask the jurors be told to exclude that kind of a question that is made to one juror.

The Court: Yes; no specific reference to that.

Q. If, in addition to the admission of this person that he is an accomplice, you also learn from the witness stand when he is on it that he is a thief, that he was a convicted thief and a burglar, and he led a life of crime, would you consider that very closely in accepting his testimony?

A. I would only consider the evidence I heard and if it is corroborated.

Q. If the witness is shown to be a man of bad character, rather than a man of good character, would you take that into consideration in determining whether he is worthy of belief?

A. No, sir, I would not take that; I would have to hear the whole testimony so I could form an opinion whether this man was telling the truth or was not.

By the Court:

Q. You know all kinds of witnesses take the stand and some discredit themselves; you are entitled to know whether a man is a good or a bad man. Now, if a witness is shown to be a man who is dishonest and generally of bad character, would you take that into consideration in determining whether he is worthy of belief?

A. I would take that to a certain extent, but I would have to hear the evidence to decide the truth.

Q. When it came to the end of the case, to decide it, would you take a man's reputation, good or bad, into consideration [fol. 492] in determining whether or not he tells the truth?

A. That I would find out in the course of the trial, whether he is telling the truth or not.

Q. How about his character?

A. That would not enter into the question as far as this case is concerned. As far as the testimony in this case is concerned, the man may be still a bad man and yet able to tell the truth.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. You said a man's character would have nothing to do with this case? Did I hear you correctly?

A. No, sir, I did not say it has nothing to do, as far as his testimony is concerned.

Q. You say as far as the man's testimony is concerned his character has nothing to do with it?

A. That is right, his testimony.

Q. In other words, it would not matter to you if a man takes the stand and admits he is a participant in a murder and that, in addition to that, he has led all his life a life of crime, burglary, robbery, and attempted murder; all those things you would not consider with respect to whether or not that man is telling the truth?

A. I would say that if that man told the truth on the witness stand and it is corroborated substantially, I would have to take it as the truth. I cannot consider a man's character, criminal or otherwise; I am not considering that question.

By the Court:

[fol. 493] Q. Specifically, supposing the Court should charge you that as to testimony of that witness you must consider character?

A. Then I would have to pay attention to the Court.

Q. And that if the witness is shown to have committed crime, you would consider that?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. In other words, had an idea other than his Honor as to the law?

Mr. Turkus: Objected to.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Q. You did tell the Court that if he charged you that you must take into consideration the man's character when he gives testimony, you would follow that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But before the Court put that question to you, you did give me the answer about the fact that his character would have no bearing at all on his ability to tell the truth?

Mr. Turkus: I don't think that has been elicited at all.

The Court: There is no use in arguing about what was said some questions back. All of us get confused at times as to our own mental reactions, but when it comes to the trial the testimony reaction is what governs us. This gentleman seems to me to be a little confused but his general attitude toward obtaining the truth so far has been fairly satisfactory.

[fol. 494] By Mr. Barshay:

Q. I am trying to elicit from you if you could be a fair juror from the beginning.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the Court shall tell you you must take into consideration the motive of a man when he testifies against another, will you follow that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you shall search, as a juror, Why is this fellow saying, "I am part and parcel of this thing"? What is he going to gain by such testimony? Won't you say that to yourself?

A. I suppose I would.

Q. There must be no supposing. Do you promise you would if the Court shall so tell you, that you have a right and duty to look into the motive or hope of reward for any person's testimony in this case no matter who he is; is that clear?

A. Yes.

Q. You agree to do that if you are chosen?

A. Yes, I will go by the Judge's direction.

Q. Assuming, for the sake of argument, I am correctly stating that the Court shall say in substance that, will you follow it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is no doubt about it?

A. No doubt.

Q. You said you believed in the enforcement of criminal law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is for the benefit of any defendant or separate defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 495] Q. Of course, if you do not believe an accomplice and you reject his testimony, you will have the courage to acquit?

Mr. Turkus: I object; he cannot assume what the state of proof is.

Mr. Barshay: I said, "if."

The Court: As I understand it, if he does not believe a man he will have the courage to say so.

Mr. Turkus: That is all right; I am sorry.

Q. There has been talk about corroboration. It must be corroboration which tends to connect our client, Mr. Buchalter, with the commission of this crime; you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, it does not mean if a man takes the stand and says a person was shot at such a place and time and along came the police and found the body as the person described it; that does not connect our client with the commission of the crime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There must be independent evidence furnished by the District Attorney?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Coming down to independent evidence, that comes from a man who himself on the witness stand, under oath, and probably after direct examination of the District Attorney in the case,——

Mr. Turkus: May we have the jury instructed to disregard that comment?

Mr. Barshay: I withdraw it.

[fol. 496] Q. Will you look into the reputation and character of those people who furnish so-called independent evidence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if one says, "I committed eleven murders," you will take his testimony with caution?

A. That is right.

Q. And in addition to that, he said, "I once committed perjury," you will still use more caution?

A. Yes.

Q. And if he goes along and tells you that all his life he has led a life of crime,—if he tells you those things out of his own mouth,—more caution you shall use in accepting his testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. And if, adding all of the testimony, you find one reason for doubt and the Court says you must give it to the defendant, you will courageously say so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is there any reason in your mind which you can advance why you cannot render a verdict here that reflects the truth with respect to the defendant Buchalter?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are free of all prejudice against him?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Is there any member of your family who studied law?

A. He is not in the United States.

Q. Is there any intimate friend of yours with whom you have ever discussed criminal law?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any business associate with whom you ever discussed criminal law?

A. No, sir.

Q. So now your mind is ready to accept whatever law there is only from Judge Taylor?

[fol. 497] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Faithfully and honestly?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. These three defendants are being tried together, and each one is entitled to a separate and distinct verdict; do you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you agree with that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, if the evidence does not convince you beyond a reasonable doubt as to one or more you will say so, irrespective of how you feel about the other evidence with respect to the other defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If testimony is given here concerning one defendant but it has nothing to do with the other, even though this jury was prolonged several weeks, you would try to retain in your mind and memory the testimony as it is binding upon the given defendant and you will not use it against any other defendant unless and until his Honor says you must; you will not mix them up?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything in your business connection at all which will prevent you from giving your time and attention to a long and protracted trial?

A. Not as I know of.

Q. If the Court in its discretion should cause you to be locked up in a hotel, you would not in any wise let that prejudice you against any defendant?

A. No, sir.

Q. We have nothing to do with that; you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 498] Q. Then you are ready to render an individual judgment, if you are chosen, with respect to our client?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. No doubt about that?

A. No doubt about it.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You say you are working for Macy's?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been with Macy's?

A. About six years.

Q. Prior to that you were with whom?

A. The Chase National Bank.

Q. In what capacity?

A. In different departments, bookkeeping, loans, paymasters.

Q. You had charge of making loans?

A. No, sir.

Q. In answer to Mr. Barshay, before the Court asked you questions on the subject, you made a statement that you were going to judge each witness as he appears on the stand to ascertain whether he is telling the truth?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Assuming the Court were to tell you that the law is, in determining a witness's motive in telling a story you have a right to take into consideration his background, his interest, relationship to matters, and other things; do you still feel, as you originally said to Mr. Barshay, that irrespective of that background and character, you will take your impression merely of the witness as he testified?

Mr. Tarkus: I object to the form of the question. Instructions of law are given by the Court.

The Court: I thought that was all straightened out.

[fol. 499] Mr. Rosenthal: I have repeated the question on the same subject to see whether it is straightened out.

The Court: To go over it again?

Mr. Rosenthal: I did not intend to go over it again; I am examining for the defendant Capone.

The Court: All right, go ahead.

Q. Were you able to follow the question?

A. Not quite.

Q. I will reframe it. Assuming that the Court were to charge you that in determining what weight or credibility you are to give to any particular witness, you have the right to take into consideration what motive or what interest he may have, his connection with the matter itself, his actions on the stand, and all those things. Do you still believe, as your originally did when you answered Mr. Barshay's question, that you merely are going to judge the witness from the testimony that he gives on the stand?

Mr. Turkus: The jury has a right to take those things into consideration. Defense counsel wants to know in advance what the juror will do. The juror has very properly said in all this extended discussion——

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to any speech.

Mr. Turkus: It is not a speech; it is an objection. The jury has a right to hear the witnesses; to hear all of the testimony in the case, and when he has discretionary rights conferred upon him by the Court in its charge, then he [fol. 500] decides whether he uses them—not in advance, before he hears anything. Mr. Rosenthal wants the juror to say in advance of selection that he will exercise discretionary right, and that I say he has no right to do.

Mr. Rosenthal: He stated to your Honor at large and fully what his objection is, and I ask for the Court's ruling without any further argument.

The Court: The question is complicated.

By the Court:

Q. After being so charged by the Court, would you disregard the charge of the Court and simply decide on the evidence without regard to character?

A. I would take the direction of the Court.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Did you state in answer to Mr. Barshay, before the Court asked you any question, that, after he stated to you about witnesses who may be called and who had previous crimes, lives of burglary, false testimony, and things of that character, that you would judge the witness merely from the story he told upon the stand? Did you originally say that?

A. I don't recall saying that; I said I would listen to the testimony before deciding how much I could believe from that witness.

Q. Did you say at that time you would not take into consideration his prior life, because even a man who has led a prior life of that character may sometimes tell the truth? [fol. 501] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, after you made that statement to Mr. Barshay, you were questioned further regarding the taking into consideration of the prior activities of any witness.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you still say, irrespective of what you have heard regarding the law, that you will merely judge the witness from the stand, by what you hear him say on the stand?

Mr. Turkus: In advance of hearing the testimony, the juror does not have to say what right he will exercise.

The Court: Objection overruled.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By that do you mean the impression you gain from seeing the witness?

A. No, sir, from seeing and hearing him.

Q. Well, now, assuming you have heard the witness state on either examination or cross-examination that he has committed eleven murders; and assuming you heard him state he has led a shylock life, committed burglary, stabbed people, run over people, has before a Federal Grand Jury testified under oath to untruths——

Mr. Turkus: I object to this kind of a declaration.

The Court: Do not interrupt.

Q. (Continuing:) —and things of that character, do you still say you cannot take that into consideration in determining what probative force you will give his testimony?

A. I will scrutinize the evidence more closely, but if the [fol. 502] evidence is all corroborated, I naturally would have to take it as the truth.

Q. I am not going on the question of corroboration.

A. There is no other way I can say that. I would not believe, if a man got up and said a horse is black, and nobody said it was black—it is like a pig in the bag.

Q. I want to see if we understand one another. The question of corroboration is separate and distinct, and apart from the question of believability on the part of a witness as to statements which he makes under oath?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. We are talking, not on the question of corroboration nor the question of the crime, but the testimony of the individual, irrespective of whether or not that particular individual admits a state of circumstances of the crime, or attempts to make corroboration; is that clear?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am merely speaking of the witness, of the individual, irrespective of what portion of the testimony it seeks to bear out.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you say that, hearing the witness, irrespective of who he is, testify to any portion of a crime, whether it be the crime itself or corroboration, that you would or would not take into consideration in determining the truth of his story, or what weight you will give to it, the fact of his past life of crime and if he has previously perjured himself under oath? Would you or wouldn't you take that into consideration in determining the weight you will give to the testimony of such a witness?

[fol. 503] A. I would to a certain extent, by scrutinizing the evidence more than anything to see just what part I can take and just what part I can throw out.

Q. In determining what part you would take, would you take into consideration his past activities?

Mr. Turkus: That has been already answered. He just said he would.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

Q. You said you read an article in The Mirror and in other papers in respect to one or more of the defendants connected with this case.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would your reading of that article and would your remembering of it cause a greater amount of evidence to be produced upon the part of the defendant than would be necessary hadn't you read the article?

A. I don't get that. Will you repeat it, please?

Q. Would the reading of that article and whatever you remembered of it cause a greater amount of evidence to be produced in this case on the part of any defendant than would be necessary had you not read that article?

A. No.

Q. Would it require a lesser amount of evidence on the part of The People to be produced than if you had not read the article?

A. That I would not be able to answer, because I do not know what the evidence is.

[fol. 504] Q. I will make it clear. You admit reading the article?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You admit, in some particulars, you remember what you read?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would the fact that you had read an article concerning one or more of these defendants, and would your remembering of it cause The People in this case to produce a lesser amount of credible evidence than they would have to produce had you not read that article and did not know anything about the defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any relatives on the police force?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any close friends attached to the Police Department?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Kriendler:

Q. Have you or has any member of your family ever been the victim of any robbery, burglary, or any other crime?

A. Not as I know of.

Mr. Turkus: The juror is satisfactory to the People of the State.

The Court: Of course, you understand everything is tentative until the final swearing. That will enable selection of a better jury. If you want to tentatively accept the juryman, let him sit in the box.

Mr. Barshay: I understood the ruling was only pending today. If your Honor extends it it is all right to us.

[fol. 505] The Court: I will extend it so as to give both sides an opportunity for a better check-up. You may reserve peremptory challenges if you wish.

Mr. Barshay: On behalf of all counsel, we peremptorily challenge this talesman.

CHARLES E. STEVENS, residing at 1050 Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. What section of Brooklyn is that?

A. Flatbush.

Q. Have you lived there for a number of years?

A. I have lived in Flatbush off and on for a number of years; I have lived there now for four years.

Q. Have you lived in any other sections?

A. The Park Slope section about eight months and also the Bensonhurst section for seven years.

Q. The trestle board lists your profession as that of sales representative.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom are you employed?

A. United States Envelope Company.

Q. Does it maintain an office in Manhattan?

A. New York City, Manhattan.

Q. Does your work take you on the outside?

[fol. 506] A. To some extent, not a great deal, however.

Q. I think if my memory is correct, you urged an excuse at one time that your health was bad?

A. No, sir, that is not correct. I was to have a vacation on the 1st of August, and I had a very hard year, and I thought I needed a rest.

Q. You have had your vacation and feel rested, and if you are selected, you will be ready to act as a juror in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is nothing about your condition of health that would impair your jury service?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. What is your business?

A. Envelope manufacturing, United States Envelope Company. We have a sales office at 270 Broadway, and our factories are in the Mid-West.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Has your business in the past brought you into contact with firms or individuals in the Brownsville or East New York district?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have had no connection, directly or indirectly, with anybody in that area?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does your work bring you into the garment district?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had any dealings, directly or indirectly, with any firms or individuals in that district?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does that hold true with the clothing trucking in- [fol. 507] dustry, and the clothing industry?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that we may proceed now, may we not, with the thought in mind that you have no connection, socially or by way of business, directly or indirectly, with any firm or corporation in the areas I have enumerated, or having any business with those particular lines of industry?

A. That is correct.

Q. With respect to the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, are you acquainted with any officials of that union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are the names of Murray Weinstein and Katz at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to Bruno Belia, an organizer of the Amalgamated, is that also true?

A. I never heard of him.

Q. Or with Salvatore Marazzano?

A. I don't know him.

Q. Did you have any connection or have you had any business with any clothing drivers' or teamsters' union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any official of Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers Helpers Union of America?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name Philip Orlofsky, at one time manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, associated with the Amalgamated, does that mean anything to you at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any familiarity in your mind with the names of Max Silverman or Wolfie Goldis?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has the name of William Alberts any significance?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 508] Q. A one-time bondsman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has the name Emanuel Buchalter any familiarity to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or that of Philip Buchalter, sometimes known as Philip Kowas?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Bellanca or Tosca, or a man named Terry Burns?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anybody in the automobile business in the Park Slope section of Brooklyn that you know named Weiss?

A. No, sir.

Q. Since your name appeared on this special panel, since you received notice that you would be a prospective talesman, did anybody speak to you about this case?

A. Well, people in the office discussed my being called on the jury, and my family discussed it.

Q. But those discussions were limited to your prospective jury service, in making arrangements at your place of business and at home?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never discussed with anybody concerning the merits of the case?

A. Several people tried to, but I said I knew nothing about it and I was unable to discuss it.

Q. Were those people strangers?

A. No, sir, personal friends, people in the office and like that.

Q. Were those discussions had after you had attended in court?

A. Well, yes.

Q. In those discussions was the name of any defendant used?

[fol. 509] A. One.

Q. Was it in the nature of a discussion as to what your state of mind was?

A. They attempted to ascertain that, yes, sir.

Q. Was this somebody whom you knew for some time?

A. Yes, sir, people in the office whom I knew since I have been there.

Q. Was this in the nature of curiosity?

A. Yes, sir, curiosity on their part, I should say.

Q. It was nothing to interfere with or affect your deliberation of the case?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Whatever was asked of you was a matter of curiosity by somebody in the office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are sure of that?

A. Positive.

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the law of the State of New York?

Mr. Climenko: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

A. I am in sympathy.

Q. Do you know the former prosecutor of the county, Mr. Geoghan, or any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it you do not know Mr. Barshay?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Wegman, former Assistant United States Attorney?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. Climenko?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or counsel for the defense,—any counsel for the defendant Buchalter?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 510] Q. Do you know anybody connected with their respective law offices in any capacity?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know Judge Talley, or former Assistant District Attorney Cuff, or former Assistant District Attorney Kriendler, who represent the defendant Weiss?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone connected with their office or their staff?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Is that true also as to the lawyers who represent Mr. Capone, Rosenthal, Fischbein, and Rosenberg?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer or any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Specifically, do you know Mr. Turkus, Mr. Joseph, or Mr. Klein?

A. No, sir.

Q. In questioning the other prospective talesmen, Mr. Barshay asked the question as to whether or not there would be any prejudice against his specific defendant, Buchalter, who is now serving a term of years in jail. Have you any prejudice against Buchalter for that reason?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would decide this case on the evidence in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whether Buchalter is or is not serving a sentence in jail has nothing to do with your deliberations in the case on trial, as to his guilt or innocence of murder?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you heretofore sat on a jury in a criminal case where the Judge charged the jury on the law?

[fol. 511] A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. If accepted as a juror will you take the law in the case in its every aspect from the presiding judge?

A. I would.

Q. And will you conscientiously and with common sense endeavor to apply the principles of law as given by the Court to the specific issue in this case, as to the guilt or innocence of these defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For example, should the Judge charge you that the burden of proof is always upon the prosecution to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, will you follow that instruction of law?

A. I will.

Q. If the Judge should charge you that the defendants have no burden at all, that they can sit still or do what they please—they have no burden in the case—will you follow the specific instructions of the County Judge which he gives you in that respect?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And with respect to the presumption of innocence, should the Judge charge you that every defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt, will you follow that instruction on the law of presumption of innocence that the Judge shall give you, and apply that conscientiously and with common sense in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So I take it you are free from any prejudice or bias against any or all of the defendants on trial?

A. That is——

[fol. 512] Q. As to the point of any possible bias or prejudice against the prosecution, may I direct your attention to this: Have you any bias or prejudice against the prosecution wherein it employs the use of accomplice testimony?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you find any fault with the prosecutor who breaks a case from the inside and gets one of the killers to testify against the other?

Mr. Barshay: I object to that part of the question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

A. I have no objection.

Q. As to the character and background of any specific accomplice in this murder case, will you take the principle of law that the Judge gives you as to rules and tests you can apply to such individual?

Mr. Climenko: I object to the term "this murder."

The Court: I thought it was a murder case.

Mr. Climenko: I know the indictment charges that crime, but I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

A. I would.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you feel that even a bad man can tell the truth?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course, if anybody came in with a case which rested solely upon the testimony of an accomplice, no matter what you felt about the accomplice telling the truth, your duty [fol. 513] would be clear, you would have to acquit—we will let that go at that. Now, if you heard the testimony of an accomplice in the case and then there is independent proof which not only satisfies you the accomplice is telling the truth, but the evidence tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, and you are satisfied as to that beyond a reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to find a guilty verdict?

A. No, sir.

Q. Should a defendant come along with a defense—for example, a defense of an alibi, will you take the law specifically from the Judge in applying it to any specific defense that may be raised by the defendant in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If accepted, should you automatically become foreman of this jury, will you listen to common-sense, logical discussion of the other jurors in the case when you deliberate on the issue of guilt or innocence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you sit in the box now I take it your mind is free and open and ready to receive evidence and render a just and conscientious verdict on the evidence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If selected as a juror, will you endeavor to do justice in the case?

A. I will.

Q. Will you endeavor, by your verdict, to render justice in the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you have heard all the evidence in the case as an acceptable juror, and you heard the lawyers for the defense tell you how they view the evidence, and then you listened [fol. 514] to the inferences from the prosecutor, and then you had the benefit of the Judge's instructions on the law, and then in the jury room you sit with the other jurors and with common sense and understanding talk over the issue in the case of guilt or innocence of the defendants, and you should come to a conclusion and you are satisfied from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that at the bar of justice there are three guilty men, Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone, guilty of murder in the first degree, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

A. It would be my duty to say so.

Q. Would you have any fear or reluctance in saying so?

A. No, sir.

The Court: (addressing panel) Please do not discuss the case, gentlemen. Be in your places at two o'clock.

The defendants are remanded.

(Whereupon a recess was taken until two o'clock p. m.)

[fol. 515] Afternoon Session—Trial Resumed

The Court: Suppose we move up these gentlemen and fill the other three chairs and let the rest of the jurors go?

(Three additional talesmen took their seats in the jury box. All other talesmen were excused until 10 a. m., September 25, 1941.)

(The examination of Mr. Charles E. Stevens was continued.)

By Mr. Climenko.

Q. Mr. Stevens, did I understand that you are employed by the United States Envelope Company?

A. That is correct.

Q. How many employees has it?

A. The entire company has about three thousand employees.

Q. Where is it?

A. The New York Office, 270 Broadway, corner of Chambers Street.

Q. That is the office you are connected with?

A. Yes.

Q. About how many employees of the company work there?

A. Twenty-one.

Q. You are employed in a sales capacity?

A. That is correct.

Q. And are you on speaking terms with the other twenty who are at that office?

A. Yes.

Q. You see them every day?

A. Yes.

Q. You have been employed by that company for some [fol. 516] time, I take it?

A. About nine and a half years.

Q. And most of your co-employees are persons who, like you, have a comparatively long tenure in the employ of that company?

A. That is correct.

Q. You have known them for many years?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you are intimate with them?

A. Yes.

Q. I think you said that somebody had attempted to speak to you about the case.

A. That is correct.

Q. Before that happened had you read about the case?

A. Only in connection with this particular trial, that is, I saw in the paper that this trial would take place on August 4th. It was after I received my jury summons.

Q. When did you receive your summons to appear here as a juror?

A. Sometime in July.

Q. That is all right. I don't care about the specific day, but approximately sometime about the middle of July?

A. Probably, yes.

Q. And was it at about that time that you had a discussion with one of your co-employees about this case?

A. No, it was about two weeks ago.

Q. Only two weeks ago did you have any discussion about the case?

A. As to the case, yes.

Q. And with how many persons did that conversation proceed?

A. Actually it was not a conversation, but two people asked my opinion on the case.

[fol. 517] Q. Two people asked your opinion?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you answer the question?

A. I told them I had formed no opinion.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. I told them I had formed no opinion.

Q. Was that the whole extent of the conversation?

A. Yes.

Q. Nothing more was said?

A. I told them I would rather not discuss the case under the circumstances, so they said nothing further.

Q. Nothing beyond that was said?

A. Because each day I came in the office during the examination of jurors here they would ask me whether or not I had been excused, but other than that there was no discussion.

Q. Have we now got from you the whole substance of your conversation with your co-employees about this case?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did I understand you to say when you were answering the questions put by Mr. Turkus that the name of a particular defendant had been mentioned in one of these conversations?

A. That is correct.

Q. So that a moment ago we did not have the whole substance of the conversation?

A. Well, in referring to the case, they always referred to it as a particular case, naming one of the defendants.

Q. One of the defendants was named?

A. That is right.

Q. Was there any conversation about that specific de[fol. 518] fendant as a person?

A. No.

Q. No conversation whatsoever?

A. Not to the best of my memory.

Q. Prior to that conversation you had read about the case?

A. Not prior to the case actually being called. In other words, I have seen one of the defendants' names in the paper for various things but not in connection with this case.

Q. When would you say was the first time that you had noticed, as you can presently recall it—and I know that you cannot remember entirely accurate,—but your best recollection as you sit here now: When is the first time that you read about any defendant in this case?

A. Well, probably August 4th.

Q. 1941?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before that day you have no recollection of having read about any defendant in this case?

A. Now you mention it, I recall seeing something in the Times saying that a plea to have the trial elsewhere had been denied.

Q. That what?

A. A plea on behalf of the defendants to have the trial held in a different section of the city or state had been denied.

Q. Aside from that, you remember having read at any time prior to August 4th about any of these defendants?

A. Not to the best of my recollection, no.

Q. So that before August 4, 1941, you were unaware of the existence of any of these defendants?

A. No, that is not so.

[fol. 519] Q. Had you read before August 4, 1941, about any of these defendants?

A. I have seen the name of one of them mentioned in the papers.

Q. In which paper?

A. Well, it must have been either the Herald-Tribune or the Sun, because I read those papers.

Q. And when would you place the earliest time when you read about that particular defendant?

A. I have no way of knowing. The name has just become familiar to me, but I have no way of knowing just when.

Q. As I understand your answers, the name of a particular defendant had become familiar to you in consequence of newspaper reading; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. In consequence of that newspaper reading, had you formed an opinion with respect to that defendant?

A. In relation to this case, no.

Q. I beg pardon?

A. In relation to this case, no.

Q. You know nothing about this case as a matter of fact?

A. That is correct.

Q. Is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. You are not connected with any member of the Police Department?

A. Well, I know one patrolman in the Flatbush section. He is a member of a club I belong to.

Q. What club is that?

A. The Terrace Tennis Club.

Q. It is not a political club?

A. No.

Q. It is what its name implies?

A. Exactly.

[fol. 520] Q. You did not discuss the case with that gentleman?

A. I am not on intimate terms with him. I play tennis with him.

Q. We can put it this way: that your acquaintanceship with him is restricted to his playing tennis, and that is a policeman?

A. That is right.

Q. You are not acquainted with anybody associated with Mr. Turkus in the office of the District Attorney?

A. Not to the best of my knowledge.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Are you a member of any political organization?

A. No, I am not.

Q. And you are not politically active?

A. No.

Q. The fact that there is a political contest impending would not in any way affect your judgment about a matter in the administration of justice, would it?

A. No, it would not.

Q. You are able to distinguish between those two matters?

A. Yes.

Q. You would not let one coalesce or confuse your mind about the other—right?

A. No.

Q. With respect to the particular defendant whom you have read about, did you develop an opinion, an unfavorable opinion, of him in consequence of your reading?

A. No, I didn't, because the articles I read were simply statements of fact, that is, things which have actually taken place, and they gave no indication as to their opinion as to [fol. 521] the guilt or innocence of these men. It was purely a record of the facts.

Q. Well, the point is that whatever you may have read did not develop an opinion in your mind unfavorable to that defendant?

A. No.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And as you sit here now do you say—— I withdraw that.

Q. Did you say you had never sat on a jury before?

A. I never have.

Q. And you have never been a party to any litigation?

A. No.

Q. And you have never been even collaterally concerned with the prosecution of a criminal case?

A. No.

Q. Never been the victim of a so-called crime; is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. Assuming that you should be charged as a matter of law, I mean suppose that the Judge should instruct you that the defendants, all of them, are presumed to be innocent, would you be able to follow that instruction?

A. I would.

Q. Assuming as part of that instruction you were told that an indictment which charges that a murder was committed is nothing more than a charge and that in and of itself it has no value so far as evidence is concerned, would you have any difficulty in following that instruction?

A. No, I would not.

Q. None whatsoever?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, then as you sit here now do you assume that these defendants are innocent?

A. Yes.

[fol. 522] Q. That is your mental assumption with respect to all of them; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. It is your assumption with respect to any defendant that you may have read about; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you have no feeling about any of these people which would in any way interfere with your ability to assume their innocence?

A. I have not.

Q. Particularly if you were told that it is your duty as a juror to assume their innocence; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. You referred to certain newspaper stories that you had read. You have a vivid recollection of those stories as we refer to them now?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you accept those stories as having stated the facts?

A. Yes, they were indisputable facts.

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. They were indisputable facts. The facts could not be disputed.

Q. Indisputable facts?

A. Yes.

Q. Were those facts, assuming that you accepted them as such, unfavorable to the defendant?

A. Not in any way, no.

Q. Not in any way?

A. No.

By the Court:

Q. Is William B. Stevens, Jr., your father?

A. No.

Q. William B. lives on East 21st Street, which is a block from you.

A. No relative of mine.

[fol. 523] Q. Do you go to All Souls Church?

A. No, I don't.

Q. He is one of the trustees.

A. Dutch Reformed Church on Church and Flatbush.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. Mr. Stevens, did any of your office associates attempt to prejudice you against any defendant in this case?

A. I would not say they attempted to prejudice. The remarks they started to make, if I had interpreted them as such, might have prejudiced me; in other words, if I had accepted what they were saying as facts and absorbed them as such, I could have possibly been prejudiced.

Q. One or more of your business associates made statements purporting to be statements of fact with respect to a defendant in this case?

A. No, interpreted them as being their opinion.

Q. One or more of your business associates expressed his or their opinion with respect to at least one defendant in this case?

A. That is correct.

Q. You listened to the statement of that opinion?

A. That is correct.

Q. You could not help but hear it?

A. That is correct.

Q. In the course of civilized conduct, in relation to someone who had started to talk to you; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. The statements that you heard under those circumstances were prejudicial against that particular defendant; is that correct?

A. That is correct, yes.

[fol. 524] Q. Were you in any wise influenced by the making of that statement or those statements by your associate or associates?

A. No, I resented their making them.

Q. You resented their making them?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you express your resentment?

A. Well, I said that I felt that the men were entitled to trial and that until they were judged guilty I did not see how anybody could make loose, irresponsible statements, such as I considered theirs to be.

Q. You said then that you thought that that was an unjust thing for anybody to say?

A. In substance, yes.

Q. That was your feeling about it?

A. Yes.

Q. You particularly resented those statements being made to you in view of the fact that your associates already knew that you had been summoned here as a prospective or possible juror in the trial of this case?

A. That is right.

Q. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And, having that in mind, you were quick to express your resentment of these prejudicial remarks; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. But, as I understand your state of mind, you were not only quick to express the resentment, but the resentment which you expressed was an honest reflection of your state of mind; is that correct?

A. That is correct, yes.

Q. And I am right in assuming, as I interrogate you now on behalf of one of these defendants, that even if you had [fol. 525] not then held a notice from this court asking you to appear as a prospective juror, you would nevertheless have resented the making of any such statement, is that correct?

A. Probably would have, yes.

Q. Because you felt that that was an un-American statement to make, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And you are in favor of the policies of the law that a fair trial must be accorded all men; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you felt that that kind of talk was unjust and unfair and illegal; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Because it might possibly prejudice a defendant and deprive him of a fair hearing upon a trial; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is your state of mind now, as you sit here?

A. It is.

Q. And were you sworn as a juror you could approach the issues in this case without any prejudice against any defendant; is that correct?

A. I feel sure I could.

Q. Yes? Now assuming that you were chosen as a juror in this case, and even though you have not had the benefit of any prior experience sitting as a juror in the trial of a case, you would know, would you not, that perhaps your main duty as a juror would be to pass on the credibility of witnesses as they testify; isn't that so?

A. That is so.

[fol. 526] Q. And by passing on the credibility of witnesses, you mean discriminating between those whose statements can be accepted as truthful and rejecting those which cannot be accepted as truthful; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. You frequently have to pass on the credibility of statements which are made to you in the ordinary course of your life, do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. You have certain rules that guide you in doing that, whether or not those rules are formally set down in any book, haven't you?

A. Yes.

Q. A man has a reputation as a liar, to that extent you are on guard against him, aren't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Something has been asked you about accomplice testimony by Mr. Turkus. You understand what an accomplice is?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. You understand that sometimes people have a motive to tell the truth and sometimes they have a motive not to tell the truth; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. People who approach you in the ordinary transactions of your daily life have to be judged as to whether or not they have a motive to tell the truth or a motive to tell a falsehood; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. In passing on the credibility of an alleged accomplice, would you have in mind in determining his honesty or lack [fol. 527] of honesty as to what his motives might be in testifying?

A. Examine those motives very carefully.

Q. You would?

A. Yes.

Q. Were it to develop that a so-called accomplice had a motive to falsify and a motive to testify in order to help himself, would you have that in mind in passing on his credibility?

A. I would, yes.

Q. In other words, just as self-interest is an element which you have in mind in relation to the truth or falsity of the statements made to you in your every-day life, so self-interest, perhaps of the keenest kind, may become an element, a standard that you have to use in judging the truth of falsity of a witness who takes the stand. You understand that, do you not?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. Reverting for a minute to those conversations that you had with your associates at the United States Envelope Company, were the participants in that conversation or those conversations your superiors?

A. No, they were my equals. In other words, in the same capacity as I am.

Q. They were sales representatives?

A. That is right, other types of the company.

Q. You would not feel beholden to anybody for the propriety of your verdict in a case of this kind, would you?

A. I did not hear the question.

Q. I say you would not be beholden to anybody for the [fol. 528] propriety of your verdict in a case of this kind, would you?

A. No, I would not.

Q. In other words, in a matter of this kind you swear to do your honest duty, assuming that you are chosen as a juror; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. Mr. Turkus asked you assuming that the proof might convince you beyond a reasonable doubt, etc., etc., would you be hesitant in bringing in a verdict of guilty. Do you remember that question?

A. Yes.

Q. Now I ask you, assume that after all of the testimony is elicited and assume that the Court should instruct you as a juror that you could not convict except upon a demonstration of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and assume that the Court would instruct you that reasonable doubt was a doubt inspired by a reason, and that you had a reasonable doubt after measuring all the proof, would you be at all hesitant in delivering a verdict of Not Guilty?

A. No, I would not.

Q. Would you feel reluctant to do your sworn duty by reason of the fact that somebody having nothing to do with the administration of justice, somebody who by accident was an associate of yours in a commercial firm, in your place of employment, somebody had perhaps intimated that he would not have agreed with that—would that influence you at all?

A. It would have no bearing on the matter.

Q. Not for a moment, would it?

A. No.

[fol. 529] Q. That was an opinion expressed by someone who had never heard the evidence?

A. That is right.

Q. And the mere fact that that opinion was expressed was, in your mind, an un-American and unfair thing?

Mr. Turkus: It has been gone over ten times now.

Mr. Climenko: Only twice.

Mr. Turkus: Same way ten times. Withdrawn. Go ahead.

Q. Assuming that you did bring in a verdict of Not Guilty, you would not be reluctant to meet with your associates again, would you?

A. No reason why I should be.

Q. You would not feel reluctant to bring in such a verdict because it might be in the back of your mind that, having done it, brought in a verdict of Not Guilty, it involved a certain mental courage on your part to meet with these co-employees who possibly harbor a different view?

A. It would have no bearing on the matter at all.

Q. Not for one minute? You would listen to this case on the proof as it were presented within this court-room; isn't that so?

A. Correct.

Q. And you would listen to this case in relation to any particular defendant solely with respect to his guilt or innocence in this particular case; is that right?

A. That is my understanding, yes, sir.

Q. And your understanding is that you are to discriminate and distinguish as between one defendant and an[fol. 530] other; is that correct?

A. That I may or may not, did you say?

Q. I withdraw the question. Assuming the Court should charge you that each defendant is entitled to a separate verdict; would you have any difficulty in following such instruction?

A. No.

Q. In other words, what that comes to is that although the case is tried simultaneously as against each defendant, it is a separate case, and as to each defendant you are under an obligation to pass a separate judgment; you understand that?

A. That is my understanding, yes.

Q. And with respect to any defendant in this case, you could pass fairly on the issue of this case, and the only issue is one of guilt or innocence, altogether independently of anything that you had ever read or seen about that defendant; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Whatever you may have read, seen, or heard, you know as you sit here now, as you will sit here were you chosen as a juror, that that defendant is presumed to be innocent of any charge incorporated in the indictment? You know that?

A. That is my understanding, yes.

Q. And that would be your mental attitude in listening to the proof in this case—correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If, after hearing all of the proof, you had a reasonable doubt as to any defendant, you would not hesitate for a moment to say, "Not Guilty" as to him; is that correct? [fol. 531] A. That is correct.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. Mr. Stevens, do you understand that under our system of law when a man is charged, by an indictment or otherwise, with commission of a crime, that the burden is not placed upon him to prove his innocence of that charge?

A. That is my understanding, yes, sir.

Q. And you understand that the burden is always on the people who bring the charge?

A. Yes.

Q. To prove the guilt of that defendant and, going a step further, to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt. You understand that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And if you had a reasonable doubt, a doubt for which you could give a reason, a doubt such as you might have about the ordinary affairs of life, would you resolve that doubt in favor of the defendant?

A. That would be required of me.

Q. You would do so?

A. Yes.

Q. You stated that you understood there was no burden upon a defendant to prove his innocence. You understand that it is not required that a defendant in a criminal case take the stand to prove anything in his own behalf?

A. I understand that, yes.

Q. And if the Court should charge you, as the Court will without question, that if a defendant does not take the stand after The People have put in their case, that you are not to [fol. 532] indulge in any unfavorable presumption against him because he does not take the stand, will you follow that direction of the Court?

A. I will.

Q. Precisely?

A. I will.

Q. And you would not indulge in any presumption unfavorable to any of these defendants if in the judgment of counsel there is no requirement for them to take the stand?

A. I would not.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Talley: I have no further questions.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You understand, Mr. Stevens, that each one of these defendants is represented by separate counsel?

A. Yes.

Q. And you further understand, as Mr. Climenko said to you, that the proof as to any one particular defendant is all that you personally can use in the jury room against that defendant? Is that clear?

A. That is clear.

Q. So that in determining this case, if you are accepted as a juryman, you will only apply such evidence under the Court's instructions as you feel is applicable to the particular defendant in determining his guilt or innocence; is that correct, sir?

A. That is right, yes.

Q. I take it you are not acquainted with anybody in the District Attorney's office, are you?

A. Not to the best of my knowledge, no.

Q. And you are not actively interested in the outcome of [fol. 533] the present political campaign?

A. No, I am not.

Q. Your verdict would be based solely upon the evidence without fear or favor; am I correct in that statement?

A. That is right.

Q. And you have never served on a jury before, have you?

A. No, I never have.

Q. And you have never been called, I take it, for Grand Jury?

A. No, I have not.

Q. You understand that you are entitled to your own individual opinion in the jury-room?

A. Yes.

Q. You further understand, sir, that even though you form an opinion, it is your duty to reason and listen to the other jurymen's reasoning as to any difference they may have in opinion from yours? You understand that?

A. That is my understanding.

Q. Do you further understand, sir, that if, after reasoning with your fellow jurymen, you still retain the honest, conscientious opinion which you first formed, and their reasoning has not in any wise dis-uaded you from your view, that it is your bounden duty to retain that opinion?

A. Yes.

Q. By that I do not mean that you argue or bicker or otherwise, but that you have an opinion formed on your conscience which has not been taken away by any reasonable logic or arguments of your fellow jurymen; is that clear to you?

A. That is clear.

[fol. 534] Q. Merely because of the fact that you happen to serving for the first time and others may be of a different opinion to you who may have served on other juries, would that influence you in your conscientious opinion?

A. No, it would not.

Q. Your opinion, if formed upon your conscience after listening to reasonable argument, which has not been changed, will remain the same; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. Numbers, hours, business, and other things would not disuade you; is that correct?

A. No.

Q. Another thing, if I recall rightly, you originally made some excuse on account of illness. Am I correct?

A. It was not illness, as I explained to Mr. Turkus. My vacation started August 1st, and I felt I needed the rest because I do work very hard during the year, and unless I were excuse- I lose that rest, which I felt I needed.

Q. My impression was that you had made some mention when you were examined by the Court of having gained eight or ten pounds?

A. Gained eight pounds; that is right.

Q. So I assume you had been ill before that?

A. I was not ill, but I was just——

Q. You feel that your health at present is such that you could, in case this trial lasts a period of time, and you are kept together in the hotel with your fellow jurymen, that it would not in any wise impair your health to a degree where you would not be able to serve properly as a juror; you feel that?

[fol. 535] A. I don't believe it would, because, as a matter of fact, I have the best record of attendance in the office.

Q. I am not finding any fault. I just want to find out from you, having in mind the fact that this may be and undoubtedly will be a prolonged trial, you feel, sir, that your health is such that it will permit it?

A. I do, yes.

Q. Mr. Turkus questioned you on alibies as a defense and asked you would you take the law from the Court. Do you recall that question?

A. No, I cannot say I do.

Q. In questioning you, however, he did mention to you that if one of the defendants or more maybe interposed a defense of alibi and asked whether you would take your instructions in respect to alibi from the Court and you answered yes, rightfully so. Do you understand, sir, that at no time does a defendant have to prove his innocence?

A. That is my understanding.

Q. And do you understand, sir, that even though a defendant may offer the defense of alibi, the burden of proving his guilt of the crime charged never shifts from the District Attorney? Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. If the Court were to charge you that even though a defendant interposes a defense of alibi and even though you were not convinced of that particular defense, that nevertheless the question of his guilt or innocence must be found from the believable evidence that has been produced by The People; would you take that charge?

A. Yes.

[fol. 536] Q. You understand that I want this clear in your mind: that at no time in a criminal case does the burden of proving any defendant guilty of a crime shift from The People?

A. That is my understanding.

Q. And even though the defendants may stand mute and offer no defense whatsoever, or not take the stand, even that fact could not be utilized by you in determining the guilt or innocence in the jury room; do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. You find no quarrel with that particular law, which absolves the defendants from producing any witness or taking the stand on their own behalf in order for you to judge their guilt or innocence from the evidence, do you?

A. I have no objections to that.

Q. On the question of accomplices, you understand from what you have heard here, and if you don't, please say so, that even though you may believe an accomplice, unless there is other evidence in the case, believable evidence, tending to connect any one of these defendants with the crime, you must acquit the defendant? Do you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you might go into a jury room and say that "In my mind I am convinced that the accomplice has told the truth," that in and of itself would be insufficient unless in going through the balance of the evidence you were able to find credible evidence leading you or tending to connect the defendants with the crime. Is that clear?

A. Yes.

[fol. 537] Q. On the question of accepting the evidence of The People's witnesses or any witness, do you feel, sir, that in determining what weight you will give to any particular witness, that you will judge that person not only by his actions upon the stand, but by what interest or motive he may have in the outcome of the proceeding? Do you feel that way, sir?

A. Yes.

Q. And in judging what weight you will give to any witness's testimony, whether he be termed an accomplice or not an accomplice, will you take into consideration his past method of life, his past record of swearing falsely, if such be the case, his past record of criminal activities, if such be the case, and all those things, in order to better enable you to determine whether a person of that character is apt to be telling you, the juryman, the truth?

A. Consider all those things, yes.

Q. Merely because the District Attorney may say to you that a man is not an accomplice, in and of itself will not make you say that he is not an accomplice, will it?

A. No.

Q. If the Court were to charge you in certain instances that the question of an accomplice is a matter of law, which means that the Judge tells you directly that he is an accomplice and you must accept him as such, you would do that, wouldn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. On the other hand, if the Court were to tell you that in some instances it is not the Judge's duty as the law to tell you whether a man is an accomplice, but it is your duty to find out from the facts whether you consider him an [fol. 538] accomplice—do I make myself clear so far?

A. Yes.

Q. — will you search the evidence to determine in your own mind whether that person is an accomplice or not?

A. I will.

Q. And if you find, after searching the evidence, to your own satisfaction that he is an accomplice, would you hesitate in voicing that opinion to your fellow jurymen?

A. No.

Q. And if you still retained that opinion, would you hesitate, if the Court were to charge you that under those circumstances additional evidence is required tending to connect the defendant, to ascertain whether such additional evidence exists before you entertain a verdict of guilty? Do I make myself clear?

A. The question was a little involved.

Q. As I told you before, the Judge may say to you, "This man is an accomplice as a matter of law," and you must accept that as such.

A. Yes.

Q. The Judge may say to you that as to particular other witnesses it is up to you, the jury, to determine whether this man is an accomplice as a question of fact. Is that clear?

A. Yes.

Q. You evaluate the evidence and you weigh it in your own mind, you determine that he is an accomplice as a fact. Is that clear so far?

A. Yes.

Q. If the Court were to charge you whether a man is an accomplice as a matter of law or whether you find him an accomplice as a matter of fact, once it is determined that [fol. 539] he is an accomplice, there must be other evidence in the case tending to connect the defendant with the crime before you can convict; would you look then through the evidence to ascertain whether such does exist?

A. I would, yes.

Q. And if you were unable to find to your own satisfaction that such existed, would you hesitate to resolve that doubt in favor of the defendants and acquit?

A. I would not.

Q. Just let me ask this question: You were very fair when Mr. Climenko questioned you. You said that somebody in your office started a conversation with you which you resented. Has that conversation in any wise left such an impression upon your mind that it would take any lesser amount of evidence on the part of The People than would be necessary had you never had that conversation?

A. No, it has not.

Q. Has that conversation left an impression which would require any greater amount of evidence from the defendant than if you had not had that conversation?

A. No, it has not.

Q. Of course it is clear by now that this case has had some publicity. That we all know. Isn't that true?

A. That is true.

Q. Merely because of that fact, would you be hesitant if you were conscientiously of the opinion that The People had failed in their burden of proof, namely, to prove any of the defendants guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, would you be hesitant in voicing that doubt by a verdict of acquittal?

A. I would not.

[fol. 540] Q. It may develop in the trial that certain of the individuals called as witnesses by The People may be known to my particular defendant, possibly to other defendants. Would the mere fact of association or knowledge of one another, without any further proof believed by you, be sufficient to prejudice your mind? In other words, let me put it squarely like this: Suppose it developed that the defendant knew one of the prosecution's witnesses. The prosecution's witness says to you that that defendant had some connection with the crime. The defendant admits that he knows the individual but denies the connection with the crime. Would the mere fact of knowledge of the individual influence you to such extent——

A. Not unless it were substantiated by additional evidence.

Q. In other words, not unless you believe that, in addition to knowing the individual, the defendant actually participated in the crime; isn't that true?

A. It would have to be brought out as that, yes.

Q. But the mere knowledge of association of the individual without the belief on your part of the particular witness as to the circumstances of the crime, in and of itself would not so prejudice you against the defendant that you would be led to find a verdict of guilty?

A. No.

Q. You have been asked regarding one of the defendants serving time. Would the fact that a defendant is serving time in any wise prejudice you against one or the other [fol. 541] defendants who was on trial with him?

A. No.

Q. You understand, sir, that the bringing of three men together and trying them is a matter of convenience? You understand that, sir?

A. I do not know what the reason is.

Q. Each one is entitled to a separate verdict at your hands; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And whatever may apply to one, if it is not connected to the other, must be dismissed from your mind in determining the guilt of the other; is that clear to you?

A. That is my understanding, yes.

Q. So that a verdict against any particular defendant must fall or rise upon the proof as you believe it to be against that particular man, and you must, as nearly as is physically possible, dismiss from your mind anything with respect to the other defendant if it is not in any wise associated with the particular defendant whose guilt you are then considering; is that clear?

A. Yes.

Q. On the question of admission, the District Attorney may attempt to prove that one of these men or all of them, for that matter, we not being apprised of the fact up to this time, assumedly admitted to one of his witnesses that he had some connection with the crime. Have I made myself clear so far?

A. Yes.

Q. If such happens to be the case, have I your promise, sir, that in searching this alleged admission you will find [fol. 542] from whose mouth it comes, first of all, what motive the individual may have in making the statement or the alleged statement that somebody made a statement to him, and his background, both in so far as his criminal propensities are concerned and veracity is concerned, and weigh it in that light and that light alone? Have I your promise?

A. That is right.

Q. You understand further that on the question of the so-called corroboration which you have heard so much about that if you determine that certain witnesses are accomplices as a matter of fact, in addition to those whom the Court may charge are accomplices as a matter of law— Is that clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. — that then the law, if it is charged by his Honor, is that one accomplice cannot corroborate another. Is that clear?

A. If that is the law, I would take it as such.

Q. If the Court were to charge you even though there be a hundred people who are accomplices, that would have no greater weight than the one accomplice himself and could not be used as corroboration, you would have no difficulty in following that, would you?

A. No.

Q. You would not say to yourself, "Well the Judge charged us that one could not corroborate the other, but here we had nine accomplices and they all say the same thing, so there must be some substance to it"? You would not say that, would you?

[fol. 543] A. I would have to have further corroboration.

Q. In other words, you would follow the Court's instruction that the additional evidence must come from an untainted source?

A. Correct.

Q. Outside of accomplices; is that true?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you further understand that the defendant is being tried on what we call an indictment? In this particular instance it is only a few lines long. You understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. That is all my defendant is here to meet. Do you understand that, sir?

A. Just the one charge.

Q. Yes, sir. And that that is all we are here to meet. Do you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that when the evidence is brought in in this case you will confine yourself in determining whether or not the District Attorney has, by credible proof, shown you that this defendant has committed this crime. Is that true?

A. That is true.

Q. Not what you may have heard on the outside as to any defendant, whether involuntary or not, not what you have read in newspapers, not what you have heard discussed in the courtroom, but the proof as it comes from witnesses' mouths in this court-room. Is that true?

A. That is clear.

Q. And that is what you say you will do if you are accepted as a juror?

A. I will.

Q. Am I correct, sir?

A. That is correct.

[fol. 544] Q. Just this one other thing: You know, sir, that as a juryman of the State of New York that you are not only committed to justice in so far as The People are concerned, but as far as the defendant is concerned?

A. Yes.

Q. You understand the defendants are an integral part of the State just the same as The People?

A. That is my understanding, yes.

Q. So that you will deal fairly as between The People of the State, which comprise the prosecution, and the defense, is that right?

A. Try to get an impartial judgment on the case.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Stevens, Mr. Rosenthal in talking to you said his client has to meet an indictment that is a few lines long, and that that is the limit of the inquiry, and you properly made response that you were going to listen to the charge in the case. Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Whether the charge is contained in an indictment of a single sentence or a million words, you know that the charge here is the crime of murder in the first degree; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And it is your duty to find out whether the defendant that he represents and the other defendants have committed the crime of murder in the first degree, whether it be alleged in an indictment of a single sentence or a thousand words; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

[fol. 545] Q. Now, Mr. Rosenthal spoke to you about the false alibi. He said, assuming that you found——

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to the question. I never said anything about a false alibi at all. I said that even though he may not believe, he, the juryman, the alibi. There is no such statement on the record, and I object to it, your Honor.

Mr. Turkus: I have been interrupted in the middle of a question.

Mr. Rosenthal: You are interrupted when you make a false statement. I made no mention of any false alibi.

The Court: Finish the question.

Mr. Turkus: May the juror be told to disregard the allegation of Mr. Rosenthal about any false statement?

The Court: What is the question?

(Pending question read by the reporter.)

Q. Assuming that you found that the alibi was untrue, in words or substance, would you nevertheless require The People of the State of New York to establish guilt of that defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, and I believe your answer was "Yes."

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to the question and the preamble upon the ground it is not founded on fact.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Rosenthal: I respectfully except.

Q. Did you lose track of the question?

[fol. 546] A. I understood you to say would I require that you establish your case beyond a reasonable doubt.

Q. That is right, nevertheless.

The Court: If you did not believe the alibi.

A. No, I would not require you to establish more than beyond a reasonable doubt.

Q. What I am trying to find out is this: Assuming that you found a defendant interposed a false alibi, and the Judge instructed you in words or substance that the interposition of a false and concocted alibi might be found by the jury to show a consciousness of guilt on the part of the defendant who would do so, would you find that repugnant with you frame of mind as you now sit in the chair?

Mr. Talley: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Talley: I object to the injection of the matter of false alibi in this case.

The Court: You will follow the instruction?

The Talesman: I will follow the instruction.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. And would you find such an instruction repugnant to your frame of mind now?

Mr. Rosenthal: That is objected to.

The Court: Overruled.

[fol. 547] Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

A. No, I would not.

Q. Do you find any quarrel with that law?

A. No.

Q. Are you sure of that? Is there any doubt in your mind?

A. No, there is no doubt in my mind. I am not familiar with the law.

Q. Would the common sense of it, if a man were to put in a false and concocted alibi, do you find that the common sense of it is repugnant to the law, namely, that you can consider that consciousness of guilt?

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to that question.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. At any rate, Mr. Stevens, as you are now seated in this box, you find no quarrel with the law as I have outlined it to you in connection with alibi?

A. I do not.

Q. There has been quite a discussion about the fact that—was it two co-employees spoke to you about the case?

A. That is correct.

Q. Had your relations with them been cordial before the discussion?

A. Entirely so.

Q. And were your relations cordial after the discussion?

A. Yes.

Q. Was your—I think I may not have correctly heard the word, but what was the feeling that you said you had when there was this discussion—resentment?

[fol. 548] A. I said I resented their trying to.

Q. What I want to inquire is this: Was it a resentment that somebody who was not called for jury duty spoke to you in advance about their opinion?

A. My feeling is this: that frankly I would rather not serve on this jury, but if I am called upon to serve, it seems to me such a terrific responsibility that I can't understand why people who——

Q. Who know nothing about it?

A. Can attempt to influence a man who might have to make such a grave decision.

Q. In other words, your frame of mind now as you sit in the jury box is that this is an important case, important to The People of the State of New York as well as the defendants on trial?

A. Yes.

Q. And you did not want any outside source to in anywise affect you one way or the other in advance of hearing the evidence in the case?

A. That is right.

Q. Just because somebody happened to indicate an opinion which was unfavorable to the defendant or more of them—I do not know whether you said one or more, but whatever the case may be—would you have such pride of opinion that you would be inclined to demand more of the State of New York than had there been no discussion?

A. No.

Q. In other words, I think you said to one of the lawyers that you feel beholden to no one in the outcome of the case: is that correct?

A. That is correct.

[fol. 549] Q. You do, however, of course, feel beholden to your oath as a juror?

A. Yes.

Q. And that will be the only thing that will guide you and affect you in the determination of the issue of guilt or innocence; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. In other words, may we accept that you will obey your office as a juror and endeavor conscientiously to arrive at a just result in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. One of the lawyers spoke to you about people in every-day life. Do you remember that discussion that you had with him?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Is your frame of mind such that you expect a prosecutor in a murder case to bring in people of the type that you would meet in your every-day walk of life?

Mr. Climenko: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

Q. (Pending question read.)

A. I have never given that consideration of the types that might be brought in.

Q. Suppose you just take a moment out to consider that, in view of what you said. Have you any expectation as to the type of individual that will come into the court that you will expect a certain standard of character of a witness to be produced by the prosecution?

A. I cannot say I have.

Q. I think you said in response to my question that you [fol. 550] have no bias or prejudice against a prosecution which breaks a case from the inside and uses the testimony of an accomplice against the others involved in the case.

Mr. Talley: I object to the question, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: Isn't this all repetition?

Mr. Talley: Yes.

The Court: A great deal of time has been spent with one man, an hour and a half. Has not enough been learned to decide?

Mr. Turkus: If I had not thought it was proper to ask I would not have done so. Am I foreclosed from proceeding any further?

The Court: No, I am just making this as a suggestion, because unless we reasonably limit the questions at all times we run into more difficulty—You will get so tired you won't be able to continue questioning talesmen. You should make some speed here. So far all you have to show for five days work is three challenges have been exercised out of sixty. That is not promising for the future, unless we make more speed. Remember the acceptance is tentative for both sides.

Q. I believe it was Mr. Rosenthal that asked you whether or not you would examine the source of any admissions attributed to a defendant. Am I correct in that?

A. I believe he did.

[fol. 551] Q. Is your state of mind such that you feel that no criminal discusses a criminal activity with another?

Mr. Barshay: I object to the question.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Is your state of mind——

The Court: If you question any man long enough you will disqualify him.

Mr. Turkus: I am not trying to do that.

The Court: That is the inevitable result. Just like walking in the streets. If you walk long enough and far enough you will be hit by an automobile. It is only a question of time.

Mr. Turkus: Judge, I am not trying to have any such thing happen.

The Court: I do not want you to wear yourself out.

Mr. Turkus: I won't be worn out. I want to make sure we get a fair and impartial jury, and I want to ascertain certain of the mental operations of a prospective juror.

The Court: You have nine lawyers on the other side dividing up this work, and you are doing it all yourself. Mr. Klein is not here to help you. I am not trying to nag you.

Mr. Turkus: I know you would not, because with nine against me, I should not have the Judge against me too.

The Court: The Judge is trying to be impartial, but at [fol. 552] the same time I would like progress made.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you would reject an admission attributed to a defendant because it came from another criminal?

A. No.

Q. In other words, will you look at the issue in this case where the District Attorney comes in with a murder that happened in 1936, breaks it from the inside and produces the testimony of an accomplice, one of the participants in the murder with the defendants on trial, and brings in other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, and after you hear the whole thing, if you are satisfied that the accomplice is not only telling the truth but that the defendants are implicated in the commission of the crime, and if you are satisfied of that beyond a reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

[fol. 553] Mr. Talley: I object to the question, to the form of the question, to the preamble of the question.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Turkus: Let me break it down, Mr. Stevens. Assuming that you are satisfied from all the evidence in the case that the accomplice is not only telling the truth but that the defendants and each of them have been connected with the commission of the crime, and you are satisfied of that beyond a reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

Mr. Talley: Object to that as having been asked in various forms at least a half a dozen times.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Turkus: One of the lawyers asked you whether or not you would segregate the evidence in the case so that it would apply to the specific defendant against whom it was given. That you were asked in words or substance, and I think you properly said you would endeavor to segregate the evidence. Now if you find in all the evidence in the case that there was a conspiracy in which all the defendants joined and the Judge were to charge you that the act of one would be the act of all, would you follow the instruction of law?

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to the question on the ground it is not a proper statement of law.

[fol. 554] The Court: Act of one in furtherance of the conspiracy.

Mr. Rosenthal: Further on the ground there is no charge of conspiracy in the indictment.

The Court: There does not have to be. Overruled.

Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

The Court: Will you follow the instruction of the Court on that point?

Mr. Stevens: I will.

Mr. Turkus: If you find from all the evidence in the case that these defendants at the bar of justice, Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone, joined into a conspiracy with others to effect the death of Joseph Rosen and that, in pursuance of the conspiracy, Rosen was shot to death and killed, and you are satisfied of that beyond reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

Mr. Talley: Object to that as having been asked in various forms.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Turkus: No challenge for cause.

Mr. Barshay: No chalienge for cause on behalf of the defendants.

Mr. Turkus: Satisfactory to the People of the State.

Mr. Barshay: Satisfactory to the defendants.

The Court (to Mr. Stevens): Take Seat 1.

[fol. 555] Joseph O. Herrick, of 667 Tenth Street, Brooklyn, New York, was called as a prospective juror.

Mr. Barshay: May we ask your Honor something on behalf of all counsel, to clarify the ruling your Honor has made with respect to the acceptance of the juror?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Barshay: We desire, sir, if your Honor so sees fit, that the juror judged acceptable to both sides be sworn as a juror, and that process should be followed throughout the trial.

The Court: The Court is not obliged to do that until twelve men are accepted on both sides. The Court may in its discretion swear one at a time.

Mr. Barshay: Then do we understand, sir, that you leave the door open for either side to again exercise a challenge?

The Court: There is a more practical reason than that. That is the question of ultimate housing.

Mr. Barshay: Can we know, your Honor, privately, if necessary, the reason?

The Court: You go ahead with this, and I will talk about that later.

Joseph O. Herrick, was then examined as to his qualifications.

By Mr. Turkus:

[fol. 556] Q. Mr. Herrick, you live in the Park Slope district of Brooklyn?

A. That is right.

Q. And your occupation on the trestle board is listed as that of an insurance broker.

A. That is correct.

Q. You and I have met before?

A. Many times.

Q. And when was the last time that we met?

A. Oh, possibly a year or two ago, but I have known you for over twenty years.

Q. We will get right down to business very quickly. The defendants at the bar here are charged with the crime of murder in the first degree. As has been eloquently said by everybody in the case, the defendants are entitled to have a fair and impartial trial. Do you feel that because of your acquaintance and friendship with me, that you would be precluded from giving these defendants that kind of a trial, a fair and impartial trial on the evidence?

A. No.

Q. Do you know any other member of the District Attorney's staff?

A. I know Mr. Rooney, I know Harry Walsh.

Q. Do you know any of the defense counsel in the case?

A. No.

Q. I have read off the names, Mr. Barshay, a former Assistant District Attorney, Mr. Wegman, and Mr. Climenko.

A. I do not know any of them.

Q. Representing the defendant Buchalter.

Mr. Talley: If your Honor pleases, I submit this to you: Do you not think it would help in the economy of time—and Lord knows we spent enough time on this phase of the case [fol. 557] now—to take up the question of the juror's frank statement at the beginning of his examination that he has known Mr. Turkus for some twenty years and met him many times as some such acquaintance that he thought might reasonably be assumed to make it embarrassing for him possibly to sit as a juror on this case, and not go into a long examination on the part of the District Attorney and upon defense counsel, in view of that statement? It would seem to me that the District Attorney can hardly afford to take this gentleman.

Mr. Turkus: I bent over backwards when one juror was related to an Assistant District Attorney. Judge, I do not want them to always get something off to the jury without having the District Attorney respond.

Mr. Talley: Likely to take one hour.

The Court: I have known you——

Mr. Talley: Don't go back too far. Be indefinite about the time.

The Court: —but I can recall about twenty years ago in Atlantic City dining with you at the hotel where you were stopping.

Mr. Talley: Beyond my memory. I was a child in arms.

The Court: But that has no bearing on being impartial.

Mr. Talley: Of course not.

The Court: I have known all the lawyers here for many [fol. 558] years. There is no difficulty in the juryman being impartial on who he knows or does not know.

Mr. Talley: If I was District Attorney, I would not let this gentleman sit in the box, after stating he knew me for twenty years. Your Honor in his discretion should excuse this juror on that statement alone.

The Court: It is so long since you have been an Assistant District Attorney I doubt you have an adequate recollection of your policy on that point.

Mr. Talley: On the contrary, my recollection about that period is very vivid.

The Court: Proceed with the examination.

Mr. Turkus: Judge Talley seems to think there is something objectionable here. May I sit down and let him interrogate on that feature of the case?

The Court: Will you proceed, please?

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Herrick, on your knowledge of me over twenty years, can you take my word for it that I want you to be a fair and impartial juror?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you cannot be, I don't want you in the box?

A. Yes.

Q. Looking at it in the light of Judge Talley's explanation to the Court about a twenty-year acquaintance, if by one iota you cannot be fair in the case, let me know and we [fol. 559] can dispose of this thing very quickly.

A. I will be fair. That is my duty.

Q. Let me go one step further. In the charge of importance not only to The People of the State of New York, but of course to the defendants at the bar of justice, would you be inclined to favor a verdict of guilty because the case is being submitted to the jury by Burton B. Turkus?

A. No.

Q. Will you decide the one issue in the case, the guilt or innocence of the three men at the bar of justice, upon evidence that you hear in the court of justice?

A. Yes.

Q. Does the insurance business in any wise, Mr. Herrick, bring you in contact with Brownsville and East New York?

A. Yes, I have several clients in Brownsville.

Q. In your travels through the district there, have there been any discussions on this Rosen case?

A. No.

Q. Are your clients individuals or corporations in this area?

A. They are individuals.

Q. And at no time have you heard any discussion of the Rosen case?

A. No, never.

Q. Would your jury service be affected by your knowledge of people in that area? Would there be any embarrassment or reluctance on your part to serve?

A. No.

Q. Does that hold true with respect to the garment district?

A. No business there.

Q. Have you had any in the past?

A. No.

Q. Any connection, directly or indirectly, with the gar- [fol. 560] ment district?

A. No.

Q. Does that hold true with the garment district in Manhattan?

A. Same thing.

Q. Clothing trucking?

A. No, have not got any.

Q. Since your name appeared on this special panel as a prospective talesman, did anybody speak to you about the merits of the case?

A. No.

Q. Have you heretofore served as a juror in any criminal case?

A. Civil.

Q. If accepted as a juror in this case, will you take the law in all its aspects implicitly from Judge Taylor?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the law of the State of New York?

A. Yes.

Q. I do not recall now whether I queried you about any possible acquaintance with any members of Mr. Geoghan's staff.

A. I knew Mr. Geoghan; I knew Frank Madden.

Q. At any time while they were in office was there any discussion with you in regard to the Rosen case?

A. No.

Q. If you are charged by the Court, as you undoubtedly will be, that defendants are presumed to be innocent, will you give the defendants the benefit of the presumption of innocence?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you are charged—and you undoubtedly will be —that the prosecution must establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, will you follow out those instructions of law [fol. 561] and conscientiously endeavor to apply the principles of law to the facts of the case?

A. I will.

Q. Do you find any fault with the prosecutor of the county or with the prosecution of an indictment wherein the testimony of an accomplice witness is used?

A. No.

Q. Do you find any fault with the prosecutor or with the prosecution where the prosecutor breaks the case from the inside and avails himself of the use of a co-participant in the murder as a witness against the other defendants?

Mr. Talley: Object to the question. The form of the question is improper.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. One of the lawyers asked, in regard to his client, whether or not you would have any prejudice against him because he has been heretofore convicted of crime and serving a term in jail. Do you feel you have any prejudice against such a defendant?

A. Not at all.

Q. By the same token, because a defendant is serving a jail term for a crime, he has been convicted of, would you be inclined to relax or deviate from your duty as a juror in a case where he is charged with murder in the first degree?

A. No.

Q. I queried several talesmen about any knowledge of people with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. Was there any familiarity with the names of Potofsky, Weinstein, Katz?

[fol. 562] A. No.

Q. With Bruno Belia or Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No.

Q. Any connection with Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. No.

Q. Any teamsters' or truckers' union?

A. No

Q. Flour truckmen?

A. No.

Q. The name of Emanuel Buchalter or Phillie Buchalter at all familiar?

A. No.

Q. That of Bellanca or Tosca?

A. No.

Q. Terry Burns?

A. No.

Q. Do you know any people in the automobile rental business by the name of Weiss, operating up in the Park Slope district?

A. No.

Q. Do you have any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No.

Q. If accepted as a juror in the case, would you permit anybody to discuss punishment?

A. No.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you understand and appreciate that at some time even a bad man tells the truth?

A. Yes.

Q. And is the state of your mind such that sometimes criminals do fall out and one does testify against the others?

Mr. Barshay: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. With the defense of alibi, if it is invoked by any defendant, will you take the law implicitly from the Judge?

A. Yes.

[fol. 563] Q. Is your state of mind such that the case is of importance not only to The People of the State of New York, but to the defendants on trial?

A. Yes.

Q. If selected as a juror will you listen to reasonable and fair argument by the other jurors in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you conscientiously endeavor to arrive at a just verdict in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. A verdict that will do justice not only to The People of the State of New York but to the defendants on trial?

A. Yes.

Q. After you have heard all the evidence in the case and you have talked the case over with the other jurors and your mind is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three guilty men at the bar of justice, Buchalter, Weiss and Capone, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

A. No.

Mr. Turkus: No challenge for cause.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Herrick, what branch of the insurance business are you in?

A. General insurance broker, all kinds, casualty and fire.

Q. Burglary insurance?

A. Burglary, automobile.

Q. Larceny insurance of automobiles?

A. That is right.

Q. And did you have any claims in the section of Brownsville?

A. No.

Q. To your knowledge, or East New York, burglary or larceny? You handle the burglary claim in stores known as [fol. 564] Abe Stark, clothier; James, the clothier; Dubrow Cafeteria?

A. No.

Q. Some other restaurants along the street where safes were blown? You never handle them at all?

A. No.

Q. You never came in contact with any claim where the name Sholem Bernstein was involved?

A. No.

Q. Are you sure about it? You don't remember that, do you?

A. I never had any claims.

Q. You don't remember it?

A. I got a music house over there.

Q. You have a music house over there?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it ever the victim of a burglary, to your knowledge?

A. No.

The Court: You have what?

The Talesman: A firm that sells musical instruments.

Q. Do you pass upon the legality of claims presented to your company?

A. I act as the broker. We service it. The company has its own claim agents, but we don't adjust their losses.

Q. I mean, have you gained an education in law with respect to burglary and larceny claims.

A. No, because we do not adjust them. We just report them to the company.

By the Court:

Q. What is the company?

A. Various companies. We do business with all the companies.

Q. Bail bond business?

A. No bail bond.

By Mr. Barshay:

[fol. 565] Q. By contact in those matters, did you gain any legal education or legal points at all with respect to burglaries or larcenies?

A. No.

Q. Or robberies?

A. No, because I never had occasion to adjust them.

Q. Then you didn't?

A. No.

Q. What companies do you write for?

A. I don't write for any company; I am a broker.

Q. With whom do you do business?

A. Various companies.

Q. Mr. Herrick, may we have some names, please?

A. Yes, you can have the New Amsterdam Casualty Company; you can have the Massachusetts Bonding Company; you can have the Hartford Accident & Casualty Company; you can have the Aetna. I will give you all you want. I can sit here a half an hour enumerating them.

Q. You are very fortunate, but we do not know those things. Do you know Mr. Kingland?

A. Mr. Kingland?

Q. Vice-president of one of the companies?

A. Joseph Kingland.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I know Joe.

Q. Have you ever discussed your service as a juror with him?

A. I have not seen Joe in two years.

Q. Where is your office?

A. I am not 16 Court Street, but I was in New York thirty years at 80 Maiden Lane.

Q. And do you know Mr. Turkus socially or in a business
A. I know him socially.
[fol. 566] way?
Q. Have you had any business with him?
A. Never.
Q. Have you had any business with any law firm with which he was connected?
A. No, sir.
Q. Judge Steinbrink's firm formerly?
A. Who?
Q. Judge Steinbrink's firm. Steinbrink, Delatour & Kennedy; have you had business with them?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you had business with a Mr. Will— A lawyer who was formerly associated with Mr. Turkus?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you had any business dealings of any kind, nature, or description with Mr. Turkus?
A. Not at all.
Q. And your knowledge of him is from the time that he was a boy up to the time he studied, practiced law and became——
A. We used to both eat in the same restaurant down here in Columbia Heights.

The Court: Where was that?
The Talesman: That was the Lido, right near the Crescent Club.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. You have had occasion, then, to follow the progress of Mr. Turkus?
A. Yes.
Q. Take a great deal of pride in what he is doing?
A. That is right.
Q. And on occasions, sir, I take it that you made inquiries at the lunch tab'e or in the restaurant concerning some case where his name was in the newspaper?
[fol. 567] A. No.
Q. Did he ever talk about them?
A. No.
Q. I don't mean immodestly.
A. No, I never discussed them.

Q. You never talked to him about his elevation for the high office of Assistant District Attorney?

A. No.

Q. Never at all?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear him lecture?

A. Did I ever hear him lecture?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. On any subject whatever?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever go out with him socially?

A. No.

Q. At any rate, you have a very high opinion of his integrity, of course?

A. I have, yes.

Q. Supposing, Mr. Herrick, there comes a time in this case, supposing there comes a time in this case that the defense counsel tried to draw from a witness for the prosecution the fact that his testimony came as a result of his being induced to testify in order to gain some reward for himself, and supposing it came out that Mr. Turkus was one of the men who participated, if he did, in this inducement, and supposing the time came——

Mr. Turkus: I object to any such supposition.

The Court: Finish the question.

Q. —and supposing the time came for you as a juror to decide whether or not Mr. Turkus made any inducement or held out any inducement to that witness, even though he does [fol. 568] deny it, not he, Mr. Turkus, but the witness, and it became a question of the credibility of the witness, would the fact that you know Mr. Turkus and have such a high regard for his integrity, influence you in deciding one way or the other?

A. No.

Mr. Turkus: I object. Well, he has answered.

By the Court:

Q. Do you know Mr. Hughes, the Chief Assistant?

A. No. In the District Attorney's office?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I do not.

Q. He belongs to the club on your square block.
A. On my block? There is no club house.
Q. 8th Avenue?
A. You mean the Democratic club?
Q. Between 9th and 10th.
A. Yes, I know.
Q. That is around the corner from you?
A. That is right, Heffernan's.
Q. You don't belong to that club?
A. No, I do not.
Q. You live there how long?
A. Twenty-three years.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Do you belong to any political club?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you ever belonged?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer?
A. Well, I only know him by his picture, that's all.
Q. You don't know him personally?
A. No.
Q. Have you, without belonging to any club, joined any independent organization for his elevation to the office of the Mayor?
[fol. 569] A. No, sir.
Q. Have you been solicited by independent folk for a contribution?
A. No.
Q. Do you intend in any way whatever to participate in the election of Judge O'Dwyer?
A. No. I signed a petition for him.
Q. I beg pardon?
A. I signed a petition.
Q. You signed a petition in the primary?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That was because someone solicited it?
A. A neighbor.
Q. And do you partake or do you propose to partake in any organization committee for his election, irrespective of politics?
A. No.
Q. Any member of your family?
A. No.

Q. Engaged in politics?

A. No.

Q. The fact that he is a candidate, of course, I know would not affect your judgment in any degree?

A. No.

Q. He would not want that to happen. Now, Mr. Herrick, supposing it comes time in this case to sum up, let us say one of the counsel for any of the defendants interprets a fact in a way which is contrary to the way in which Mr. Turkus in his summation will sum up that same fact, he will interpret it differently—in other words, I may see an issue in one respect and he may see the same issue in an entirely different respect, would the fact that you know him for all those twenty years and have such a high regard for him influence you to the point that you may be inclined to accept the version placed upon that particular point or any points [fol. 570] or all points placed upon it by Mr. Turkus?

A. That is possible.

Q. So that in the last analysis, when you will have to weigh part of Mr. Turkus himself, not as an individual, but as a person who sponsors a given cause, then in the scale against the defendants will be the knowledge that Mr. Turkus has been known to you for twenty years, isn't that so?

A. That is right.

Q. And that may be prejudicial to any one of the defendants or to all of them?

A. That is right.

Q. You would not be table to help yourself under those conditions, would you?

A. I would be a little shaky.

Q. And that would not be fair to any of the defendants?

A. That is right.

Q. And you know now that we each represent opposite views in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. So you start off shaky, don't you, isn't that so?

A. That is right.

Q. And that would be to the prejudice of any one of the defendants? That is your honest answer?

A. That is my honest opinion.

Q. You feel that way?

A. That is the way I feel.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Isn't it true, Mr. Herrick, that the quality of proof that would be required from the defendant or from The People would be of a different degree than what would be [fol. 571] necessary because of your personal knowledge of Mr. Turkus and your belief in his integrity?

A. Yes.

Mr. Barshay: On behalf of all counsel we challenge the juror for cause.

The Court: Try the challenge.

Joseph O. Herrick, of 667 Tenth Street, Brooklyn, New York, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Herrick, if I were to ask you the same questions under oath as you were asked before you were sworn, would you make the same answers?

A. I would.

Q. Substantially to the effect that there may come a time when you would have to be prejudiced against one or all of the defendants?

A. Yes.

Mr. Barshay: Press my challenge.

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Herrick, I thank you for your high regard. I coincide. I agree that the challenge shall be sustained.

The Court: The Court has not agreed.

Mr. Turkus: That is all I can do.

By the Court:

Q. You think you will show favoritism?

A. It is possible I would.

Q. In a case where death is the penalty, you would show favoritism?

A. I am a little bit afraid.

[fol. 572] Mr. Talley: It is extremely difficult for us down here to hear everything you say. I do not like to be bobbing up and reminding you of that, Judge, but it is a great detriment to us.

The Court: It may be that there is not sufficient quiet down there. I do not know. I don't repeat, but the stenographer will.

(The stenographer read as requested.)

Q. In the years you have known Mr. Turkus he has been most of the time in the defense of criminal cases; is that not right?

A. I believe so.

Q. If you know him very well?

A. I knew him. I know him where he used to eat in the restaurant. I knew he was a promising young attorney, but I did not know whether he handled civil or criminal cases.

Q. You just know him from eating in the restaurant?

A. Yes, we used to meet there every day and talk.

Q. Talk about cases?

A. Oh, no, talk about different other things.

Q. Did he ever tell you where he lived?

A. No, he did not tell me where he lived.

Q. Did he ever tell you where he went on vacation?

A. No.

Q. Did he ever tell you whether or not he was married?

A. I don't think he is married.

Q. Did he ever tell you that?

A. No, he did not, your Honor.

[fol. 573] Q. Did he ever tell you anything of an intimate, personal nature?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with him of a strictly friendly nature?

A. Why, no. We talked about the weather or maybe politics.

Q. Just table talk?

A. Table talk.

Q. Do you call that friendship?

A. Well, I don't know.

Q. Don't laugh, because you made a statement here which is rather astounding, that you would allow a restaurant-table acquaintanceship to convict men of murder as a substitute for evidence. I want to know whether you are sincere in making that statement.

Mr. Barshay: I object to that question, if your Honor pleases.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception.

Q. Will you please answer that, sir?

A. We used to sit and talk and have our dinner.

Q. I want an answer to that question.

A. What is the question, your Honor?

Q. Oh, you did not listen.

A. We had some interruption.

Q. The stenographer will read it.

(Question read by the stenographer.)

Q. Is that what you are trying to put across?

[fol. 574] A. I am not trying to put anything across, your Honor.

Q. Is that your attitude

The Court: I sustain the challenge, upon the ground the man is wholly unfit to have a job as juror. Get out.

Mr. Talley: If your Honor pleases, I, with great respect——

The Court: Sit down, please. This gentleman will leave at once, and there will be perfect order until he gets out of this room.

Mr. Talley: I object——

The Court: Exception to all counsel for the defendants.

Mr. Talley: I take the exception, if your Honor pleases, but I wish to make a further statement than that, and that is my objection.

The Court: No statement. Call the next juror.

Mr. Talley: May I not record my objection and exception to your Honor's statement to this juror?

The Court: Your exception is on the record, sir.

Mr. Talley: No, my exception is not on the record to your statement, and I move now——

The Court: The Court directs an exception be entered on behalf of all counsel for defendants.

Mr. Talley: I wish to have the record show that I object on behalf of all counsel to your Honor's statement [fol. 575] to the talesman who has just been excused, upon the ground that it has a tendency to prevent a fair expression of opinion on the part of talesmen, and it will be difficult, and I think it makes it difficult for us, to get the fair and impartial jury that we are seeking.

The Court: Are you all through, Counsel? Please proceed with the examination.

Mr. Talley: I except to your Honor's statement and I note my exception to your Honor's statement on my objection.

The Court: Go ahead, Mr. Turkus.

JOHN M. PLEIL, of 1151 Troy Avenue, Brooklyn, was examined as to his qualifications.

Mr. Turkus: May I ask for a recess at this time? That was a distressing incident for me, your Honor.

The Court: No.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. What section is that?
A. Flatbush.
Q. Have you lived there a number of years, Mr. Pliel?
A. About seventeen.
Q. You are listed here as an assistant buyer.
A. That is right
Q. And by whom are you employed, sir?
A. Lorillard Tobacco Company.
Q. Is that P. Lorillard & Company?
A. That is right.
[fol. 576] Q. Have you been there for a number of years?
A. Twenty.
Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge in this case in which Buchalter, Weiss and Capone are charged with the crime of murder in the first degree which would prevent you from being a fair and just juror in the case?
A. No.
Q. Have you any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?
A. No.
Q. If selected as a juror in the case, would you permit anybody to talk punishment to you?

Mr. Climenko: I object to the form of the question.

The Court: Sustained. It is a law question.

Q. Is your frame of mind such that you would not discuss the question of punishment in the jury room if selected as a juror?

A. No.

Q. And will you decide the issue in the case, the issue of guilt or innocence, upon the evidence that you hear in the court-room and nothing else?

A. That is right.

Q. Heretofore has business or social contacts brought you in touch with anybody in the Brownsville-East New York area of Brooklyn?

A. No.

Q. Or in the garment district in Manhattan?

A. No.

Q. The clothing district?

A. No.

Q. Or clothing truckers?

A. No.

Q. Since your name appeared on the special jury list and since you received your notice in this case, did anybody [fol. 577] speak to you about the case?

A. Just friends.

Q. Was that in regard to the possibility of serving on the jury.

A. Yes.

Q. Was there anything said about the merits of the case?

A. Well, some remarks was made.

Q. Were they people that you knew?

A. Yes, sure, in my office.

Q. Office employees?

A. That is right.

Q. It was a matter of curiosity on their part?

A. That is right.

Q. Was it in connection with arrangements in the event that you were selected as a juror?

A. No.

Q. Do you sit in the jury box now free of prejudice against the defendants?

A. Right.

Q. You do?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the Penal Law of the State of New York?

A. Right.

Q. There are nine lawyers in the case, former Assistant District Attorney Barshay, former Assistant United States Attorney Wegman, and Mr. Climenko all representing the defendant Buchalter. Do you know any of those lawyers?

A. None of them.

Q. Anyone connected with their law offices?

A. No.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar intimately who specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know former Judge Talley?

A. No.

[fol. 578] Q. Former Assistant District Attorney Cuff?

A. No.

Q. Or former Assistant United States Attorney Kriendler?

A. No, sir.

Q. Anybody connected with their law office?

A. No.

Q. Does the same hold true with counsel for Capone, Messrs. Rosenthal, Fischbein, and Rosenberg?

A. I don't know them.

Q. You do not know anyone connected with their law offices? With respect to the District Attorney of the county, do you know Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of his staff, intimately?

A. No.

Q. Specifically, do you know Mr. Turkus, Mr. Joseph, or Mr. Klein?

A. No.

Q. Did you know the former prosecutor of the county, Mr. Geoghan?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Or any member of his staff?

A. No.

Q. If selected as a juror in this specific case, will you take the law exclusively from the trial judge?

A. I will.

Q. I take it that, having been seated in this box now you have heard discussion by various of the lawyers as well as the prosecutor in regard to accomplice testimony. Have you heard that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any bias against the prosecutor of the county for breaking a case from the inside and using the testimony of a co-participant in the crime against the remaining defendants on trial?

[fol. 579] Mr. Talley: Object to the question in substance and in form. It is objectionable on both grounds.

Mr. Turkus: Question overruled six times.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Talley: I ask it be overruled every time it is asked.

The Court: Same ruling.

Mr. Talley: Same exception.

Q. (Pending question read.)

A. No.

Q. Before I continue with that, I just want to make sure about any possible connection in any shape or form with officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything familiar to you about the names of Potofsky, Weinstein, and Katz affiliated with the Amalgamated?

A. No.

Q. Is there anything familiar about the name of Bruno Belia an organizer of the Amalgamated?

A. No.

Q. An individual by the name of Salvatore Marazzano, is there anything familiar about that name?

A. No.

Q. Is the name Philip Orlofsky, a one-time manager of the Cutters Union, Local 4 of the Amalgamated, at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any contact or connection in any degree, shape or form with any official of Local 240 of the Clothing Helpers & Drivers Union?

A. No.

[fol. 580] Q. Or of any Teamsters Union?

A. No.

Q. Any familiarity with the name of Silverman, Max Silverman, or Wolfie Goldis?

A. No.

Q. Or that of Willie or William Alberts, a one-time bondsman?

A. No.

Q. The name of Emanuel Buchalter, is that at all familiar?

A. No.

Q. Or Philip Buchalter, sometimes known as Philip Kowas?

A. No.

Q. Bellanca and Tosca, are those names familiar?

A. No.

Q. Terry Burns?

A. No.

Q. Is your frame of mind such that even a person of bad character may on occasion tell the truth?

A. Would you mind repeating it?

Q. Yes. Is your frame of mind such that even a person of bad character may, on occasion, tell the truth?

A. Sometime.

Q. Have you any inherent bias or prejudice against testimony coming from an accomplice which would cause you to disregard the testimony?

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to the question. The law is that he must disregard it unless corroborated.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

Q. (Pending question read.)

A. No.

Q. You have no inherent bias or prejudice against testi- [fol. 581] mony coming from an accomplice solely because he is an accomplice; is that correct?

A. No.

Q. Will you follow the instructions of law as given by the Judge as to the weight and credibility to be given to that type of witness?

A. No.

Q. If you find that the testimony of an accomplice is corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime, and you are satisfied from the evidence that the accomplice is telling the truth, that the other evidence does tend to connect him with the commission of the crime, and you are satisfied of that beyond a reasonable doubt, would you hesitate to say so by your verdict of guilty?

A. No.

Q. Is there any reason concerning which I as yet have received no response which goes to your qualification as a juror in the case?

A. What is that?

Q. I will withdraw it in that form. Is there anything that I have not yet brought out that both sides should know affecting your qualifications to sit as a juror? I will revise it again: Is there any reason why you cannot be a fair and impartial juror in the case?

A. I do not know. I read quite a few articles in the paper and talked about the case.

The Court: We will continue this tomorrow morning. Be here at ten o'clock.

The question came up before as to why the Court thinks it advisable not to swear except in group, unless it be otherwise decided during the course of the questioning of jurors. Section 387 of the Criminal Code provides "The first twelve persons to appear, as their names are drawn and called, who are approved as indifferent between the parties and [fol. 582] are not discharged or excused, must be sworn: and constitute the jury to try the issue." This is upon the selection of twelve people. Meeting that requirement would require the administration of the oath, and they would then constitute the jury. The Court in its discretion has followed the practice in other cases of swearing individually from time to time as the case progresses, but here is a practical difficulty. It is the intention of the Court, on account of the extreme delay, on account of the length of time it has taken to select the jury in this case, not to subject those who have been tentatively selected to the inconvenience of being housed. The effect of that may be to make jury service intolerable. The housing will commence when we are ready to take the evidence, not before. Allowing jurors to go home, even with the instruction of the Court against reading, against talking, and against listening to the radio, about the case, would, in event of such juryman being sworn, prevent his being later on questioned as to what might have happened by way of contact in the interim in which he was permitted to go home, and I think in this case that would be unwise. That is the reason for the Court exercising its discretion in this manner. Later on, if you make more speed—and I say this not critically—[fol. 583] the situation may develop differently, but it is a sorry production so far.

(To talesmen.) Gentlemen, you may go now, and be in your place at ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

You are admonished not to talk about the case, not to discuss it, not to allow anybody to talk to you about it. Do not read about it; do not listen to the radio or otherwise about it. Keep your minds open.

The defendants are remanded.

(Adjourned to Thursday, September 25, 1941, at 10 o'clock a.m.)

[fol. 584] Brooklyn, N. Y., September 25, 1941.

Trial Resumed

JOHN M. PLEIL, was examined further as to his qualications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. In examination of the other prospective talesmen, one of the lawyers directed attention to the fact that there is only a single issue in the case, the issue being whether these three men at the bar of justice, Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone, are guilty of murder in the first degree, in the murder of Joseph Rosen, do you understand that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think we got to the point where you stated you would be willing to take the law from the Court in all of its aspects.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you appreciate this is an important case, important both to The People of the State of New York and to the defendants at the bar?

A. Yes.

Q. If selected as a juror, will you conscientiously endeavor to arrive at a just verdict in the case?

A. Yes.

Q. If selected as a juror, will you deliberate with your fellow jurors with common sense, understanding, and without rancor or bitterness?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you are selected as a juror, and after you hear all of the evidence in the case, and after you have heard the [fol. 585] lawyers argue the inferences they draw and the inferences the prosecution may draw with respect to the evidence, and his argument to the jury, and you listen to the learned Court on the law, will you discuss the case with fairness and with reason and with common sense with your other jurors, and when you come to a conclusion beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three guilty men at this bar of justice, three men guilty of the murder of Joseph Rosen, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you have any fear or hesitation or reluctance?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: No challenge for cause.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. Mr. Turkus asked you a question yesterday as to whether you knew of any reason why you could not listen fairly to the evidence in this case—I don't know whether you finished your answer to that question at the time we recessed. Do you remember that question?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you answer that question now, and tell us is there any reason in your mind at the present time which would interfere with your impartial consideration of the case?

A. I said that I talked to my friends about the case.

Q. You have talked with your friends about the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anything else?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 586] Q. Have you read about the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What newspaper did you read?

A. I read it in the Mirror, some articles.

Q. Beginning when, so far as you remember?

A. I read several articles.

Q. In what month?

A. In this month.

Q. Did you read those articles in the Mirror as it is distributed in the Borough of Brooklyn?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you bought that copy in Brooklyn?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the reading of these articles, did you form an impression which was adverse to any of the defendants?

A. It only created some impression on me.

Q. As you sit here now do you have that impression which you gained from these articles?

A. Yes, sir, you cannot dispense all of it.

Q. You cannot completely dispense the impression you gained from reading those articles?

A. No, sir.

Q. And the opinion which you derived from the reading of these articles is one that is unfavorable to at least one of the defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you sit here now you have that unfavorable opinion with you?

A. I still have it.

Q. Would it require the production of evidence on behalf of that defendant in order to dispense that opinion from your mind?

[fol. 587] A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Climenko: I challenge this talesman for cause.

The Court: Try the challenge.

JOHN M. PLEIL, No. 2819 was then sworn and examined on the challenge.

By Mr. Climenko:

Q. Now that you have been sworn, were I to repeat the questions I just put to you, would your answers be the same?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Climenko: May it please your Honor, I press the challenge.

Mr. Cuff: All of the defendants join in pressing the challenge.

The Court: Any further questions by counsel for the defense?

Mr. Barshay: No.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I believe when we discussed the matter yesterday you said you had had no prior jury service.

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Consequently you never heard a judge charge a jury with respect to a criminal case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Our law is that the defendant has no burden in a criminal case, that is, that burden is upon the prosecutor to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the defendant need offer no evidence at all, and [fol. 588] if he desires he may sit mute, and if he sits mute, no unfavorable inference may be drawn; that is our system of jurisprudence here. Do you find any quarrel with that type of law—is it repugnant to your sense of justice?

A. No, sir.

Q. If you were charged by this Court this law, would you endeavor conscientiously to apply these principles of law to the case?

A. I would try.

Q. Now that you are aware that the defendant need offer no defense at all in a criminal case, would you still expect the defendant to do so?

A. Yes.

Q. In this particular case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is your opinion such that you could not lay it aside and decide the case upon the evidence?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Let me take a few more steps with you and then I think we can finish this up very quickly. Of course, to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, you must necessarily expect the prosecutor to give you evidence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You would not expect the prosecutor to take a newspaper and submit that to the jury in lieu of testimony, would you?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Climenko: I object.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Q. Cognizant of the law that the prosecutor must establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, upon testimony; is there anything you have read in those newspaper articles [fol. 589] that has made such an impression on your mind you could not lay it aside?

A. I read quite a bit, and my mind was made up after I formed an opinion about the defendants. I tried to cast it aside, but I cannot.

Q. You are telling me frankly and fully?

A. Yes, sir, that is my honest opinion.

The Court: Challenge sustained.

Andrew A. Merrick, No. 2684, residing at 107 Garfield Place, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. The trestle board lists your address as 107 Garfield Place.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is in the Park Slope section?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you lived in that section for a number of years?

A. Thirty years.

Q. You likewise are listed here as having some connection with insurance. We need further information. Are you a broker?

A. No, sir, a clerk, office work only.

Q. By what company are you employed?

A. The Equitable Life.

Q. Have you worked there for a number of years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. More than five?

A. Fifty years next February.

Q. I take it by now you are familiar with the nature of the charge, namely, that the three men at the bar of justice, [fol. 590] Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone, are charged with murder in the first degree, the murder of a man named Joseph Rosen.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything about the nature of the charge, namely, that of murder, which would preclude you from being a fair and impartial juror in the case?

A. None whatever.

Q. I take it you have no conscientious or other scruples against capital punishment?

A. None, sir.

Q. And if selected as a juror in the case, will you decide the case from the evidence and not from the common standpoint of punishment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If selected as a juror, would you permit any other juror to discuss punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. There are questions we must get from you individually. I know you will understand when I repeat them that it is a case of necessity and not of desire, as, for instance, has your business or has any social contact given you any connection with the field in Brownsville or the East New York area of Brooklyn at any time?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had any connection in the past or have you presently, with any person or with any firm in the garment district of Manhattan?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with anyone connected with the clothing district in Manhattan or on the Brooklyn waterfront?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with or do you know any official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 591] Q. Specifically, is there anything in connection with the names of Jacob Potofsky, secretary or treasurer of the Amalgamated, with Murray Weinstein, manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, Local No. 4 of the Amalgamated, or Samuel Katz, business agent of the local, that suggests itself to your mind?

A. No, sir, never heard of them.

Q. Is there any familiarity about the name of Bruno Belia, an organizer at the home office of the Amalgamated?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had any contact in any way, shape, or form with any official of Local No. 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union or of the Teamsters Union?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any familiarity with the name of Max Silverman or Wolfie Goldis?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is the name Philip Orlofsky, one-time manager of the Clothing Cutters Union, affiliated with the Amalgamated, at all familiar to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the name of William or Willie Alberts, a one-time bondsman; does that mean anything to you?

A. No, sir, I don't think I ever heard of that name.

Q. Emanuel Buchalter or Philip Buchalter.

A. I have seen those names in the paper.

Q. Other than seeing those names in the paper, is there any familiarity with those names?

A. Well, I think I heard of them before.

[fol. 592] Q. You think you have read something?

A. I seen those names in the newspaper before.

Q. Other than the familiarity with the names you gathered from reading the newspaper, do those names mean anything to you other than having read them?

A. No, sir.

Q. Outside of reading them?

A. I saw the names in the newspaper; that is all.

Q. Have you any familiarity at all with the names of Bellanca or Tosca?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does the name of Terry Burns mean anything to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Abe Slabo?

A. No, sir.

The Court: It is possible there may be a misunderstanding among counsel as to the understanding of the Court's previous ruling against the use of alleged aliases as names in advance of proof. That ruling does not go so far as to prevent counsel for either side from probing as to the impression derived by talesmen from publicity in the use of these alleged aliases. If any questions are asked in that regard, the particular defendant to whom they are supposed to apply shall not be mentioned to the talesman in advance of proof.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. May I go along with the understanding you have had no connection with any firms or individuals in the clothing district, the clothing trucking industry, or the garment dis-

[fol. 593] trict in Manhattan?

A. That is true, I never had.

Q. Since your name appeared on this special panel, and specifically since you yourself received your notice to act as a prospective juror in this case, did anybody speak to you about the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the Penal Law of the State of New York?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There are various lawyers representing the defendants at the bar. Do you know Mr. Barshay, a former Assistant District Attorney?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. Bertram Wegman, a former Assistant United States Attorney?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. Climenko?

A. No, sir.

Q. They are counsel for the defendant Buchalter.

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone associated with them in the practice of law, or employed in their office?

A. I cannot think of any.

Q. The defendant Weiss is represented by former Judge Talley, former Assistant District Attorney Cuff, and former Assistant United States Attorney Kreindler. Do you know any of them?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or anyone employed in their office or associated with them?

A. Not as I know of.

Q. The defendant Capone is represented by Mr. Sidney Rosenthal, Mr. Fischbein, and Mr. Rosenberg; do you know any of those?

[fol. 594] A. No, sir.

Q. Or anyone associated or connected with their offices?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Geoghan, the former prosecutor of this county, personally?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of his staff?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who are they?

A. Mr. Kelly, Dr. O'Reilly, the Medical Examiner, he is dead some years.

Q. Did you kn w Mr. Barshay when he was in that office?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was your contact with Mr. Geoghan an intimate one?

A. No, sir, I knew him slightly; I was introduced to him and I knew him just enough to salute him on the street, and Mr. Kelly I knew fifty years; I went to school with him.

By the Court:

Q. You lived in the Heights section at one time?

A. No, sir, on Conduit Street, and he lived in that section, and I went to school with him; I knew him for years. I became acquainted with him as a schoolboy.

Q. You are now on Garfield Place?

A. Yes, sir, between 5th and 6th Avenues.

Q. What particular line of accounting are you connected with in the Equitable?

A. I have a position called Assistant Registrar, signing documents, different papers.

Q. You have been in the accounting department of the [fol. 595] Equitable for a good many years?

A. I have been in the policy department most of the time.

Q. For how many years?

A. I will be there fifty years next February.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I take it you started to work in your teens?

A. The first position I ever had.

Q. You were under twenty when you got that job?

A. Much younger.

Q. The reason for that is because there is an age limit.

A. There wasn't any then.

Q. You were in your teens when you went to work?

A. Yes, sir; I will tell you my age, if you want me to.

Q. No, that is all right. I think a man has Constitutional rights.

A. I started as an office boy.

By the Court:

Q. That was under Mr. McCall—that was Mr. McCall, who was afterwards a Supreme Court Judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. McCall was attorney for the Equitable?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you find any fault or have you any bias against the —— of the county, Judge O'Dwyer, or against the prosecution of an indictment where the District Attorney breaks the case from the inside and employs the use of accomplice testimony to testify against the co-conspirators in a case?

[fol. 596] Mr. Talley: That is objected to.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.

Q. The charge here is for the murder of Joseph Rosen on September 13, 1936, at the time when there was another prosecutor. Because of your knowledge of this occasion, would you have any resentment against the prosecutor now or against the prosecution wherein this case has been broken from the inside since by the new prosecutor?
A. No.

Mr. Talley: I object to the question as improper in form and in substance.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Barshay: I object. It assumes a state of facts which are not part of the record.
The Court: Objection overruled. Exception to defendants.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Is your state of mind such you feel that even a man of bad character and reputation and of past bad conduct can sometimes tell the truth?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. If accepted as a juror will you use the common sense and understanding you have got in weighing the issue and in saying whether an accomplice has told the truth and whether there is other evidence tending to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime?
[fol. 597] A. I would.
Q. Will you take the law in every aspect from Judge Taylor and from nobody else?
A. I will.

Q. If selected as a juror will you endeavor, conscientiously, to arrive at a just verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If accepted as a juror will you listen to fair and reasonable discussions by your fellow jurors as you go into the jury room and deliberate upon the issue of the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you, in your every-day business experience, have occasion to confer with others in settling disputes or problems that may arise?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is your business more or less routine work?

A. Clerical, that is all.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer, District Attorney of the county, personally?

A. No, sir, I do not know him personally.

Q. Do you know any member of his staff personally?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who?

A. Mr. Hughes, the Chief Assistant.

Q. You know him over a period of years?

A. Over forty years.

Q. Have you discussed any of the work of Judge O'Dwyer with him?

A. Not with him; I have not seen him in over a year.

Q. Specifically, do you know Assistant District Attorneys Joseph or Klein or Turkus?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will you endeavor, if selected as a juror, to conscien- [fol. 598] tiously apply the principles of law that Judge Taylor will give you in charging you on the facts in this case?

A. Certainly.

Q. You will listen to their discussion and argument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will endeavor, conscientiously, to arrive at a just verdict?

A. I will.

Q. Assuming that you are accepted as a second juror in the case and you have heard all the evidence in the case, all the evidence presented, and then the lawyers for the defense go before the jury, as they will have a perfect right to do, and draw inferences from testimony as they see it, and then the prosecutor draws inferences from the testimony as the prosecution views it, and then you have the benefit of the Judge's instructions on the law, and you go into the jury-room and talk the case over with common-sense understanding with the other jurors, and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that at this bar of justice in the County Court of Kings County are three guilty men, guilty of murder in the first degree, the murder of Joseph Rosen, would you hesitate to say so in your verdict?

A. I would not.

Q. Would you have any fear or reluctance?

A. Not the slightest.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. I believe the same thing would apply to the condition of mind you would be in at the conclusion of all the evidence, [fol. 599] if you were not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that these men are guilty of the crime with which they are charged, you would not hesitate to acquit them?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you sat as a juror in a criminal case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Frequently?

A. In 1928.

Q. Not since?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was that in this County Court, in Brooklyn?

A. No, sir. It was in the other building, the Supreme Court, before Judge Callahan.

Q. Have you sat as a juror in civil cases?

A. No, sir.

Q. And not since 1928 have you sat in a criminal case?

A. I have not sat since then.

Q. When you sat in 1928 in a case or cases upon which you did sit as a juror, were they put in the hands of the jury for deliberation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You understand that the burden is always upon the District Attorney representing the People to prove the guilt of the defendants and to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the burden he assumes when he undertakes the prosecution of any case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the Court charges you that a reasonable doubt is the kind of a doubt a man might have about any of the ordinary affairs of life, and if after hearing that charge you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of these defendants or any of them, you would acquit them? [fol. 600] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Although you have not seen Mr. Hughes, the Chief Assistant District Attorney, you have not talked to him for a year, you knew him pretty well?

A. Yes, sir, I went around with him years ago when he was studying law.

Q. It goes back that far?

A. Yes, sir, over forty years.

Q. And now he holds the exalted position of Chief Assistant District Attorney of the County of Kings?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would the fact that he occupies that important position, right next to District Attorney O'Dwyer, have any influence upon your consideration of this case?

A. Not the slightest.

Q. You are sure about that?

A. Positive.

Q. Are you a member of any political organization?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you expect to be active in any way in the forthcoming Mayoralty election in which O'Dwyer is a candidate?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody in the District Attorney's office besides Mr. Hughes?

A. That is all I know to my knowledge.

By the Court:

Q. Is that a church affiliation?

A. With Mr. Hughes?

Q. Yes.

A. No, sir, I went around with him about forty years ago; he lived about five blocks away from me at that time.

Q. He lives on the Park Slope now?

A. He lives on 14th Street now.

[fol. 601] Q. Near where?

A. I think between 8th and 9th Avenue. At that time he had a friend, a doctor, a young man studying medicine.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. You just keep your voice up, please.

By the Court:

Q. The fact you knew Mr. Hughes as a boy and went around together, lived within a few blocks of one another, and Mr. Hughes now lives on 14th Street between 8th and 9th Avenue, which is a little over a half a mile or a good mile from where the talesman at present lives, but in the same general section, that would not affect you?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. You're interested in Mr. Hughes' career?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You like to see him get ahead?

A. He has gotten ahead.

Q. And you would like to see him go further than he has gone?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you thought the conviction of these defendants, and the prosecution of the defendants by the office of which Mr. Hughes is Chief Assistant, would help him progress, would you be inclined to consider that?

A. No, sir, I would not want to see him get ahead that way.

Q. Have you read anything about this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You read quite a bit?

A. Quite a little, yes, sir.

Q. You read the articles in the Mirror?

[fol. 602] A. I have read some of those articles.

Q. Have you read them all?

A. No, sir, not lately.

Q. You read most of them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you read them since you have been summoned as a juror in this case?

A. I read them before that, but we were told not to read them.

Q. You have read them since you received the notice?

A. No, sir, I have not had the time since.

Q. Did you read any articles in the Mirror for these last three weeks?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. As a result of reading these particular articles, referring to the Mirror articles, did you form an unfavorable impression about any of these defendants?

A. Well, I can say I did not form a favorable one, because I have been reading quite a number of articles in the newspaper at other times on other days, about certain conditions.

Q. As a result of reading those articles about the certain conditions to which they referred, did you form an unfavorable impression of any of these defendants on trial?

A. At that time I did.

Q. And nothing has happened since then to change your impression, has it?

A. No, sir, I am not on the jury yet.

Q. So you still have an unfavorable impression?

A. It is not a very favorable one.

Q. You still have one?

A. Slightly, yes, sir.

[fol. 603] Q. And the recent things you read in the newspaper have kind of reinforced the st-engths of that unfavorable impression?

A. It kind of brought certain things to mind I had read before.

Q. If you have an unfavorable impression about these defendants, or any of them, at the start, as you say you have now, it would take some evidence in this case to remove that impression, wouldn't it?

A. It will, yes, sir.

Q. And that evidence would have to be furnished by these defendants in some manner or other, wouldn't it?

A. Well, I would li-ten to both sides, and naturally render a just verdict according to my conscience.

Q. If you were accepted, in order to remove that unfavorable impression from your mind, some evidence would have to be produced?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For you to necessarily and naturally become favorable of the defendants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And other than the matter about which I have just been interrogating you, is there any reason that you know of why you could not sit as a fair, impartial juror?

A. No, sir, I know of no reason.

Mr. Talley: I challenge for cause, in view of the statement your Honor has just heard.

The Court: Try the challenge.

ANDREW A. MERRICK, a talesman, was then sworn and examined on the challenge.

[fol. 604] By Mr. Talley:

Q. Mr. Merrick, if I repeated to you the questions which I have just asked you, particularly those dealing with your reading the newspaper accounts relating in some manner or other to this case, now that you have been sworn, if I repeated those questions to you would your answers be the same?

A. Yes, sir, the same.

Mr. Talley: I press the challenge.

The Court: Any questions by any other counsel?

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You have already admitted to Judge Talley that you have an impression which is unfavorable to the defendants.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that quality of evidence would either have to be produced by The People or the defendants would be different than would otherwise be the case if you did not have that bad impression?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I think you told counsel for the defense that you had prior jury service sometime in 1928?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course, that is a long time ago, but do you remember the Judge charged you on the presumption of innocence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. According to our system of law the defendants are presumed to be innocent?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that presumption attaches itself and it remains [fol. 605] with them until the prosecutor overcomes it by proof establishing guilt beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a sensible rule, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For a man to come into court with the presumption of innocence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not find any fault with that?

A. No, sir.

Q. It is a sensible rule that the prosecutor must establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt on evidence he brings into court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, it is sensible also that the prosecutor must establish guilt upon the evidence and not upon articles that may appear in the press?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because that would be substituting a newspaper account for the collective wisdom of the jury?

Mr. Talley: I object to discussion or argumentation about these matters.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

The Court: What is somewhat puzzling is this: The talesman says he has an impression. He says that impression cannot be removed without evidence being supplied. We have not as yet gotten to the point as to whether or not he could put aside that—not to leave it out, but to put it aside and consider the evidence in the case and decide the case on the evidence.

[fol. 606] Mr. Turkus: Mr. Rosenthal's question was a question as to the quality of proof, so I have to take into consideration the proof.

The Court: But that is upon the assumption that he would not be required to put aside the impression.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Now that we have had a preliminary discussion, is the impression one that you have gathered from reading articles in the past which pertain to a single defendant or more?

A. Reading articles in the press pertaining to more than one.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you can give these men on trial a fair trial by laying aside the impression you formed from reading the newspaper?

A. I could.

Q. Not only lay it aside, but will you deliberate their guilt or innocence upon the evidence you hear in court?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Completely devoid of any articles in the newspapers which you have read?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is only one kind of proof the law requires a prosecutor to give, and that is proof satisfactory to the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt, and that cannot be increased or lessened. Do you find any fault with that?

A. No, sir.

Q. So that degree of proof or quality of proof always remains?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 607] Q. The law is, and you will be charged by the Court, that the defendants have no burden in the case; they can sit mute, and their failure to produce evidence or to take the stand cannot be used against them, nor can any unfavorable inference be drawn, so there is never an obligation on the part of a defendant to produce any evidence at all. Do you find any fault with that proposition?

A. No, sir.

Q. If you are so instructed by the Court, will you conscientiously endeavor to follow the instructions of law and apply the same to the facts in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So as you sit here as a juror now, your verdict will be Guilty if and only if the prosecutor establishes to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt that these three men are guilty of murder in the first degree, the murder of Joseph Rosen?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Talley:

Q. You told the District Attorney that you thought you could lay aside this unfavorable impression——

Mr. Turkus: I object, he said he would.
The Court: Objection overruled.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You told me before that, before you could lay that unfavorable impression aside or put it aside, you would require some evidence.

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 608] Q. And that you would expect evidence to come from the defendants in some manner or other, wouldn't you?

A. I think so, yes, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. If the defendants did not offer, either through themselves or through witnesses, any evidence to dissipate the impression you have at this moment, that impression would still remain because of their failure to give such evidence to you?

A. You mean if there was no evidence introduced in their favor?

Q. Yes.

A. I would have to take that into consideration.

Q. And that would weigh?

A. Yes, sir, that would influence me.

Q. Of course it would, to the detriment of all the defendants?

A. I think so.

Q. That would preclude from carrying out your oath as a juror, to give these defendants a fair trial, isn't that so?

A. I do not say I would not give them a fair trial, but it would influence me to a certain extent.

Q. That is your honest opinion?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: I press the challenge.
Mr. Cuff: We all join in the challenge.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. In addition to the fact you have an unfavorable impression gained from newspaper articles, you have great [fol. 609] friendship for the First Assistant District Attorney (Mr. Hughes)?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, assuming that through the trial, as he would have a perfect right to do, he came into this court-room and either passively assisted in the trial or sat here where he would be noticeable, that fact together with the unfavorable impression you have gained would have some weight in your determination of this case, wouldn't it?

A. That is a fair thing for you to ask. I don't think so. The fact of his coming in the room would not influence me.

Q. But you say you do not think so. That implies you are in doubt.

A. It might have a slight effect, his presence.

Q. In other words, your feeling is that you have a doubt in your mind now in addition to the other one expressed as to your impression, as to whether that would not influence you in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is in addition to what you have stated to Mr. Barshay in regard to an unfavorable impression you formed?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Rosenthal: I press the challenge.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I think you told me you could lay aside the impression you gathered from reading the newspaper articles.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think you told Judge Talley when he spoke to you [fol. 610] about Mr. Hughes that you did not want Mr. Hughes to get ahead that way.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think it would have any effect on your determination of the guilt or innocence of the three men on the murder charge, whether Mr. Hughes walked into the court-room and sat at the counsel table or did anything in your presence?

A. I don't think that would have any influence on my verdict, if I was a juror; his presence would not count.

Q. In other words, if accepted, will you discharge your oath of office and try the case on the merits, regardless of any opinion you might have had in the past or any association you have had with one of the prosecutors?

A. I would go by the evidence.

Q. I think you told me you find no fault with the proposition of law and that you would accept the instruction from Judge Taylor that the defendant has no burden at all; that he need not offer any evidence in his behalf.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Understanding that, would you nevertheless require him, is your state of mind such that despite the law that he need give no evidence, you would still require that he give evidence?

A. I would want to listen to some evidence before I could make up my mind.

Q. Of course you must hear the evidence of the prosecution.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Bearing in mind the defendant does not have to give [fol. 611] you any evidence if he does not want to, and that the Judge will so instruct you, that that is the law, is your mind such that you nevertheless in this case want the defendant to give you evidence?

A. If we are instructed it is not necessary and it is not the law in the case, I would go by the orders of the Judge.

Q. Your state of mind is such you can follow the instructions of the Judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if he tells you the defendant need offer no evidence, you will not expect any?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. As you sat here you heard before the question put to you by Mr. Turkus many times, representing that no defendant need offer proof nor explain an accusation against him?

A. I may have heard it, but I am not positive; I heard so many things.

Q. You heard so many things it may have confused you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And even as you sat in the chair where you are now, one of the first questions put to you by Mr. Turkus was about the presumption of innocence and the burden of proof, that the defendant need not take the stand.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after you answered that you heard of and you agreed with the enforcement of the Penal Law, which gives the defendants those rights, you still said that because of what you read you had formed an impression unfavor- [fol. 612] able to the defendants which would have to be dissipated only when and if the defendants or someone in their behalf would offer evidence?

A. That is true, yes, sir.

Q. So, in spite the fact you knew what the law is, having heard it both from the Court and the lawyer, you still, only a few minutes ago, told Judge Talley, Mr. Rosenthal, and myself, that someone would have to furnish, on behalf of the defendants, evidence to remove the impression you gained unfavorable to them.

A. I told you that? I must have, if you say so.

Q. That was your honest answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To be frank, that even at this moment there was an influence in your mind so unfavorable to these defendants that unless someone came forth from their side and offered evidence to dissipate your impression, you still would have a feeling in your mind against them; isn't that so?

A. It is still there.

Q. Even after you answered Mr. Turkus?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That impression unfavorable to them is still in your mind?

A. It is a hard thing to remove.

Mr. Barshay: I press our challenge.

The Court: The question seems to be not whether he can remove it, but whether he can disregard it or lay it aside.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. It will be difficult for you to lay aside an impression unless an affirmative proof on their behalf comes forth [fol. 613] from the witness stand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And their failure to do so would influence your judgment to their detriment?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: We press the challenge.

The Court: Challenge sustained.

Max Gould, No. 2817, was then examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. The trestle board lists your address as 1st Street, Brooklyn?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that in the Flatbush district?

A. Midwood.

Q. Is that between Flatbush and Sheepshead Bay?

A. No, sir, that is one block the other side of Coney Island Avenue between J and K.

Q. You are listed as a manufacturer.

A. I have been in the manufacturing business up until last June.

Q. What did you manufacture?

A. Negligees.

Q. Where was your office?

A. 1350 Broadway, 35th Street.

Q. That is pretty much in the heart of the garment district?

A. Directly across the street.

Q. Does the name Lepke mean anything to you?

A. Not a thing.

Q. What is your business now?

A. I am a designer now.

Q. Where are you employed?

A. I am not employed; I am for myself.

[fol. 614] Q. Where do you conduct your business?

A. 107 Madison Avenue.

Q. What street is that near?

A. 33rd Street and Madison.

Q. You were manufacturing negligees for how many years?

A. Seven or eight years.

Q. You must have many contacts in the clothing and garment district in Manhattan.

A. Absolutely none.

Q. Your place of business has for years been in close proximity to that area.

A. In the garment center, that is in the ladies' garment center.

Q. In all the years you have been there the name I mentioned means nothing to you?

A. Absolutely nothing, never heard of it.

Q. When you were manufacturing, did you have any business with unions?

A. I did not; I had a partrer; I had charge of the sales and designing. I had nothing to do with the manufacturing end. We had our factory in the Bronx, but I never went up there.

Q. Are you in business with this partner personally?

A. No, sir.

Q. You discuss business affairs with your partner, don't you?

A. Not the manufacturing end of it; I had nothing to do with that; that was his end of the business.

Q. Didn't you and your partner discuss business problems that arose in the manufacturing part of the business?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 615] Q. And in the distribution of the product?

A. I took care of the distribution and costs; I was only interested in the cost of production.

Q. You know many people in the garment district?

A. Only in my line, the negligee business.

Q. How about people in ladies' clothing?

A. I don't know a soul.

Q. Did your business bring you in contact or connection with people in Brownsville and East New York?

A. No, sir.

Q. How long have you lived in the Midwood section?

A. Four years.

Q. And prior to that?

A. 2930 West 36th Street, Sea Gate.

Q. Did you know Mr. William Kleinman?

A. I did not.

Q. Do you know people in the Sea Gate area in Brooklyn, inside of the Gate?

A. I know very few.

Q. How many years did you live in that section described as the Gate?

A. About twelve years.

Q. Did you have any contact directly or indirectly with anybody in the Brownsville or East New York area of Brooklyn by way of business, social, or any other way?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Is that near Mermaid Avenue?

A. Between Railroad and Mermaid, a bid apartment house; I lived there about ten years in the apartment; I had business out there; I had to live there; I had connections in the bath-house business, Turkish bath; I was [fol. 616] interested.

Q. What bath was that?

A. The old Stillwell Baths.

Q. On Stillwell Avenue near Surf?

A. Yes.

Q. Didn't Jack Harvey have charge of that afterwards?

A. That was after it went into bankruptcy, it became the Harvey Baths.

Q. It had about two thousand customers?

A. We handled ten thousand customers, at least.

Q. About two thousand at a time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In fact, you had to employ a lawyer on a salary to defend damage suits through people slipping on the floor?

A. We had a big business, yes, sir; there was an investment in there of $800,000.

Q. It is closed now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It did not pay?

A. It paid, but we did not have the "architect." There were two different people at each end.

Q. What was the name of the first man that had it?

A. Sam Richman and Dr. Travis of New York, a cousin of mine and myself.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. In those years you have been in the ladies' garment district did you ever hear the name of Gurrah?

A. Never.

The Court: I asked you about the baths not out of curiosity, but because in handling about ten thousand people a week, I take it most of your trade is local trade?

The Talesman: No, sir, we had trade from New York and [fol. 617] all over; they used to come there for hot Turkish baths.

By the Court:

Q. Did that include people in the garment business and people whose families were engaged in the garment business?

A. I never want into that; I had nothing to do with them.

Q. People who lived to the east of you on Mermaid Avenue?

A. I don't know how many of them came to the baths; I never paid any particular attention to determine that.

Q. The question is as to the character of the customers from what you found out.

A. We had some very fine customers; that we could tell by the tips.

Q. That does not mean anything. You had a pretty good Coney Island trade?

A. We had them from New Haven, Connecticut, and all over; we had people come from Saratoga and all over.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Did you ever hear the name of Curly Holtz?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Terry Burns or Abie Slabo?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. A lot of people slept there over night?

A. Yes.

Q. A good, big night trade?

A. We had accommodations for about three hundred.

Q. Did they sleep in dormitories?

A. Dormitories, private rooms.

Q. Did people live there?

A. No, sir, just over night.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Did you manufacture anything other than ladies' [fol. 618] negligees at any time?

A. That is all.

Q. Did you belong to a union?

A. I did not have anything to do with that. Union No. 62 in our local, but I did not have anything to do with it, and I never mingled with them.

Q. In the business you are now in, as a designer, you are right in the area of the garment manufacturing center; that is, the ladies' part?

A. There are certain concerns, they knew me, and then they are st; .ing a line they they get in touch with me at my home and tell me they are ready for their fall line, and I make up, design garments, and make them patterns; that is all I do. They pay me for what I do.

Q. That is the ladies' garments?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of course these contacts bring you in the area, in that area largely?

A. On Broadway, around 35th Street.

Q. That is the heart of the clothing district?

A. That is the negligee, I mean the la"es' clothing.

By the Court:

Q. Where did you take a course in designing?

A. I guess it was born in me; I have been doing it for twenty years.

Q. You know they have courses in that; you never went to any school?

A. No, sir, but I guess I am inclined to be—mechanically inclined.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you read any newspaper accounts of Judge O'Dwyer's investigation?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing at all?

A. Never.

[fol. 619] Q. You never read the name of Lepke in any newspaper?

A. When I received the summons, that is, the subpoena, I did not know what the subpoena was, and I came up here, and I looked at the board here, and I saw three or four names; that was the first time; then it dawned on me and I used to see in the Times once in a while Lepke, but I never paid attention to it.

Q. You have been around the Broadway and 34th Street area for how many years?

A. Twenty-five years.

Q. And the first time you saw the name of Lepke, to your recollection, what when you saw it on the board outside of the court-house and once or twice in the Times?

A. I saw it in the Times, but I never read those articles.

Q. Did you ever see the name Gurrah anywhere?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear any discussion about those names up around Broadway and 34th Street or in that area?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you up there personally while you were awaiting jury service?

A. I have not been in New York for two weeks.

Q. Two weeks ago, when you had the notice in your pocket, did anybody mention the name of Lepke?

A. I don't associate with those people.

By the Court:

Q. Just look at these defendants carefully. From having contact with bathers and handling so many people a week for so many years, see if you recognize any of them as customers.

A. I don't know anybody in the court-room.

[fol. 620] Q. Sure?

A. I am positive.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. During the ten years you have been in that district did you ever hear the name of Murray Weinstein?

A. In which district?

Q. Up in this district where you were manufacturing ladies' negligees, did you ever hear the name of Murray Weinstein, manager of the Clothing Cutters Union of the Amalgamated?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear the name of Samuel Katz, a business agent?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear the name of Bruno Belia?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No, sir.

Q. When you were in the business of manufacturing, you say your partner attended to the actual manufacturing of the article into the finished product, and you had charge of the distribution?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you deliver with truckers?

A. I did not; he took care of that; I was at 1350 Broadway, where we had our display. I took care of the styles and the buying of piece goods. I could not tell you one employee who worked for us, and we had 125 girls. I could not tell you any of them; I never went up to the factory.

Q. As I understood your relationship, you were a partner in this manufacture?

A. Absolutely.

[fol. 621] Q. And even though your partner handled one specific end of the business, didn't you ever talk to him about that part of the business?

A. About the figures, the cost of production; that is all, how the factory was going, how many were working.

Q. Was there any time when there was any difficulty with the distribution, with the trucking end of the product?

A. I never heard of it.

Q. Does the name Philip Orlofsky mean anything to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any official in the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union, Local No. 240?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any Teamsters Union officials?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does the name of Max Silverman mean anything to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any people in the Gate named Silverman?

A. No, sir, but I have heard there was a fellow in the Gate there that was in the trucking business, but I did not know him.

Q. Where did you hear that from?

A. I heard people talking.

Q. People in the neighborhood?

A. Yes, sir, they said something about a fellow living in the Gate that was connected with him, but I do not know where he lived even.

Q. Did you hear the name of Silverman in court today?

A. I think I heard the name.

Q. Did you hear any other names mentioned with Silverman?

[fol. 622] A. No, sir.

Q. Does the name Wolfie Goldis mean anything to you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or William Alberts, a bondsman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear the name of Bellanca and Tosca mentioned?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody named Buchalter?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you meet any such person in the clothing district?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Philip Kowas?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of a man named Joe Rosen in his lifetime?

A. No, sir.

Q. At the time when there were certain difficulties in the garment district, didn't you ever hear any discussion?

Mr. Talley: I object to any further questions along that line from this talesman. He has repeatedly said he had no knowledge of any of these persons. Why press it? It cannot have any bearing on whether the man makes a competent juror or does not.

The Court: Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. As you sit in the jury box have you any bias or prejudice against the defendants on trial?

A. No, sir.

Q. You never heard the name of Weiss, Capone, or [fol. 623] Buchalter before, to your recollection?

A. Never.

Q. Do you know any of the defense lawyers in the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have heard the names read off to the other jurors. Do you know any person attached to the law offices of any of counsel for the defendants in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you, at home or any place else, partake in any discussion in connection with the Rosen case?

A. Never.

Q. Or in any investigation conducted by Judge O'Dwyer, the prosecutor of this county?

A. Never.

Q. Was there ever any discussion had in your presence and hearing regarding any investigation conducted by Judge O'Dwyer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or in connection with these defendants by Thomas E. Dewey, in connection with the garment district?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or the clothing district?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of the bar who specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. No, sir.

Q. In inquiring of the other talesmen, Judge Talley asked them whether or not they had any political connections or whether or not they were interested in Judge O'Dwyer's campaign for Mayor. I want to ask you, were you interested in Judge Talley's candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Mayor?

Mr. Talley: I object; that is not material.

[fol. 624] The Court: He can answer it. Objection overruled.

Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. I want to know whether you were helping out Judge Talley trying to become the Democratic nominee for Mayor before O'Dwyer got the nomination.

A. I don't know him.

Q. You never heard of anybody in the case, either by way of the lawyers for the defense or anybody?

A. I will tell you, if Judge Talley was on the ticket I might have voted for him because I usually vote the straight Democratic ticket.

Q. In other words, as a juror, you are here to try a murder indictment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to try out the issue whether these men are guilty of murder in the first degree, the murder of Joseph Rosen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything concerning which I failed to make inquiry that might affect your qualifications to sit as a juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you be embarrassed in any way by service in this case?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Wasn't Abie Reles a customer in Stillwell's Baths?

A. What?

Q. Did you ever hear that name before?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You never heard the name of Reles?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 625] Q. Did you ever hear the name of Pittsburgh Phil Strauss?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Harry (Happy) Maione?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Frank (The Dasher) Abbandando?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Martin (Buggsy) Goldstein?

A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Never heard of those names before?

A. I never did.

Q. Do you read any papers?

A. I certainly do. I read the Times and the Post.

Q. You have belonged to no Democratic clubs?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are in the 16th?

A. I used to be in the 16th; I am in the 4th now.

Q. Where do you live?

A. 1047 East 10th Street.

Q. Is that the 4th Assembly District?

A. Isn't it? I think it is. I don't know what it is; I know I was in the 16th.

Q. You are many miles away from that.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Did you say you belonged to a political club?

A. No, sir.

Q. None of the names I have mentioned to you have any familiarity at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you never read about Reles?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or Harry Strauss, alias Pittsburgh Phil?

A. I never read about those names, as I tried to explain to you; I have seen them in the headlines, but I did not read it. If it had something to do with manufacturing, maybe I would read it.

[fol. 626] Q. Have you any opinion or impression now from anything you have read or heard with respect to this case?

A. I don't know anything about the case. I only read an article in the New York Times when we were dismissed for the month, and there was a little piece in the paper; it said something about a postponement until September 15th. That is as far as I know about this case. I never read this case before in my life.

Q. In regard to the people who patronize this Turkish bath, where people slept over night, did you ever see any individuals who were closely identified with Brownsville or East New York at that institution you were connected with?

A. We had a day manager and a night manager. I was a part owner. I don't know who patronized the baths. I was only interested in the deal.

Q. Was that the kind of a bath where they had "cups" they put on?

A. We had—that is in the Turkish department.

Q. While you were in this Turkish bath the only interest you had was in the deal?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. While you were in the district on upper Madison Avenue, a section approximately at 33rd, 34th, and 35th Street, you had nothing to do except with designing clothes?

A. Designing, selling, and taking care of my business; I had nothing to do with the manufacture; the minute I made a garment I put a price on it and that went to the production department, and they took care of the rest. That was all my headache. My headache was through.

[fol. 627] Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer, the District Attorney?

A. I just know him through campaigning; I have seen him.

Q. Have you been introduced to him?

A. Maybe I have.

Q. Do you feel favorably inclined toward him?

A. No, sir, not necessarily.

Q. Have you any bias or prejudice against him?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. Do you know any member of the District Attorney's staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any member of District Attorney Geoghan's staff?

A. I do not, and I think I voted for Geoghan; that is all I know about it.

Q. If accepted, will you take the law implicitly from the Court?

A. Absolutely.

Q. As you sit in the jury box, is your frame of mind such that the defendant must produce evidence in his behalf?

A. They should bring in evidence. I don't know; I think you should bring in evidence.

Q. I am asking you if you would expect the defendants to bring in evidence.

A. Not necessarily.

Q. If the time came when they did not bring in any evidence, would you be prejudiced against them?

A. No, I don't get the meaning of it.

Q. Supposing the prosecutor brings in a lot of witnesses, produces a lot of testimony and evidence against the defendants, would you expect the defendants to come in with some [fol. 628] evidence?

Mr. Climenko: I object to the form of the question.
The Court: Objection sustained. It is a question of law.

By the Court:

Q. Where did you meet Judge O'Dwyer during the campaign?
A. When he ran for office he used to be in the district; I think he was at the Half Moon Hotel once.
Q. How long ago was that?
A. That is maybe four years ago.
Q. That is when he ran for judge of this court?
A. I don't quite remember what he ran for.
Q. You attended a political meeting?
A. Yes, sir, Kenny Sutherland.
Q. You know Sutherland?
A. I know him as a leader.
Q. You know him socially?
A. No, sir, but I have met him; he only lives one block from my house.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you any prejudice against the testimony of an expert?
A. No, sir.
Q. Be it ballistic, handwriting, or otherwise?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you have any prejudice against a case where a prosecutor breaks a case from the inside and offers testimony of one of the co-conspirators in the matter against the others?

Mr. Talley: That is objected to.
The Court: Objection overruled.
[fol. 629] Mr. Talley: Exception.

A. No, sir.
Q. Who were the co-owners at Silver's Baths?
A. Dr. Travers, Sam Richmond, and another Travers from Springfield.
Q. Were you ever a witness in any litigation?
A. No, sir.
Q. In any lawsuit?
A. No, sir. Well, I had a civil case about the delivery of merchandise; it was settled out of court.

Q. Were you ever a complainant or a witness in any criminal prosecution?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has any member of your family ever been the victim of any crime?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you been in business under any name other than your own?

A. Jean-Dell, robes.

Q. What kind of robes?

A. They are negligees and robes.

Q. Any other name?

A. No, sir.

Q. So the only names you have conducted——

A. Well, myself, I have been in May's sportswear.

Q. What kind of sportswear?

A. Negligees; we called it sportswear, but it was negligees.

By the Court:

Q. Was one of these Travis's at one time around Coney Island?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did he live toward Bensonhurst?

A. No, sir; Dr. Travers lived on Riverside Drive at 104th Street.

Q. Are you a member of the Coney Island Board of Trade?

[fol. 630] A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the Penal Law?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you belong to any law enforcement societies?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you listened to any discussions on the subject of crime given by any prosecutor or anyone else?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know a lawyer named Price, David Price?

A. No, sir.

Q. When you were doing business in the Coney Island area, did you belong to the Coney Island Chamber of Commerce?

A. No, sir.

Q. In the years you have been in the clothing district, particularly in this negligee business, did you belong to any chambers of commerce there?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any manufacturers' association?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any scruples, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Dr. Michaelson, in Sea Gate?

A. I don't know him; I heard of a Dr. Michaelson; I do not know him.

Q. Is there any reluctance on your part to proceed as a juror in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you heretofore had any jury service?

A. No, sir.

Q. In no civil case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is this the first time your name has been drawn on this [fol. 631] special panel for this service?

A. Any service.

Q. Have you heretofore been interrogated as to your qualifications for service in a court of justice?

A. I have never been on any jury service.

Q. Since your notification was given to you that you were a prospective juror, did anybody speak to you about the defendants or any part of the case, of the District Attorney's investigation?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did anyone speak to you about having to make arrangements in the event you were selected as a juror?

A. Nobody spoke to me.

Q. You have had no discussion with anyone either with reference to your service on the jury?

A. No, sir.

Q. In the event the trial is protracted, I mean lengthy, would you be subject to any business inconvenience?

A. Not until next January.

Q. So you can go right along up until then?

A. I was inconvenienced at the time I was called, I had to go on a trip, but it was postponed; it gave me ample time for business.

Q. Do you have any prejudice against an accomplice simply because of being an accomplice, to the extent that you would reject his testimony?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything concerning which I have not asked you which would affect your qualifications to sit as a juror?

A. No, sir, not any.

[fol. 632] By Mr. Climenko:

Q. Other than the article in the Times did you read about this case at all?

A. Never.

Q. Have you read about the defendant Buchalter at any time other than that article?

A. Never.

Q. Do you have any opinion, as you sit here now, about the innocence or guilt of any of these defendants?

A. Well, from what I know they are innocent; I don't know anything about them.

Q. You understand—assuming you were instructed by the Court that any defendant charged with the commission of a crime is presumed to be innocent; would you have any quarrel with that concept of the law?

A. No, sir.

Q. Assuming you were instructed by the Court—I am referring to the matter Mr. Turkus discussed with you—that no defendant is under obligation to elicit—I mean bring forward, any evidence whatever in a criminal case, would you have any difficulty in following that instruction?

A. Not from the Court, no, sir.

Q. Assuming by the time the trial closes a particular defendant does not attempt to adduce any proof, would you be prejudiced against that defendant by reason of that?

A. No, sir.

Q. In other words, you would have no difficulty in following the instructions of the Court as to the law on that subject?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Are you acquainted with any member of the District [fol. 633] Attorney's staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with any member of the Police Force?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have not at any time discussed this case with any of your friends?

A. Never.

Q. You hold no opinion on the case as you sit here now?

A. I don't know anything about the case outside of a little article I read that somebody was murdered on account of being a witness for Dewey; it was a little, small clipping. That was the second day I was here, when they asked for a postponement. I saw it in the New York Times about that day. I think that only mentioned Buchalter; I don't think it mentioned the postponement.

Q. That was the article you read about a month ago?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. From reading that article you gained no impression unfavorable to any defendant?

A. Oh, no.

Q. You have said that you were a member of a political party.

A. I am not a member.

Q. You suggested you had voted regularly for a political party?

A. As a rule I vote one hundred per cent Democratic.

Q. You regularly vote for a particular party, whichever it may be?

A. Sometimes I split a ticket.

Q. You know that we are about to have an election in the City of New York?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 634] Q. You would not confuse that election with the trial of the case in court here?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. By that I mean you would not yourself be confused by the fact that the election is impending with any of the issues?

A. No, sir, I am going to vote for O'Dwyer anyhow; I don't care how the election goes.

Q. The fact that you are going to vote for Judge O'Dwyer is a circumstance which would not affect the discharge of your duty as a juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. One thing has nothing to do with the other?

A. No, sir.

Q. The fact that O'Dwyer happens to be District Attorney and that the District Attorney happens to be running for Mayor would not affect your impartial consideration of the evidence in the case?

A. No, sir, not if it was my own brother.

Mr. Climenko: No further questions by the defense.

Mr. Turkus: Challenge peremptorily.

Henry R. Lathrop, No. 2685, residing at 430 Clinton Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. According to the trestle board you live in Clinton Avenue?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that in the Brooklyn Heights section?

A. No, sir, the Hill section.

[fol. 635] Q. Have you lived there for a number of years?

A. About twenty-five years.

Q. The trestle board lists your occupation as that of sales promotion.

A. Yes, sir, sales and advertising.

Q. What is the product?

A. There isn't any product; it is just an advertising promoting.

Q. Advertising campaigns and promotion work?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any specific connection with people in the garment or the clothing business?

A. No, sir, my work is in the grocery field.

Q. I take it we can go along with the assumption that you have had no contact, directly or indirectly, with anyone in the garment or clothing district, or clothing truckers' industry?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you had any connection, in any wise, with any persons or firms in the Brownsville or East New York area?

A. No, sir.

Q. Since your name appeared on the panel, specifically since you received your slip, did anybody speak to you about the case?

A. Not about the merits of the case. Members of my family mentioned it.

Q. About making arrangements if you were selected?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you in sympathty with the enforcement of the Penal Law?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 636] Q. I take it I need not inquire as to any possible connection with any official of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, or with any Teamsters Union, or any Truckers?

A. I have had no such connection.

Q. The names I stated to some of the other jurors, have they any significance to you?

A. None whatever.

Q. The defendants are represented by nine lawyers, Mr. Barshay, a former Assistant District Attorney, Mr. Cuff, Mr. Wegman; do you know any of those lawyers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or anyone attached to their offices?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. The defendant Weiss is represented by Judge Talley and former Assistant District Attorney Cuff and former Assistant United States Attorney Kriendler; do you know any of those people?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to Capone, who is represented by Rosenthal, Fischbein, and Rosenberg, do you know any of those?

A. I do not know any of them.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer or any member of his staff?

A. I do not.

Q. Do you know Mr. Geoghan or any member of his staff?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you find any fault with the prosecutor of the county or with the prosecution wherein, in order to break a case, a case is broken from the inside, to use accomplice [fol. 637] testimony, and that is availed of by the prosecution to testify against the others in the commission of a crime?

Mr. Talley: That is objected to.
The Court: Objection overruled.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. Do you have any bias against the prosecutor of a county, or against the prosecution of a case wherein the case is broken from the inside and testimony of co-participants in the crime is used against others on the trial?
A. No, sir.

Mr. Talley: I make the same objection as to that.
The Court: The same ruling.
Mr. Talley: Exception.

Q. Is your state of mind such you believe that sometimes, even men of bad character or reputation and bad past habits may tell the truth?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That will be your job, to find out if the accomplice is telling the truth and to find out if there is other evidence in the case tending to connect the defendants with the commission of the murder?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. If accepted in the case, will you listen to common sense and reasonable discussion of the other jurors?
A. I would.
Q. I take it that in your every-day business life you have occasion to discuss business problems with others in an executive way?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And to iron out problems and disputes amicably, with [fol. 638] common sense and reason?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You will do that, if accepted, listen to reason and arguments of other jurors?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you any conscientious scruples or otherwise against capital punishment?
A. None.
Q. If accepted, will you endeavor conscientiously to arrive at a just and a true verdict?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And if at the end of all the evidence in the case, after you have heard the lawyers for the defense tell you how they view the evidence, and you listen to the prosecution tell you how it views the evidence, and then you have the learned Court charge you on the law, and discuss the case with the other jurors, if your conscience satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that there are three guilty men here, three guilty of murder in the first degree, Weiss, Capone, and Buchalter, guilty of the murder of Joseph Rosen, would you hesitate to say so?

A. I would not.

Q. Would there be any embarrassment or reluctance on your part in pronouncing such a verdict?

A. None whatever.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Have you ever been on a jury before?

A. Not in a criminal case. I have served in civil cases several times.

Q. Recently?

A. I think the last time was two or three years ago.

By the Court:

[fol. 639] Q. Isn't that the block that former President Ingersoll lived on?

A. He lived at Grand and Layfayette, a block difference.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Have you ever been a Grand Juror?

A. I was on a Federal Grand Jury in 1918.

Q. Have you ever been called to serve as a special juror, without serving, just called?

A. No, sir, this is the first time.

Q. So your only experience in the administration of criminal law dates back to February, 1919, or sometime in 1918?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Court:

Q. Are you in an apartment house there?

A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't Herman Ketz live on that block?

A. I think he did.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Do you recall when you were a Federal Grand Juror Henry Walsh, now chief of the Appeal Bureau in Judge O'Dwyer's office, was the Assistant in charge of the Grand Jury?

A. No, sir, I do not, it has gone almost completely out of my mind. I could not say who the man was. I do not remember at all.

Q. You do not know Henry Walsh?

A. I remember the District Attorney—the Federal Attorney who came in before the jury. I remember him in only a general way. I don't remember the name; I never seen him since.

Q. Do you know Frederick Kopf, an Assistant at that time?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 640] Q. Do you know any police officials?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone at all that has even been associated with the prosecutor's office in Brooklyn, in this or the last administration?

A. No, sir; of course I knew Judge Cropsey at one time; he was Police Commissioner years ago.

Q. Did you know him intimately?

A. Fairly well.

Q. Did you ever discuss criminal cases with Judge Cropsey when he was Police Commissioner?

A. No, sir, never.

Q. You never made the rounds of precincts with him?

A. Never.

Q. Have you ever read about this case?

A. Only after the first session here, 4th or 5th of August, in the Herald-Tribune and Sun, to get an idea of what it was all about. I did not know when I came here what it was all about; then I saw the names of the defendants, and after that so many excuses were granted.

Q. Have you ever read about any of the defendants, irrespective of this case?

A. I don't remember having done so; I do not recall it. There is a familiarity about the name Buchalter, but I don't know—I don't remember anything besides that.

Q. As a result of what you read in the Sun or the Tribune or any other periodical, did you form any impression as to the truth or accuracy of the contents of those articles?

A. Well, there was no opinion expressed in those articles; they were just short squips, giving the facts.

Q. Did you form an impression as to the truth of those facts?

A. Why, yes, some of them were matters of record and I [fol. 641] have heard about them in court since then. What I mean to say is they were matters of record.

Q. And you believed them?

A. Why, surely, I accepted them as facts.

Q. Having accepted them as facts, did you form an impression by virtue thereof which was prejudicial to the defendants?

A. Conscientiously I have, yes, sir.

Q. You are now prejudiced against the defendants?

A. Now, under the standard of law, I think I am—I believe I am.

Q. That is your honest answer?

A. Yes, sir, absolutely.

Q. You will not be able to conscientiously lay aside that prejudice or put it aside if you are chosen as a juror?

A. I think I might be able to put it aside after I got in the jury box.

Q. But at this moment you have not as yet laid aside that prejudice which you gathered in this case against the defendants?

A. No, sir, I have not laid it aside.

Q. The best you can say is if you are chosen you think you might be able to lay it aside?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are not even sure of your ability to do that?

A. It would depend upon the evidence.

Q. And that would depend upon the evidence, that would have to be furnished by the defense in this case; isn't that so?

A. Or else the District Attorney would present a very weak case.

Q. In other words, you would require Mr. Turkus in this [fol. 642] case—Question withdrawn.

Q. In your present state of mind it would require a very weak case on the part of the prosecution for you to lay aside the prejudice present in your mind?

A. Conscientiously, I am afraid it would.

Q. That is not the requirement of the law, you understand that?

A. I understand that perfectly.

Q. Being an experienced and intelligent individual, and having a right to feel that way, you say that is your honest opinion?

A. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. Barshay: Challenge for cause—all defendants join in the challenge.

Henry R. Lathrop was then sworn on the challenge.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Would your answers be the same, now that you are under oath?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. You have honestly stated to Mr. Barshay that you have a prejudice as you are sitting here now.

A. It is a bias, at any rate.

Q. You also said you think you might be able, if you were sworn as a juror, to lay that prejudice aside?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Isn't it true that in the state of mind you are in, that the quality of proof which would be required either by the [fol. 643] prosecution or by the defense—the standard—because of your prejudice, would be different than what would be required by you if that prejudice did not exist?

A. I am afraid so, yes, sir.

Mr. Barshay: We all join in the challenge.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you recall the gentleman who sat in the chair before you, who was down in the area there—who said he could decide this case on the merits?

A. The one immediately preceding me, yes.

Q. Well, I understand from what you said to Mr. Barshay that you read something in the newspaper which came up since you received your notice as a special juror in this specific case and that it was simply a squib—I think that was your language.

A. Yes, sir, a very short article, one of the Tribune and one in the Sun.

Q. Bearing in mind that the Judge will charge you in the case that the burden of proof is upon the prosecution to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and that that burden never lessens nor increases; would you accept such a charge of law from the Judge?

A. Certainly.

Q. Is it repugnant to your sense of fair play—I mean, is it consonant with your sense of fair play, that the prosecutor have the burden of establishing the guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and that that burden neither be lessened nor increased.

[fol. 644] A. No, I don't think that is repugnant to my belief.

By the Court:

Q. The question is whether you would be influenced by what you heard in deciding the case—the question of inability to disregard or lay aside what you have received as an impression.

A. I think I might lay it aside.

Q. That is not enough. Do you know if you would?

A. No, I do not know that I would lay it aside. I cannot say that conscientiously. I would make an effort to.

[fol. 645] The Court: That is not enough.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You are a man of experience; you know your own mind and your own feelings. The People of the State of New York and the defendants at the bar are entitled to have a jury of twelve men decide the case uninfluenced by anything except evidence in the case. Do you think you could take your place in this jury box and comply with your oath of office and try the case on the evidence devoid of outside influence by way of newspaper articles?

A. I do not.

The Court: Challenge sustained.

(A recess was then taken until two p. m., the Court admonishing the talesmen not to discuss the case and to remember the previous admonition given.)

[fol. 646] Afternoon Session—Trial Resumed.

The Court: The jurors who are not already in the box may go until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. You are requested not to talk about the case; let nobody talk to you about it. Please read nothing, especially the Mirror. Those Mirror articles which are still being published seem to be raising havoc with the jurors in this case, and there is no way of the Court's stopping them under the law.

Ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

Samuel A. Lieberson, of 1947 Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Lieberson, you are listed as living at 1947 Ocean Avenue; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. What section of Brooklyn is that? Is that around Avenue T?

A. Avenue O.

Q. Is that near the Midwood section?

The Court: It is Kings Highway.

A. Kings Highway.

Q. Have you lived there for a number of years?

A. Thirteen years.

Q. Prior to that time did you reside in Brooklyn?

A. I lived in Brooklyn, yes.

Mr. Talley: Will you speak up, kindly, so we can hear you?

[fol. 647] The Talesman: Yes, I will, once I get my composure.

Q. The trestle board lists your profession as that of an architect; is that correct?

A. Yes.
Q. Have you been an architect for a number of years?
A. Thirty years.
Q. And are you in practice for yourself?
A. I am.
Q. Where do you maintain your office?
A. At the present time it is at my home.
Q. At 1947 Ocean Avenue?
A. That is right.
Q. Prior to that time did you have an office in an office building?
A. I was connected with the Cudahy Packing Company as architect in their construction.
Q. Did you come in contact with their counsel?
A. No.
Q. Lawyers?
A. No.
Q. Lord & Curran?
A. No.
Q. Do you know Mannie Stern?
A. No, I do not.
Q. Or Tom Curran?
A. I do not.
Q. If I understood you correctly, the office was in Manhattan, the Cudahy Packing?
A. Well, the general offices are in Chicago and I traveled considerably for them from state to state, erecting these various buildings.
Q. And refrigeration and other matters?
A. That is what I specialized in.
Q. Did you do any work down at the Fort Greene Market?
A. Yes, I did some work there.
[fol. 648] Q. I take it by now you understand the nature of the charge in this case?
A. I do.
Q. The defendants are charged with the crime of murder in the first degree for the killing of a man named Joseph Rosen. Is there anything about the nature of the charge which would impair your service as a juryman?
A. No.
Q. Have you any scruple, conscientious or otherwise, against capital punishment?
A. I have not.

By the Court:

Q. Do you live on that block with the Jewish settlement?
A. No, that is further up.
Q. That is near Quentin Road?
A. Yes. You mean the temple?
Q. It is in the middle of the block on your side of the street?
A. Yes.
Q. That is all residential along there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You have no office facilities except in your own home?
A. One of the rooms converted into a drafting room.
Q. Are you making a living there?
A. I have been for the past eight months. Prior to that I was engaged in small home building in Long Island.
Q. That is free-lancing?
A. Yes.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. If I understood your response correctly to Judge Taylor, you have no further connection with the Cudahy Packing Company?
A. No, sir.
[fol. 649] Q. And you are engaging in the practice of the profession as a free-lance?
A. That is right.

By the Court:

Q. In business for yourself?
A. Whenever I can get a client. I am licensed.
Q. Do you work in a locality?
A. Anywhere.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. As architect you come into frequent contact, do you not, with representatives of different unions?
A No, I do not.
Q. Does your work in any wise entail any conferences with union officials?
A. No, it has not so far.
Q. Do you draw plans for buildings, the erection of buildings?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And it is upon those plans that the building is finally erected?

A. That is right.

Q. You deal directly, then, with the builder?

A. No, it is either an owner or a lessee, whoever wants the job done, that retains my services.

Q. Does the architect have any supervision of the work that is being done?

A. The law requires an architect or engineer to supervise construction or someone who has had ten years of construction experience.

Q. So that that would bring you on the job almost daily, would it not, when a job is under construction?

A. In architect supervision, not necessarily daily. He [fol. 650] makes several visits to the site.

Q. And that is pass approval upon the different states of progress, when the brickwork goes on, plaster work, electrical work?

A. That is right.

Q. And of course, of necessity, you have contact, then, with people in the building trades or unions?

A. I never have had contact with union people in construction work.

Q. Has it been all non-union work?

A. Not necessarily, but I have never had dealings with them.

Q. Have you had any contacts, directly or indirectly, at any time during your experience with persons or firms in the Brownsville-East New York area of Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with any individuals or firms in the garment district in Manhattan?

A. No.

Q. Do you know anyone connected, or have you had any contact with anyone associated in the clothing district in Manhattan?

A. I have not.

Q. Or with clothing truckers?

A. No.

Q. Do you know any union officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. I do not.

Q. Has the name of Potofsky any significance to you, a union official of the Amalgamated?

A. No, it has not.

Q. Or that of Murray Weinstein, manager of the clothing Cutters Union?

A. No.

Q. Is there any significance to the name of Samuel Katz? [fol. 651] A. No.

Q. A business agent of Local 4 of the Cutters Union?

A. No.

Q. Is the name of Bruno Belia at all familiar to you?

A. No.

Q. Or that of Salvatore Marazzano?

A. No.

Q. Are you acquainted with any representative or official of Local 240 of the Clothing Drivers & Helpers Union?

A. I am not.

Q. Did you ever hear the name of Philip Orlofsky, one time connected with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

A. I have not.

Q. Did business or any other contact bring you in connection with anyone in the Teamsters Union?

A. No, it has not.

Q. Am I correct in assuming that as far as you can recall you have had no contact as yet with any union representatives or officials, even of the building trades?

A. That is correct.

Q. Is there any significance to the name of Max Silverman?

A. No.

Q. Or that of Wolfie Goldis?

A. No.

Q. Or the name of William or Willie Alberts, a one-time bondsman?

A. No.

Q. Does your work as an architect bring you in contact with lawyers, members of the bar?

A. I have relatives who are lawyers. Sometimes I have to consult with them.

Q. Is the relationship close?

A. Nephews.

Q. Are they practicing in Brooklyn?

A. Yes, they are.

[fol. 652] Q. Do you practice as a firm?

A. As a firm.

Q. Would it be the same name as yours, Lieberson?

A. No, nephews by marriage.

Q. Would you mind telling me the name?

A. One is Irving Gersten at 26 Court Street and the other one is Harry Feldman at 26 Court Street.

Q. Do you know whether Harry Feldman at one time worked for a lawyer by the name of Arthur J. Stern?

A. I know he did not.

Q. Do you know the type of practice that they engage in?

A. Well, Gersten is mostly real estate and Feldman is general practice.

Q. As far as you know, neither specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. I don't believe they ever tried criminal cases.

Q. Is there any significance in your mind to the names of Bellanca and Tosca?

A. I heard them in court, but I do not know them.

Q. Any familiarity with the name of Emanuel Buchalter?

A. That is the same answer. I do not know.

Q. Or that of Philip Buchalter or Kowas?

A. No.

Q. And is that true of the name of Terry Burns?

A. That is right.

Q. And an individual by the name of Abe Slabow? Since your name appeared on this special jury list and specifically [fol. 653] since you got your slip, did anyone speak to you about the case?

A. We did talk about it casually at home; but that is all.

Q. And were the discussions with respect to the possibility of your service as a juror in the case?

A. That was it.

Q. I take it, in common with the rest of us, you read newspapers?

A. I do.

Q. Is the name Buchalter familiar to you by reading of newspaper accounts?

A. That is where I first met the name.

Q. Is the name of Lepke familiar from newspaper accounts?

A. I saw that name mentioned too.

Q. And that of Gurrah?

A. I have seen that name in the papers.

Q. And I take it that you are familiar with the name of Harry (Pittsburgh Phil) Strauss?

A. I have seen that name in the papers.

Q. And that of Martin (Buggsy) Goldstein?

A. I don't recall that name.

Q. Do you remember reading of the name of Harry (Happy) Maione?

A. I don't remember that.

Q. Or Frank (The Dasher) Abbandando?

A. I heard you mention it. That is the first time I heard it.

Q. I mean press reading.

A. Sir?

Q. I mean reading from the press, from articles in the press.

A. I never seen that name in the press.

Q. Are you familiar with the name Capone or Weiss from [fol. 654] newspaper reading?

A. I have seen their names in print.

Q. And have you been reading these accounts since Judge O'Dwyer was District Attorney?

A. We were advised not to read the paper, and I tried to avoid these articles.

Q. Judge O'Dwyer has been District Attorney since January, 1940, and that was the period of time that I was directing your attention to. In other words, have you read these articles since January, 1940?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. From these newspaper accounts in which you have read these names, have you an impression?

Mr. Climenko: Object to the form of the question.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Climenko: Exception.

A. May I get that question again, please?

Q. (Pending question read.)

A. I have not.

Q. And I take it, then, that you formed no opinion from any articles you have read in the press?

A. That is right.

Q. And nothing even so definite as an impression from any reading?

A. No.

By the Court:

Q. Do you mind telling us your club affiliations?

A. I am a member of the New York State Architects Association.

Q. Any social clubs?

A. No, sir.

Q. The Capital Club is near you?

A. It is maybe four or five blocks.

[fol. 655] Mr. Talley: We do not hear the talesman.

The Court: "Maybe four or five blocks," he said.

Q. Do you ever go there?

A. I do not.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Did you ever attend any lecture or discussion on the apprehension of criminals and prosecution of crime?

A. I have not.

Q. I take it, then, that you belong to no law enforcement society?

A. No, sir.

Q. As a society promulgated for the specific job of advancing the apprehension and the prosecution of criminals for crime?

A. No.

Q. Are your activities, then, limited to the Architects Association?

A. Yes.

Q. And you say you have been conducting your business from your home now for the past ten months?

A. About eight months.

Q. These defendants at the bar are represented by nine lawyers. Buchalter is represented by Mr. Barshay, a former Assistant District Attorney. Do you know Mr. Barshay?

A. I do not.

Q. Buchalter is likewise represented by Mr. Bertram Wegman. Do you know him?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Former Assistant United States Attorney. Or Mr. Jesse Climenko?

A. No.

Q. Do you know anyone attached to or connected with the law offices of these gentlemen?

A. I do not.

[fol. 656] Q. Defendant Weiss is represented by former Judge Talley. Do you know him?

A. By reputation.

Q. Never came into personal contact with him?

A. I did not.

Q. Do you know Mr. James I. Cuff, a former Assistant District Attorney?

A. By reputation.

Q. Or Mr. Murray Kriendler, a former Assistant United States Attorney?

A. No.

Q. Do you know Mr. Sidney Rosenthal?

A. No.

Q. Not even by reputation?

A. Well, I have heard his name mentioned since I am on this case.

Q. Or Mr. Leon Fischbein?

A. No.

Q. Or Mr. Emanuel Rosenberg?

A. No.

Q. Do you know any person associated with those lawyers in their law offices?

A. I do not.

Q. Do you know intimately any member of the bar who specializes in the trial of criminal cases?

A. I do not.

Q. Have you heretofore had the benefit of jury experience in a criminal case?

A. No.

Q. In any type of litigation?

A. I served in Surrogate's Court in 1939.

Q. I take it that was in connection with will cases?

A. That is right.

Q. Did those cases go to a conclusion, by that, did you have the Judge's instruction on the law?

A. Yes.

Q. If accepted as a juror in this case, am I safe in assum-
[fol. 657] ing that you will take the instructions of law exclusively from the trial justice?

A. Yes.

Q. That is Judge Taylor. Nobody else in the case?

A. That is right.

Q. In your business as an architect, I take it you have come in contact with various persons associated in the City departments; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Your daily business brings you into the Municipal Building, does it not?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. And you frequently go to the fifth floor of that building?

A. Eighth floor.

Q. Sometimes the fifth?

A. Sometimes.

Q. Does business bring you in contact with the Corporation Counsel of the City of New York at times?

A. I have not had any contact with that office.

By the Court:

Q. When you say "architect," do you mean building architect, or do you specialize along some particular line of construction?

A. When I was with the Cudahy people I specialized in abattoir construction, buildings under refrigeration.

Q. That is all over the United States?

A. That is right; but since I have disconnected with them I have been in private practice, general practice.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you presently working on any specific enterprise
[fol. 658] as an architect?

A. Yes, I have a job going on at 39th Street.

Q. 39th Street? Is that the Borough Park section of Brooklyn?

A. I imagine that is what they call it, 39th Street and 14th Avenue.

Q. Did you ever hear of the name of one Irving Feinstein?

A. No.

By the Court:

Q. 39th Street and 14th Avenue, what is that, Continental Steel Company?

A. No, it is a section where—this happens to be a poultry slaughter house. They are going to alter the building. That is the job I have, a plan job.

Q. A railroad runs right there?

A. Yes.

Q. And those business concerns sort of cluster along that line of railroad?

A. There is freight yards there.

Q. Long Island Railroad?

A. That is right.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Has the name of Albert Anastasio any significance to you?

A. I saw it mentioned in the papers.

Q. Did you hear that name discussed in the vicinity of where you live?

A. No.

Q. Have you engaged in any discussions in connection with any investigation conducted by Judge O'Dwyer as prosecutor?

A. No.

Q. Have you listened to any discussions?

A. Not that I recall.

Q. Are these articles that you read fresh in your mind? [fol. 659] A. I never pay much, or lay much, stress to newspaper items.

Q. Well, of course, that does not quite answer the question. Nevertheless, even though you do not pay too much stress to newspaper articles, what I am trying to find out, is there anything of what you read that persists in your mind?

A. I remember the story in connection with the case.

Q. Does your memory go back to the time when Joseph Rosen was actually killed?

A. I did not know he was killed. I don't remember reading that.

Q. Then your memory goes back to a more recent account of the O'Dwyer investigation; is that it?

A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. What papers do you customarily read, Mr. Lieberson?

A. Tribune, World-Telegram, Times.

Q. I take it, then, that you read the World-Telegram as an evening paper?

A. That is right.

Q. I believe in excess of fifty times in the past year there were front-sheet articles on the O'Dwyer investigation in the World-Telegram. Do you recall that?

A. I could not say as to how many times I have seen it, but I may have seen these items mentioned.

Q. Are you left with any impression as to the reading in the World-Telegram in connection with the investigation?

A. Only so far as remembering the story, that is all, in connection with the item

Q. Now directing your attention to the defendants in this [fol. 660] case, is there anything that you have read that is in your mind to the detriment of the defendants on trial?

A. No.

Q. So as far as any reading matter is concerned, you are completely unaffected with these defendants, by that I mean you have no prejudice against them in any shape or form?

A. I have no prejudice or bias.

Q. In reading the various newspaper accounts did you come across the name of various persons who had been cooperating with the District Attorney?

A. I would not remember that. I would not remember the names specifically. Some names mentioned, but I could not remember them, could not repeat them.

Q. In the reading matter that you read, did you read anything of the Rosen case?

A. Recently, yes.

Q. And specifically, did you read that he at the time of his death was operating a candy store?

A. That is right.

Q. And did you read of certain alleged motive- for the killing, as set forth in the newspaper article?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you remember reading of the matter set forth in the newspaper article as to the prospective witnesses that might be called in the case?

A. I don't remember such article.

Q. Do you remember specifically reading in the articles as to the alleged part played in the murder by these defendants?

Mr. Barshay: If your Honor pleases, I object to going into great detail of what was in those articles as tending to prejudice the juror.

[fol. 661] The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Barshay: Exception, sir.

Q. (Pending question read.)

A. I do.

Q. So that those matters are presently in your mind: is that correct?

A. Well, yes.

Q. Have those articles left an impression with you?

A. They have not impressed me, but I do remember the story.

Q. Well, in order to remember the story it must have left some impression upon your mind.

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to that as argumentative.

Mr. Turkus: I have not even finished. I will withdraw it in that form.

The Court: He may not have any impression as to the truth or falsity of the story.

Mr. Turkus: That is what I am trying to elicit.

The Court: He may simply have a recollection of having read it, without forming any opinion.

Q. What I am trying to find out, Mr. Lieberson, is this: You have a distinct recollection of certain facts set forth in these articles?

A. Yes.

Q. Certain facts allegedly committed by these defendants?

A. Yes.

Q. Then you tell me that you have no impression. What I am trying to find out is just what is the state of your mind with respect to that reading matter.

A. Well, as the Judge just mentioned, I have formed no [fol. 662] opinion as to the guilt or innocence of these participants in this crime, but in so far as the story is concerned, that is public gossip; I mean, everybody —— reads newspapers sees these articles.

Q. That is true.

A. I have formed no opinion.

Q. In connection with your visitations to the Municipal Building in Brooklyn, did you make the acquaintance of any member of Mr. Geoghan's staff in your past experience?

A. I met Mr. Geoghan at the Unity Club at a dinner given there once—was introduced to him.

Q. Is that the limit of your acquaintance with Mr. Geoghan?

A. Just the introduction; that was all.

Q. Have you attended any series of discussions at the Unity Club?

A. No, I was a guest there one evening, just one evening.

Q. Did you know any other member of Mr. Geoghan's staff?

A. No, I did not.

By the Court:

Q. That was the United Charities?

A. No, I had a friend who ran for public office, and that was the occasion—they had the dinner there.

Q. What was his name?

A. He died recently. Milton Hertz. He ran for County Judge.

Mr. Talley: Mr. Lieberson, you will do us a great favor if you let us hear what you say.

By Mr. Turkus:

[fol. 663] Q. Were you a close friend of Milton Hertz?

A. Very intimate.

By the Court:

Q. His brother-in-law was a builder right down your way, wasn't he?

A. No.

Q. He had a real estate office?

A. That is right, but not very active.

Q. Milton lived on the block behind you?

A. Directly behind me, near N on Bedford Avenue.

Q. I thought he lived on Kenmore Place, one block from Ocean Avenue.

A. Some time back.

Q. What was his father-in-law's name?

A. Lackof.

Q. His office was down by the Avenue J station?

A. That is right.

Q. And you use the Avenue L station?

A. No, I get off at Kings Highway where I live.

Q. That is the next one to N?

A. That is the next one to M, on the station stop. M, Kings Highway.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Were you acquainted with Mr. Hertz's partner, Charles Wilson?

A. Yes, I know him well.

Q. Did you ever discuss with Mr. Hertz any of the defense cases that he had, specifically against the Amen investigation?

A. No indeed.

Q. Did you ever discuss the progress or conduct of any [fol. 664] criminal case with any member of the bar that you know?

A. No.

Q. Do you know Judge O'Dwyer, the District Attorney of the County?

A. By reputation.

Q. Do you know any member of his staff?

A. I do not.

Q. In the Surrogate's Court did you serve for a week?

A. I was there a week.

Q. Was that before Judge Wingate in Brooklyn?

A. Wingate, yes.

Q. In any of the newspaper articles that you have read, have you read the names of accomplices in certain of the O'Dwyer investigations?

A. I don't recall; in other words, I could not mention any of those names. I don't remember them.

Q. Is your state of mind such that you can feel that on occasion even a man of bad character and bad reputation and former criminal habits can tell the truth?

A. I believe I could listen to him open-mindedly and believe it possible that he could tell the truth.

By the Court:

Q. You would scrutinize it carefully?

A. Yes indeed.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Have you any inherent bias or prejudice against testimony emanating from an accomplice as would cause you to close your ears to it under all circumstances?

A. I would expect his testimony to be corroborated.

Q. So does the law. If there were no corroboration of ac-[fol. 665] complices there would not be any case, but what I am asking you is this, sir: Would you close your ears to the testimony of an accomplice under any circumstances solely because that testimony emanated from a character of the type of an accomplice?

A. No.

Q. Now as to the degree of other proof, neither would you require that every single thing the accomplice said be substantiated?

Mr. Barshay: Objected to. It is a question of law.

The Court: Finish your question. I will have to rule against you.

Mr. Turkus: I am going to withdraw it, since the ruling would be adverse anyway, but I would like to complete a question before I have a ruling on it.

The Court: Complete it.

Mr. Turkus: There is no sense now. Your Honor has indicated that the ruling would be adverse.

By the Court:

Q. If the Judge charges you that under the law an accomplice must be corroborated by evidence tending to connect him with the commission of the crime, will you follow that ruling?

A. I will.

Q. And require that there be such corroboration?

A. Yes.

Q. Before you will accept his testimony?

A. That is right.

By Mr. Turkus:

[fol. 666] Q. Before you heard the rule of law, did you have any different notion? Just yes or no?

A. No.

Q. Did you understand the law just as the Judge had given it to you?

A. I have heard it so many times mentioned here since I have been in court.

Q. Before hearing it mentioned in this court-room, did you have a different notion? Just yes or no.

A. No.

Q. Did you have any prejudice or any bias against a prosecution which uses an accomplice to testify against the co-participants in the commission of the murder?

A. I have not.

Q. Do you have any bias or prejudice against the prosecutor for the use of that kind of testimony?

A. No.

Q. Do you feel that you can approach a case in which accomplice testimony is used without any bias or prejudice either way?

A. I do.

Q. Is your business such that a protracted trial would inconvenience you?

A. It would not do me a lot of good.

Q. Well, would it be such as to affect your conduct on the jury and your ability to listen to the evidence?

A. No.

Q. And by your answer, then, I think you express an indication of not being keenly desirous of serving. If you have to, all right, and if you do not have to you are content, too?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you take the law in its every aspect from the trial judge?

A. I will.

[fol. 667] Q. If any defendant invokes a defense, for example, a defense of alibi, will you take the law with regard thereto implicitly from the trial judge?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you find any fault with the requirement of law that defendants are presumed to be innocent until their guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. I do not.

Q. Do you find fault with the proposition of law that the burden is upon a prosecutor to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and that that burden is never increased nor diminished?

A. I do not.

Q. By virtue of anything that you may read in the press, would you expect The People of the State to prove more or less or just beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. Beyond a reasonable doubt.

Q. From any reading matter that you have had in the press, would you expect a defendant to come forward with evidence?

A. No.

Q. Do you find anything repugnant with the law which says that a defendant need offer no evidence in his behalf, that he may submit his verdict to the jury upon the evidence adduced by the People?

A. No.

Q. You find no fault with that?

A. No fault.

Q. Do you find any fault with expert testimony of any kind, nature or description?

A. No.

Q. Have you heretofore testified as an expert yourself in [fol. 668] any litigation?

A. I have not.

Q. Can you approach the testimony of experts with an open mind?

A. I can.

Q. Be it ballistic, handwriting, or any other type of testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. In anything that you have read, did you read the name of a Mrs. Dorothy Walker?

A. No.

Q. Are you in sympathy with the enforcement of the Penal Law of the State of New York?

A. I am.

Q. You have had no contact with anyone in the prior administration in the District Attorney's office?

A. No.

Q. You have had no contact by way of politics with any of the lawyers in the case?

A. No.

Q. If accepted as a juror, can you approach the problem or the issue in this case—I should not say the word "problem," it is the issue—with an open mind, ready to deal out even-handed justice between The People of the State and the defendants at the bar?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything concerning which I have made no inquiry which would affect your ability to serve as a juror?

A. No.

Q. Nothing at all?

A. No.

Q. If selected as a juror, will you listen to fair and reasonable argument by the other jurors?

A. I will.

Q. In your every-day business experience, have you had occasion to decide problems in conjunction with others, make decisions in conjunction with others?

[fol. 669] A. Oh, yes.

Q. Where one opinion is sometimes subordinated to another and a compromise is effected—I mean, in your architectural work, for example, you may go up to the Building Department, he may say the law is one thing, you may say the law is the other, and do you sit down and reason it out?

A. We do that quite often.

Q. Without rancor and without bitterness?

A. That is right.

Q. If selected as a juror in this case, will you reason out the issue of this case without rancor and without bitterness, and with common sense and understanding?

A. I will.

Q. Is there anything that you feel the prosecutor should know going to your qualifications as a juror in the case?

A. Nothing more than he knows already.

Q. Let me say this to you, Mr. Lieberson: Assuming that you were accepted as a juror and you heard all the testimony in the case, you listened to the defense lawyers tell you how they viewed it, the District Attorney tell you how he views the evidence, and then the learned Court charges on the law, you talk the case over with your other jurymen in the jury room and you come to the conclusion and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that at the bar of justice in this County Court are three guilty men, guilty of the crime of murder in the first degree—Buchalter, Weiss, and Capone; would you have any fear in saying so?

A. No, I would not.

[fol. 670] Q. Have any reluctance?

A. No.

Q. Any hesitation or embarrassment?
A. No.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. Mr. Lieberson, have you ever been a victim of a crime?
A. No, I have not.
Q. Have you any intimates in the Police Department?
A. No.
Q. Since your coming here as a prospective juror, have you with the other jurors, discussed this case?
A. We have talked about it casually on the bench there.
Q. And as the result of that discussion have you by any chance formed any opinion prejudicial to any of the defendants?
A. No.
Q. So now you are free of bias or prejudice either as the result of reading, speaking, or observation; am I right?
A. That is right.
Q. Nothing in the back of your head which in any wise could be interpreted as any indication of prejudice against any of these defendants?
A. That is right.
Q. You said, Mr. Lieberson, that you had no experience as a juror at all?
A. I did not say that.

Mr. Turkus: Surrogate's Court.

Q. Talking about criminal cases.
A. Oh, yes.
Q. Because you will find it completely different.
A. That is right.
Q. You understand that? Have you ever joined any association for the prevention of crime?
[fol. 671] A. No, I have not.
Q. Have you ever been a Grand Juror, Federal or State?
A. No.
Q. Mr. Turkus has read to you a list of names. Have they impressed you at all to the detriment of the defendants?
A. No.
Q. Unless and until any of those names have a meaning by way of evidence in this case, you will completely dismiss them from your mind, won't you?
A. That is right.

Q. You won't even let innuendo creep in with respect to the names read?

A. That is right.

Q. As a matter of fact, you will free your mind of atmosphere of any kind, won't you?

A. That is right.

Q. And so when we speak of the presumption of innocence, you will keep in mind that it is only a matter of procedure that the defendants are brought in here under guard, that is all. It raises no prejudice against them whatever; isn't that so?

A. Yes.

Q. The fact that they sit here with the marshals or guards or court attendants is nothing against them; isn't that so?

A. That is right.

Q. You believe that firmly?

A. I do.

Q. You won't use it against them?

A. No.

Q. The fact that an indictment has been filed against them is no indication in your mind that where there is smoke there is fire, is there?

A. That is right.

Q. It is an accusation?

A. Yes.

[fol. 672] Q. You understand that? And now if you are chosen as a juror, the fact that they said "Not guilty" to the accusation will raise an issue for you to determine. Am I right?

A. Yes.

Q. So our defendants start from scratch, free of sympathy for them, free of prejudice against them; is that your answer?

A. That is correct.

Q. And if the Court shall tell you that encompassed in the enforcement of the criminal law there is a presumption of innocence which remains with the defendants throughout the trial and until all of you agree that you have been convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, you will follow that law implicitly?

A. That is right.

Q. You owe no duty to either side in this case; isn't that so?

A. That is so.

Mr. Turkus: He does owe a duty.

The Court: What is that?

Mr. Turkus: Mr. Barshay is putting the words into the prospective juror's mouth, that he owes no duty to either side. He does owe a duty.

Mr. Barshay: Will you let me develop it, please?

Q. You do not feel you are obligated to either side, do you?

A. When I said yes in the previous question, that is what I mean.

Q. You mean that you are obligated to do your oath as a juror, to perform your oath as a juror, fairly and squarely?

A. That is right.

[fol. 673] Q. That is the only obligation you owe?

A. That is right.

Q. You have not any feeling that because you were called as a special juror by the State, that you have a special obligation to perform for the State?

A. No.

Q. Likewise, if the defense should accept you, I am sure you won't be beholden to them for any special obligation to them?

A. No.

Q. You will be an umpire of the facts, judge of the facts?

A. Yes.

By the Court:

Q. Will you tell us where you lived before you went to Ocean Avenue?

A. I lived on Willoughby Avenue.

Q. Near where?

A. Near Tompkins.

Q. How long ago was that?

A. That is about thirteen years ago, when I came up here.

Q. You lived there all your life before that?

A. No, that is since my marriage, nineteen years, I have been living in Brooklyn. Prior to that I lived in the Bronx. I had been traveling at the time.

Q. No other permanent address?

A. No.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. If the Court shall instruct you that at all times throughout the prosecution—the burden of proof rests with the prosecution, will you accept that as the law?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you carry it out faithfully?

A. I will.

[fol. 674] Q. And so if any juror should say, "Well, the defendant made no explanation of this charge against him," you will reason with him and call to his attention, if that should arise, that the defendant need not prove a single thing? Isn't that so?

A. Yes.

Q. You believe that firmly?

A. Yes.

Q. The number of witnesses that the prosecution may call will have no effect upon you unless the quality of their testimony convinces you beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendants' guilt?

A. That is right.

Q. Only then?

A. Yes.

Q. So it is the quality of the proof that will determine and not the quantity?

A. That is right.

Q. And if in the face of fifty witnesses—if there shall be fifty—and the choice of counsel for defendant Buchalter there shall be no answer, you will not hold it against Mr. Buchalter if the Court shall so instruct you?

A. No.

Q. You have no feeling?

A. No.

Q. Against Mr. Buchalter, have you?

A. No.

Q. By whatever name you may have read of him, you have no prejudice against him?

A. No.

Q. The Court shall define to you what is reasonable doubt. Have you any idea of your own now as to the definition of that? Just yes or no.

A. Yes.

Q. And if you find that your definition is in conflict with [fol. 675] that of the Court, you will subordinate your own and accept the Court's, won't you?

A. I would.

Q. And may I ask you now, are you ready to dismiss all knowledge of principles of law which you have and hold yourself open to the Court's instruction on every point?

A. May you ask me?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sure.

Q. You are sure of that?

A. Yes, indeed.

Q. You have never discussed propositions of criminal law with anyone?

A. No.

Q. Now, Mr. Turkus has spoken to you quite frankly that he intends to use accomplice testimony—not to be over-repetitious, but briefly to review—will you see see who this accomplice is before you accept his testimony? Will you judge him, look at him, hear him? Will you?

A. I will.

Q. And if out of his own mouth he tells you that he is a murderer and a thief and a perjurer and runs all the way up and down the line as a person who has led almost exclusively a life of crime, then will you take and weigh his testimony with extreme caution and care? Will you?

A. I will.

Q. And if there is more than one person who says he is an accomplice, will you follow the same rule with respect to that other person?

A. Yes.

Q. And if the Court shall tell you that one accomplice cannot corroborate another, you will follow that instruction [fol. 676] faithfully, will you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And you will determine in your own mind, will you not, Mr. Lieberson, that when a man takes the stand and says, "I am going to tell the truth," and swears to tell the truth, it does not mean that he will unless and until you find from his testimony, taking into consideration his past life, that there is some truth in it; isn't that so?

A. Yes.

Mr. Turkus: May I have that question read?

Q. You will search the reason for giving his testimony: What does he expect for it? What is the price? won't you?

A. Yes.

Q. You will want to know whether or not he has a motive in giving such testimony?

A. I probably would.

Q. You will want to know whether he expects any reward, won't you?

A. Yes.

Q. And the mere fact that he may say on the stand, "I don't expect any reward; I have not been promised anything for my testimony," it does not necessarily mean that you will believe it?

A. That is a question.

Q. For you to decide?

A. That is right.

Q. Having passed that part of the testimony, we will get to the corroborating testimony, that which the law says must tend to connect a defendant with the commission of a crime. You will want to know who is offering this corroborating testimony; am I right?

A. Yes.

[fol. 677] Q. And if that person who takes the stand says that somebody said so and so to me, you will want to look into his own record, won't you, before you will accept his testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. And if he says he is a murderer and a thief and a perjurer, robber, burglar, and pimp, with each demerit mark against him you will, with greater care, weigh that testimony?

A. I will.

Q. These three men are being tried together. Will you promise, sir, to consider the evidence as against each person as it is given from the witness stand and use it against that person only, unless and until his Honor shall charge you that you may use it in another fashion?

A. Yes.

Q. And in rendering a verdict in this case, you will consider the evidence as against each individual defendant, won't you?

A. Yes.

Q. They may be tried together, but you must render a separate verdict with respect to each one; is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. In the face of a case like this, a person must have courage to be a juror in order to render a verdict that reflects the truth. Have you that courage, sir?

A. I believe so.

Q. Will you exercise that courage, sir?

A. I shall.

Q. It sometimes might take more courage to say "Not guilty" than it does "Guilty." Will you exercise that courage if you fail to be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt?

A. I will.

Q. Can the defendant Buchalter safely entrust his legal rights—that is all he wants—to you?

A. He can.

[fol. 678] By Mr. Cuff:

Q. Mr. Lieberson, if in the wisdom of counsel one or more of the defendants should not take the witness stand in this case, would that leave any unfavorable impression in your mind?

A. No.

Q. And you will not draw any unfavorable inference from the failure to take the witness stand in that case?

A. I will not.

Q. And you promise to adhere to that?

A. Yes.

Q. If, after considering the evidence and listening to the arguments of counsel and the charge of the Court, you find that there is a reasonable doubt based upon something in the evidence, or some lack in the evidence, and after listening to the argument of your fellow jurors, that reasonable doubt still remains, will you then vote to acquit, if his Honor should charge that that is your duty?

A. Yes.

Q. And you will have the courage to do so?

A. I believe so.

Q. And you will have the courage to adhere to that opinion unless and until you are convinced by reasonable argument based upon the evidence or the lack of evidence that you should change it?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you have that courage?

A. Yes.

Q. As to the corroboration, the corroborative evidence that may be proffered by the prosecution to corroborate the accomplice, will you give careful scrutiny to the character [fol. 679] of the witnesses through whom that corroboration is offered?

A. I will.

Q. And will you apply to them the same tests as to credibility, as to their credibility, that you will apply to the accomplices' testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. By that I mean, so that it will be plain, Mr. Lieberson, if there is proof of criminal activities on their part or proof of character which would impair their credibility in your mind, you will give that proof careful scrutiny, will you not?

A. I will.

Q. Of course you realize, do you not, that the jurors who are selected to try this case are the sole judges of the fact and that neither his Honor nor anybody else can invade that province? Do you realize that?

A. I do.

Q. And you will be guided by his Honor's instructions in that respect too, will you not?

A. Yes, indeed.

Q. I think Mr. Turkus asked you about if you believe in the enforcement of the Penal Law. I wonder if you realize that the presumption of innocence, about which you have been questioned and other jurors have been questioned, and the fact that no unfavorable inference can be drawn from the failure of a defendant to take the witness stand, is a part of our Penal Law. Do you know that?—our criminal law?

A. I know it now, since you mention it.

Q. You realize that now?

A. Yes.

Q. And you will follow and adhere strictly to his Honor's [fol. 680] instructions in that respect as well as in every other respect with relation to the law; is that right?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Rosenthal:

Q. Mr. Lieberson, in the questioning by Mr. Turkus you were asked whether you had heard the name of a defendant represented by myself and my two associates, before—Capone—and you said yes. You have not got this defendant confused, have you, with an Al Capone, about whom we have all heard?

A. No, I have not.

Q. Or any thought that he is in any wise connected because of the similarity of name?

A. I do not know of their relationship, but I know it is not the same fellow.

Q. On the question of this case, you understand each one of these defendants is merely being tried for what the indictment charges them with here? You realize that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you realize that all any attorney representing a defendant is asked to do in a criminal trial is either to rebut the evidence concerning the particular crime involved and not to in any wise try to prove any acts or facts which are not a part of the particular case?

A. Yes, I realize that.

Q. And, that being so, you are going to confine yourself, are you not, simply to the evidence of sworn witnesses as to what they claim the particular defendant did in respect to this particular crime; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. Before and while you were in the court-room here, but [fol. 681] while other jurymen were being examined, the question of alibi was dwelt upon. Do you recall that?

A. I remember that.

Q. Assuming that an alibi is offered on behalf of one of the defendants and assuming further that the Court charges you that the law of our land does not compel any defendant to prove his innocence—is that clear as far as I have gone?

A. Yes.

Q. And that at all times the defendant's guilt must be proven by credible evidence produced by The People—Is that clear?

A. That is clear.

Q. And assuming that the Court were to charge you that it is not necessary for you to believe the alibi itself, if the alibi raises a doubt in your mind as to the guilt of this defendant, that doubt created by the alibi is sufficient to warrant you in acquitting him; would you follow that law?

A. If the Judge so charged, yes.

Q. What I am trying to bring home to you is the fact that merely because we allege or prove an alibi, we do not assume any burden by doing that. Is that clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. An alibi is sufficient if in your mind— I withdraw that and put it this way: If the Court charges you that the proof submitted by us by the alibi is sufficient in and of itself to raise a doubt where in the absence of the alibi a doubt would not exist, if that were charged to you by the Court, you would follow that, wouldn't you?

A. I would.

Q. You realize that even though the defendant may prove [fol. 682] an alibi, that does not relieve the District Attorney of the burden which he assumes to prove guilt? Is that clear to you?

A. That is clear.

Q. On the question of accomplice you have been asked by both Mr. Cuff and Mr. Barshay; by now you realize that whether one or more accomplices are called to testify that they cannot corroborate one another. Is that clear to you?

A. Yes.

Q. That there must be other independent evidence outside of the accomplice, whether it be one or fifty accomplices, connecting each of the defendants, before you could find the defendant guilty. Is that clear?

A. That is clear.

Q. Now, from indications it may appear that in this case that the District Attorney may offer—and we ask these questions without knowledge in advance of what exact proof the District Attorney will offer as the so-called independent evidence—an alleged admission made by one of the defendants—in other words, to put it plainly to you, that somebody was told by the defendant that he, the defendant, had committed the crime or had attended or had participated. Is that clear, what I mean by admission?

A. Yes, I understand what you say.

Q. Then if such be the case, will you examine the source from which the alleged admission comes?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you find that that source is one where the person who alleges it was made has been involved in a number of murders, that he has not even been prosecuted for, has [fol. 683] committed perjury on other occasions and has led a life of crime, will you scrutinize it very, very cautiously and carefully before you come to a decision as to whether it has any truth to it or not?

A. Oh, sure.

Q. In other words, in judging the testimony of any witness, you will not only judge his action and demeanor on the stand, but you will take what proof there is, not what you have read in papers, but what proof in the case there is, as to who and what that particular individual has done in the past; isn't that true?

A. Yes.

Q. You do that in business, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. If you found that a man has been known as a person who had not told the truth on numerous occasions and he came to sell you an article, you would be a little cautious before you believed what he said to you, wouldn't you?

A. Yes, sure.

Q. More so than if you knew a particular individual who had the highest of reputation came to you and made a representation to you, you would believe him, wouldn't you, without any question, if his argument was advanced fairly to you; isn't that true, sir?

A. Yes, I guess so.

Q. So in coming to a conclusion as to what force you will give, or what weight, to any witness's testimony, you are going to use the same standard that you would use of the ordinary course of business, and you would not leave your common sense outside the jury room, would you? Isn't that true?

A. No.

[fol. 684] Q. The facts may warrant in your mind in this case a verdict of acquittal. Merely because of the fact that you have never sat on a criminal jury before and some one or more of the members who are subsequently called and sworn may have, would you allow them to substitute their opinion for you on what the facts are, because of their experience or prior experience as jurymen in a criminal case?

A. They would have to convince me.

Q. Yes. You know, sir, that whether you have been sitting on a jury for the last fifty years in a criminal court or whether you are called for the first time, your rights as a juryman are equal to that of any other juryman in the box; isn't that true?

A. That I understand.

Q. And if, after having reasoned calmly and dispassionately your theory of what the proof does substantiate or does not, with them, and they have advanced their argument, you are not convinced as to the logic of their argument, would you, merely because of the lateness of the hour or the number that was against you or something of that character, substitute the opinion which you honestly and conscientiously have for the opinion of the majority?

A. Not unless I was convinced that I was wrong.

Q. If such were your conviction, that one or more of these defendants were innocent, you would have the same courage that the District Attorney asked you to display in [fol. 685] finding a verdict of guilty, of coming in with a verdict of not guilty, wouldn't you?

A. I would.

Q. You know that your verdict is the verdict and cannot be questioned unless there is some outside influence which causes you to make it? You know that?

A. Yes.

Q. You know that no one can question the verdict of a juryman that is rendered on his conscience? You know that?

A. Yes.

Q. And in deciding this case, if you are accepted as a juryman, you will follow the guidance of your conscience in determining the guilt or innocence of any of these defendants, isn't that true?

A. I will.

Mr. Rosenthal: No challenge for cause.

Mr. Turkus: Just a couple of questions that have been suggested.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Mr. Rosenthal spoke to you about an alibi. He very properly said that whether the defendant invokes such a defense or not, you will expect the State to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. In the event that you find that any defendant interposes a false alibi, would you find an instruction of law repugnant to your sense of fair play that a defendant who concocts and submits a false alibi, that that may be deemed by the jury to be an evidence of consciousness of guilt on the part of that defendant?

A. Yes, if the Court so charged me.

[fol. 686] Q. Would it be repugnant to your sense of fair play?

A. It would not be repugnant, no.

Q. Does it appear to be common sense?

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to that question.

The Court: Sustained. I think you said— I think it is discretionary.

Mr. Turkus: Yes, with the jury.

The Court: And the application of the rule of evidence must be consistent with common sense of the individual juror.

Mr. Turkus: What I want to find out, if there is anything repugnant by that kind of a charge.

The Court. The juror is not required to take that view. The juror is simply entitled to take that view——

Mr. Turkus: If he desires.

The Court: If it seems to him to be sensible.

Mr. Turkus: That is why I am asking the question.

The Court: Because a person who is not guilty may in zeal over-reach and put in a false alibi and in that way more or less hurt his case. That is for the jury to say.

Mr. Turkus: Yes.

The Court: Will you apply the law as given by the Court on that point?

The Talesman: I will.

Mr. Turkus: Something has been said——

The Court: I think what is probably a correct statemen-[fol. 687] of the law is that such evidence, if put in, may tend to shake the confidence of the juror as to the other evidence put in by the defense.

Mr. Turkus: I will not go into any further discussion on the law. The juror has indicated he will follow the law as given by the Court, and I take it endeavor conscientiously to apply it to the facts in the case.

The Talesman: Yes.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Something has been said by some other prospective talesman about the sentence of the defendant Buchalter. Would you permit the fact that he has been convicted of prior crime and under sentence, would you permit that to cause you to deviate from a proper disposition of this murder charge?

A. No.

Q. In the Rosen case. Would you permit it to cause you to relax your duty as a juror in this murder charge?

A. No.

By Mr. Barshay:

Q. And of course, by the same token, you would not cause that to prejudice you against Mr. Buchalter?

A. Yes.

Mr. Turkus: Peremptory.

Max Oliver, of 362 Linden Boulevard, Brooklyn, New York, was examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror.

By Mr. Turkus:

[fol. 688] Q. Mr. Oliver, the trestle board lists your address as Linden Boulevard; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Is that in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would it be down in one of those "East" streets?

A. That is right; it is one block off New York Avenue.

Q. Have you lived in Brooklyn a number of years?

A. About twenty years.

Q. The trestle board lists your occupation as that of assistant district manager, with no other designation. Are you employed by some utility company?

A. Metropolitan Insurance Company.

Q. Metropolitan Life Insurance?

A. That is right.

Q. I am not familiar with the workings of a life insurance company. What is a district manager? Is that the man who handles policies?

A. Has charge of sales promotion, charge of the agents, office staff.

Q. Where is your branch?

A. 1 DeKalb Avenue.

Q. Is that the main Brooklyn office?

A. No, we have twenty-three offices in Brooklyn.

Q. And that is the district branch office the same as any of the other twenty-three offices?

A. That is right.

Q. Does the assistant district manager have charge of the various representatives of the company who sell life insurance?

A. He has charge of anywhere between ten and twelve agents.

Q. And those are agents who go out on the field, I take it, [fol. 689] and solicit business for the company?

A. That is right, also service previous accounts, collect accounts.

Q. Collect premiums?

A. That is right.

Q. And help the client in getting proper protection for his money etc., etc.?

A. Right.

Q. Do the men under your supervision come in contact with clients in the Brownsville-East New York section of Brooklyn?

A. You see, the men on my staff, in fact, for that matter, all men of this territory have State license. They can sell insurance anywhere in the State of New York, but the rule we confine ourselves to a particular territory. Our territory runs as far as Ralph Avenue, Brooklyn; from Nostrand to Ralph.

Q. Do you go out in the field in your work at all?

A. I do.

Q. And do you cover other territories beside the——

A. Occasionally, not as a rule. Occasionally when a man has a case off our territory and he needs assistance, I will go out and help him close a case.

Q. Do you have any business contacts, directly or indirectly in that Brownsville-East New York area of Brooklyn?

A. I have had in the past. I have been on the job for eighteen years now and then.

Q. Do you maintain any contact with people there as a general practice?

A. No, sir.

Q. People in that district?

A. No.

Q. Do you know whether you had any contact out there [fol. 690] as recently as four years ago?

A. No. I lived out there about twenty years ago.

Q. Did you live in the East New York section?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you followed the O'Dwyer investigation with any degree of interest?

A. No.

Q. Have you any contacts now in that East New York neighborhood?

A. None at all, with the exception that I am somewhat active in the Scout movement. That is the Sunrise District and they cover part of East New York section.

Q. So one of your outside activities is Boy Scout work?

A. That is right.

Q. In an official capacity, is it?

A. As an assistant Scout master.

Q. In a troop in connection with some church or social activity?

A. It is in a school house we have all our meetings.

Q. And the one in charge of the troop is a Scout master, and you are assistant to him?

A. That is right.

Q. Take the boys out on hikes?

By the Court:

Q. Is that the school corner of Bedford Avenue?

A. No, the school is East New York and Rockaway.

Q. That is a new school?

A. I really don't know how old the school is.

By Mr. Turkus:

[fol. 691] Q. The children in the troop are all children that live in that vicinity, that is, in East New York area?

A. Yes, most of them are. You see, my particular case, my boy is in that troop and I do not live in that area, but due to my boy I joined that troop.

By the Court:

Q. That is a high school, isn't it?
A. No, it is a public school.
Q. Junior high?
A. It probably is a junior high.
Q. That is a long distance from where you live?
A. Yes.
Q. You are in the Holy Cross section? You are just east of the cemetery?
A. That is correct.
Q. In fact, right up there at Church Avenue and East New York Avenue there is a monument place, isn't there?
A. That is right.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I do not want to unduly pry into your personal life.
A. You can go right ahead.
Q. You will understand what our purpose is?
A. I understand.
Q. I cannot gather the significance of the fact that you live out in the Holy Cross neighborhood and then you go out to East New York because your boy is in a troop.
A. I will explain that. I will make it clear. A friend of mine is quite active in the Scout movement out there, and his boy is in the same troop, and that is how he induced [fol. 692] me to bring my boy out to that particular troop, and that is how I became active in that troop.
Q. Then I take it that you and the Scout master are particularly good friends and he interested you in bringing your son out to that troop, and that is how you got interested in the Boy Scout movement.
A. That is right.
Q. Have you been going out there for the last number of years?
A. No, it is less than a year.
Q. Have you any business or social contact with people who are connected either directly or indirectly in the garment district in Manhattan?
A. No, sir.
Q. The manufacture of men's clothing?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or ladies' clothing of any kind, nature or description?
A. No.

Q. Do you know any person directly or indirectly who has some affiliation or connection with clothing truckers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you been engaged in this position as assistant district manager for a number of years?

A. Seven years.

Q. And prior to that what was your business?

A. An agent, also with the company.

Q. Other than insurance, have you been in any other line of business?

A. Yes, prior to coming to the insurance business I was a manager for the United Cigar Stores.

Q. Would that be in charge of a particular store?

A. That is right.

[fol. 693] Q. In what locality were the stores?

A. Stores were located in the lower part of Manhattan, Canal Street, 14th Street.

The Court: What stores?

Mr. Turkus: United Cigar Stores.

Q. Were there any in proximity to Fifth Avenue in Manhattan?

A. Well, I worked in numerous stores in Manhattan. Fifth Avenue, yes, at one time in the Flatiron.

Q. In the Flatiron building?

A. That is probably twenty-four or twenty-five years ago.

Q. Do you know any people in the Flatiron building now?

A. No.

Q. Who maintain offices there?

A. No.

Q. You say it is many years ago since you had a job that kept you in that Flatiron building?

A. That is about twenty-four or twenty-five years ago.

Q. Are you familiar with the layout of the Flatiron building?

A. Yes.

Q. With the entrances that go into the building?

A. Yes.

Q. In connection with the Flatiron building did you ever hear the name of Lepke?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Oliver, have you heretofore served as a juror in any type of case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Not even a civil case?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it you have heard sufficient questions put to [fol. 694] jurors about the obligation of the juror to take the law from the Judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If accepted as a juror, will you take the law in every aspect, in every detail, from the presiding judge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since you received your notice of prospective service as a juror in the case, did anybody speak to you about the case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any discussions with anyone in connection with the merits of the case?

A. No, sir, I just talked with my family and in the office that I was subpoenaed as a juror.

Q. That was, of course, merely in relation to your prospective service as a juror?

A. Right.

Q. Does the Scout work bring you out to East New York about once a week?

A. Yes.

Q. They meet once a week.

By the Court:

Q. Have you lived out there?

A. In East New York, about twenty years ago.

Q. Where did you live?

A. Ashford Street and Sutter.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. What street did you live on?

A. 432 Ashford Street.

Q. How near to Bradford and Sutter is that?

A. Oh——

By the Court:

Q. Ashford runs from Etna, doesn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. South?

A. That is right. It is probably about——

[fol. 695] Q. Around the Snake Hill district?

A. It is probably about fourteen or fifteen blocks.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You are familiar with Sutter Avenue and the surrounding locale there, aren't you?

A. Somewhat.

Q. With Van Sinderen Avenue and Livonia?

A. Yes.

Q. Where that railroad bridge and cut is?

A. That is right.

Q. And you are familiar with Linton Park near Blake and Sutter? There is a park called Linton?

A. Where they have a swimming pool in there?

Q. This is a small park.

A. No, I am not familiar with that park. I know there is a park over on Blake and New Jersey, or one of those.

Q. That is——

A. Betsy Ross Park.

By the Court:

Q. Are you familiar with that particular section where that school is?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with Saratoga and Livonia; that is about five blocks away?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know the cigar and candy store at the corner?

A. Not to that extent.

Q. Rose Gold's.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Are you familiar with the territory around Sackman and Livonia?

A. Well, I am familiar with all that part of East New [fol. 696] York because I live- there a few years.

Q. And of course going into that district now about once a week?

A. No, not that often. I only go as far as this particular school that I go to the Scout meeting, and that is just a couple of blocks off, or probably one block off Eastern Parkway. I don't go into Brownsville.

By the Court:

Q. Are you familiar with the Fulton Street section?

A. Yes.

Q. Fulton and Rockaway?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you remember the layout? Do you know any of the stores there?
A. No.
Q. Do you ever go to any of the stores there?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know any of the storekeepers?
A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. I think your district takes in Atlantic Avenue and Eastern Parkway too, doesn't it?
A. No, we don't go as far as that. Rockaway Avenue is our borderline.
Q. Did you ever hear the name of George Rudnick?
A. No, sir.

By the Court:

Q. By "district," you mean the 18th Assembly District?
A. No, your Honor, I mean the territory that we cover, our particular office, covers in Brooklyn.
Q. Does it cover Rockaway and Fulton?
A. Yes, sir, one side.
Q. That is Ocean Hill.

[fol. 697] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. Do you do business up in that Ocean Hill district?
A. I personally don't.
Q. I mean your men.
A. My men do business, yes.
Q. Various names must be familiar.
A. I don't know just what particular part is called Ocean Hill.
Q. You have mentioned some of the places that are called Ocean Hill. Do you know whether there is any familiarity with the name Vito Guarino or Happy Maione, Harry (Happy) Maione?
A. I saw the name in the paper.
Q. And The Dasher Abbandando?
A. Also in the newspaper.
Q. Of course, going into that area about once a week you hear discussions about the O'Dwyer investigation, don't you?

A. No, we have very little time. We get there about half past seven and we have to get the kids home by nine-thirty, so we have very little time to go into details, to discuss murders or criminal cases.

Q. As an assistant Scout master you come in contact with various of the adults interested in the troop?

A. That is right.

Q. For example, you come in contact with the parents of the various Boy Scouts?

A. Yes.

Q. And you frequently have nights when there is a parents' night?

A. That is right.

Q. They come around and watch the progress of the Scout as he goes by?

A. That is right.

[fol. 698] Q. Wearing his medals, going through the knots and the other wood carving and the other type of work that Scouts study. Hasn't there been discussion in that district by people about the O'Dwyer investigation?

A. No. In fact, I spent a few months back, I spent a fortnight hike with all the Scout leaders of the district and there was no discussion of any particular criminal investigation of any kind.

Q. Part of your job as a Scout master is to direct the youth in the right channels?

A. That is right.

Q. You do come in contact with the adults and the problems that they may have in the immediate vicinity. Do you follow me?

A. I am following you.

Q. Haven't there from time to time been discussions with those who are interested in the welfare of the Boy Scouts, particularly that troop in that East New York area of Brooklyn, as to local conditions in that section?

A. None that I remember offhand.

Q. Well, for example, aren't the various corners spoken of by parents or by others interested in the Scout troop, corners that have been a frequent hangout for certain types of individuals?

A. I have attended very few of those parents' meetings. I have devoted myself wholly to my particular troop. I believe I have attended once, and the second time was that fortnight hike with the leaders of the troop and all the problems of the troop are talked about.

[fol. 699] Q. Well, at any rate, there are policy holders which are supervised by men under your jurisdiction who live in this Ocean Hill area that you have described?

A. Yes.

Q. I take it that you have read newspaper accounts about certain activities of people in that Ocean Hill area?

A. I have read a lot in the newspapers, stories.

Q. You have read the name of Maione and Abbandando?

A. Yes, definitely.

Q. And Pittsburgh Phil Strauss, and Martin (Buggsy) Goldstein and a lot of other characters, have you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I take it you followed those articles with some degree of interest?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. Well, some of the ones whose names I mentioned come right out of that Ocean Hill area, others come from various places in Brownsville.

A. I could not tell you where.

Mr. Climenko: I object to the question as argumentative.

The Court: It may refresh this man's memory as to whether he has ever heard neighborhood gossip which may prejudice him one way or the other.

Q. I think you may have lost track of what I was trying to find out.

(Pending question read.)

Mr. Climenko: I object to the form of the question. I do not know what the question is.

[fol. 700] The Court: This is preliminary, I take it, to the question. Frame your question.

Mr. Turkus: I have lost it twice myself.

Mr. Climenko: Then we agree on that.

Mr. Turkus: We don't agree yet.

Mr. Climenko: We don't know what the question is.

By the Court:

Q. Do you know what Mr. Turkus means is that in that Ocean Hill section there may or may not have been gossip which logically may have reached your ears concerning matters which may cause a prejudice in this case. He wants to know if that is so.

A. No, sir.

Mr. Turkus: Have you listened to any gossip or any talk by the salesmen?

Q. Does the name Maione mean anything to you?

A. Only that I saw the name in the paper.

Q. I mean in connection with industrial insurance by the Metropolitan.

A. Maione?

Q. Maione.

A. No.

Q. You don't recall whether there are any policies in that district carried by your office for any of the Maiones?

A. No.

Q. Or if there ever have been?

A. If they are, I have no particular knowledge. It would be humanly impossible to know them all. Each office has ten to twelve thousand policy holders.

Q. That is, they are so numerous you do not carry them [fol. 701] in mind?

A. That is right.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. You see, Mr. Oliver, what I am trying to find out is this: Having lived in this East New York district of Brooklyn and now going back frequently because of your Boy Scout work, and having in mind the guidance of youth in the proper channels, and away from certain street corners and certain influences, what I am trying to find out is, hasn't there been some natural curiosity on your part about the investigations of Judge O'Dwyer which affected certain portions of those areas in Brownsville and East New York and certain people in them?

A. No, sir, because I have been away too long from there and I have lost all personal friendly connections. I have not a friend there that I can go and spend a couple of hours with.

By the Court:

Q. Your connections center in the neighborhood of your home?

A. And the little time I spend in the Scouts; that is once a week.

Q. Do you mind telling us what other way you have of killing your time?

A. My position keeps me out approximately four to five nights a week. I go out nine-thirty or ten o'clock.

Q. You do not have to find a place to play cards?

A. If I play cards I play right in my own home on Friday or Saturday night.

Q. Not on the corner of Nostrand Avenue and Church?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 702] By Mr. Turkus:

Q. The Judge has elicited the fact that you spend four or five nights a week in the pursuit of your business.

A. That is right.

Q. And that would be done with other of the men under your jurisdiction, in helping them either service a policy or in helping them effect a sale, I take it?

A. Not all the time do I spend the time with men in the office. I have other work, other detail work to do, such as investigations or personal cases where the agent cannot service the case and requires an assistant manager to handle a particular case, and those are the cases I have to go out in the evening to service those accounts.

Q. In other words, your duty as agent for the company would require that you go out and make certain independent investigations for the company?

A. That is right.

Q. Does your work there bring you into that Ocean Hill neighborhood too?

A. Very seldom.

Q. Or anywhere on the border of the Brownsville-East New York areas?

A. On the border, yes, as far as Rockaway Avenue.

Q. Have you ever heard the name of Joseph Rosen mentioned?

A. No, sir.

Q. The candy store proprietor?

A. With the exception that I heard it in the court-room and I saw it in the paper.

Q. Did you ever hear it mentioned before you heard it in the court-room?

A. No.

[fol. 703] Q. Did you read about the killing of Joseph Rosen when it occurred four years ago?

A. If I did, it escaped my mind.

Q. So that what is in your mind now is something that you have read rather recently; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. What papers do you usually read, Mr. Oliver?

A. I read the Times, the News, the Post, and also the Telegram.

Q. I take it that you have read these articles in the Telegram?

A. No, the Telegram I read very seldom. As a rule, if I cannot obtain a Post sometimes I even read the Sun.

By the Court:

Q. You do not care for the Telegram articles?

A. No.

Q. There was another talesman examined here who lived a few blocks away from you. He lived on New York Avenue just off of Church. Do you know him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Somebody who lived a few blocks from Harry Strauss. Did you ever hear that name?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. In reading the name of Joseph Rosen, do you recall whether or not you read that he was the proprietor of a candy store at the time of his death?

A. That is right.

Q. And that the candy store was situated on Sutter Avenue?

A. Somewheres in East New York.

Q. And did you read in the articles the alleged motive, that is, what the alleged motive was in so far as the newspaper story was concerned?

A. Yes.

[fol. 704] Q. For his killing?

A. Yes.

Q. The part that these defendants allegedly played in the killing of Rosen?

A. Yes.

Q. What they did? I take it that those details are in your mind now as we talk it over?

A. Merely as news items.

Q. As a news item is the name of Lepke familiar?

A. Yes.

Q. And that of Gurrah?

A. Yes.

Q. The name of Weiss?

A. Yes.

Q. Capone?

A. Yes.

Q. I take it that there has been some impression formed in your mind from reading of the press accounts?

A. I would not say that.

Q. The reading of the accounts showing the alleged motive and the details of the killing left no impression at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did the reading of any articles in connection with the name of Lepke or Capone or Weiss leave you with an impression as to those individuals, as to who they are and who they may be?

A. I don't quite know just how you mean that.

Q. Well, when you read about a man named Lepke, you read articles about him, did that leave your mind with an impression as to the character, for example, of such an individual?

A. Well, it is merely a newspaper article that these particular individuals are charged with some particular crime.

Q. But did that leave an impression with you?

[fol. 705] A. I would not say so.

Q. Mr. Oliver, I am not trying to unduly pry, but you go into this Rockaway Avenue school?

A. Yes.

Q. You have lived in this neighborhood in the vicinity of Sutter Avenue and there has been a lot of newspaper publicity about happenings in that district.

Mr. Rosenthal: I object.

Mr. Turkus: That is only preliminary.

Q. What I am trying to ascertain from you is whether there has not been a little more interest displayed by you in the reading or in anything that may have been said in that neighborhood affecting these investigations.

Mr. Rosenthal: I object to the form of the question and to the preliminary.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Rosenthal: Exception.

(Pending question read.)

A. No.

Q. Well, is there anything that you may have read which has given you any bias or prejudice against the defendants in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything that you may have heard or read that would cause you to incline to favor the defendants in any way?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is your mind completely open as to their guilt or [fol. 706] innocence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if accepted as a juror, you could discharge your duty without any impression having been formed as to guilt or innocence by anything you have read or heard?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If during the course of the trial the names of certain individuals in the Brownsville-East New York area or the Ocean Hill area should come into the testimony, would you be embarrassed in any wise as a juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did your business at any time bring you into contact with any individuals on Livonia Avenue or Saratoga Avenue?

A. Some years back I wrote some personal insurance there.

Q. Was it in connection with stores in that district?

A. No, just life insurance.

Q. Were they proprietors of stores?

A. No, mostly professional people or people that were employed in New York.

Q. And by professional people do you mean——

A. Dentists, doctors.

Q. Lawyers?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you know any Assistant District Attorney on the staff of Mr. Geoghan when he was District Attorney of the county?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it, then, that you did not know Mr. Barshay and do not know him?

A. No.

Q. Did you know Mr. Geoghan personally?

A. No.

Q. Your work of investigation for the company, does that [fol. 707] bring you in contact with police officials?

A. No.

Q. Do you ever have any occasion to visit at the office of the District Attorney of the county?

A. No.

Q. Do you conduct an independent investigation for the company?

A. That is right.

Q. Without the use of any private or other detective?

A. That is right.

By the Court:

Q. Did you say your office was down ther at the Albee Building?

A. That is right.

Q. And you are the assistant?

A. Assistant in charge.

Q. Were you there when Donald Sinclair was the head?

A. Donald Sinclair was in the Dime Savings Bank.

Q. That is right where you are?

A. I am in the Albee Building.

Q. Dime Savings Bank is across the street?

A. Williamsburgh Savings Bank.

Q. He was office president of the Metropolitan?

A. He was very active in the hospital in Brooklyn.

Q. Caledonian Hospital?

A. That is right.

Q. He founded it.

A. I went to his funeral.

Q. Then you knew him?

A. Yes.

Q. A very good man?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Turkus: My attention has been directed to the fact it is four o'clock, your Honor, and counsel say they desire [fol. 708] to interview their respective clients. I will be another half hour, at any rate, or longer.

Q. How long did you know Mr. Sinclair as a friend?

A. I could not call him friend——

Q. You had a very great opinion of him?

A. Yes.

Q. So much so that you went to his funeral?

A. That is right, through business, through various conferences that we had.

Q. You formed a splendid impression of him. He had good friends. I knew him many years.

The Court: It is four o'clock. We will recess until tomorrow morning at ten. Kindly do not discuss the case, gentlemen. Keep your minds open. Do not read the papers and do not listen to the radio. Have no contact with any person in connection with the case.

Defendants remanded.

(Whereupon an adjournment was taken until September 26, 1941 at 10 a. m.)

[fol. 709] Brooklyn, N. Y., September 26, 1941.

Trial Resumed

(On direction of the Court, the Clerk calls talesmen Charles Bernhardt, No. 2645; Samuel Dronkin, No. 2748; Max Pollock, No. 2807; Sig Kramer, No. 2613; John J. Tully, No. 2601; who were seated in the jury box, subject to call for examination. All other talesmen were excused until Monday, September 29th, at 10 a. m., with the same admonition as heretofore given.)

Max Oliver, resuming the stand for examination as to his qualifications, was examined.

By Mr. Turkus:

Q. What is the name of the district manager of your branch?

A. Martin Labner.

Q. Wasn't he a juror in the Knadles Nitzberg case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was a case where the jury was secreted in the hotel?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is your immediate superior?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think you came to see him from time to time?

A. I saw him every day.

Q. On business, I mean, while the case was in progress?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Now, did you have any discussion with the manager [fol. 710] about the Knadles Nitzberg case?

A. After the jury was discharged; he was the alternate juror.

Q. That is the case in which the mention of the names I suggested to you figured in the testimony?

A. Well, I discussed the case with him right after, sometime after he was discharged and one of these defendants' names was brought in at that particular discussion of ours.

Q. I hope you understand why I ply all these questions to you—it is encumbent upon the District Attorney not only to secure a jury fair to The People of the State, but, by the same token, which will give the defendants a fair trial. I imagine you must have watched the Knadles Nitzberg case with some interest?

A. That is right.

Q. Since your manager was on the jury?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was mention of the names you spoke of?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you still feel you can be fair to these defendants in every respect?

A. I think so, now after I know so.

Q. Did you read any of the articles in the case of Nitzberg?

A. Just the news items; I could not say I went into the details of the articles any more than, I mean, describing the discussions I had right after he was discharged from duty, but I remember distinctly that of the defendants here—his name was brought into the discussion.

Q. There was considerable newspaper notoriety?

A. Yes, sir; there was a few more, but I could not think of their names.

[fol. 711] Q. That was earlier this year?

A. Sometime in June, I believe.

Q. If you were to serve now on a protracted trial, would that affect your business, your boss having served in June?

A. To a small extent, because there is another assistant manager in the office besides myself.

Q. In the event the trial will be lengthy, would you be handicapped in your service as a juror by the length of the trial, in view of the prior service in the Nitzberg case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had discussions with anyone other than your manager, that is, the district manager, your immediate superior, and the reading in the newspaper which you told us about, have you had any discussions with reference to Judge O'Dwyer's investigations at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any discussions in reference to any of the specific defendants in this or any other case?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nowhere at all with anyone?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you at any time, while in the East New York section of Brooklyn, which you told me yesterday about, that is, about once a week, did you ever hear mentioned the names of any of these defendants in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. In your discussions with anyone in that area?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or with any of your representatives, that is, the men who work under you, and who have business in the Ocean [fol. 712] Hill district in Brooklyn?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you find any fault with a prosecutor who breaks a case from the inside and avails himself of the use of testimony of accomplices, that is, co-participants in a crime, and uses it against the defendants?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any inherent bias or prejudice against the use of accomplice testimony in the prosecution?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any bias either against the prosecutor or the prosecution of a case in which accomplice testimony is heard?

A. No, sir.

Q. I take it you understand what an accomplice is.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In weighing the credibility of the testimony, emanating from accomplices, the other prospective talesmen have been asked would they weigh the character of the individual, his past life and his past history in crime, and give that consideration when they weigh his believability. Will you do the same things?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you apply the test to various individuals, the test you got from experience, in weighing the believability of people when they take the stand in this case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you weigh everything in connection with what causes an individual to testify, what may motivate him to testify and every human and pertinent test you can conjure up to the effective weighing the credibility of such individual?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 713] Q. By the same token will you weigh the advisability of the District Attorney first getting rid of the defendants and taking care of accomplices later? Will you weigh those factors?

Mr. Climenko: As I understand it, that relates to a question of judgment; it is nothing to present to a jury.

The Court: Objection sustained.

Q. Will you use common sense and understanding in weighing every aspect of the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And look over with common sense and understanding all aspects of the case like you do in your every-day affairs of life?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you remember, when you are applying the tests, you are applying the tests to people in the commission of crime, not to people you meet socially and people you mingle with in your social life?

Mr. Climenko: I object.

The Court: You mean in reference to determining the issue?

Mr. Turkus: Yes.

Q. As you sit in the jury box, is there anything concerning which I have made no question which would affect your ability to sit as an impartial juror?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you satisfied in your own mind that, from your travels in the East New York section on an average of once [fol. 714] a week, by reason of your Boy Scout activities, there is nothing you have heard and nothing in the back of your mind which you have heard through the jury service of your manager that would affect your qualifications to sit in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to any defense that may be interposed, in the event the defendants should interpose a defense of alibi, will you take the law in respect to such defense and the law in every regard exclusively from Judge Taylor?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did I inquire yesterday whether or not you had prior jury experience?

A. I believe you did.

Q. I believe the answer was in the negative.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If selected in this case, will you listen to fair argument and reasonable discussion in the jury room?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your business life have you problems you must iron out with other executives?

A. I did, often.

Q. Has that been going on over a period of time?

A. For about ten years.

Q. Is the name of the head of the Control Committee of the Amalgamated familiar to you at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did I ask you yesterday whether or not you knew Messrs. Kleinman and Price, members of the bar?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Kleinman or Price, lawyers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does your business bring you into contact with lawyers from day to day?

A. Very seldom.

Q. Do you know intimately any member of the bar who [fol. 715] specializes in the defense of criminal cases?

A. I know quite a few members of the bar, but not criminal lawyers.

Q. Are they practicing in Brooklyn?

A. Yes, sir, offices on Court Street and on Montague Street.

Q. Would it be at 185 Montague Street?

A. I believe that is the number.

Q. Who specifically in that building do you know?

A. Mr. Sparrow.

Q. On the fifth floor?

A. I have not been in his place.

Q. Is he associated with William Bernstein?

A. I could not tell you.

Q. Do you know of any other lawyers in this downtown area?

A. No, sir.

Q. Does Mr. Sparrow specialize—Question withdrawn.

Q. Is Mr. Sparrow a specialist in any type of legal work, to your knowledge?

A. No, sir, general practice; in fact, he is the gentleman that interested me in scout movements.

Q. Is he a Scout master or has he some official title?

A. He has some official title in that particular district.

Q. Is that Scout troop associated with any church?

A. No, sir, a school.

Q. Is it sponsored by any church or any society?

A. No, sir.

Q. There are troops attached to various churches and synagogues?

A. Yes, sir, even some fraternal organizations have scouts.

[fol. 716] Q. Is there any sponsor behind this particular troop?

A. No, sir.

Q. Through your scout activity, have you taken any interest in law enforcement in that area?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or any interest in any of the juvenile problems pertaining to the area of East New York?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you brought in contact with police officials of the East New York area in regard to conditions in that district?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you interested yourself in the problem of juvenile delinquency in and about that section?

A. Only that I met a couple of classes of the P. A. L. when the troop was formed.

Q. Have you attended any series of discussions or lectures upon the problem?

A. No, sir.

Q. Other than the work you do at night and the scout work you attend to once a week, that has been the limit, I believe, of your outside activities?

A. Yes, sir, and, of course, fraternal organizations I attend to once in two weeks.

Q. Is your state of mind such that this case is important not only to the People of the State of New York but to these defendants on trial? Do you feel this is an important case, important both to The People of the State of New York and to the defendants on trial?

A. I imagine every murder case is important to both sides.

Q. Is there any question I have asked of you that has led [fol. 717] you to favor the prosecution or aid the prosecutor?

A. No, sir. I feel it is your duty to ask these questions.

Q. I think you appreciate that in asking these questions we are endeavoring to get a jury that will be fair and impartial to both sides, although sometimes questions appear almost to be personal, but counsel cannot help that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If selected in the case will you endeavor conscientiously to arrive at a just decision?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I assume that will be in consonance with justice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in consonance with the evidence in the case?

A. Yes, sir.
